

THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS
OF THE RWALA BEDOUINS

ALOIS MUSIL

AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY

ORIENTAL EXPLORATIONS AND STUDIES No. 6

THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS
OF THE
RWALA BEDOUINS

Aš-Šejh Mûsa ar-Rwejli

AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY
ORIENTAL EXPLORATIONS AND STUDIES No. 6.

Edited by J. K. WRIGHT

THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS
OF THE
RWALA BEDOUINS

BY

ALOIS MUSIL

Professor of Oriental Studies
Charles University, Prague

Published under the Patronage of the CZECH ACADEMY OF SCIENCES AND ARTS and of
CHARLES R. CRANE

NEW YORK

1928

THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY
BROADWAY AT 156TH STREET
NEW YORK, N.Y., U.S.A.

STÁTNÍ TISKÁRNA, PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA

TO TOMÁŠ GARRIGUE MASARYK
FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE CZECHOSLOVAK REPUBLIC WHO FOR MANY YEARS GAVE ME SUPPORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT IN MY EXPLORATIONS AND STUDIES

CONTENTS

CHAPTER	PAGE
PREFACE.....	xi
I THE HEAVENLY BODIES AND THE WEATHER.....	1
The Sun and Moon.....	1
Clouds and Rain.....	5
Seasons and Rainy Periods.....	7
Prayers for Rain.....	10
Periods of Abundance and Want.....	13
Hot and Cold Weather; Dews; Winds; Fogs; Mirages; Sand Storms.....	17
II ANIMALS.....	20
Carnivorous Animals.....	20
The Larger Herbivorous Animals.....	25
Small Animals.....	27
Carnivorous Birds.....	31
Falcons and Falconry.....	31
Other Carnivorous Birds.....	35
Non-Carnivorous Birds.....	37
Reptiles.....	41
Insects.....	43
III STRUCTURE OF SOCIETY.....	44
Settlers and Nomads.....	44
Blood Relationship.....	46
Beni al-'Amm	46
Âl and Ahl	47
Chiefs.....	50
Traditions Concerning the Rwala Chiefs.....	51
An-Nûri eben Ša'lân.....	58
IV THE TENT AND ITS FURNISHINGS.....	61
The Construction of the Tent.....	61
Furnishings of the Men's Compartment; the Fireplace....	64
Furnishings of the Women's Compartment.....	66
Use and Transportation of Tents.....	72
Camping Grounds.....	76
Poems Relating to Camping Grounds.....	78
V FOOD.....	86
Milk and Methods of Procuring It.....	87
Wheat and Other Grains.....	90
Locusts, Dates, Salt, Water, Edible Plants.....	93
Meats.....	96

CHAPTER	PAGE
V FOOD (continued)
Meals	97
Coffee and its Preparation.....	100
Poems Relating to Coffee	102
VI DRESS AND WEAPONS.....	115
The Beard and Hair; Tattooing; Body Belts.....	115
Men's Clothes.....	118
Women's Clothes.....	122
Peddlers; Care for Personal Appearance; Infants; Staffs and Canes.....	125
Smoking Pipes.....	127
Poems Relating to Smoking.....	128
Weapons	131
Care of the Person.....	134
VII MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.....	135
Limitations on the Choice of a Wife.....	136
Rights of the Eben al-'Amm	137
Love Ditties and Poems.....	140
In Praise of Lovers; the Delights of Love	140
In Praise of a Sweetheart's Kinsmen.....	152
Meetings, Greetings, Good Wishes.....	155
Lovers' Parting; Sorrows of Separation; Pain of Love..	159
Laments for Lost and Dead Lovers	186
Elopements.....	199
Treachery in Love.....	201
Lovers' Quarrels.....	205
Unrequited and Thwarted Love	208
Difficulties Due to Kinsmen	217
Rivalry in Love.....	221
The Wedding.....	228
Plurality of Wives.....	230
Treatment and Duties of Women	231
Divorce	232
Penalties for Unchastity	239
Character of Bedouin Women	241
VIII CHILDREN	243
Birth and Naming of Children	243
Circumcision Ceremonies	244
Ditties Sung and Circumcision Ceremonies	246
Raising of Children.....	255
Boys' Games.....	256
Ditties Sung by Girls.....	258
IX STRANGERS IN THE CAMP	267
Neighbors or Kuṣara'	267
Wandering Petty Merchants or Kubejsât	269
Poems Relating to Kuṣara' and Kubejsât.....	270

CONTENTS

vii

CHAPTER	PAGE
IX STRANGERS IN THE CAMP (continued)
Slaves	276
Wholesale Merchants and their Agents, the ʿAḳejl.....	278
Blacksmiths	281
X POETRY	283
Poets and Poetical Composition	283
Typical Bedouin Poems	285
Lament of a Man Dogged by Misfortune	285
A Slanderer is Warned to Make Sure of His Own Pater- nity Before Reproaching Others	287
In Honor of the Author.....	289
ʿAbdallāh Answers Fejhān's Reproaches	292
ʿObejd Eben Rašid Lies in Wait in a Ravine to Fight the Āl ʿAli.....	300
ʿAbdallāh Eben Rašid Bemoans His Expulsion from Ḥājel...	302
Lament of a Father for Two Sons Killed in Battle	304
In Honor of Muḥammad Eben Rašid	306
In Honor of Bender, Prince of the Šammar	309
Muḥammad Eben ʿArfeğ in al-Ğowf Contemplates a Jour- ney to Ḥājel.....	309
A Chief, Imprisoned by the Turks at Ḥama', Anticipates His Liberation by the ʿAḳejl.....	314
A Chief Is Reproached for His Extortions.....	315
A Rebellious Leader Appealed to by the Poet to Make Peace with His Chief	316
An Anxious Father Sends a Message to His Two Sons Absent in the Ḥawrān	318
A Bedouin Yearns to Live in the Settled Country	321
A Šlubi Yearns to Be a Bedouin.....	323
A Bedouin Warns the Šlubi Against Changing His Vocation	324
The Poet, Bitten by a Mad Dog and Abandoned by His Kin, Laments to a Friend.....	326
Riddles	327
XI CAMELS	329
Camels of Different Ages and Kinds	330
Pasturing of Camels	336
Watering of Camels	338
Ditties Sung When Camels are Watered.....	340
Lost Camels	347
Value and Uses of Camels	348
Camel Saddles	350
Camels on the March	355
Songs Relating to Camels.....	358
Drinking from a Camel's Paunch.....	368
Diseases of Camels	368
XII HORSES	371
Horses of Different Kinds.....	371

CHAPTER	PAGE
XXI WAR AND PEACE (continued) Scorn of Fallen Chief's Daughter for Kin Who Fail to Avenge Him.....	632
Lament of Young Woman for Her Husband Killed in Battle.....	634
Cowardice Reproached.....	635
Advice to a Chief.....	635
Anecdotes of Wars and Raids.....	637
Stories of Wars and Raids Told by Blejhân eben Zeri....	641
XXII LAWS OF INHERITANCE.....	662
XXIII DEATH AND AFTER DEATH.....	666
Diseases and Wounds.....	666
Death.....	670
Hell and Paradise.....	674
TERMS APPLIED TO PHYSIOGRAPHIC FEATURES....	676
INDEX.....	687

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

FIG.		PAGE
	Aš-Šejḥ Mûsa ar-Rwejli	frontispiece
1	Umm al-rejt , mother of rain	13
2	Hunting falcons	32
3	The author's tent	63
4	A tent spread out	63
5	Pitching a tent: driving in the pegs	63
6	Pitching a tent: driving in the pegs	65
7	Pitching a tent: setting up the poles	65
8	Pitching a tent: setting up the poles	65
9	Pitching a tent: attaching the rear wall	67
10	A loom, naṭw	68
11	Kenn litters	70
12	Kenn litters	70
13	Kenn litters	71
14	Žetab litters	74
15	Žetab litters	74
16	Žetab litters	75
17	Žetab litters	75
18	Žetab litters	77
19	Žirbe neğdijje , goatskin water container	78
20	A water trough, ḥawz	88
21	A water trough, ḥawz	89
22	A water trough, ḥawz , on a camel	90
23	A leather bucket, delw	91
24	A small tent, ṭuzz	93
25	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march carrying rolled up tents and poles	98
26	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march carrying rolled up tents and poles	98
27	Pack camels al-maẓhûr , on the march; a camel carrying a ġindib saddle and tent poles	99
28	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march	99
29	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march	104
30	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march	104
31	Pack camels, al-maẓhûr , on the march	105
32	Coffeepots	117
33	A Bedouin dressed in a bišt	121
34	Rwala women	123
35	Diagram of a camel	331
36	A water hoist, maḳâm	339
37	A camel saddle	351
38	A kanife cushion	352
39	A witr cushion	352
40	A mîrake cushion	352
41	A mesâme saddle	352

FIG.	PAGE
42 A ḥedāḡe saddle	352
43 A witr cushion for the pack saddle	352
44 An ornamented camel saddle with a žā'ed blanket	353
45 A camel halter, rasan	356
46 Camel riders	357
47 Riding camel	363
48 Riding camel	363
49 Diagram of a horse	375
50 A zerḡa' mare	376
51 A ḥamra' mare	377
52 A horse saddle, meršeḡa	380
53 Saddled mare	381
54 Saddled mare	381
55 A horse bridle, ʿanān	392
56 Horse fetters, ḥadīd	392
57 A harnessed mare	393
58 Abu-d-Dhūr	572
59 Abu-d-Dhūr	573

PREFACE

The Rwala are recognized by all their neighbors as the only true Bedouin tribe of northern Arabia. Traveling and camping with them for months I had ample opportunities of studying their life. The results of these studies are given in this volume. I have found it advisable, however, to add some details which I learned from my companion Blejhân eben Meşreb, who was not a Rweili (or member of the Rwala), but hailed from the Kmuşa division of the Sba'a tribe. Both Sba'a and Rwala belong to the 'Aneze group, the Kmuşa being neighbors of the Rwala and almost identical with the latter in manners and customs.

In transliterating Arabic terms, phrases, sentences, ditties, and poems I have tried to reproduce exactly the words of those whom I quote — Rwala, for the most part. I have not corrected their many inconsistencies in grammar and pronunciation. All the ditties, songs, and poems were explained to me in the desert. I used no dictionary as an aid to their translation.

In transliterating Arabic letters I have used the same signs as in my works The Northern Heğâz (New York, 1926), Arabia Deserta, The Middle Euphrates (New York, 1927), Palmyrena, and Northern Neğd (New York, 1928), attempting to express each sound by a single letter or a single symbol. The meaning of the different symbols is indicated below.

Closing the publication of the results of my explorations and studies since 1908 I must thank all those who have helped me morally and materially both in the East and West, among them: the Academy of Sciences, Vienna; Archbishop Dr. František Bauer, Olomouc; al-Hâğğ Dâûd eben Sulejmân eben Şâleh, Damascus; Khalil Fattâl, Damascus; Dr. Otto Feilchenfeld, Prague; the Geographical Society, Vienna; Dr. Max Ritter von Gutmann, Vienna; Abbot Dr. Gilbert Helmer, Teplá; Dr. Joseph Ritter von Karabacek, Vienna; Jindřich Klinger, Prague; the Lackenbacher Fund of the Theological Faculty of the University of Vienna; the reigning Prince Johann von und zu Liechtenstein, Vienna; Dr. Melchior Mlčoch, Olomouc; Prince an-Nûri eben Şa'lân; Baron Louis Rothschild, Vienna; Philipp Alois Schoeller, Vienna; Abbot Dr. Method Zavoral, Prague.

The editor Dr. John K. Wright has cared for my works as if they were his own. For over eight years Miss Anna Blechová, Secretary of the Oriental Seminar at Charles University, Prague, has devoted herself with rare enthusiasm to the task of preparing these volumes and maps for publication.

It should be pointed out that the printing of this series as a whole, and particularly that of the present volume, raised exceptional typographic difficulties. The work was carried out by the Státní tiskárna of Prague under the able direction of Mr. Karel Dyrynk. The typesetters were unfamiliar with both the English and Arabic languages and the transliteration of the latter involved the use of innumerable letters with diacritical marks. It is altogether extraordinary that the work has been accomplished so accurately and expeditiously.

TRANSLITERATION

Line (-) or bow (˘) under the letter indicates an aspirated, a dot (.) an emphatic, and the sign (˙) over the letter a palatal pronunciation.

° = ٱ	z = ز	k = ك
b = ب	s = س	ž = ج (like z in azure)
t = ت	š = ش (sh)	k = ك (like k in like)
ṭ = ث (ts)	š = ص (sz)	č = چ (ch)
ğ = غ (like g in gem, or dsh, dj, or y in yoke)	ḍ = ض (dh, dah)	l = ل
h = ح	ṭ = ط	m = م
ḥ = خ	ẓ = ظ (zh)	n = ن
d = د	ʿ = ع (strong, guttural sound)	h = ه
ḍ = ذ (dz)	ṛ = ر (ghr)	w = و
r = ر	f = ف	j = ي (y in yoke)

CHAPTER I

THE HEAVENLY BODIES AND THE WEATHER

THE SUN AND MOON

The Rwala imagine that their life is regulated by the moon. The moon condenses the water vapors, attracts the rain clouds, distils the beneficent dew on the pasture, makes possible the growth and longer life of plants — particularly the perennials, which are of the greatest importance to the camels — and grants to the traveling Bedouin comparative safety and refreshing sleep.

On the other hand, the sun would like to destroy the Bedouins. It dries up all moisture, not only from the ground, but from plants and animals as well as from man, destroys all life, renders possible the invasion of enemies by allowing them a wide view, and takes revenge on the destroyed animals and human beings by transforming their dead bodies into deadly poison. The sun is a strong, bony female, full of passion and anger. Being sterile herself, she is jealous of all life and would spoil it while yet in embryo. Ever since the woman sun has been known to the Bedouins, she has always been equally old and equally mean. Whether she ever was any younger and has had children they do not know, but they think that, if she could be restored to youth and could bear children, she would at once grow kinder.

The moon is a merry youth, full of vigor and high spirits. The sun is his wife, but he does not live with her. Only on the last day of the old and the first of the new moon does he stay with her for sexual intercourse, but her passions he is unable to satisfy. From fear of her and the needless waste of his vigor the moon grows very thin. At first he refused to gratify the desires of his old yet insatiable wife, but this enraged her and a fight took place between them, in which they each knocked out the other's eye. Since that time they have both a dark stain or scar in that place. Each longs for the lost eye: the moon in order to do good to the Rwala, the sun to hurt them still more. The moon sometimes says: "By God, if thou hadst not knocked out my eye, I could bring it about that the falconer could hunt in a bright night; w-allâh law lâč fažžahti ʿejni la-ħalli as-šakkâr jihedd beķamrâje." To which the sun replies: "By God, if thou hadst not knocked out my eye, I should have had a two-year-old she-camel roasted in a red-hot plain; w-allâh law lâk fažžaht ʿejni la-ħalli hežžjet al-bel tišwa bramzâje."

The moon and sun have a common enemy. This is a fish-like female monster called ħawt. Al-ħawt has persecuted them from time immemorial but seldom succeeds in deceiving them. Still, whenever she does so, she opens her maw and tries to swallow them. Sometimes they elude her, so that the monster gets only a small piece of them, but at other times she gulps them down whole. The woman sun is so scorched and bony that even the ħawt cannot digest her and she is soon vomited out unhurt. Then the Rwala are vexed that even the ħawt cannot rid them of the murderous sun. But for the moon they are much concerned. When they notice that the ħawt has bitten into the moon youth, most of the camps become agitated and from the tents pour out both men and women hurrying to the moon's assistance. The women beat their copper pots, the men brandish their spears, cut the air with their swords, and shoot, all crying in unison: "O ħawt, let the moon go! jâ ħawt etlažî al-ķamââââr." If that is of no avail, the men leap on their horses, the women on the camels, and all gallop in the direction where the female monster is threatening the moon. So far they have always succeeded in rescuing the moon, but they still fear that the ħawt may win; therefore there is a night watchman in every camp, whose duty it is not only to watch over their property but over their benefactor, the moon, as well.

Much uneasiness, too, is felt by the Bedouins on the first night of the new moon, lejlet as-sarra. Since the moon at that time appears neither west nor east, they watch the western sky anxiously after sunset on the following day, in the hope of discovering at least a little piece of the circle, lâžmen min ķaršateh, of their emaciated benefactor. If they sight the new moon, they show him to each other and raise their hands to him, crying: "O thou new moon! O lord! O our benefactor! O powerful new moon! O thou, who savedst us (from an attack) this (month) just passed, wilt surely save us also in that which is now beginning. Jâ helâl jâ sajjed jâ sa'id jâ 'azz al-helâl jâ-lli fakkejtna bha-lli zell tafekkna bhalli hell."

The Rwala never know positively how many nights old the new moon is. When discussing this they fall to quarreling and then have to believe what the older and more experienced say about it. But from generation to generation the confidence in the elders is on the wane. The young men are too clever and heed neither the advice nor the hints of their parents; whereat an old father thus complains to his son: "My son, there will come a disobedient generation, which will claim of (the first night of) the moon that it is already two nights old; jâ wledi jeṭla' ġilen wâni jekûl lal-helâl eben tâni." An old neighbor of his adds: "A perverse generation is coming; if thou invitest them to feast, they will never find enough to drink or eat; if thou raisest thy war cry for help, they will not come; jeṭla' ġil medfa' ilja 'azzemteh mâ jarwa' w-mâ ješba' w-ilja nahejteh mâ jefza'."

The Bedouin is most happy from the eighth to the eighteenth night, for the moon in that period is still alive at sunrise, taṭla' aš-šams w-al-ḵamar ḥajj. These nights are called the white, lejâl al-bîz. The Bedouin cannot then be discovered from afar, nor suddenly attacked from near by, as he sees farther than the rifle would carry. Beginning with the eighth night he can sleep easily; from the tenth onwards, he need not drive together the camels which lie here and there around his tent; lejlet temân nim bamân w-lejlet 'ašar lâ tarodd an-našar. In these nights the fire of a lonely traveler can be left burning; on war expeditions no lantern is needed to show the way — what wonder then that the grown youth wishes: "I would that the night were always bright moonlight, the depression always freshly green, and that I might live on, growing neither younger nor older; abṛi enna-l-lejl akmar w-ar-rowz aḥzar w-ana ḥajj lâ azṛar w-lâ akbar."

But after the eighteenth night trouble begins. Thieves prowl around, hostile troops ride through the region, the smallest fire can be seen from a great distance, and danger threatens from both near and far. Therefore the warning is heard over and over again: "The twentieth night! Guard thy property, wretch! lejlet 'ašrîn eḥfaz mâlak jâ maskîn." The darkness of the night fills the wakeful with terror, and they cry out: "God save us from the evil of the darkness and of those who walk by night! allâh ječfîna šarr az-zalma w-az-zâlmîn."

In winter time the moon passes across the center of the heavens, but in summer it stays on the edge, ma' baṭîn as-sema', while the sun burns right overhead.

The Bedouin divides all time into two periods: one when the moon reigns and the other when the sun reigns. The first is called the night, the second the day, nahâr, and together they form our day of twenty-four hours, jowm; this name, however, is not used by the Bedouin, who speaks only of the night or the nights; the day, the reign of the sun, is regarded as an appendage of the night, which begins with sunset and ends with sunrise. The period of sunset is called morreb; the first part of the night, 'aša'; the time between sunset and dark, 'atîm; then follows al-'atîm al-aḥîr (the second 'atîm) and finally midnight, nusṣ al-lejl; the period between midnight and sunrise is tâli-l-lejl; then comes šakḳat al-'amûd, or the time when the morning star begins to rise above the dark horizon; and finally the dawn, ṭal'at al-ḥamâr. The period of sunrise is called ṣubḥ; when the sun has risen and dried the dew, or about halfway between sunrise and noon, zaḥa'. Noon is called zuhr; then follows al-ḳâjile or šakḳat al-'omaj, the time of the siesta. About midway between noon and sunset is 'aṣr, and then comes 'aṣejr.

The division of the day into hours is not known. The word hour, sâ'a, they use, but in the sense of "right away," "in a minute." For instance: "Light the fire right away! bsâ'a." The days of the week are not counted. Sbû'a, a week, means not only seven, but also five or even nine or more days. Whether the month has twenty-eight or thirty days they do not know and do not care, as they count the nights alone.

For the individual months they have no special names. Ḥmâr, first slave of Prince an-Nûri, insisted that the successive months are named as follows: 'âšûr, şofar, four months of at-twâm, al-ṛarra, al-ḳşejjer, ramazân, two months of al-aftâr, and finally az-zaḥijje, but none of the common Bedouins, not even one of the younger chiefs, knew all these names. Ramazân and az-zaḥijje were known to all; of the rest everybody could name some but without knowing the order.

The year itself begins with the autumn. When every stalk cracks, jiteḳḳ al-'ûd, and breaks — a sign of its being completely dry — then the Bedouin observes the clouds and waits for the rain and the new year which follows.

CLOUDS AND RAIN

The rain is caused by the new moon. As soon as the rainy season ends, the new moon sucks and draws the water from the great sea in such tiny drops that even the kaṭa bird could swallow a hundred of them at once. These drops the new moon places in symmetrical rows and forms of them vapors and thin clouds, rej̄m, somewhere far in the west — at al-Ḥazra, or Tûnis, as some think. Then, scarcely has the star Canopus appeared on the horizon in the autumn, al-harîf (for al-ḥarîf), the time when the Bedouins have neither water for themselves nor pasture for their herds, than Allâh sends his angel to the far west. The angel compels the drops to cluster closer together and thus forms the dark clouds, seḥeb, which he draws to the left (that is, to the north), where he puts them in chains. These clouds he thickens, jeḥağḥeğ, by more and more small clouds, rej̄m. Finally, grasping the stick, meḥğân, with which he guides his female riding camel, he drives them before him, ješillha, above the territories of the Rwala and other Bedouins and compels them to let their water fall on the scorched desert. If any cloud resists, the angel beats it with his meḥğân into lightning, jerʿağ, and thunder. The frightened cloud then gives up all the water it is carrying, dissolves, and disappears.

But it is not every cloud that brings rain. The Bedouins like best the clouds called seḥeb and mizen. A saḥâba or saḥâb is a dense gray cloud, which often becomes yellow-stained and then never fails to give rain, ilja rakkaṭat naḳkaṭat. A mizne is a small cloud, originally white, which is joined by many other similar clouds, jitafâzeʿen; the augmented cloud rises, grows black in places, flashes with lightning, rumbles with thunder, and produces heavy rain, šanaʿat. The Bedouins are wont to say: "Thou art the cloud with the white spot whose abundant rain has surprised us. Truly, I welcome thee twice, for even the earth welcomes the moisture it has received. Enti miznet al-ṛarra alli raššâna halalha wa-halli biç halûtên halwat al-arṣ bebelalha." When it is raining very heavily, the Bedouin rejoices, saying: "The rain is pouring in streams, the world has changed into a torrent; hallal al-maṭar hallal sajjalet ad-dinja." If rain can be seen falling at a distance, men say: "The world has prayed successfully for an abundant rain, istahallat ad-dinja." A downpour which lasts a little while only is called rahâšijje (or marhâš). A downpour which irrigates a small territory is hemlûl (pl., hemâlîl). If there is abundant rain over a wide district, the rain is called dîm. The saḥâb cloud brings the heaviest downpour; therefore one may often hear: "The saḥâb cloud is a robber strewing on the hills a mixture of stones and gravel, saḥâb nakhâb jarmî 'ala rûs al-ḥzûm ekšâš." A heavy downpour carries away the fertile soil suitable for different plants from the lofty hillocks, which resemble waves, and there remain large stones of various sizes only, among which the camel can find but sparse pasture. The Bedouins call a completely overcast sky mṭawsa. The semi-transparent, cobweb-like clouds floating under the upper dense clouds are the rain-giving clouds, rwêjât al-maṭar.

All clouds obey the dictates of Allâh, who sends his angel to them. The angel holds a stick, meḥġân, in his hand, urges on the clouds, shouts at them, and beats the disobedient. A swish of the meḥġân is the lightning's zigzag course, 'aḵraba; the shout and the blow are the rumbling of thunder, audible as far as a two days' march (over one hundred kilometers). If a thunderstorm is near, ilja ra'edat as-saḥâba, the Bedouins, in happy anticipation of rain, shout: "Bring us a good pasture, O mighty one! O what a lovely sound! A'mer jâ kerîm jâ zên al-waḥaj." At each flash of lightning they exclaim: "How powerful art thou, whose countenance is glorious (whose protection is known to all)! 'azzak jâ 'azîz al-waġh." If the lightning strikes something, la'až al-barḵ, in the neighborhood of the camp, the Bedouins fear lest pieces of the clouds may fall down and bury them; hence they cry: "Lift the sky from the ground, thou strong one, who art merciful (when thou couldst slay)! erfa' al-'arš 'an al-farš jâ mâne'en žûwi."

Sometimes a piece of the sky, consisting of fire and iron, actually breaks off and falls on a Bedouin, killing him, flân ṭâḥat 'alejh aš-šâže'a. If it rains from a great height, the water floods some small star, of which there are thousands floating in the firmament on cold nights. Every little star burns like a piece of red-hot coal, ġamra. When the rain falls upon it, the star is quenched, begins to hiss, breaks to pieces, and falls down to earth. While falling it wails for help, jesrah. In the desert such a fallen star forms a furrow, matîh an-neġm, forty to sixty paces long, at the end of which it hides itself. Whoever observes the fall of a star runs instantly with a water bag to its hiding-place, pours water over it, shovels on gravel and sand, and then waits a whole year. At the expiration of that time he scrapes away the sand and gravel, takes out the star, and brings it to a good swordsmith, who melts and beats it into a saber which can be sold for one hundred Turkish pounds ($450).

If there is lightning and thunder, but the clouds begin to scatter and disappear, the Rwala pray: "O, that he, who sends (angels) to the cloud, may send (an angel) to it on eight riding camels and say to it: 'The gift (of God) shall come down.' Jâ min jîrsel las-sahâb jîrsel leh tamân ercâb w-jakûl leh 'aṭwa' jîḡi." If merciful Allâh spreads out the clouds on high and but few drops fall, the Bedouins lament: "After this (rain) we have lost what might have brought us gold, (we have lost it) like a vibrating mirage. Truly, we can do nothing without Allâh. Min 'okbeh raddejna-d-dahâb miṭl zahzâh as-sarâb 'okb allâh mâ ḥenna šien." Abundant rain would have given the camels good pasture and for well-fed old camels gold can be had from the 'Akejl.

The end of the rain in the daytime is announced by the rainbow, sejf al-maṭar. As soon it appears, the clouds grow calm; ilja sajjefat kajjefat.

SEASONS AND RAINY PERIODS

In summer the clouds are plentiful, but they bring no rain. Only in the autumn there becomes visible either on the right or on the left of the sun a sun dog, middat aš-šams, a sure sign that rain will soon come. In this season the seer, ṣâḥeb as-sirr, of the Nṣejr clan, Mbârek eben Ḥwêmel, takes a large handful of salt and, dividing it into six small heaps indicating the principal rains, arranges them in the form of a cross, ṣallab, thus:

	o	shejlâwi
o šitwi	o	trûwi	o ṣejfi
	o	ḡôzâwi ,

and then lies down by them and waits for what Allâh's messenger will tell him during the coming night. On the next morning he and the others examine the heaps. The one where the most salt is melted is the one which will produce the most abundant rain.

The year of the Bedouins begins with the first heavy rain following the appearance of the star Canopus, shejl, in the first days of October. "Canopus has shown himself; well, then, let us go into the inner desert; ṭalaʿat as-shejl nušarrež," is now the cry of the Bedouins, who, leaving the borders of the settled and cultivated districts, wander with all their possessions into the interior of the desert in search of pastures. Canopus reigns for forty nights, after which the Pleiades, trajja, take the helm for twenty-five nights, trûwi, to be followed by Gemini, ḡawza, for an equal period. Thus the reign of Canopus, the Pleiades, and Gemini lasts ninety days in all — three months — and this season of the year is called aş-şferi, corresponding approximately to October, November, and December. Next, the star Sirius, aş-šaʿera, rules for forty nights; this season of the year is called aş-šta. For fifty nights after Sirius the ruler is Arcturus, as-smâk, but in the middle of our April the reign of the stars ends, as then the summer, aş-sejfi, appears, which lasts to about the beginning of June and is succeeded by the dry season, al-kêz, extending over four months, to about the first days of October. The Bedouin knows, therefore, five seasons of the year: aş-şferi, ninety nights (from the beginning of October to the beginning of January); aş-šta forty nights (to about February 20), followed by a period sometimes called the second part of aş-šta, ending about March 4; as-smâk, fifty nights (to the middle of April); aş-sejfi, to the beginning of June, and the four months of al-kêz. The common Bedouin is quite ignorant of any other division of the year.

The rains are divided by the Bedouin into al-wasm, aş-şitwi, as-smâk, and aş-sejfi. The first includes the rains of as-shejlâwi, at-trûwi, and al-ḡôzâwi, i. e. the rains of Canopus, the Pleiades, and Gemini, or the aş-şferi or autumnal rains. As soon as Canopus appears, the Bedouins leave their camps, pitched in the valleys and the broad dried-up river beds, which are often over two hundred kilometers long. After copious rains have fallen at the heads of these valleys, the water rushes wildly through the channels, washing away the camps and drowning both the people and their herds; hence the proverb: "When Canopus rises, trust not the creek and gather dates even at night; ilja ṭalaʿat as-shejl lâ tâmen as-sejl watlammes at-tamr bel-lejl," because at that period the dates are ripe and no selecting is needed. The shejlâwi rain is also called al-herfi (or al-herfi). If the ground is thoroughly soaked with it, arḡ mawsûma ʿalejha-l-herfi, there soon appear on all sides the tiny pale-green leaflets of annuals, which the Rwala call "grasses," ‘ešeb, whereas the perennials are called by them "woody plants," šağar. If the wasm at-trûwi, the rain of the Pleiades, is likewise abundant, the grasses attain their full growth and the camels pasture on fresh ‘ešeb even before the winter, aš-šta, sets in.

The most important rain of all is the wasm at-trûwi; it is the decisive factor for the future grazing. A copious rain of Gemini extending over wide areas assures the growth of both the grasses and the woody plants and banishes the dread of hunger. Sometimes at the end of the ğôzâwi rain period comes a rain called at-twejbe (of Aldebaran), which completes the fertility brought by the rains of Gemini, although not sufficient in itself to take their place altogether.

The šitwi rain, called also an-nežžân, will not assure a successful growth of the grasses if they have not already sprouted after the wasm rains. In the smâk and, especially, in the šejf seasons there are many very hot days, so that the grasses which came out from the ground after the šitwi rain grow yellow before reaching their full development. But the šitwi rain fills all the reservoirs with pure healthful water, which evaporates but slowly during the cold winter days and nights and in consequence remains pure for a long time.

The rain of as-smâk is beneficial only when the soil has been thoroughly soaked by some autumnal rain, especially that of Gemini, for then both the grasses and woody plants are rapidly developed by as-smâk and the prosperity of the Bedouins in that particular season is well-nigh assured. Yet even the most abundant smâk rain is of but little account if it falls on ground already parched from lack of moisture from the preceding autumnal rains, for the hot sun of the following season, aš-sejfi, will consume everything that the smâk has called to life.

An abundant šejfi rain leads to the destruction of the annuals, strengthens the perennials, and fills all the spring wells. The grasses refreshed by copious summer rain become luxuriant, quickly sending out new leaves and blossoms; but in a few days the scorching sun absorbs all their sap, withering them more prematurely than if aš-sejfi had not awakened them. The woody plants, on the other hand, having a longer period of vegetation, acquire from abundant summer rain so much moisture that they can attain their full development.

A luxuriant growth of perennials in the autumn is a sure sign that the particular district has been visited by good šejfi rains, whence the saying: "O that lovely little gazelle! it will eat its fill of the autumn pasture after the summer rain; jâ ʿajn al-ḥšejf tarʿ-al-ḥelfi ʿoḵb aš-šejfi." Abundant summer rain also fills both the natural and artificial reservoirs, but such water soon swarms with frogs, darâliš, and all kinds of worms, which render it foul-smelling and undrinkable in a short time.

PRAYERS FOR RAIN

If the earth does not receive abundant autumnal rain, the danger of a failure of the pasture, maḥal (or muḥṭi), arises. In order to prevent it, the girls and wives of the Bedouins form a procession with the umm al-rejt, mother of the rain (Fig. 1). A woman's gown is stretched over two sticks forming a cross and is carried by a girl (virgin) at the head of the procession, which wanders from tent to tent singing:

1. Jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
belli bšejt râîna
2. jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
min al-maṭar ešîna
3. jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
min midd allâh meddîna
4. jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
min al-wabel entîna.

O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
Wet the mantle of our herdsman.
O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
With pouring rain allay our thirst.
O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
From Allâh's measure measure out to us.
O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
A real flood let our share be.

Verse 1. Rejt signifies a rain of at least four days' duration extending over a vast region. Bšejt is a cheap gray cloak made of wool or cotton waste. 2. The girls gradually increase their prayers for rain. At first they want the rain only to wet the herdsman's mantle; then they pray for a downpour, maṭar, which lasts several hours. 3. If Allâh pours from his measure, or rain vessel, that is a cloud-burst. 4. Wabel is a downpour for several days, inundating whole plains. Naṭa' is used for 'aṭa', to give.

1. Jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
dâjem šarreč bâlîna
2. jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
dâjem 'ağġen 'âmîna
3. jâ-mm al-rejt rejṭîna
wahj al-maḥal jatlîna
4. jâ-mm al-rejt jâ taḵ'a
ḵatalna-l-bard w-saḵ'a.

O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
Thy evil is still tormenting us.
O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
Clouds of dust are still blinding us.
O mother of the rain! rain upon us;
The specter of want speeds towards us.
O mother of the rain! O hungry one!
The chill and severe cold have destroyed us.

Verse 4. Bard is less strong than saḵ'a. In summer the saying "bard al-jowm, it is chilly today," is often heard, but saḵ'a is used only when the icy but dry north wind penetrates the bones.

1. Alli taṭîna bel-rerbâl
ğ'a'al wulejdah ḥajjâl
2. alli taṭîna bel-menḥel
ğ'a'al wulejdah jedḥel
3. alli taṭîna bel-ḥafna
'asa 'aduwwateh ledafnah
4. alli taṭîna bel-kamša
ğ'a'al 'ajûnaha-r-ramša.

Of her who will give us a full sieve,
Oh may (Allâh) make the little son grow up a rider.
Of her who will give us a full bolt,
Oh may (Allâh) lead the son to a bride.
Of her who will give us a large handful,
Oh may the grave open for her enemy.
Of her who will give us a small handful,
Oh may her eyelashes soon grow thicker.

Verse 3. Hafna is as much as the hand with the palm turned upwards and with bent fingers can hold, or a large handful. 4. Kamša is as much as can be held between the palm and the fingers of the hand turned downwards, or a small handful.

Erčebûni-l-hâši
w-eb'adû bikmâši dem' 'ajni nawwâši
'ala-lli fâraḡûni.

Seat me upon a weak young camel,
 And take away him who would hold me;
 The tears of my eyes are exhausted
 Weeping for him from whom they have parted me.

Hâši is a camel not yet three years old; an older she-camel is called ḡill. The young camel suffers from lack of pasture and water, the girl from sorrow for her lost sweet-heart, and both will perish if no one cares for them.

Erčebûni-l-ḡamra	Seat me upon a bay mare,
w-eṭ'emûni tamra	Feed me with one date.
allâh jeṭûl 'omrah	Oh may Allâh prolong his life,
jowm hom ḡallaṣûni.	For they have liberated me.

They (her relatives) saved her from death by bringing back her lover, who did not perish of thirst in the raid.

Jâ dîb jâ târed al-hejḡ
oṭrod habûb aš-šemâli
'ajjant 'alja w-abu zejd
ahl al-ḡṣûr al-'awâli.

O wolf! O thou who strugglest with the hot south wind!
 Drive away the cold breeze of the north wind.
 Thou hast surely seen 'Alja and Abu Zejd,
 Who used to dwell in manors high.

The wolf is not injured by the various winds and thus reaches an age so great that he could tell much concerning the occupants of the demolished manors which he has seen. Al-hejḡ is the hot dry wind blowing in summer from the south-east, causing much suffering, especially to children and women. Aš-šemâli is the icy north wind, which destroys plants as well as animals and human beings. If it blows for some time, the grass freezes and both animals and men fall sick. There are no rains after the hejf in summer nor after the šemâli in winter. The wolf struggles, târed, with the south wind and overcomes and drives away the north wind. Abu Zejd and his sweetheart 'Alja are the heroes of stories that are told among the settlers. They are supposed to have owned the towns now lying in ruins and to have lived in manors, the crumbling walls of which rise high above the horizon on the borders of the desert.

FIG. 1—Umm al-rejt, mother of rain.

In every tent a gift of some kind is handed to the girls accompanying the umm al-rejt. Having visited all the tents in the camp, they go with their umm al-rejt to a small tent pitched at some distance, where they divide and eat whatever has been given them, remove the gown from the cross, and in the evening return to their tents.

PERIODS OF ABUNDANCE AND WANT

An abundant wasm rain, especially the rain of at-trûwi (of the Pleiades) assures to the Bedouins, as we have already said, a rich pasture of annual plants or grasses, ‘ešeb, and thus abundance, commonly called rabî. In the inner desert the word rabî does not signify a season of the year; it is therefore impossible to translate it by the word spring, as we may when we are dealing with the settled and cultivated territories. The fellâhîn, inhabitants of the cultivated territories, enjoy the rabî from year to year, and, as it always begins at the same season, the rabî for them signifies the spring. The angel Ğibrîn, who rules over the rain clouds, likes neither the Rwala territory nor the desert; therefore he spreads his wings over them, so that it rains there only in narrow strips, i. e. where the rain slides off his wings. On the contrary, when he flies over the territory of the fellâhîn he folds his wings as close together as possible, and then the rain falls everywhere. On his journey over the desert Ğibrîn beats the clouds to make them fly the faster, but over the settled territory he leaves them in peace and it rains abundantly there. The teachers of the Koran in explanation of this conduct of Ğibrîn say that he is angry with the Bedouins because they disregard the instructions which he imparted to the Prophet (Mohammed).

If the earth is not thoroughly soaked by any of the autumnal rains, then there is no rabî; al-arż allî mâ tinwasem mâ terabbe' muḥṭije. The abundance, rabî, is also greater and of longer duration if the ground, after its soaking by the autumnal rain, is visited in addition by an abundant smâk rain. Then the whole steppe and even the desert are transformed into a delightful meadow. Every valley and piece of low ground or gentle slope, all the plains composed of fine red sand, as well as the rifts and heights are at once covered with an infinite variety of annuals and perennials. The camels nibble at the greatest dainties only and grow so fat that they can hardly move. The milk often flows or drips from the udders of the she-camels, which are full to overflowing; the mares and foals roll about in the thickest grass and the Bedouins, men, women, old people, and children, have more sweet or sour milk and camel's fat than they know what to do with. Moreover, they have the hope of a sure profit in selling the superfluous old or sterile she-camels to the 'Aḡejl buyers, who pay well for fat animals. In a territory where there is a rabî tents can be seen scattered all around. With plenty of good pasture close to their tents the herdsmen do not drive their camels far out. Pure cold rain water can be found in every low-lying place, rock crevice, and hole in the river beds. Every one bathes, the clothes are washed, and parasites of all kinds destroyed. In the afternoons and evenings the young people hasten to the water holes, rudrân, in the valley bottoms for their ablutions. They bathe separately, the youths in one place, the girls in another. Their shouts of joy and various songs are heard on all sides. In the tents mushrooms and truffles, young bulbs, and fresh vegetables are cooked and enjoyed.

The local name for the mushrooms is hawbar. They grow after warm night rains, emter bel-lejl w-râh jatağanna-l-hawbar. On the mornings following such nights both men and women go out in search of this dainty, which grows best of all near the channels, while the truffle prefers soil mixed or strewn with sand. When they come to the surface the latter form tiny hat-like lumps, which attract the eye of the picker. The earth or sand covering them is then turned over by the hand or a stick, and the truffle dug out. In cooking they are boiled in salt water and then served with butter or camel's fat. Another method is to bake them in hot ashes after a thorough salting.

Of the truffle, faka, there are three kinds: al-čema, az-zbejdi, and al-hlâsi. A Bedouin, having gathered a heap of truffles, sorted them in his tent according to their kinds, saying: "This one is al-čmajje, the mother of the little girl will get that; this az-zbejdi I will give to the mother of my little son; and the best, al-hlâsi, I shall keep myself; al-čmajje lumm al-bnajje az-zbejdi lumm wlejdi al-hlâsi larâsi."

All Bedouins greatly enjoy the small bulbs of certain wild plants, especially aṭ-tîṭa, rubahla, karrât, etc. Mothers send their boys in search of them with the words: "My little sons, O sonnies! go bring me aṭ-tîṭa; I will prepare for you muṭîṭa (a dish of mashed bulbs); ‘ejâli jâ ‘ejâl aṭ-tîṭa w-muṭlekom muṭîṭa."

In the sun-baked gravel plains (called hamâd) in a year of abundance the semḥ grows with its subvarieties, ad-da‘â and al-hawwa. These plants, when already ripe and still fresh are much sought after by the Bedouins, who place them in pits safe from water or in bags. When dry the plants are beaten with sticks and shaken, and the seed, če‘ber, which have fallen to the ground, are put into sacks, ‘edûl, and brought to rain-water holes, where they are either left for some time or at least thoroughly soaked until the dry husks crack. Sometimes the large leather water troughs, howz, are filled with water and the full shells are put in; in time they swell and burst.

The chaff, kišr, which floats on the top is then thrown away, while the clean seed are spread on blankets and allowed to dry. Or the Bedouins lay the filled sacks when still moist in the sun, shake them until the seed fall to the bottom, throw away the chaff, and clean the seed once more, so that they may serve as an article of food in a poor season. This is called semḥne or sebîb.

The fertility, or abundance, rabîc, depends entirely on a luxuriant growth of the grasses, or annuals, not on that of the woody plants, or perennials. The latter become green even after a good šejfi rain, when the earth is well watered, maş-jûfa; but no šejfi rain can relieve the annuals, for the heat of the sun soon burns them. In the same year one tribe may have no rabîc at all, while another tribe, even a neighboring one, has abundance of everything. This difference is the more noticeable when the tribes are enemies. Of such a year they say: "This year has queer teeth; men live well (have something to bite into), and men die of hunger; hâdi-s-sene w-laha snûn nâs ja'îšûn w-nâs jemûtûn." The Bedouin also refers to a rabîc al-mâš, meaning a season when the entire growth consists of solitary grass patches insufficient to feed even the youngest camels; a rabîc aš-şafâra, when nothing grows except the şafâra with its yellow blossoms; a rabîc ad-dimne, when the grasses, though they may have sprouted and grown luxuriantly after the wasm and šitwi rains, fail to receive the smâk rain and become yellow as early as the end of March; a rabîc an-nağğân, when all the plains and lowlands are thickly carpeted with grass; and, finally, a rabîc aţ-ţafḥa, when not only the lowlands but all the slopes, as well, afford luxuriant pasture.

Just as the Bedouins long for the rabîc years, so they fear the years of want, or ḥawaʿ. If for two or three years the rains in the autumn months have not been copious enough, there are no grasses and the camels must live on the woody plants alone. The winter rain, aš-šitwi, makes these perennials swell, but during the hot smâk days they dry up, become unpalatable to the camels, and thus the actual ajjâm al-ḥawaʿ, or days of want, set in, a period in which many camels perish. But if the rains of the šejfi also fail, then not a single perennial shoots up, last year's offshoots fall to pieces, to be broken and scattered by the wind, and the region soon changes into a dead and death-dealing desert. This is the work of the woman sun, whose sole aim is to burn and destroy.

HOT AND COLD WEATHER; DEWS; WINDS; FOGS; MIRAGES; SAND STORMS

The greatest heats, called ḥamm al-klejbên, occur in the season of al-kêz; ḥamm as-shejl, the season immediately before the rise of Canopus, is the next hottest. When the Pleiades, at-trajja, disappear from the heavens, every stalk dries up, ilja râbat at-trajja kill 'ûden jibes.

The season of aš-šta', with a few days before and after it, is the coldest of all; from about December 11 to January 20 is the time of the real winter, al-marba'aniyye. The šta' cold is followed by the seven poisonous nights, saba' semm; then come the seven bloody nights, saba' demm; and finally seven nights in which the fat (of the camels) is either increasing or decreasing, jîsir ad-desem w-lâ jîsir. In explanation it should be said that the nights of the first and second week following the marba'aniyye are often so cold as to make the life of both human beings and animals miserable; the noses of the camels even bleed from the effects of the cold. Not until the third week, or about the middle of February, do the cold nights begin to alternate with warm ones. In the daytime the earth is warm, but at night the air stratum more than one meter above the ground cools off; wherefore the two giants (i.e. the camel and the palm) suffer much from cold, bard at-ṭawîlên. In winter, al-marba'aniyye, all of Palmyrena, all the territories of al-Ḥamâd, al-Wudijân, al-Ḥeğera, al-Ḥunfa, Ḥesma', and even the Nefûd are covered with white frost, ḥalît. In Palmyrena, al-Ḥamâd, and al-Wudijân trees and bushes become white with hoarfrost, ğelîd, at that time. Snow falls, feleğat ad-dinja, in Palmyrena, al-Ḥamâd, and Ḥesma in large flakes, twêrât, regularly every year, but as a rule it remains on the ground no more than one day, excepting in Palmyrena, where it sometimes stays longer, causing great losses to the owners of sheep and goats.

The dew, ṭall, neda', or ṭofal, is plentiful all the year round, especially during the summer months. It is sent by the moon to refresh both the annuals, or grasses, 'ešeb, and the perennials, or woody plants, šağar, which otherwise could not support the sun's heat. Hail falls sometimes instead of or with rain, and the hailstones are often of a size large enough to wound and even kill young camels.

As every breeze comes from Allâh, nobody dares curse the winds. A light wind is called hâwa, also habûb; a strong one, şalf. The west wind is the most frequent. In summer it springs up regularly two hours after noon, cools the heat of the day, and is called barrâd or da'dâ'i. The north wind, aş-šemâli, blows almost exclusively during the šta' season, dispersing the clouds and absorbing their water, and therefore called as-salâjta. In the winter time the Bedouin likes the south wind, al-żibli, best, as it is always accompanied by rain, as-skaĵje. The east wind, aş-şerži (or aş-şeržijje), generally blows for only three or four days, and the west wind always follows after it. Towards the end of the smâk and kêz seasons the east wind is especially strong, blowing then for as long as seven days and nights. It is called semûm, is exceedingly dry and hot, and causes much suffering especially among women and children. They would all perish if it blew for more than seven days. Sometimes the northwest wind, an-naĉbe, blows in winter, usually on nights when there is no moon and the stars alone are shining. A night of this kind is called ğird; it is very bright, but icy cold. If a stiff but cold west wind blows at night, the night is called şalta. A warm, cloudless night is known under the name of ķamra zerîž; a warm but clouded night is called zâlma' delķes, and a dark rainy night, radra'.

If on a bright sunny day the view is not clear and the horizon is slightly hazy, the day is spoken of as the raţât mâ ja'ti-ş-şowf. During the hot summer days the noon atmosphere is almost opaque and the sun resembles a yellowish disk; this is the ĉatme (or ĉitâm). In autumn and winter a dense moist fog, ķubejs (or kubejs), hangs over the country. The Bedouins think that the fog can hear like human beings and is afraid of the fox, and therefore they shout at it: "O father of the fogs, run away! The fox! Jâ-ba ķbâs 'ank at-ta'leb." They take fog to be the creation of the earth spirits, ğinn, as it usually appears to come out of gullies and jagged rocks, where it also remains longest. Besides the ķbejs in the cool season, the 'ağâğ and sarâb, which occur in the hot season, are likewise the work of the ğinn. On hot and bright days, especially about noon, there appear on the scorched plains of al-Hamâd many ponds hedged in with bushes and tall grasses.

The stranger, deceived by the apparition, urges on his tired animal to the water near at hand and wonders why the animal does not itself hurry. But here the beast is wiser than the inexperienced stranger. Those ponds, bushes, and grasses do not rest on terra firma, but merely vibrate in the air and are nothing but a mirage, sarâb. At other times again the ġinn raise a strong wind with clouds of dust and sand, which they drive against the Bedouins, trying to blind them, to overthrow their tents, and to entomb every living thing. Such a storm is called ‘aġġaġe. Dreadful are the days and even more so the nights during the sand storms. In the south a tiny dark cloud appears on the horizon. The wind dies down, the sun is enveloped with quivering veils, and a peculiarly depressing feeling takes hold of the people. The camels become excited, and, collecting in groups, stop grazing. The tiny veils grow to a cloud, which covers the edge of the horizon to a considerable height and, steadily rising, sends forth a rumbling noise. Before long there appears a dark wall in front of it, which advances along the whole line. The rumbling increases, changes into a wild roar, the wall comes rolling on, covers everything with dust and sand, carries away whatever resists, and buries what it cannot carry away.

CHAPTER II

ANIMALS

CARNIVOROUS ANIMALS

Various animals live on the pastures visited by the Rwala.

The fahad, panther, is found particularly on the uplands to the northeast of the depression on Sirhân as well as in the environs of al-Hazel.

The kurta is a beast of prey similar to the wildcat, only larger, dark yellow in color, with cropped ears ending with a tuft of long straight hairs. It lives in the territories of al-Heğera and al-Labbe. It lies in wait for gazelles and is fond of hiding itself in the dry annuals, al-hemri. The breeze blows the hairs on its ears as it moves the annuals; the gazelles are thus misled and approach it, whereupon it leaps on to their backs, thrusts its claws into their throats, and sucks their blood.

The zab'a, hyena, dwells in large numbers in dens on the at-Tawîl range. By day it is timid, but by night it infests the whole territory, opens graves, devours corpses, attacks wounded or ailing camels, and even preys on crying babies. It has three or four cubs. If the Bedouins observe its fresh spoor near a den, they surround the den, bring a long rope, make a noose in it, and send one of their number after the hyena. The hunter slips the noose on his left arm, crawls along on his stomach, draws the rope after him, and gropes cautiously on all sides searching for the beast. As soon as he catches hold of it, he shouts: "It isn't here, this isn't it! isn't here! I have found a piece of old sheepskin, but it isn't here!" In the meanwhile he slips the noose round the hyena's neck and crawls out. At a given sign his comrades draw the hyena out, kill it, and eat its flesh. The flesh of the young hyenas, about six months old, who are living with their mother, is particularly appetizing. The teeth of the hyena, hung round the neck, protect children against various diseases. The gall of the hyena, when mixed with water and taken as a drink, assuages fever.

The dīb, wolf, is most fond of frequenting caves and crevices in rocks. Only when it is about to give birth to young does it crawl into a deserted hyena den. In color it adapts itself to its surroundings. In the volcanic territory it is dark brown, ašam; in the sandy desert of the Nefûd it is a light brown with a greenish tinge, azrak; and in the plains of al-Ḥamâd and al-Wudijân it is gray with a tinge of blue, ašhab. Wolf skins are used in making rebecs, or one-stringed viols, rebâba, which then have a particularly high note. The wolf's eye fetches a very high price, because it affords protection in the greatest danger. The wolf thoroughly understands human speech. He himself was once a human being and his name was Serhân. At that time all the sheep and goats belonged to him. Because of some great sin he was changed into a wolf, and his flocks were taken by man. But the wolf even now regards goats and sheep as his own and has a grudge against shepherds and their dogs because they prevent him from enjoying his property. Once a wolf said to a sheep dog: "Tonight I will take some of my property for supper, al-lejle 'ašâje râs mâl." The dog replied: "We shall see. If I get supper from my masters, I shall protect their property, so that thou wilt not get a taste of it; elja 'aššûni-halî affekaha lâ tdûkaha." If the dog does not receive an adequate supper, his hunger causes him to seek food throughout the neighborhood, and the wolf can plunder to his heart's content.

There was a certain Bedouin who went out on his camel for booty. He met a wolf who likewise was going in search of spoil. They agreed that they would help each other like brothers, taḥâwow hu w-ad-dīb. The wolf sat on the camel behind the rider. While the rider slept, the wolf watched over the grazing camel. When they reached a high hill, from the top of which there was a good view, merkâb, the wolf crawled out on to the hill and inspected the region on all sides. Finally he caught sight of grazing camels which belonged to a hostile tribe. They rode cautiously in their direction. The rider kept his camel in a hidden gully and crept with the wolf towards the camels. The wolf ran up to the shepherds, who immediately seized their weapons and pursued him with shouts. Scarcely had they disappeared when the Bedouin seized the finest camel and rode with it into the gully. The wolf led the shepherds far away from their herd; then he returned to it, caught by the throat a tiny young camel, which was covered with the skin of another young one, and dragged it likewise into the gully. (A young camel of this kind is called baww. If a strong she-camel, which gives milk long and abundantly, gives birth to a weak male cub, the owner removes it from its mother, kills it, and ties a portion of its skin around the neck and throat of another young camel. The mother of the animal which has been killed sniffs at the skin, thinks that this is her cub, and lets it suck. Thus she does not lose her milk with fretting, while the mother of the living camel continues to treat it in the same way. Thus both she-camels adopt the cub, both feed it, and the owner can milk both of them.) As soon as the she-camels noticed that their cub was being removed by the wolf, they fled after it and also ran into the gully, where the Bedouin tied them up and drove them as a welcome booty into his camp. His comrade, the wolf, not venturing into the camp, hid himself in a rocky cleft near by and waited for the Bedouin to bring him something. This, however, the latter forgot to do. After two days the wolf began to howl: “‘Aû ‘aû ‘awwesni, give me something to eat!” The Bedouin immediately killed one of the she-camels, brought the intestines, the throat, and the forelegs beyond the encampment for the wolf, and, having explained the whole affair in the chief’s tent, he announced that he would punish anybody who harmed his comrade, the wolf. In this encampment there was a youth who was learning to shoot. Catching sight of the wolf, he forgot the threat, took aim, and shot it. The Bedouin avenged his brother, the wolf, and all the elders said that he was in the right. The Bedouin exclaimed: “I have fraternized with the wolf. Oh, woe is me! My other brother did not leave this brother. Tahâwajt ana w-dîben serhân jâ wejja hawijje mâ halla hawijje.”

The sîb is a cross between a wolf and a female hyena. It lives in the environs of the well of aš-Šiẓîẓ and attacks a man even when not provoked.

The zarbûl, badger, is an animal smaller than a dog with a grayish-yellow back, a black belly, a dog’s head, teeth similar to those of a human being, and a long tail. Its skin has a characteristic smell. It lives in dens, which it digs for itself, and devours jerboas and ordinary mice, lizards, chameleons, etc. Its flesh is eaten. If a Bedouin sees that a zarbûl has hidden in its den, he shouts: “Run away, badger! run away, badger! kurr az-zarbûl kurr az-zarbûl.”

The ab-al-ḥsejn, ta'leb, or rorejri, fox, is found all over the territory of the Rwala. If its spoor is seen in the morning in the dew, a greyhound, sluke, is set on to it. The flesh of the captured fox is eaten. The fox has a great grudge against human beings for pursuing it and accuses them of ingratitude. Adam, the first father of all human sons, once found a half-frozen serpent outside the garden of Eden. Being moved by compassion, he laid the serpent in his bosom and returned with it into his garden. The serpent became warm, recovered, and shouted to Adam: "Carry me back at once to the spot whence thou didst take me; I have my family there. If thou dost not carry me back there at once, I will bite thee." Adam could not exactly remember the spot. He walked to and fro with the serpent, who kept shouting: "This is not where my family lives. Carry me back there at once, or I will bite thee." Adam, wearied and terrified, was glad to meet a fox, and proposed to the serpent that the fox should act as judge. The serpent agreed. Adam sat down in front of the fox and was about to explain what the point at issue was, but the fox interrupted him with the words: "Be silent until thy adversary comes." "My adversary is here." "I do not see him." "I am here. I am lying right on Adam's belly." "If thou art Adam's opponent, žebîleh, thou must sit opposite him, žebîleh, otherwise I cannot acknowledge thee as such." "Very well, then I will crawl out." The serpent crawled out from beneath Adam's garment and sat down in front of him. The fox said: "Thee, O man (Adam), I will call Nejšûbe, therefore pay heed that thou mayest comprehend everything. Behold the serpent's head, O Nejšûb beh!" But Jâ nejšûb beh means: "Oh! a blow upon it." Adam understood the meaning of the fox's challenge, seized his cudgel, which was provided with a heavy knob, kena, and smashed the serpent's head. Since then the sons of Adam have slain every serpent at sight. But when they began to pursue the descendants of the fox also and to eat their flesh, the latter complained: "Shame unto thee, thou black-headed one! Why am I being pursued? Is it thus that I am requited for my good deed? Aḥs jâ sêwed ar-râs lêh atanâcer tesla-l-melîh."

The fox declares that he wishes to live at peace with everyone, but in reality he wishes to beguile everyone. Thus he sent a message once to the raven: "Gladly would I entertain thee, aḅri akrom lak." "Good! entertain me! zên okrom." The fox boiled some ʿaṣīde, gruel made of milk and flour, poured it out on a shallow rock, and invited the raven. The raven came and the fox urged him, saying: "Enjoy thyself, comrade! efleḥ jā ṣāḥbi," and at once began to lap the fluid from the surface of the rock, aṣ-safaʿ, while the hungry raven was unable to get anything into its beak. He thought to himself: "Very well, then; that is the fox's hospitality." But he did not show his dissatisfaction and invited the fox to visit him for sweet dates. The fox's mouth watered. He was very fond of sweet dates, but he could never pluck them; they hung too high, and it was only for them that he had wished to make friends with the raven. The raven shook the finest and ripest dates into a dense shrub containing long and sharp thorns, ḡetâde, and he then said to the fox: "Enjoy thyself, comrade!" The fox ran round the shrub trying to snatch out at least a single date with his tongue or his foot, but in vain. The thorns wounded his legs. Enviously he watched the raven, who with his claws drew forth date after date and picked them up with his beak. Since that time the fox has acknowledged the raven as his equal.

The fox is very fond of feeding on grains of wheat. He therefore invited the hedgehog, ḡumfod (pl., ḡenâfid), to till a field in common with him and to sow wheat. The hedgehog agreed, and with his family — he had twenty-four children — he set about the work. They plowed the soil, sowed the wheat, and protected it against trespassers. From time to time the fox came running up to look at them, but he did not help them. He promised that he would reap, thrash, and winnow the wheat. But this work also he left to the hedgehog. When the wheat was thrashed and winnowed, the fox suggested to the hedgehog: "Thou and I shall run a race. Whichever of us runs first from my den to the pile of wheat, shall take it all. We are friends. Why should we divide it?" The hedgehog agreed. The race was to begin at sunrise. In the night the hedgehog brought his wife and his twenty-four children to the pile of grain, placed his wife up against it, and proceeded straight to the fox's den, posting his children at fixed intervals, so that he reached the den alone. "O father fox, the sun is rising. Wilt thou not run?" "Run thyself. I will catch up with thee!" "Good, I will run." When it grew warm and the dew had dried up — that is, in the time of aṣ-ṣaḥaʿ — the fox jumped up from his lair and shouted: "Where art thou, hedgehog?" "Near thy jawbone," and actually he perceived the hedgehog in front of him. He went a short distance farther and asked afresh: "Where art thou, hedgehog?" "Here, in front of thy face." The fox was surprised at seeing the hedgehog in front of him. He set off at a trot. The hedgehog was still in front of him. He ran leaping on. The hedgehog was still in front of him. The sweat was pouring off him when he drew near to the pile of wheat, but the hedgehog was sitting on it. Thus the hedgehog gained a victory over the fox.

The foxes wanted to make friends with the dogs. After conferring together, the foxes wrote a long letter in which they described their love and devotion as well as their longing for peace, and they sent a young fox to hand the letter to the chief of the dogs. Scarcely had the fox reached the frontier of the territory belonging to the dogs, when he was observed by the guard, and five dogs set upon him. The fox shouted that he had come to negotiate for peace and showed the letter, but the dogs did not believe him. He threw the letter to them in order that they might read it, but the dogs continued to snarl angrily and rush after him, without taking any notice of the white paper. The fox was glad to escape with his life. Bleeding from many wounds and all covered with sweat, he reached his companions. When he had recovered, the foxes asked: "What about the letter?" "They did not believe it." "What? they did not believe it? Why, we stamped it with our seal." "Then the dogs do not trouble about your seal. I showed the letter to five of them. Not a single one could read or write, but they could all snarl and bite, as you see from me."

THE LARGER HERBIVOROUS ANIMALS

The beden (or wā'al), ibex, with long powerful horns, lives in the mountains of ar-Rawâḳ, aš-Šâma, aṭ-Ṭawîl, and al-Hûḡ. If it descends to the plain, it does not escape the dogs, but in the mountains it cannot be overtaken. The hunters track the fresh spoor which it leaves when going at night to the pasture. They crouch in a rocky cleft and wait until it passes. Sometimes five or even more men go out to hunt it. One proceeds along the ridge of the mountain, the rest go at fixed intervals along the slope, and during the day they search for the place where the ibexes take their ease. The ibex has very weak sight, but its sense of hearing and smell are excellent. The female protects her young with her horns.

The baḡar al-maha (or baḡar al-wahaš), Beatrix antelope, attains the size of a one-year-old calf. It is white and has straight sharp horns, with which it defends itself against dogs. During the day it is most fond of frequenting the deep funnel-shaped pits of the sandy desert an-Nefūd. In the summer, when the Bedouins do not encamp in the Nefūd, it grazes quite freely even during the day, while in the rainy season it goes out to the pasture only at night and is very timid. If it is alarmed it will flee for a whole day without stopping. Its sight is bad. A huntsman in a white shirt can approach to within gunshot of it if he advances against the wind behind a white horse or camel. The male is called tôr, the female bḡara, the young ‘eḡel. Its flesh is very tasty. The skin is used for making water bags or coverings, and from the fat skin at the back of the neck, known as ‘ar‘ara, the Bedouins sew gauntlets, darake, for protecting the hand against saber wounds.

The zbi, gazelle, forms whole flocks, ġemîle, in al-Hamâd, especially in the territory of al-Manâẓer on the southern border of Palmyrena. The mâle is called tejs, the female ‘anz, the young hišf (or razâl). The gazelle is known as rîm if it is white, ‘efri if it is white beneath its belly and yellowish on its back, and hemri if it is of a pinkish tint.

The best gazelle hunters are the men of the Šlejb tribe. Their favorite method is to hunt in twos. One does the driving, hawwâš, the other the hunting, ḡannâš. The one who does the driving wraps skins, habbâjât, round his knees and elbows and crawls on them towards the flock of gazelles, endeavoring to drive them up to the hidden marksman. In a single day they capture ten to twenty gazelles.

In al-Manâẓer the gazelles are driven into extensive enclosures. A wall about one and a half meters high, shaped like a figure eight, is built of stone without mortar. The lower loop is only half finished. Where the two loops meet, a narrow opening, tenijje (or zejž), is left. At several places portions of the wall enclosing the upper loop are a little lower than the rest of the wall. At each of these places a hole two or three meters deep is dug outside the enclosure. The flock of gazelles is cautiously driven into the lower uncompleted loop. This is soon accomplished, because the two walls are about a thousand paces distant one from the other. The gazelles at first advance quietly, but later on, becoming scared, they run along the two walls and try to penetrate as rapidly as possible through the narrow opening into the upper and completely closed loop. As soon as they run through, the narrow opening is blocked up and a greyhound, sluke, attacks the gazelles. The frightened animals run round the wall, jump across it where it is lowest, and fall into the pits that have been dug outside. It is said that the gazelles even dream of the narrow opening, zejž, through which they rush to certain destruction. If a Bedouin wishes to stop a gazelle in flight, he shouts: "A narrow opening is in front of thee, O gazelle! az-zejž jâ razâl," and the gazelle at once stops and looks round. If a Bedouin perceives a gazelle when he is undertaking an important task, he is afraid of bad luck, and shouts: "Gazelle, gazelle, let the misfortune vanish as well! razâl razâl w-šarren zâl."

SMALL ANIMALS

The arnab, hare, is found throughout the territory of the Rwala. In the sandy Nefûd it is pinkish-white; in the volcanic regions it is black; in al-Hamâd it is grayish-yellow. Hence it cannot be distinguished from its surroundings. The male is called hazaz, the female edene, and the young hurnež. The full-grown hare is not as large as the wild rabbit of Europe. Like the gazelle and antelope it quenches its thirst with dew only. If a man approaches it, it crouches close to the ground or hides behind a stone in a brushwood thicket and does not move even if the man walks right past it. If, however, it notices that the man is returning, it seeks safety by rushing madly away.

The hare is said to boast: "I am he with the white lip in the plain with the dried-up plants, who satisfies two and makes the mouth of the third one water; ana-š-šerma bkâ'at al-žerma mišbe' at-tnên w-mlarrem at-tâlet," or "I am he who hides beneath a tiny shrub, whose fur gives pleasant warmth, and who is not seen except by the camel herdsmen; ana šgê-reti hafijje w-wbêreti zafijje w-lâ jišûfni kûd râ'i al-belijje." If the hare runs away, the Rwala shout after him: "Furry one, furry one, into the fire with him when he's caught! wabra wabra w-ben-nâr mintabra." If the hare shows himself to men hunting with falcons, they shout: "Thy appearance is a good omen to us, but we will show thee to the falcon; 'araz-tina-l-hejr w-'araznač laṭ-tejr."

The hanzîr, wild pig, lives only in Palmyrena and in the environs of al-Azrak, where it hides in the marshy thickets. The boar is called šihl, the sow šibe, the sucking pig ḡarnûš. Instead of hanzîr, the Rwala use the word tahzîr. The flesh of wild swine is generally eaten.

The şejd at-tas'a is an herbivorous animal of the size of a six-months lamb, gray in color; its head is said to resemble that of a wether below and a human being above. It lives almost solely on the border of the Nefûd, and its flesh is very tasty.

The wabr, marmot, is found in the same mountains as the ibex.

The nîs, porcupine, is particularly abundant in the environs of al-Ka'ara, where the innumerable caves and rocky hollows of all sizes serve as its refuge. When wounded, it attacks a man by biting and scratching. Its flesh is very good.

The ḡumfod, hedgehog, is also hunted, as its flesh is very tasty. Hedgehog skin is tied round the neck of timid camels. It is said that when they have worn it for at least a month, they cease to be scared.

The ḡerdi is a large variety of jerboa. It scrapes deep holes on the uplands and excavates passages into them in such a way that the water does not penetrate even during the heaviest rains. Its flesh is not particularly savory.

The ḡarbûc (or jarbûc), a smaller variety of jerboa, prefers to dig holes in plains with soft sandy soil and forms long and easily recognizable passages immediately below the surface. These passages are known as neṭâḡa. When it runs into its hole, it immediately stops up the entrance with a heap of clay, kaş'a, for fear of snakes. This heap of clay is an unfailing sign that the jarbûc is in its passages. If the Bedouin wishes to hunt it, he thrusts stalks or branches of plants into the passage at several spots and waits until one or another of them moves. That shows him that the jarbûc is trying to crawl through, and he kills it with his stick or tramples on it. If he has no time to wait, he tramples on the passages until he drives the jarbûc out. In its terror the animal often penetrates the roof of the passage and escapes, if the Bedouin fails to reach it with the stick he throws. The flesh of the jarbûc is very tasty, similar to that of chicken. The skin is removed and the carcase roasted whole together with the entrails, only the lower part of the legs being thrown away.

The ġarbû and ġerdi boast: "I am al-ġarbû, the son of al-marbû; on me ten people can easily eat their fill at supper, and pieces of my extremities will still be left in the scrub; ana-l-ġarbû eben al-marbû mu'ašši 'ašara ma'ašera w-kašâ-lîmi 'ala-š-šġera." "If my forelegs were as long as my hind legs there is no 'obejje mare, which could overtake me; law idejje tûl riġlejje mâ talhaḵni kill 'obejje." "I am al-ġerdi, the son of al-ġerdi, who thrusts a man in armor into a mouse hole; ana-l-ġerdi eben al-ġerdi rammâj al-milbes bel-habâra." The man in armor always rides on a horse, which stumbles if it steps into the deep hole of a ġerdi and throws its rider.

An old ġarbû was giving advice to her child. Amongst other things she said:

*Fuz bnafsak en šufet zejmen
w-halli-d-dâr tan'a' limin banâha ad-dâr taġed dâran aḥejr minha
w-rûḥak lam taġed rûḥ sawâha.*

Flee alone if thou beholdest a mightier
And let the dwelling mourn for him who built it.
A dwelling, thou wilt find a dwelling better than this one,
But a soul, thou couldst not find a soul such as the one thou hast.

*Elja hall at-teżil bdâr ƙowmen
w-mâ lis-sâcenîn illa-r-raḥîl."*

If the oppressor penetrates into the dwelling of his vassals,
There is nothing left for the dwellers but to go.

The fâr, mouse, is found everywhere. It penetrates into the tents, carries away food, and often gnaws even sleeping persons. A Bedouin recites:

*Ana-sharatni tâli-l-lejl fâra tâhod zahâbi jamm heġrah twaddîh zarabtuha ƙašdi-lha bel-feḵâra min ġûd melḥi râḥ dammha jibârîh
w-adḥol 'ala ḥašnân w-šejḥ al-wabâra
w-allâh jizajje min halla 'awânîh amm-ente jâ zarbûl mâ bak hemâra aḵša ġûdak btâref al-ġoḥr taflîh.*

Once the mice summoned a great meeting and agreed with one accord that every cat must wear around its neck a little bell which would give warning to the mice. The mice bought many little bells, and their chief, čebîr al-fâr, called on the bravest to come forward and undertake to hang them around the cats' necks; but so far no mouse has ever come forward. The little bells are lying in the storeroom of the mice, and the cats still torment the poor creatures.

The blend, mole, grayish in color, lives particularly in the depression of Sirhân. Once a mole encamped with an owl, bûma, a swallow, rķê'i, a frog, zafza', and a moth, šerâra. There came to them a man riding on a camel. They all entertained him; he was the guest of all. At the time when the morning star rose, someone stole his camel from him. All his hosts had just fallen asleep. The lamentations of their guest woke them up. They at once left the camp and went in search of the stolen camel. The mole searched for it under the earth, the owl among ruins, the swallow among herds of grazing camels, the frog in the water, and the moth among garments and carpets. The butterfly moth is unhappy because it has not yet succeeded in finding the camel, and throws itself into the fire with the words: "Rather into the fire than live in dishonor."

CARNIVOROUS BIRDS

The Rwala divide birds into tjûr and hummar, the tjûr comprising all carnivorous birds.

Falcons and Falconry

The main representative of the tjûr is the hunting falcon, şakr, which is often known as tejr. The Rwala buy hunting falcons from the settlers in aş-Şejh Miskîn and ar-Rhejbe, who either select young ones or catch fully grown ones. The best hunting falcon is al-horr. It is reddish brown, aşkar, with many white spots, trejwât, on its tail; or dark brown, adbas; or even black. The male falcon is called şabbût, the female šêhâna. The Bedouins relate that the young falcon remains forty days in embryo, forty days before it is hatched from the egg, and that only after another forty days does it show whether it will fly or not; arba'in jowm fêz w-arba'in jowm bêz w-arba'in jowm jeîr w-lâ jeîr.

The best of the young falcons is called zên an-nâder; the second best, lazîz an-nâder; the third best, kaṭijje; and the one which is of no use for anything is tibe. The male provides food for both the female and the young. It brings home habâri (bustards) and hares. If the young one falls out of the nest, only the male looks after it. If the male perishes, the female is glad if she can supply her young and herself with jerboas and mice, which are not particularly good for the young. When the young falcons are able to feed themselves is the most favorable time to take them out. A dealer in falcons gives them food until they are fully developed, whereupon he sells them to the Bedouins.

FIG. 2—Hunting falcons.

The catching of full-grown falcons involves less trouble. The falcon hunter, tarrâh, seeks out a suitable spot among the rocks, prepares a hiding place there, places two or three stones in front of it, fastens a small net between them, shakes clay over it, and connects it to his hiding place with a string. To a thin cord he then ties a raven, a handful of feathers, and a pigeon. By means of a slender thread he fastens the raven to a large stone between the hiding place and the net and gives it water and food; he himself keeps in his hiding place with the pigeon, and waits until the cry of the raven shows that the falcon is circling above it. He then cautiously pulls the raven in, so that in its place there remain the feathers tied to the same cord, while the pigeon sits down by the net. If the falcon flings itself upon the pigeon, the hunter releases the net by means of the string, catches the falcon, and immediately sews up its eyelids, jeḳaṭṭeb aṭ-ṭejr. After three or four days the falcon has become a little tame, jewâlef, and the stitches may be undone. The falcon hunter sells untrained falcons for eight to twenty meğîdijjât ($7.20-$18) each.

The Bedouin has to train the falcon himself. The chiefs generally have a slave who trains falcons for them and also hunts with them. If the chiefs wish to hunt themselves, they must also occupy themselves with the falcons, or else the birds will not be accustomed to them and will not return to them from their booty. The falconer needs a wooden stand about forty centimeters high, provided with an iron spike below and covered with leather above. Upon this stand, markâba, the hawk lives. On each foot it has a leather loop, sibk, from which there extends a chain, marbat, passing about halfway down the stand. The falcon can rise a little, but it cannot fly away (Fig. 2). On its head the falcon wears a small leather helmet, burku, which can be drawn down over its eyes and fastened under its beak around its neck, so that the bird cannot throw it off with its claw.

Shortly before sunset the falconer, şakkâr, puts a coarse leather gauntlet, dess, on his right hand, removes the chain from the loops, draws a long thin cord through them, takes the falcon on his right hand, keeps calling its name, jad'i, and swings it to and fro, endeavoring to make it fly. The falcon rises and circles above the falconer. He fastens the other end of the cord to a firmly fixed peg, takes a small riding bag in his left hand and a piece of meat in his right hand, and with this he beckons to the falcon, calling it by name. If the falcon does not clutch, he slowly treads on the rope until the bird finally dashes upon the meat. When the falcon after a few days of training returns of its own accord, he lets it go entirely free. Then he obtains a hare, which has either been wounded by a shot or has one leg broken, and he sets, jihedd, the falcon and a greyhound, sluke, on to it. If the falcon catches it, he lets it have it all. When the falcon has caught and devoured several wounded hares with the help of the greyhound, the falconer goes out hunting with it. He fastens it on a small chain behind the saddle of the camel, takes a riding bag with him, calls the greyhound, and rides out beyond the camp. If the greyhound raises a hare or a habâra bird, the hunter unloosens the falcon, takes it on his right hand, rides up at a trot behind the dog, and sets the bird on the hunted animal. The falcon looks round, lifts its wings, jifarfer, and, observing the prey, ṭala, flies after it. It catches the habâra immediately, but the hare usually slips away, hides, and thus escapes its beak. If the falcon swoops down upon the hare, this is called aṭ-ṭejr jedlih. If it succeeds in plunging its talons into the hare's back, ʿalak, the falconer rides up at full speed behind it, covers it and its prey with his cloak, slaps, jīṭabṭeb, the bird on the back, shouting "kiš kiš," and endeavors to remove it, tenašneš. The falcon receives its share of the prey only inside the tent, never on the open plain. A well-trained falcon can catch as much as ten ḥabâri and twenty hares a day, but only if there is an abundance of game. But there are few falconers who keep their falcons as long as three or four months, as they all get lost. In February and March they do not return, especially if they meet with wild falcons.

The young Bedouin is fond of hunting with falcon and greyhound. He can then ride more freely among the throngs of his migrating countrymen and can approach his sweetheart, talk to her, or offer her his booty. He therefore sings:

*Jâ lejt li ġerwen w-jâ lejt li tîr
w-kuʿajjeden nensef ʿalejh aš-šdâdi neġi mâ bejn as-salaf w-al-mezâhîr
w-nešalli-l-ġerwa w-aṭ-ṭejr râdi.*

Oh had I a hound for the chase! Oh had I a hunting falcon
And a little camel! we would place a saddle upon it,
And would ride forth between the leader's troop and the migrating tribe,
We would call to the hound, and the falcon would hunt.

The ġerwa is the bitch of the greyhound species. The leader's troop of warriors, salaf, rides generally one or two kilometers in front of the pack train. The ġerwa runs out in front and raises hares and ḥabâri, which flee from the danger behind the salaf, but are turned back by the migrating tribe. Thus a good falcon has the best opportunity for hunting between the riding troop and the camels with the baggage.

*Aṭ-ṭejr ʿajja jâ-l-kzejʿi ješîdi
jâ allî ʿajja ješîd al-ḥebâra lâ waʿ ḥasâjef naklejteḥ ʿal-îdi meseḥḥ ar-rîzân ʿafen aṭ-ṭejâra.*

The hunting falcon, O al-Kzejʿi! has refused the chase,
Alas for the one which refused to hunt the ḥebâra;

A pity is this loss; I shifted it into my other hand,
But it is like a meseḥḥ ar-rîẓân, which because it is a sluggard cannot be trained for flight.

The falconer seizes the falcon, places it on his hand on which he wears a leather gauntlet, unfastens the chain from its foot, and by swinging it to and fro in his hand compels it to fly. When one hand becomes tired, he shifts it into the other and repeats his attempt. The meseḥḥ ar-rîẓân is a bird of prey similar to the falcon.

Aṭ-ṭejr jā ʿammâr jā ʿāseb aṭ-tena allâh w-lâ leh ġerraten nastahdi bah radat beh ʿarda min al-kerânîš ḥâjel ʿâmên šâtên muḥḥaha biġerîdah.

Of our falcon which was so winsome and ever capturing ing booty,
By Allâh himself! there is no trace which we could follow;
It was joined by a hardy female falcon, a barren one,
Whose marrow after two summers and two winters had gathered in her feet.

The žernâše (pl., kerânîš) is the full-grown female falcon. The ġerîd are the falcon's legs from the talons to the knees. The female falcon had not paired for two summers and two winters; she had remained ḥâjel, barren. In the opinion of the Bedouins the marrow — mainly that which has accumulated in the region of the shin — escapes from the bird's body during pairing.

Other Carnivorous Birds

The ġeleme is a bird of prey smaller than the falcon, ṭejr, but larger than the bâšek (known also as čḥala), a kind of hawk. It catches and devours all ḥummar birds (see below, pp. 37—41) and seeks particularly after al-kaṭa, the sand grouse.

The meseḥḥ ar-rîẓân, a kind of falcon, is fond of catching the ġarbû.

The bâz is the sparrow hawk.

The ḥdejja is a kite.

The ʿakâb, eagle. Not even a bâšek, nor a ġeleme, nor the falcon itself is safe from the ʿakejb al-ġerdân species.

The nîsr (pl., nsûr), vulture, especially the habaši species, is shot and eaten, for its flesh is healthful. Seven pieces of its flesh dried in the sun are the best remedy for rheumatism and hemorrhoids. The patient should eat these seven pieces at once, cover himself with seven quilts, and sweat, and Allâh will help him.

The raĥama (Vultur perenopterus) migrates at the beginning of the autumn rains and does not return until the beginning of the smâk season. The Bedouins greet its return with joy, for they know that within ten or fifteen days there will be warmer weather. The raĥama is unwilling to give up its booty and exerts all its strength to get possession of it. Hence the saying: "So and so craves for something like a raĥama, twaĥĥam twaĥmet ar-raĥama."

The saʿadî or abu saʿad is the stork.

The rarĥ is a water bird.

The rarâb, raven, is found in three varieties: the zâr al-bakʿ, the smallest, is black with a bluish or greenish luster on its chest; the ġabʿa, somewhat larger, has a short tail and very tasty flesh; the rarâb al-ʿakʿak is the largest. All three species accompany the camels far into the desert and from them they pick ticks, karâd, and the larvae of the gadfly, heleme; but they also gnaw at the blisters under the saddle, and for this reason the herdsmen drive them away. If they see a raven settling on a camel, they call to it: "Fly away into the inhabited regions! rarreb rarreb." Or: "Beware of the awl! The awl will prick thy throat! mĥejrîz jibett le-hâtak!"

If a man undertakes an important journey and observes a single raven, he laments: "Oh! weary with weeping is the eye of him whom a single raven has approached, jâ kard al-ʿejn min ġâh al-rarâb whîd." He knows that he will have bad luck, and therefore he will prefer to return. If, however, he sees two ravens, he exults: "Oh! blissful is the eye of him whom two ravens have approached, jâ ĥazz al-ʿejn min ġannah al-rarâbên."

The young ravens are more wary than the old ones. An ancient raven was giving instruction to its great-grandson: "My son, do not trust people. If thou perceivest a man approaching thee, fly away as soon as he bends down. He might lift a stone and throw it at thee." "Granddad, do not be afraid for me. I shall not wait until he bends down, but will fly away as soon as I catch sight of him. Why, he might be carrying a stone in his hand, and then he could throw it at me without having to bend down."

NON-CARNIVOROUS BIRDS

Non-carnivorous birds, known as hummar, are as follows:

The habâra (pl., habâri), a variety of bustard. It is dark-gray, with white feathers in its wings and tail, and is the size of an average hen. It runs quickly but flies clumsily. It is most fond of frequenting plains and valleys covered with perennials, and for the most part it lives on seeds and young shoots. When frightened it hides under a shrub and does not fly out until its enemy draws near. It flies close to the ground for a distance of one or two hundred paces, settles down for a moment, makes off again for several paces, and once more nestles close to the ground under a shrub or a leaning slab. It is very difficult to get within striking distance of it, because it flees continually. Only a rider on a horse full of endurance can weary it. Its greatest enemy is the falcon, which watches its movements from above and when it settles down swoops upon it like lightning.

Originally the falcon was afraid of the habâri, for they were more numerous than his own stock. Once a wounded falcon asked for their hospitality. They received it kindly, fed and nursed it, so that it completely recovered. It seemed strange to the falcon that they did not hold any councils together. Accordingly, it asked the hostess: "To what tribe do you belong?" "We are the kôm (subjects of) az-Zennâra." "And who is your chief?" "I am the chief," said the hostess, but her neighbor exclaimed: "Not at all, I am the chief." A bird which was flying past contradicted her: "Why, how so? I am the chief." The falcon was very much pleased, for it thought to itself: "Surely I shall not be afraid of these. They will never attack me together. I shall be able to feed on one after the other. I shall have less trouble than if I were to catch only small birds, as hitherto." From that time the falcon, tejr, has devoured the habâri.

The habâra mocks at the falcon: "I am the habâra; in the region where there is no camp the shouting of the herds-men [who have observed thee] scares me, so that thou wilt not overcome me, my poor fellow; ana-l-ḥbâra barz ekfâra ḥess ar-raʿjân jeğazzîni mâ tekwâni jâ mesčîni." The falcon replies: "I am the commander assigned to thee, with very keen eyes, although I do not rub indigo upon them; ana ḥurren leč madkûren leč makḥûl al-ʿajn belâ nîli." The ḥabâra: "I am like a snake crouching under a shallow stone, so that thou wilt not overcome me, my poor fellow; ana-l-ḥajje taḥat aš-šfajje mâ tekwâni jâ mesčîni." The falcon: "I am a snake charmer, the son of a snake charmer, I charm the snake, so that thou canst not harm me; ana-l-ḥarrâi eben al-ḥarrâi akraʿ al-ḥajje mâ teğîni." The ḥabâra: "I am a tiny date, hidden at the top of the palm [protected by the spikes of its leaves], so that thou wilt not overcome me, my poor fellow; ana-s-šhala brâs an-nḥala mâ tekwâni jâ mesčîni." The falcon: "I am a climber, the son of a climber, I will cut the spikes with my knife; ana-r-raḳḳâj eben ar-raḳḳâj aḥask (sic) aš-šowk besečîni."

The naʿâme, ostrich, is found mainly in the Nefûd, particularly in the northwest part, also to the west of al-ʿElejm, in the environs of aṭ-Ṭawîl, in al-ʿArejż, and in al-Rwêṭa. In the dry season the ostriches go far to the north, as far as the environs of Palmyra. On account of its dark-gray plumage the male ostrich is called zîm (or muzellel); the female is called rabda and the young, rîlân. In the smâk season the female lays ten to thirty eggs in shallow holes in the sand. Such a heap of ostrich eggs is known as deḥw. As soon as the first egg has been laid, the guarding of the nest begins. According to the Rwala, in the daytime it is guarded by the male, while the female feeds, and during the night she does the watching. When the last egg is laid, three or four are rolled away to a distance of one pace from the nest. The bird does not trouble about these, but turns the others over and during the night sits upon them and warms them. The male bird, which remains by the nest during the day, does not sit on the eggs, as they are then warmed by the sun, but the female protects them against the night cold with her body and plumage. After what is said to be twenty-one days the young are hatched. The male then pecks through the eggs, which were removed from the nest one after the other, and makes the young birds feed on their contents. When they have finished these eggs, they go to the pasture under the protection of their parents. They are always led by their mother, while their father walks behind them and protects them from wolves, hyenas, and nsûr. The ostrich has very bad hearing; on the other hand its sight is excellent. It is easiest to hunt near its nest. When there is no wind the spoor of the ostrich is very plain in the sand. The hunter follows it, hides behind every shrub, crawls on his stomach, and so draws near to the bird. If the male observes from a distance any suspicious movement of the shrub or the hunter, it flees with the whole flock, which cannot be overtaken in the sand even by the swiftest horse. Near the nest the hunter can fire at the birds he is stalking. The fat of the ostrich, known as zihem, is a remedy for various diseases.

The kandara is a pinkish bird about the size of a hen. It flies badly and runs in a clumsy manner. It is found solely in the Nefûd, especially on the precipitous slopes of the pits.

The kaṭra is larger than the habâra. It flies very little. If attacked by the falcon, it lies on its back and defends itself with its claws.

The tarše is a dark bird the size of a small duck. It lives only in pairs in al-Ḥamâd. It has no sense of hearing.

The bawwa is half the size of the kandara. Two varieties live in al-Ḥamâd, of which the darker and larger is the kidri.

The kaṭa', sand grouse, is found in the interior of the desert only as long as the various natural reservoirs are filled with rain water. When these dry up, it migrates to the edge of the desert about a hundred kilometers distant from permanent water. The kaṭa', hağal (see next page), and the pigeon are the only birds which regularly drink water after sunrise and before sunset. The kaṭa' never lays eggs near a watering place, but in a remote valley covered with grass and bushes. It digs a tiny hole alongside a shrub, and the female lays three or four eggs, gray in color with dark spots, the size of a pigeon's egg. The birds leave their nests only when flying to the watering place; otherwise they always keep close by them. In such valleys there are usually at least a thousand nests. When the young are hatched they run about like countless tiny chickens and search for seeds. The kaṭa' never flies alone, but always in flocks. If the flock does not contain more than ten birds, it is known as firs; otherwise as raff. The Bedouins express surprise that the kaṭa', when flying to a watering place — even though it may be a hundred kilometers away — never goes astray and never deviates from the straight course; and therefore they say of a good guide, delîl, who has an excellent knowledge of the flat desert, that he is delîl ka-tâwi. The kaṭa is very fond of entering encampments, where it seeks for grain. Its arrival is known immediately throughout the camp, for it is always possible to hear the cry of the bird: "Kaṭa kaṭa." The Bedouins say: "The kaṭa have come to us with a deafening cry; would that Allâh had not blessed the kaṭa; ġâna-l-kaṭa leh farḳaṭa lâ bârak allâh bal-kaṭa."

The kêrwân is a variety of kaṭa, but smaller; the outer half of its wing is black.

The haġal, partridge, lives in flocks of eight to sixteen in the depression of Sirhân only, where there is abundance of water everywhere. On hot days it hides in the bushes. The male bird calls his flock together by crying: "Ḳor, kor, kor." The flock, thus alarmed, flies out but soon retires again and hides. If a Bedouin wishes to stop their escape, he shouts: "Ḥawġelô ḥawġelô." The male bird never hides but jumps from boulder to boulder, watches the enemy, and warns his charges.

The mrêi is a smaller variety of the haġal. It does not live in flocks but only in pairs, and it flies well.

The samakmak is a dark-gray bird the size of a small pigeon. Its legs and neck are long, and it lives on fish in the lake near al-Azraḳ.

The ṣabri collects seeds and insects, but it also gnaws the young of the ġerdi and ġarbû.

The dabbâh ummeh w-abûh, murderer of its mother and its father, is the hoopoe.

The sammûne, a small dark-gray bird, creeps among the bushes.

The fsejsi, a small bird with a white belly and a dark back, flies only among the tops of bushes and trees.

The ṣâw is a small bird similar to our finch. One variety is yellowish, another black and white.

The ġarġara.

The ša'êle.

The rkêi, swallow.

The ṣaffâra.

The dhejjen, a dark-brown bird, smaller than the hoopoe.

The sumarmar.

The mlehât ar-ra'jân.

- The umm twejž, the turtledove, lives only in the oases. The hẓârî is found only in palm groves.

The mkaṭṭa eats ripe dates.

The umm sâlem is a small ash-colored bird which always flies round camels. If it flies up to a height of ten or fifteen meters, it begins to choke and at once comes down again. Its voice is very pleasant. Once the umm sâlem came to the ant and begged: "Give me supper for my children." The ant disposed of her by saying: "Depart! I am constantly attending to the harvest, but thou to singing; ana hammi al-ḥaṣâjed w-enti hammeč al-ḥaṣâjed." The umm sâlem replied: "And yet my voice is often more precious than the whole of thee with thy ragged tail, ana jowmen min ajjâm ṭrubi jeswâč jâ mḥazûkat ad-dnebi."

REPTILES

Of reptiles the Rwala are most interested in the following:

The zabb, also known as abu ḥamad. Many declare that it does not belong among the reptiles, because it has four feet of which it can make good use. It is a large lizard with seven vertebrae. It has five toes on each of its feet. Its tail is longer than its actual body. It lives on plants only and is fond of lying in the clefts between stones. The Bedouins eagerly pursue it. If they catch it, they turn it over on its back in order to cut its throat. It then raises its forefeet to protect itself. The flesh of the dead lizard twitches for a long time. It is very tasty. Generally the Bedouins push the zabb into the sand and light a fire above it. After about an hour they rake the fire away, dig the zabb out, turn it over, push it back again, and make another fire over it.

The zabb was originally the chief of all reptiles, being the first one who urged them to prayer and who taught them how to bow down, while praying, and to kneel and touch the earth with their foreheads. When human beings began to increase in number, the zabb sent forth his spies into the territory inhabited by human beings, in order to find out what weapons the latter possessed and how war could be waged with them. The spies, who were the actual sons of abu ḥamad, informed him of what they had seen and heard, and he realized that war with human beings was not possible and that it would be best to hide from them. Accordingly he dug dens for himself and his numerous family. To the rest of his subjects he said nothing. When he used to come from his work into the assembly, his whole forehead was gray with dust and clay. His companions asked him: "What makes thy forehead gray?" "Constant praying, during which I touch the earth as is prescribed." One day the guards who had been posted on the boundary came running up, shouting: "The Arabs are approaching with dogs and weapons." Abu ḥamad and his family at once hid themselves in the dens which had been prepared, so that none of them perished.

The Rwala divide serpents into ḥajje and dâbb, the former being any short snake and the latter any long serpent, irrespective of whether it is venomous or not. In poetry the latter appellation is always used for venomous serpents. Of the short serpents they are afraid of the viper, efâ'i, which is found in the rocky desert, as well as of the batra and the ḥazaf, which live in the sandy desert. The latter crawl out only by night. During the daytime they dig themselves into the sand, so that the tips of their heads alone project.

Of the long serpents the ḥaniš is particularly venomous. It is one meter long, covered with patches of color, and swims in pools of rain water.

The skin shed by a serpent, silb, serves as a remedy for various diseases of the eye. The Rwala all eat the long serpents. The flesh of the short snakes they give to camels suffering from the disorder of the stomach known as rošš and from caries, rasîs.

The ḥardawn, chameleon, basks in sunny spots and nods its head at passers-by.

The ab-at-ṭhejḥ is smaller than the ḥardawn. It lives exclusively in the Nefûd, where it hides in the sand, leaving its head alone uncovered.

The malas, a reptile similar to the ḥardawn, is found likewise in the Nefûd. It is spotted with red and black patches. Its flesh dried in the sun and ground to powder is eaten by impotent old men.

The solejmâni (or ġlejâmâni) and the ḥabananiije are harmless lizards.

The ba'ersî (or brejşî) is a venomous lizard of the Nefûd. When a man is bitten by this lizard, he becomes very restless. He cannot remain in one place. If he is lying in the shade, he craves for the sun, and if he is carried into the sun, he wants the shade. Hence they say of a man who runs from place to place: "He has been bitten by the brejši, hu kerîş al-brejši."

The akrab, scorpion.

INSECTS

The Rwala are infested by the following insects:

The ankabût, a venomous spider.

The naḥal, bees, which are found particularly in the rocky regions. They are tiny creatures, and their sting is insignificant. Their honey has a sour taste. If anyone finds a swarm of bees, he endeavors to reach the honey. There is a well-known riddle: "It feeds in the waterless region, no man tastes its flesh, but its offspring is eaten by every passer-by; žâfer al-arż mar'aha w-mâ dâķ an-nâs laḥamha illa waladha jā-keleḥ kill min ġâḥ"; the answer is: the bee.

The ka'ejsi, a species of large ant, is known also as šejḥ an-naml. It forms the subject of the following riddle: "It devours barley and is not a camel; it devours straw and is not an ass; it pulls down a dwelling and is not a mouse; it is black as night and yet is not night; jâkel aš-ša'ir w-lâ hu ba'ir jâkel at-tiben w-lâ hu ḥmâr jîḥarķ ad-dâr w-lâ hu fâr aswad al-lejl w-lâ hu lejl"; the answer is: ka'ejsi.

The naml, the ordinary ant, of which there are three varieties: tajjâr, farsi, and darr.

The arża, wood borer, a small insect somewhat larger than the ant. It devours everything that it can reach.

CHAPTER III

STRUCTURE OF SOCIETY

SETTLERS AND NOMADS

The Rwala divide human beings into ḥazar, or those who dwell in permanent houses, and ʿarab, or those who dwell in movable tents. Arab, therefore, is the name given throughout the desert to the inhabitant of a black tent only. The phrase is used: “ʿArabna raḥalow, ʿarabna nazalow; our Arabs have removed, our Arabs have encamped,” in reference to members of the same kin (see below, pp. 48f.). The ʿarab al-žebîla are members of the same tribe. ʿArab ad-dîra is the common name of the nomads who are found in the tilled areas and on their borders, irrespective of the tribe to which they belong. The word ʿorbân expresses membership of various clans or tribes. ʿOrbân ʿala dmejr denotes that in the environs of Dmejr are encamped members of various clans and tribes. If the herdsmen or hunters meet an unknown nomad in their territory, they inquire: “Ent min ên jâ walad, where art thou from, man?” If he says: “Min hal-ʿarab, from these Arabs,” they ask: “Fâhmîn annak min al-ʿarab mâr min ajj al-ʿorbân, we know that thou art from the Arabs, but from which of the various Arabs?”

The dwellers in houses, ḥazar, are divided into ḥarâwne (the individual is known as ḥarwânî), or those who never leave their permanent dwelling, and raʿw (or raʿijje), or those who change from their permanent dwellings during the rainy season to movable tents. After the sowing of crops in the autumn, the raʿw or raʿijje leave their villages and with their flocks of goats and sheep make their way into the steppe, where they dwell both in black goat's-hair tents and in gray tents of cotton fabric. At the end of April and in May, when the harvest is near, they return from the steppe to their houses.

The Arabs consist of Bedouins and šwâja (or šûjân). The šwâja have two things black, lehom swâdên, black tents of goat's hair and flocks of black goats and sheep. These flocks do not permit them to go into the interior of the desert, mâ ješarrežûn. They are limited to the territory where there is abundance of water and where annuals grow every year. They encamp on the edge of the desert and are therefore known as ruh̄m ad-dîre, relatives of the (people of the) settled country; they do not undertake extensive raids, razw, and they acknowledge the supremacy of various Bedouins, to whom they pay a tax for protection, hâwa. The Bedouins are Arabs who breed camels exclusively, or at least in the main, and for ten months dwell in the interior of the desert, ješarrežûn. At the end of June they go to the edge of the desert, jezarrebûn, dwell among the settlers until the middle of August or the beginning of September, provide themselves with grain, clothing, and weapons, and then return to the desert again.

On the edge of the desert a constant increase or decrease of the population can be observed. If the government guarantees complete security of life and property to the inhabitants of the towns and villages, the herdsmen of goats and sheep are transformed into active farmers; on all sides they build cottages, hamlets come into existence, and the raʿw and šwâja become peaceful settlers. They entrust their goats and sheep to the care of various clans of Bedouins, who do not go back to the open desert but remain on the border between villages and settlements and are themselves transformed into šwâja. If there is no strong government in the populated regions, security of life and property disappears and there follows a decrease of population. The permanent house is exchanged for the moveable tent; the farmers become šwâja. The former settlers, however, never become real Bedouins, because the actual Bedouins will never acknowledge them as equals. The term Bedouin is, hence, much narrower than the term Arab. In the view of the Rwala not all inhabitants of the Arabian peninsula are actually Arabs. Only those are Arabs who dwell in movable tents. Not all the Arabs, however, are Bedouins, but only those who spend the greater part of the year in the interior of the desert and who breed mostly camels. The Rwala are recognized by all tribes as being true and pure Bedouins. They are baʿidîn az-zaʿna wâsiʿîn at-ṭaʿana, they have very extensive territories and drive their enemies far away from their camps. They are ahl as-snân w-al-eʿnân, warriors on horseback, for they are able both to wield the spear and to manage horses.

BLOOD RELATIONSHIP

Beni al-'Amm

The Rwala belong to the large group of tribes called 'Aneze, which is scattered almost throughout the peninsula and is divided into a southern and a northern branch. The southern 'Aneze comprise the tribes from which are descended the Ab-al-Hejl, Eben Şabbâh, Eben Sa'ûd, and various clans of the Kaḥaṭân and Muntifež. The northern 'Aneze are the Zana Muslim and Zana Bişr. The latter includes the Sba'a, Fed'ân, and 'Amârât. The former include the Weld 'Ali and Rwala, who are also known as the Âl Ğlâs. All the tribes and all the clans of the 'Aneze, in the opinion of the Rwala, have a common father and therefore are their beni al-'amm, their paternal cousins.

Only blood relationship on the father's side bestows the right of eben al-'amm. It is common to hear such a remark as: "His ancestor was not, at a remote period, our relation on the father's side; how could he now be our paternal cousin? min kaddîm ġeddeh mâ hu eben al-'amm ċêf jeşîr lena-bn al-'amm," or: "The Beni Şahr are more popular with us than the 'Amârât, but the latter are closer to us by blood relationship than the former. The Beni Şahr are foreigners, we and they have no forefather in common. Beni şahr arla' lena min al-'amârât w-lâçen bel-ķurba hadôla akrab lena min hadôlak beni şahr aġânîb mâ lena w-lahom ġidden wâhed."

Zbê'ân eben Haşmân of the Sirhân tribe had encamped with the Rwala for more than thirty years (in 1909). He married a Rwala woman, and his sister Maha' married Prince Saṭṭâm, to whom she bore a son, Trâd. Zbê'ân undertook warlike expeditions and raids together with the Rwala, he wore their costume, his sons speak like the rest of the Rwala, and yet they still belong to the Sirhân. Their kin, or ahl, is not with the Rwala, but with the people of the Sirhân. The paternal blood relationship, 'amâm, and not the maternal relationship, hwâl, forms the kin, ahl. If one of the sons of Zbê'ân were to kill one of the Rwala, he would have to seek refuge with his ahl, the Sirhân, and the blood of the Rwejli would have to be expiated with the blood of a Sirhâni. Kinsmen on the father's side are more often needed than those on the mother's side, 'amâmeh alzam min hwâleh. The former give muscular vigor and power, the latter wombs; ‘amâmeḥ ‘aṣabe w-ḥwâleh arḥâm.

Among those connected by blood relationship, eben al-‘amm, it is prohibited to bind a captured thief, mâ ‘alejh ar-rbât, or to attack after midnight or shortly before sunrise, which is the most favorable time for resting; mamnû ‘alejhom al-bejât w-aṣ-ṣbâḥ. The blood price is fixed at fifty camels, a mare, and armed equipment.

The blood relationship, beni al-‘amm, at the wish of the chiefs is sometimes granted to clans who are not related by blood and who derive their origin from quite different ancestors. If the chiefs of two unrelated tribes, barrâni (or aġnabi), are favorably disposed towards each other, they proclaim that they will bestow the right of kinship upon each other, ḥaḳḳ al-beni‘am (or ḥaḳḳ al-ben‘ame [sic]), as follows: "Between us and you there shall continue the friendship of kinsmen as between kinsmen related by blood; bênana w-bê-nakom ṣadâḳat al-ben‘ame swât al-beni‘am." As such it is their duty to protect each other's neighbor, ḳaṣîr, guest, zejf, or fellow traveler, ḥawi, even though he should be their actual enemy. It is likewise their duty to acquaint each other with the movements of hostile troops. In reality such a friendship has no value if the chiefs do not pay heed to it. "It is fairly spoken but it brings no profit, teṣliḥ al-ḥači min rejr manfa‘a." If a member of one of these tribes kills a man of the other tribe, he does not pay the blood price amounting to fifty camels, such as is the custom with actual beni ‘ammeh, but only seven, as in the case of unrelated tribes, aġnâb. If a thief from such a tribe is caught, he may be fettered; moreover, such a tribe may also be attacked after midnight, which is not permissible with the actual beni al-‘amm.

Âl and Ahl

According to the Rwala, their tribe is known as ḳabîlet (or bedîdet, or ‘ašîrt) ar-rwala, ‘ašîre having the same meaning as bedîde or ḳabîle. The clan and sometimes the kin are denoted by the word âl, which is often interchanged with the article al, although the meaning of the former is known to every Rwejli. Generally the word âl denotes the same as beni or eben, its meaning being larger than that of ahl. Ferîž is the name given to a group of kindred descended from the same ancestor; a ferîž is also wider than an ahl.

The ahl (for which we shall use the word "kin," in a technical sense) is a group fixed in relation to the individual only, a man's kin differing from the kins of his father or son (although all three kins in this case would include many individuals in common). A man's kin comprises his descendants to the third generation — that is, his sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons. It also includes his ascendants to the third generation — that is, his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather — and the descendants of these ascendants to the third generation from each. Descent is reckoned through male lines only. Second cousins are the most remote collaterals that may belong to one's kin.

An easy way of determining whether X belongs to the same kin as Y is to count from X up to the common ancestor of both X and Y and thence to count down to Y. Provided not more than five individuals are thus counted between X and Y and provided, also, that the common ancestor is not separated from either X or Y by more than three generations, X and Y will belong to the same kin. This conception of the kin explains why every Bedouin knows his great-grandfather, whereas of his great-great-grandfather he is likely to be absolutely ignorant. My comrade Blejhân gave me the following explanation of his own kin: "I am the descendant of Zeri, who is descended from Meşreb. Zeri begat Dârer and Şâleh. Dârer left Ibrâhîm and Baṛri. Ibrâhîm, my father, left me, that is Blejhân, Ğîân, and 'Aşwân, while Baṛri's sons were Defrân, Raşîd, and Merşed. Şâleh's sons were named Nedi and Ğlejdân. Nedi begat Nejtûl and Dijâb; Ğlejdân had Neġîb and Şajjâh. All these are my relatives, my ahl, and nobody else. My father's ahl reached as far back as Naşşâr, the father of Zeri and 'Abdallâh, but the descendants of 'Abdallâh do not concern me at all; they will not protect me and I shall not protect them." Of Naşşâr's father Blejhân knew nothing at all, except that he was descended from Meşreb's kin (and therefore was known as Eben Meşreb) and that he had a brother, Ma'rûf by name. But how many generations there were between Meşreb and him neither Blejhân nor anybody in his whole kin could tell. Blejhân counted himself as being thrice removed from his first-cousin, Defrân (i. e. by (1) his father, (2) his grandfather, and (3) his uncle). Similarly he counted himself five times removed from his second cousin, Neġîb. The older a man grows, the more extended is the circle of his relatives, provided, of course, that he begets sons, for his ahl then comprises not only his father and grandfather, if living, and his collaterals, but also his sons and grandsons.

The ahl of a Rwejli protects him from injustice and suffers for his guilt. The representative of this blood relationship is likewise known as ahl. This representative, that is, the ahl in the narrower sense of the word, is usually either the father, the uncle, or the elder brother. Sa'ûd, the son of Prince an-Nûri, had a tent of his own; if he said: "I shall go to my ahl," he never went into his own tent but into that of his father, Prince an-Nûri. If the latter was not present, he hastened to his older brother, Nawwâf. A solemn proclamation that somebody has been received into such and such an ahl may take the place of blood relationship.

The ahl al-bejt denotes the wife of a tent-owner or the wife of his brother, the whole tent being under her control. The phrase ahl al-bejt is interchangeable with râ'ijet al-bejt, the mistress of the tent. A guest calls for ahl al-bejt if he wishes to have a covering for his bed. The Bedouin living in a tent of his own calls his wife ahl al-bejt, ahl bejti, or râ'ijet bejti. If he has children they also belong to the ahl al-bejt. The wife never calls her husband ahl al-bejt or ahl bejti, but râ'i-l-bejt or râ'i bejtana, lord of the tent, lord of our tent. If she has a little boy, she refers to her husband as abu flân, the father of So and So. As long as the Rwejli lives in his father's tent it is impossible to speak of his ahl al-bejt, even though he is married and has children. He and his family belong to the family, ahl, of his father. If the father dies and his married sons still remain with their families in his tent, it is known as the tent of the sons of So and So, bejt 'ejâl flân, or the tent of their mother, if she is alive. The ahl al-bejt of such a tent is either the old mother or the wife of one of the brothers who has charge of the tent. If the wife of the oldest brother cannot agree with the wives of the remaining brothers, her husband says to her: "Thou shalt stay in this corner and from today onwards the ahl al-bejt (râ'ijet al-bejt) will be So and So." Among the Rwala the ahl al-bejt is the same as the 'ajle of the other tribes.

In its broader significance ahl denotes distinct tribes that are generally united for their mutual protection. Thus it is possible to speak of the Ahl al-Ġebel, by which are understood the various tribes of diverse origin that encamp in the eastern and southern parts of the Ḥawrân mountain range. Ahl ad-dîre are the inhabitants of various villages who never leave their territory, Ahâli-l-Kerak are the various tribes forming the population of the town of Kerak, and so on.

The ʿajle indicates a family which has a house and hearth of its own, al-ʿajle ahl al-ġdâr w-an-nâr. Any settler who has a house of his own and in it a wife who cooks for him is said to have his ʿajle.

The word durrijje, descendants, is replaced among the Rwala by the word zana, which designates very distant descendants, irrespective of whether they have actually sprung from a common ancestor or the relationship is due to adoption.

CHIEFS

The word kowm indicates the Bedouins ruled by a chief. Thus it is possible to say: "Kowm eben šaʿlân, he is of the kowm of Eben Šaʿlân"; "the kowm of Eben Meḡel are encamped there; the kowm of Eben Ġandal also took part in the raid"; but such a phrase as: "That is the kowm of the Rwala" or "He is descended from the kowm of the Freġe" will never be heard. When Prince Eben Šaʿlân speaks of ġemâʿati he is thinking of the various tribes who obey his orders and who hasten to his assistance, jefzaʿûn. Ġemâʿa is almost the same as kowm.

The rank of chief is hereditary in a definite house, âl. It is usual to recognize as chief that member who is most suitable by reason of his mental and physical qualities, nor need he be the oldest in the ruling house. Among the clans and tribes ruling houses persist as such until they die out, although their power may have become extremely weak and many families may have deserted them. A head chief or prince to whom the other chiefs have submitted either of their own free will or under compulsion and who represents a whole tribe or group of tribes is overthrown more frequently than an ordinary chief, and his rank passes to another kin. This most frequently happens if the hereditary head chief is not distinguished by warlike ability. He then directs the external affairs of his tribe as šejḥ al-bâb, while affairs of war are left to a man renowned for his courage and prudence even though he may be descended from a different kin. Such a leader is known as šejh aš-šdâd or šejh al-ḥarb. If he succeeds in overcoming the enemy and concluding a favorable peace, several clans become attached to him. They obey him in peace, and there ensue wars in which the hereditary head chief generally succumbs and his house acknowledges the supremacy of the previous military commander, who then becomes šejh al-bâb as well.

Traditions Concerning the Rwala Chiefs

According to tradition the head chief of all the Rwala was originally descended from the kin of the Ḳaḳa'a. Ša'lân was the son of worthy parents. Although he had no property of his own, he had charge of the camel herdsmen of the Âl Mur'aḏ kin in the capacity of a fedâwi, free-born servant. The herds grazed in the environs of a certain settlement in Neğd. The Ḳaḳa'a once stole flocks of sheep and goats from the settlers and drove their camels into their fields. The settlers rushed out, captured the herds of camels, and hid them in the enclosed palm gardens. The Rwala surrounded the settlement, but they could not break down the defenses, and the settlers threatened that the captured camels would die of hunger if they did not abandon the blockade. Accordingly the head chief of the Rwala made an offer of peace to the elder of the settlers. The elder declared that he would not negotiate except with his acquaintance Ša'lân and that he would not give up the camels except to him. The head chief called Ša'lân to him and said:

"Thy friend, ṣiddiž, the elder of the settlers, will give up the camels but only to thee. Hasten to him and come to terms with him in my name."

"Thou art the head chief; it is for thee to command, it is for thee to advise."

"Hasten to him. Come to terms in my name."

"You will not fulfil the terms I make."

"We will."

"Will you restore the captured sheep and goats to the settlers?"

"We will."

"Let representatives of the Freğe and Ribšân clans go surety for that."

"I, So and So, offer surety that the Freġe will not permit a single thread of the settlers to be cut."

"I, So and So, offer surety that the Ribšân will not permit a single thread of the settlers to be cut."

"Good, zên. Now give me thy seal ring."

"What dost thou want it for?"

"How could I settle anything in thy name without thy seal ring?"

The representatives of the Freġe and Ribšân pleaded with the chief to give Ša'lân the seal ring, and this was done. Ša'lân went to the elder and came to terms with him. The settlers returned the captured camels, addaw an-nawâkeş, received their sheep and goats, and renounced all claims to compensation for the damaged grain. All praised Ša'lân and said that he was a şâheb al-marġala, gentleman. A şâheb al-marġala must have a courageous heart, kalbeh kâwi, he must have a very shrewd wit to cope with difficulty, râ'i fetel, he must have a shrewd understanding, leh 'erf, he must see clearly into the future, şofteh ba'ide, and he must never be too hasty, leh şabr. Ša'lân remained in the settlement and did not return the ring to the head chief. The settlers, the Freġe, and the Ribšân supported him, and after four years he overthrew the head chief and himself guided the destinies of all the Rwala.

A struggle for priority ensued between the head chief Eben Ša'lân and his Rwala and Chief aš-Šrejfi of the Kwâčbe. The latter belonged to the Kaḥaṭân division of the 'Aneze. Originally they camped in Neġd. Under their chief aš-Šrejfi they advanced to the territory of the Rwala and encamped to the east of al-Ġowf. They wished to act and rule in complete independence, al-'amâl w-al-kwâl lehom, but the Rwala declared that they must acknowledge the Rwala supremacy or else withdraw. Thereupon the Kwâčbe joined with the Šammar and Zefir and undertook a great raid upon the tribes obeying Eben Ša'lân. They were led by the seven sons of aš-Šrejfi. With aš-Šrejfi there was serving at that time as a camel herdsman a member of the Freġe clan named Mehi. On the evening after the départure of the warriors aš-Šrejfi said to him:

"What kind of Rwejli art thou, Mehi? Thou art peacefully eating thy supper and thy kinsmen are threatened with destruction."

Mehi replied: "What is to happen will happen." Having finished his supper, he lay down and waited until all were asleep. Then he got up, saddled the swiftest camel, and rode out at full speed to his own people, warning them and forestalling the enemy. His people concealed their herds in a safe valley, opened the leather receptacles in which they kept their armor, drûc, and prepared for a fight. The armor had been wrapped up in the leaves of a strongly fragrant plant known as ǵa'ade, partly in order that the metal parts might not damage the leather receptacles, partly in order that the moths and arza borers might not eat the leather. The fragrance of the ǵa'ade was spread about the neighborhood when the warriors put on their armor. After midnight they rode out of their camps to a certain spot situated in the direction from which they expected the attack. They unsaddled the camels, sent them back, hid the saddles, and occupied the rocks which almost entirely enclosed a basin covered with an abundant growth of grass. After sunrise the herdsmen drove the riding camels and about two hundred and fifty other camels into this basin for pasture, and struck up a merry song in order to attract the attention of the hostile spies.

The spies discovered the herds and announced the fact to the seven sons of aš-Šrejfi, who gave orders for the herds to be attacked. The warriors swiftly mounted their horses and rode out at a gallop to the defile leading into the basin. They were riding from the southeast and the wind was blowing from the northwest. As they were approaching the defile a Šammari riding on a spirited stallion shouted to the seven sons of aš-Šrejfi:

"I smell ǵa'ade! I smell ǵa'ade! flee away!"

"Liar! Where hast thou any ǵa'ade around here?"

"The wind is bringing me the smell of ǵa'ade. Flee away!" He turned and fled, and Mašlân, the youngest of the seven sons, fled with him. The rest of the sons, together with all the Kwâcbe and the greater part of the Šammari and Zefîr, rode through the defile into the basin and flung themselves upon the camels. The Rwala quickly occupied and blockaded the defile and surrounded the enemy. A furious contest ensued. Of the Rwala those who most distinguished themselves were ad-Drêi eben Mašhûr, Miğwel âl Miğwel, and Fhejd eben Ma'abhel. All the six sons of aš-Šrejfi fell, and of the rest of the enemy only a few warriors saved themselves on foot, because on horseback they could not ride out from the rocks. Having ridden down the fugitives, the Rwala saddled their camels and attacked the Šammar and Zefir who were guarding the camels, water, and supplies. Only ten escaped, all the rest being either slain or captured.

Of all the Kwâčbe there was saved only Mašlân, the youngest son of aš-Šrejfi. One of the Šammar took him on his camel, which was a specially swift one, and rode with him to his father's camp. Having entered the tent, he sat down on one side with Mašlân. After a while aš-Šrejfi asked:

"What is the news? al-‘elem."

"There is no news, mâ min ‘ulûm."

"By Allâh himself, if thou wilt not give me news, I will cut off thy head straight away; w-allâh elja mâ ‘allemteni lakṭa‘ râsak bes-sejf."

He did not even look at his son Mašlân, nor speak to him. The Šammari, having given news of the fate of the battle, said:

"O aš-Šrejfi, dost thou not see the darling of thy eye?"

Aš-Šrejfi was silent. After a while he called his wife, the mother of all the seven sons, who was sitting behind the partition and had heard all the news. He asked her:

"Mistress of my tent, where is Mašlân, thy youngest son?"

Glancing at Mašlân, she replied: "We did not bear, we did not bring forth, and we did not receive a son named Mašlân; lâ ḥamalna w-lâ ḡanejna w-lâ ḡâna waladen ismeh mašlân."

Mašlân left the territory of al-Kwâčbe and never showed himself there again. His mother, the wife of aš-Šrejfi, died of grief shortly afterwards.

The Kwâčbe and Šammar wished to avenge their great defeat, and in the following year marched against the Rwala. This time it was to be finally decided who should command, and therefore the Kwâčbe marched with their families, tents, and flocks, and established a war camp, manâh, against the Rwala, whose tents were pitched round the wells Ġaw Morejra and Haw'a (or al-Ĥâwa) to the east of the settlement of Skâka. The Rwala had previously occupied all the wells for a considerable distance around. The Kwâčbe together with the Šammar made several attacks on the encampment of the Rwala, but each time they were repulsed. The Rwala, who were commanded by a war-chief, ‘aẓîd al-ḥarb, the renowned Fhejd eben Ma'abhel, never attacked but so pressed their adversaries closer and closer that they were unable to obtain water anywhere. Thirst tormented not only the animals but the people also. The women and children in particular were sufferers. For one delw (about ten liters of water) they paid one camel. They killed the camels and saved the water from their paunches.

Aš-Šrejfi had a daughter named Kût, who was both beautiful and courageous. After a talk with the other women of the Kwâčbe she decided that she would go before the countenance, bwağh, of the enemy commander, Fhejd, to the well of Morejra for water. The women prepared water bags, loaded them on camels, and rode up to the tent of aš-Šrejfi in order that they might accompany his daughter Kût on her venturesome expedition. When she had seated herself comfortably on her camel, she exclaimed: "O Fhejd, O Fhejd, behold, I am riding before thy countenance, under thy protection." These words were repeated after her by each of the women accompanying her. When the guards of the Rwala perceived more than a thousand camels approaching, led by a woman and ridden by women, they forgot in their surprise to bring the news to their leaders, and waited to see what would happen. When Kût came within earshot, she exclaimed: "O Fhejd, O Fhejd, behold, I am riding before thy countenance! jâ fhejd tarâni bwağhak." The guards heard this. The younger men ran up to the approaching camels and, disregarding the warning voice of their elders, captured the best animals and the women who were seated upon them. From the camp other young men ran out, and within a short time Kût's whole retinue had become the booty of various warriors.

Fhejd was not in the camp. He was making a circuit of the surrounding district. His old slave, hearing Kût declare that she was riding before Fhejd's countenance, saddled the swiftest stallion and rode off to seek his master. He met him at no great distance, for he was just returning.

As soon as Fhejd learned that Kût had ridden before his countenance and that she had been robbed and captured, he flew into a great rage, uttered a war cry, and declared that at the next sunrise he would burn every tent before which he found camels from Kût's retinue. Those who wished to escape this punishment must before sunset bring the camels which had been stolen, together with their entire equipment and the women, before his tent. The kin, ahl, and the slaves of Fhejd at once rode through the camps and proclaimed his command. Fhejd himself proceeded with his old slave to the tent in which the captured Kût was sojourning. He ordered her camel to be saddled, asked her to be his guest, and led her to his tent, where he assigned the foremost place to her. At his command his slaves killed five fat camels and prepared an abundant supper for Kût and all the women of her escort, who had assembled with her before sunset. Not a single camel, not a single water bag, not a single saddle was missing. Fhejd's slaves and relatives watered the camels all night, filled the water bags, and after sunrise the women took them and rode off with Kût to their thirsty families. Fhejd accompanied Kût to within shooting distance of her father's tent.

The water which had been brought was sufficient for five days. After that time the children were again crying for water, and many young camels collapsed with thirst. The women asked Kût to ride again for water. Kût declined, urging that peace should be made with the Rwala. At her prompting the elders of the Kwâčbe sent a messenger to Fhejd with a request for peace, and offered the Rwala half their herds. Fhejd agreed and peace was concluded. This harsh war is known as Manâh az-Zîrên, Battle-camp of the Two Starvations.

The Šammar, the allies of the Kwâčbe, did not accept the peace and threatened them with war. Aš-Šrejfi then decided that he would acknowledge the supremacy of the Rwala and would join them entirely. His daughter Kût married Fhejd, and his Kwâčbe encamped together with the Rwala.

After Kût had moved into Fhejd's tent aš-Šrejfi's tent remained without a woman in charge of it. Accordingly he placed the female slaves under the control of a widow of a Šammar warrior who had fallen in the battle. The widow brought into his tent an abundance of food, such as butter, dates, and rice, and said to aš-Šrejfi:

"Marry me and I will tend you by day and night." "Good, I will see." The Šammar woman cooked tasty meals for him, kept the tent in order, and urged him to marry her, but aš-Šrejfi put her off. When he was encamped with the Rwala at an-Nukra (to the south of Damascus), he suddenly brought into his tent a girl of his kin, bint 'ammen leh, and proclaimed her his wife and the mistress of the tent. The Šammar widow said nothing, but when on the second day aš-Šrejfi lay down during the heat of noon, she took a knife, cut his genitalia with it, and then escaped into a strange tent, where she demanded protection, daḥalat ʿalejh. The owner of this tent accompanied her to a great caravan proceeding towards Neḡd, and she reached her kin, ahalha, in safety.

The Rwala tradition explains that originally the Zana Muslim division were encamped in the vicinity of Ḥajbar, where in the valley of al-Ġlās they still have their ḥelâl, palms. From there they are said to have moved towards the north. The first tribe to migrate was al-Ḥsene, whose chief was descended from the kin of Eben Melḥem. To him was entrusted the control of the Pilgrim Road from Damascus as far as al-ʿElaʿ, in return for which he received a large sum of money from the Government. In the oasis of Ḥajbar several families of the Weld Slejmân and the Weld ʿAli still have their palms. The Serâḥîn, who belong to the as-Sbaʿa tribe and obey the chief of the kin of Abu Šâma, have their fel-lâḥîn there.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the commander, šejḥ aš-šdâd, of the Rwala belonged to the clan of as-Swâlme; his name was ad-Drêʿi eben Ġandal.¹ The kin of Eben Bnejje of the Murʿaz clan of the Rwala tribe supported the Wabhâbites, with whose help Prince Muḥammad eben ʿAli overcame his adversary, ʿAbdallâh eben Rašîd, and for a time drove him out of the settlement of Ḥâjel. To the house of Eben Bnejje belonged the important wells of al-Hebeke and aš-Šiżîż. When in the thirties there ensued a general rising against the Wabhâbites, the kin of Eben Šaʿlân of the Murʿaz clan distinguished itself. At the head of the clan was Nâjef, the son of ʿAbdallâh eben Šaʿlân, who had deprived the kin of Eben Ġandal of the leadership in war. He had seven sons, who all died violent deaths. After his death the head chief was Ḥamad, who left a son, Saṭṭâm.

Fejsal, the sixth son of Nâjef, won great renown. He established the power of the Rwala to the south of Damascus in the region of Ġejdûr or, as they say, in an-Nuḡra. He met in war the Weld ʿAli, who were led by Muḥammad eben Dûḥi eben Smejṛ. Several chiefs of the Rwala tribe, such as Eben Meḡel, Eben Ġandal, and Eben Mḡejd, desired to make an alliance with the Weld 'Ali. But Fejşal forestalled them and in 1859 killed their leader, Barğas eben Maşhûr, with his own hand and soon afterwards defeated all the allies of Muḥammad near the settlement of Boşra. Fejşal waged war successfully and continually, becoming the supreme lord of northern Arabia, but on January 14, 1864, he was murdered in his tent by the avengers of Barğas, his brother Nahâr and his nephew Hamdân.²

¹ Alois Sprenger, Ein Beitrag zur Statistik von Arabien, in: Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, Vol. 17, Leipzig, 1863, p. 226.

The head chief was now Ṭalâl, the son of Fejşal. The military leader was Ḥamad eben Bnejje. Among the warriors special distinction was attained by Saṭṭâm eben Ḥamad eben Ša'lân and Hazzâ', the seventh and last son of Nâjef. Hazzâ's wife was Taḳla, the daughter of Chief Fâjez eben Ġandal, who bore his sons an-Nûri and Muḥammad. His sons Fahad and Miş'al were born of another mother.

Saṭṭâm eben Ḥamad made a love marriage with Turkijje of the house of Eben Mhejd, from whom the head chief of the Fed'ân is descended. She bore his sons Ḥâled and Mamdûh. By the winter of 1877—1878 Saṭṭâm had already become head chief.³ Saṭṭâm died in 1904 and his successor was Fahad eben Hazzâ', who, however, was murdered at the instigation of his brother an-Nûri.⁴

An-Nûri eben Ša'lân

The Rwala give the name of šejh, and also şujûh, to their head chief or prince. One may hear the remark: "I came to the prince, but he was asleep; ṭabbejt 'ala-ş-şujûh w-hu cân nâjem."

The head chief an-Nûri eben Ša'lân declares war and concludes peace. Under the Turkish régime he provided surety for the taxes which the Government demanded from the Rwala during their annual stay in an-Nukra. In 1907 he paid £T 3500 ($ 15,750), in 1908 only £T 2000 ($ 9000), because many clans of the Kwâčbe tribe migrated to Irak. An-Nûri used to increase the tax by one half and allot it among the different chiefs, who in their turn would likewise increase it and collect from the owners of separate tents their allotment according to the number of their camels. After a certain time an-Nûri or his son would ride out with his slaves to the different chiefs and collect the tax. Those who escaped and did not pay the tax were punished, when caught, with the loss of one camel. The collected tax was punctually conveyed by the prince to the Government, the prince retaining the half by which he had increased it. From this amount he made allotments to members of the ruling house and some chiefs; thus the following amounts were distributed:

² Carlo Guarmani, Il Neged settentrionale, Jerusalem, 1866, pp. 196—198.

³ W. S. Blunt, A Visit to Jebel Shammar (Nejd). New Routes through Northern and Central Arabia, in: Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society, New Monthly Series, Vol. 2, London, 1880, p. 81.

⁴ Alois Musil, Arabia Deserta, New York, 1927, pp. 238—243.

to Hâled eben Saṭṭâm	£T 150 ($ 675);
to ʿAdûb eben Meġwel	£T 20 ($ 90);
to Fahad eben Mašhûr	£T 50 ($ 225).

He himself retained at least £T 150 ($ 675), and in addition to this he sold annually three or four horses and twenty to thirty camels.

For each of his 30 to 35 horses the prince buys 5 loads of barley at £T 1 ($ 4.50) per load; for his guests, slaves, and family, 40 loads of flour at 40 meġdijjât ($ 36) per load, 20 loads of wheat at 15 meġdijjât ($ 13.50), 7 loads of burrul at £T 2½ ($ 11.25), 3 loads of rice at £T 4 ($ 18), 1½ loads of coffee at 100 meġdijjât ($ 90), 2 loads of sugar at £T 5 ($ 25), butter for £T 55 ($ 247.50); at least 100 rams or sheep for food at 3 meġdijjât ($ 2.70) each; five camels for food at £T 10 ($ 45) each; clothing and coverlets for his family and slaves and for gifts cost £T 130 ($ 585). He has 80 rifles, and every year he requires at least 6000 rounds of ammunition at the equivalent of 10 to 12 cents for each round. The repair of the tents and the upkeep of the tent materials and ropes cost annually £T 50 ($ 225). He must send gifts to the chiefs from time to time and feed an average of twenty people daily.

Insubordinate chiefs are dealt with by the prince where and as he can. Bhejder, a chief from the Freġe, once departed with his kin when the camels were to be counted for the purpose of estimating how much tax each chief should pay. Prince an-Nûri sent word to him that he was to return immediately, but Bhejder paid no heed. Not until six months later did he come of his own accord on a camel to an-Nûri, and immediately fetters such as are worn by horses on their forefeet were placed upon him. He remained fettered for a whole month.

A weaker tribe has to acknowledge the supremacy of a stronger one and pay it a special tax, which is known as hûwa. The Rwala collect the hûwa from all the Htejm as well as from the inhabitants of various villages. The stronger the government, the fewer the villages which pay them the hûwa. Al-Žerjitejn, Tudmor, as-Suħne, Kowm, and at-Ṭajjibe regularly deliver hûwa. Every settlement and every tributary tribe has among the Rwala its brother, ah (or hâwi), to whom it pays annually about 25 meğđidjât. The ah is bound to restore to the settlement all the property which his fellow tribesmen have stolen from it. The basis of hûwa is kûwa, force. Those who are strong compel the numerous settlements to raise hûwa for them. Those who have no ah must rely only on the drawn sword, sejf ṭâjel. Those who receive the hûwa must protect those who give it to them, or, as the Rwala say: "He who eats a young goat must protect its mother, alli jâkol al-ğedi jaħma ummeh."

CHAPTER IV

THE TENT AND ITS FURNISHINGS

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE TENT

The tent is made of pieces of coarse black cloth known as šukka (pl., škaḳ). The šukka is usually 60 to 70 centimeters broad and 15 to 60 drâc (11.4 to 45.6 meters) long. The tent cloth is woven either of pure black goat's hair—both the heavy variety, ša'ar šâfi, and the light, nôl, being used—or else of cotton, with which only a small amount of goat's hair is blended, this being called kumbok. The weaving of tent material is carried on by many inhabitants of the towns and villages, and the Rwala buy it from itinerant traders, Rḥejbâwijjât or Kbejsât, or from those who make it. An ordinary tent with one main pole, which is about twelve meters long and nearly four meters broad, requires at least eight škaḳ, each 15 drâc (11.4 meters) in length. If they are of pure goat's hair, ša'ar šâfi, 1 šukka costs 8 meġîdijjât ($7.20); if they are of kumbok, a šukka costs 3 meġîdijjât ($2.70); a šukka of nôl costs 5 meġîdijjât ($4.50). The back wall, rwâḳ, of such a tent costs 3 meġîdijjât; the lower part, sefle, of it, 1 meġîdijje (90 cents); 15 drâc (11.4 meters) of a narrow strip of goat's hair for strengthening the tent material, ṭarâjež, costs 2 meġîdijjât ($1.80); two poles cost 9 piasters (40½ cents); and then there are the ropes, sold by weight: 1 roṭol (2.56 kilograms) for 13 piasters (58½ cents). Thus the smallest tent made of heavy goat's hair costs at least 33 meġîdijjât ($29.70). Every four years, or five years at the most, a new tent has to be set up.

When a man has bought the tent material, he hands it over to the women, who sew the tent under the supervision of an experienced old woman. The old woman gives the following directions: "Draw the separate pieces, škaḳ, close together, šaffenhen; sew them with coarse threads of goat's hair, hajjetenhen; in the middle sew on the koṭb [a small round board measuring about ten centimeters in diameter and having in the middle a circular opening cut out, through which the top of the pole passes]; sew a strip of coarse goat's hair, ṭarâjež, along the edges of the tent; at the end of these ṭarâjež sew (Fig. 3)⁵ on leather loops, ḥurb (l)⁶, fastened to strong pegs [about ten centimeters in length]; through the leather loops draw and hook the ropes, both those which hold the tent on its long sides, aṭnâb (h), as well as those which hold it on the short sides [of which the front rope is known as jad (j), the back one as riḡel (k)]; hoṭṭen aṭnâb hoṭṭen idên w-riḡlên. Turn down as a hem the upper edge of the back wall, rwâk (f), and sew on this hem [which is about ten centimeters broad], maḥalla, a strong thread, ḡerîr, in order that it may be fastened by means of strong pins, ḥella; to the lower edge of the rwâk sew on a strip of inferior material [about fifty centimeters broad], sefle; to both the short sides [for a distance of fifty centimeters from the edge] sew on pieces of lighter tent material [about a meter and a half long].” This border strengthened to a breadth of fifty centimeters is known as ‘amâra, and the material which is sown forms the side wall, ruffa (d).

When the tent is to be pitched, its owner calls out to his sons, servants, slaves, or women: “Spread out the tent, fellû al-bejt (Fig. 4); extend all the ropes, marreṭû al-aṭnâb; drive in the pegs with a wooden mallet, etebtû (sic) al-awtâd bel-mîḡema (Figs. 5, 6); wind the ropes round the pegs; tighten the ropes, ekrebû, at the front, al-meždem, at the back, kaḡa, and at the sides, česer, by loosening their ends in the loops, ḥruba, drawing them taut, and securing them, ‘alîṭ or ‘aljeṭ (Fig. 3, m); prop the poles up, ‘emdân (Figs. 7, 8), first those in the front on the side away from the wind, esemkû al-mežâ-dîm (Fig. 3, a), then the main pole, esemkû al-wâseṭ (b), thrusting it into the koṭb opening in the middle of the tent, and finally the two poles at the rear corners, česer (c); when all the poles are standing, tighten all the ropes, karrebû al-aṭnâb; attach the back wall to the windward side (Fig. 9) with iron pins, rawwežû al-bejt, and peg its lower part, sefle, down to the ground so that the wind may not lift it; do the same also with the side walls, ruffa; from the main pole and from two loops sewn on the edges of a ṭarîka strip hang a central partition, kâte‘a.” This dividing partition, 1.6 meters high, cuts the tent into two compartments, the right-hand one

⁵ This figure represents my large tent of the kind used by the ‘Aḡejl camel traders. Its rear wall and pegs differ from those of the common Rwala tent.

⁶ In the following descriptions of the tent the text letters refer to Fig. 3.

FIG. 3

FIG. 4

FIG. 5

FIG. 3—The author's tent.

FIG. 4—A tent spread out.

FIG. 5—Pitching a tent: driving in the pegs:

being for the women, maḳʿad al-ḥarīm, the left-hand one for the men, maḳʿad ar-reġāl (or rabʿa). The partition with a hole through which the women are fond of peeping at the guests is called sâḥa mafġûġa (or ḵâteʿa mafġûġa). The ropes known as aṭnâb as well as those called mḵût (pl., mukṭ) are of hemp. If such a rope is thin it is called maras. Ḥabl (pl., ḥbâl) is the name given by the Rwala only to the ropes which they themselves make of camel's hair.

FURNISHINGS OF THE MEN'S COMPARTMENT; THE FIREPLACE

When the tent has thus been firmly set up, they carry into it the whole equipment, ḥelle. "Place the furnishings, efehḵû al-ḥelle," orders the owner. In the men's compartment the ground in front of the dividing wall is covered with a carpet, either bought, ḵatîfa, or else made by the Rwala women, maʿaneḵa, upon which are laid quilts, stitched and filled with cotton, farše (pl., frâš), either of the European pattern, leḥef, or of an Oriental pattern, ṭarrâḥa. Upon these are placed pillows, one meter long and 30 centimeters broad, filled with wool or camel's hair and sometimes also covered over with a broad woollen shawl, šâf. A pillow is often replaced by a camel's saddle, against which it is easier to rest.

The master of the tent and his guests remove their shoes or boots, which they place behind them against the dividing wall, while they hang their rifles on the main pole in the women's compartment and sit down on the carpets, drawing their legs in upon it. A man when thus seated usually supports his side, murtaċi, or back, mutasanned, on the pillow or saddle. When a man is narrating a story, he sits on his crossed legs, mutarabbeʿ. During a meal he kneels on his left knee and sits on his left heel, ḵâʿed ʿala rkubeh w-nuṣṣ; while inspecting anything or testing a weapon, he kneels on both knees and sits on his heels, bâreċ ʿala rkubeh; when he washes his hands, he squats, mežʿi; if he sits down with his arms round his knees, he is referred to as mufahḥež. When it is hot, he lies down on his stomach, mumbaṭaḥ; when he takes a nap, jesaċċeʿ (or jinûd), he turns over on his back, muta-salži ʿala zaḥareh, or lies down with his face resting on his hands, mufannes, or turns over on his side, lays his hand under his face, and goes to sleep, nâjem minġedaʿ.

FIG. 6

FIG. 7

FIG. 8

FIG. 6—Pitching a tent: driving in the pegs.

FIG. 7—Pitching a tent: setting up the poles.

FIG. 8—Pitching a tent: setting up the poles.

When the tent owner has sat down with his guests, he calls to his sons or slaves: "Dig out the fireplace, eḥefrû lan-nâr." With the more important chiefs the fireplace is always dug by a slave, who is entrusted with the preparation of the coffee. The fireplace consists of a rectangular or circular hole about twenty centimeters deep, from the size and form of which it is possible years afterwards to judge with certainty to which chief the tent belonged. It is dug with an implement called fâz, which at one end terminates in a mattock and at the other end in a hatchet and is fastened on a long wooden helve; the double hoe, having at one end a mattock and at the other a pick, is called kaddûm or tubal. The ordinary Rwejli digs a smaller fireplace, which is nearer the front edge of the tent. In the cold season the fireplace is close to the carpets for the guests, while in the hot season it is about the middle of the men's compartment. The clay which is dug out is thrown into a heap near the hole forming the fireplace, ḥufrat an-nâr, and just below the edge of the tent. On it are shaken the ashes from the fireplace. The larger this heap, known as neṭîle, the more hospitable is the owner of the tent, for coffee is prepared for the guests on the fireplace in the men's compartment only and beside the fire the guests may warm themselves. Beside the fireplace is placed a pile of fuel, consisting of dry roots and stalks of various plants, ḥatab, and dry camels' excrements. The best fuel is the dry wood of the raza shrubs. It gives off scarcely any smoke, throws out a great heat, and holds the glowing embers for several hours before subsiding. The worst fuel consists of the dry šîh which blazes up with a bright red flame, crackles as if gunpowder had been scattered on it, but it does not form embers and does not maintain the heat. The fuel is collected by the female slaves and women. If the chief has not a sufficient supply of fuel, he sends to the surrounding tents for it, or the men themselves bring it to him.

FURNISHINGS OF THE WOMEN'S COMPARTMENT

The women and the slaves carry all the utensils and vessels into the women's compartment. Carpets and coverlets on which to sleep are placed in the corner against the dividing wall. Sacks containing wheat, barley, dates, butter, salt, sugar, coffee, rice, or tummen (a kind of rice), are stored up against the back wall. The sacks are either black, made of goat's hair, haras, or gray, made of wool and camel's hair, 'edel, and there are also colored ones woven by the Rwala women and known as raffârijje.

FIG. 9—Pitching a tent: attaching the rear wall.

The spindle, merzel, is shaped like a four-pointed star measuring nine centimeters in diameter and provided with an opening in the center. From this there projects the end of a pole, 'ûd, 35 centimeters long, in which a small iron hook, sunnâra, is passed. The woman who spins takes the camel's hair or sheep's wool under her right armpit, while with her left hand she twists a thread about thirty centimeters long, ties it to the lower part of the spindle pole, and thrusts in under the hook. Then she raises her left knee and, placing the lower end of the pole upon it, twirls the spindle on her knee with the palm of her left hand, while with the fingers of her right hand she winds the thread. This, running through the hook, is now twined around the whirling pole, which once again has been allowed to hang freely. If the movement of the spindle gives out, it is set whirling again in the same manner. The women do their spinning while riding on camels and also while marching on foot. They keep the wool or camel's hair either in their laps or in their bosoms. If they wish to have a stronger thread, they weave two or three prepared threads together on the spindle.

Fabrics are woven on a loom, naṭw, the names of the different parts of which as shown in Fig. 10 are: a, râs an-naṭw; b, sida; c, ḥafa; d, nîra; e, ʿûd an-nîra; f, minšâz; g, âžba (or leḥama); k, minša; h, ḥatwa; j, ḵâ'a; l, šîša.

FIG. 10—A loom, naṭw.

The best silk kerchiefs and garments are kept in a small box, ṣandûk, which has a thin lining of tin.

By the side wall are placed the litters, either žetab or ḵenn, and the saddle bags with brightly colored trappings and long tassels, mezwede.

The ḵenn (pl., ḵnene) litters (Figs. 11, 12, 13) resemble rectangular cages, narrower at the bottom, and are made of wooden poles. The main poles forming the frame are called ʿašjân (Fig. 11, c), the four cross poles joining the main poles are called mibtâh (b), and the vertical pole which strengthens the two back cross poles in the middle and terminates in a wooden knob is called rwê'i (a). The ḵenn is fastened to the saddle known as bedd (or witr) (d).

The žetab litters (Figs. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18) are decorated in the most splendid manner. On the back of the camel is placed a saddle known as witr, reinforced with cushions, bdûda. Upon these rest two pairs of wooden ribs, zlâf (Fig. 14, f), each terminating in a cone, rwê'i (a, j). Two pairs of flexible poles, ʿašfûr (d) and žāʿade (g), each more than 5.5 meters long, are supported on these ribs and are fastened to the cones by stakes, hoşra (e). The poles are joined by cross pieces, ğamb (h) and sâmûk (l), and arched so that they form two pairs of wings, ğenâh (n). These wings are drawn together in the middle on the top by means of wooden stakes, lebad (k) and hani (m). In the middle of the whole structure between the wings a leather seat, soffa (c), like a deep bowl is stitched to poles called mibtâh (b). Of the poles which make the wings the upper parts and the outside ends of the lower parts have leather or linen twisted round them. The remainder of the lower parts, as well as the outer part of the two cones, are gaudily decorated with tiny shells. Here on a dark background there are small squares with red edges, and in the middle a blue rose with red leaves made of shells. Between the squares there are small white stars also made of shells. From the lower part of each of the poles marking the wings there is suspended a dark-red strip of cloth, hwât (o), about twenty centimeters broad and provided with tassels at either end which hang right down to the neck and tail of the camel. Red cloths or ribbons are also fastened to the upper parts of the wings. The žetab is placed on the saddle with the pillow known as bedd and is secured by means of straps under the breast, haḳab, the stomach, bṭân, and tail, tafar.

The appearance of a number of these litters during a march is impressive. If they are seen in the distance on a pink sand drift surrounded by a blue, transparent atmospheric haze, they resemble huge butterflies swaying freely to and fro in the air. In the almost entirely flat, grayish-white desert of al-Ḥamâd, a grayish-white camel bearing the žetab and covered with various gaudy decorations fades from sight, while the magnificent litters project above the horizon and glide along as if upon bright and regularly rising waves.

In addition to this the women's compartment contains wooden and copper utensils. The following are made of wood: a large wooden mortar for crushing grain, mihbâš, with a wooden pestle, amûd; a marrâfa, or small trough with an outlet, te'ebeh, and a handle; a ḳadah, or circular wooden jar; a daḳḳijje, or circular dish; a ḳdajha, or small plate from Mecca, meččâniyye; a ḳarwa, or large dish which can contain enough food for ten persons; a elbe, or circular vessel for the leavening of dough; a muhmar, or vessel measuring sixty centimeters in diameter and twenty in height, for the kneading of dough; a miswât, or large spoon for the mixing of foods; a met'âbe, or deep vessel provided with an outlet, from which one may drink and for use in measuring, čêl, butter.

The following vessels are of copper: židr, a large kettle with two rings by which it is carried and holding 80 liters; tâse, the same as a židr except that it holds only 20 liters; twâjse (sic!), which holds 8 liters; rallâje, a small plate with a handle for the warming of butter; sahale, a dish 20 centimeters in depth and 42 centimeters in width; šahen (or šahn), a large shallow pan for eating from (Fig. 29); a kettle always rests on three stones, hawâdi.

FIGS. 11, 12—Kenn litters.

The women also make various vessels of hide. They rub half the hide of a camel, šafha, with salt, tamlehha, and dough prepared from wheat or barley flour, tatmorha. They then leave it for five to seven days rolled up in a shady place. Afterwards they scrape away the remains of the flesh and all the hair and, after stretching the hide, they lay it in a tanning mixture made of arṭa or neğib roots. The former is collected by the women themselves, but the latter is bought. Finally they rub the prepared hide thoroughly with the marrow of camel's bones or with camel's fat, widak, and from it they cut out and stitch, teharrezha, water bags, râwije (pl., rwâj).

These bags resemble large knapsacks. In the two upper corners are stitched firm leather loops, hruba, midway between which is an opening about 20 centimeters in diameter, famm, through which the râwije is filled. When the bag has been filled, the hide is stretched over this opening and tied up. At the right lower corner there is left an outlet about two centimeters in diameter, around which is a stout piece of hide, ezle. This outlet is stopped with a wooden peg, ûd, and tied round with a thin string of camel's hair. Through the loops, hruba, are drawn coarse ropes, 'oşob, by which two rwâj are always tied to the camel's saddle, mesâme. A water bag of this kind will hold as much as 120 liters. Smaller water bags are known as krab. A žirbe kwejtijje is made of oxhide and holds about 80 liters; a žirbe bardâdijje is made of a large goatskin and holds 60 liters; a žirbe šâmijsje, made at Damascus for the use of pilgrims, is likewise made of goatskin and holds 50 liters, while a žirbe neğdijje (Fig. 19) of goatskin holds 40 liters. Smaller than the žirbe is the ğûd, which will hold 20 liters of water and is carried by a single camel rider.

FIG. 13—Kenn litters.

The semîl is a leather sack for sour milk. The šakwa is a small sack in which the herdsman keeps milk. The zarf or naḥw is a leather bag holding about 15 liters, in which dates or butter are kept. The 'ekka' is a smaller bag which will hold 5 to 7 liters of butter.

The women also make buckets, delw (pl., dli), of hide. A bucket for 2 to 3 liters is called kalaş; a sifra contains 10 to 15 liters, and a delw al-čebîr 20 to 30 liters of water, so that two men are needed to draw it up.

The water trough, ḥawz (pl., ḥijâz) (Figs. 20, 21, 22), also made by the women, consists of a leather bowl, ṭawra,

(Fig. 21, c), about 70 centimeters deep and 90 centimeters in diameter, the edges of which are sewn to a wooden pole bent into a circle. Three other poles curved in the form of semi-circles and with their ends tied to the wooden circle, ḥaniġje (pl., ḥanâja), surround the leather bowl, while three or four forked poles, šarâr (pl., šwârîr), 90 centimeters high, support the circle and hold the trough above the ground. The water is poured from a leather bucket, delw (Fig. 23). This is a small receptacle about 40 centimeters in diameter and 30 to 50 centimeters in depth. It is sewn to a circular wooden frame to which, by means of straps, wdime (pl., wadm) (Fig. 23, b), are fastened two wooden crosspieces, arġa (pl., arâži) (a). At the point where they cross a small rope, rša (c), is attached to them, and by means of this rope the bucket is lowered into the well.

By the fireplace in the women's compartment there lies a sâġ, or convex sheet of iron, 60 centimeters in diameter, upon which the bread is baked. From the main pole there hangs a large straw hutch, minsâf, upon which the kneaded bread is placed.

USE AND TRANSPORTATION OF TENTS

During long marches in the summer season the tents are not pitched. The adults lie down beneath the open sky, and a small tent, tuzz (Fig. 24), for the children only, is sometimes set up. This tent has a single pole about 1.2 meters high and measures about 4 meters long and 2 meters broad. A tuzz tent also has to satisfy the poorest inhabitants of the camp, who do not belong to the Rwala.

A tent with no main pole, but resting on four corner poles so that from the front only two poles of equal height are to be seen, is called a ḥarbûš. It is 4 to 6 meters long, 2 meters high, and 2.5 to 3 meters broad.

The usual tent has at least one main pole and is called kaṭba. It is 12 meters long, over 2 meters high, and 3.5 meters broad. A tent with two main poles is called bejt karnên, or mdawbel; one with three poles is called metawlet; with four, mrawba; with five, mḥawmas; with seven, sab'a wsaṭ.

If the chief does not intend to remain in the camping place more than two or three nights, he does not pitch a whole tent in the interior of the desert where there are few guests, but only a part of it; this is known as atlat.

The tent is always pitched according to the direction of the wind. The long side facing the wind is completely closed and is called kafa-l-bejt. The opposite long side is open and is called waġh al-bejt. The short sides are regularly closed and are known as ksûr al-bejt.

If the tent rope gets slack, aṭ-ṭoneb šala° (or inḵala°), the occupants of the tent tighten it, jekarrebûneh.

A guest who wishes to spend the night in a tent always halts his camels by the side wall of the men's compartment, never by the women's compartment, muḥarram. If the wind is blowing against the open front side, the owner of the tent shouts: "Change the back wall! žabbelû al-bejt ġâna-l-hawa." The women or the slaves at once unfasten the rwâk, throw down the front poles, fix the rwâk in their place, and insert the front poles where the rwâk had previously hung.

If it is very hot and there is no wind, the mistress of the tent gives the order: "Take away the rwâk! šawre°û al-bejt." The women unfasten the rwâk, roll it up, place it in a corner, and insert the poles beneath the front and back ropes, îdên w-riġlên, by which the side walls, ruffa, are raised at each corner. Thus the tent is open on all sides and the air can circulate freely. During the heat it is best to sleep with the side wall raised up, as this can then move freely and fan the sleeper. In the cold season a wall is suspended on the front side also, so that the tent is completely closed in, muḥaġġar.

By the side wall of the women's compartment sleeps the household dog. There is perhaps not a single tent among the Rwala which does not contain at least one watchdog. These dogs are strong, thick-set animals with short, shaggy hair and broad heads. In the opinion of the Rwala they are unclean, mâ huna anġas min al-čalb, and therefore they must not eat from any vessel intended for food or cooking. Generally a morsel of food, °ejš, is thrown to them on the ground, or sour milk is poured out for them into an upturned sheet of iron used for baking bread, sâġ. The dogs guard the camels and the tent, not only against various beasts of prey, but also against thieves who creep into the encampment during the night to steal an animal or something from the tent. Woe to the guest who is compelled to leave the tent several times during the

FIG. 14

FIG. 15

FIGS. 14, 15—Žetab litters.

FIG. 16

FIG. 17

FIGS. 16, 17—Žetab litters.

night! They would tear him to pieces were he to go out unaccompanied by the master or someone they know.

If the camp is to be moved and the tents struck, the mistress of the tent issues the order: "Take out the tent pegs, emsaw (or emša'û) al-wted." The tent falls down. "Take out the tent poles, hudû al-amed; spread the tent out, eşfeţû al-bejt; fold it lengthwise, so that it forms a strip [about one meter broad], eţwû al-bejt." With the large tents the ropes, which are as long as thirty meters, are unfastened and tied up separately, but with smaller tents they are laid inside. The tent, folded up to a breadth of one meter, is rolled up symmetrically from both ends, making two bundles. When these have been rolled, darağow, to within two meters of each other, a tent pole is placed across beneath each bundle, which is then rolled once more, so that the poles are on top; the krât rope is wound round one bundle, passed over, and wound round the other. A strong camel with a mesâme saddle is now brought up and made to kneel down, nawwahow al-ba'ir, and the women or the slaves seize both poles, lift the two bundles of the tent, load them on the camel, make sure that the tent has been loaded quite symmetrically, take the weight of the bundles so that the camel can stand up, tawwarow al-ba'ir, and set out on the march (Figs. 25, 26). The tent poles and ropes are loaded upon the ğindib saddle (Fig. 27), which is provided on both sides, in front and behind, with strong pegs, upon which the poles are supported.

The troops of camels carrying the property of the individual families are called mazhûr (pl., mezâhîr) (Figs. 28–31). At the head the chief always rides with his picked warriors, salaf. The warriors ride on camels, but saddled mares are tied to the camels or are ridden by boys. If the guard reports the presence of an enemy, the warriors jump from the camels on to the mares, and set off in pursuit. An ordinary march, rağala, lasts from eight or nine in the morning till two or three in the afternoon; a forced march, rağala ġajjede, from the rising to the setting of the sun.

CAMPING GROUNDS

The camping place is always selected by the chief. His tent is pitched at the spot where he halts his camel and throws down his saddle. Around him are grouped his slaves and his kinsfolk. The remainder assemble together likewise according to kinship. The camping place is called manzel. The chief leaves the camping place last, rides ahead of all the others, and is the first in the new camping place. The herds are brought to a standstill, and the herdsmen are told to let the camels have their evening pasture, ma'aššow.

FIG. 18—Žetab litters.

The Rwala do not pitch camps in the shape of an ellipse as do some other tribes. Each one may pitch his tent where he likes, for his tribe is strong and can withstand any enemy. A camp with less than ten tents is called ferîž, one with more than ten but less than thirty tents, neġe', and one with more than thirty, nezel.

Before changing camps, the chief sends out one or two men, usually of the Šlejb tribe, to inspect the pastures and watering places in the region where he would like to encamp. The phrase is: "He has sent some one of his men to inspect the region, qallaṭ leh qallâten min zilmeh."

If there is an abundance of rain, the Rwala are fond of encamping in definite areas during the various seasons. The best winter pastures, mašta (pl., mašâti), are found in the environs of al-Hôr, of the Ḥabra 'Anṣa, as well as of Lâha. If someone asks the Rwala: "Where did you graze this winter? wên šattejtu has-sene," he regularly receives the answer: "Our winter pasture was in al-Ĥôr, maštâna bel-ĥôr." In the spring they prefer most of all to graze, marba° (plural, marâbi°), in al-Ġûba and on the northern border of the Nefûd, rabba'na bil-ġûba. In the region of al-Bijâz between al-Ġûba, Tell 'Amûd, and the volcanic territory they find their pastures in the season of şejf, that is from about the middle of April to the middle of June, maşjaf, whereas from the end of June to the end of August they graze, makîz, in the territory of an-Nukra south of Damascus. In the autumn their favorite resort, maşfar, is in the environs of the Sirhân depression. If there has been no rain in al-Ĥamâd and al-Wudijân, they make their way to the environs of Tejma or to the eastern border of the Nefûd, where it rains more regularly.

FIG. 19—Žirbe neğdijje, goatskin water container.

A camping place in a dangerous region exposed to raids is called şâka. The greatest danger threatens the tents which are pitched on the edge of the camp, ṭwâref.

Years afterwards it is still possible to recognize an old camping place, marḥ al-'arab. The fireplace hollowed out in the men's compartment; the small piles of clay and ashes; the three scorched stones by the fireplace of the women's compartment; the piles of stones or fuel, upon which the beds were laid; camel excrements, dimne (pl. demân); luxuriant annuals, which the camels avoid, as they grow on the demân; all this awakens memories in the mind of the solitary traveler.

Poems Relating to Camping Grounds

The Rwala have many songs in which the solitary wayfarer speaks to the old camping place.

1. Jâ dâr jâ dâr arjaš al-‘ajn wuddi
‘oḳob al-maḥal jâ dâr ḥolli merife
2. ana-nšedeč ‘an šâḥebi wên meddi
zâjefeč ana limḥazhaz aš-sedež zife
3. kâlat ‘aširak medd sowbi w-ğeddi
dûneh dijâren lar-rečâjeb muḥîfe
4. en taṭeni ‘an šâḥebak testeğeddi
telka ma al-bedwân binten nazife.

1. "O camping place! O camping place of my beloved with thick long lashes!
Thou wert deserted, and afterwards, O camping place of my darling! thou wert covered with densely growing plants.
2. I ask thee concerning my friend, whither went she?
I tarry with thee as a true guest and shake thy right hand, that thou mayst tell me the truth."
3. The camp replied: "Thy beloved departed in the direction towards which I face, and hastened,
So that between her and us there extend territories which fill the riding camels with terror.
4. If thou acceptest my counsel concerning thy friend, then seek a new one;
Among the Bedouins thou wilt certainly meet a maiden without blemish."

A negro serving with one of the chiefs fell in love with a negress who was serving with the same chief. After a short time, however, he changed his service and departed to a new territory with his new master. His love did not wane and after a year he set out to seek his friend. He reached the camping place where he had last seen the negress. This camping place, which a year previously had been deserted and trampled upon, he found covered with a thick growth of plants. It had been made fertile by the ashes and camel excrements, so that after abundant rain the plants throve there. The negro dismounted from his camel, made a fire in the camping place — which was very easy to do, because on all sides there were lying piles of perennials and dry camel dung —, and acted as if he were the guest of the camping place. He tried to learn in what direction his beloved had departed.

Verse 2. Wishing to learn the truth, he seized in spirit the right hand of the camping place, took it and entreated it to tell him the truth, muhazhaz ‘ala-š-šâḥîḥ. This is what the Bedouin does when he wishes to obtain reliable news. 3. The camping place faced in one direction, and it was in that direction, şowbi, that his beloved had departed, but in haste, ğedd. Between her new camping place and this old one there extended vast territories, dijâr, in which the riding camels are threatened with danger, muhîfe, either through lack of pasture or through the raids of enemies. 4. Eṭeni ʿan means "listen to me, rely upon me in this matter."

1. Jâ dâr wejn alli bič al-ʿâm čal-jûm
w-lâ ženn waķaf bğenâbeč ngûʿi
2. wejn al-ğehâm alli bič al-ʿâm mardûm
w-aż-żuʿûn bežedwet salafha tezûʿi
3. ahl ar-rbâ muzabbenîn kill mazjûm
twâl ar-rmâh mużafferîn ad-drûʿi
4. w-en şâh şajjâh min zidd mazhûm
teğîh natrât as-sebâja feżûʿi
5. şifren jiʿâležen al-ʿanne bihen zûm
jidʿan sakrânîn al-meğânîn jûʿi
6. waʿ helw ʿarżathom elja ğaw jʿarżûn
ʿarfaʿ sbêʿi mâ ħalaṭhom feżûʿi
7. şâraw lena ʿadwân şirna lehom kûm
w-lâ žennetti ʿokb at-tefarrož ruğûʿi.

1. O camping place! where is the man who was here a year ago today?
No litter of my small detachment halts by thee.
2. Where are the herds of camels which a year ago thronged upon thee;
Where are the camels, burdened with their loads, following the tracks of the riders?
3. Here were the owners of large tents, protecting all who suffered injustice,
Piercing the armor with long spears.
4. And when he who was threatened by the enemy shouted in alarm,
Troops of spoil winners hastened to his help,
5. Upon white and yellowish mares, champing the bit, full of endurance,
Urging the riders drunken with lust of battle that each should pay heed.

1. Abċi ħali jâ nâs mânî bmaljûm
w-ażonn min jabċi haleh mâ jiljâmi
2. ġit al-mrâĥ w-sâr bel-ḵalb mal'ûm
manâzel al-ḥullân hom w-al-'amâmi
3. hâda mešabb an-nâr w-al-ḥafr matlûm
marka' dlâlen mut'abâten aš-šwâmi
4. w-hâdi merâbaṭ hejlahom dâjmen dûm
hokb al-'ujûn mrowba'ât al-hwâmi

5. eḵfaw čema' tejren ḵalab rāseh al-ḥûm
bfeğğen 'amîḵ w-lâ jindara' wên ḥâmi
6. adna' manâzelhom šetâṭa w-lamlûm
w-aḵṣa' manâzelhom medâḥ an-na'âmi
7. elja lefejt ad-dîre aṣḥâb min ḵowm
ehreğ tara' ḥamz ar-rağâl al-'elûmi.

1. I lament for my kinsmen, O people! I am not among those who are abused,
For I think that one who laments for his kinsmen deserves not abuse.
2. I reached the spot where the herds used to rest and where my heart was light,
Where stood the tents of beloved friends and uncles.
3. This is the fireplace with the small pit half covered in,
And the spot where so often rested the coffeepots from Damascus.
4. Here always were tied up their horses With the white circle round their eyeballs and their heads almost four-cornered.
5. They departed like a falcon whose head has been turned by yearning for flight, circling Above a broad ravine, so that no man can tell where it flies.
6. Their nearest camping places are between Šetâṭa and Lamlûm,
Their farthest where the ostriches are hatched.
7. If you reach their territory, bring tidings unto my friends who are amid enemies.
Behold! tidings are for men what ḥamz pastures are for camels.

The poet was a negro encamping with the 'Amârât, who fell in love with a Bedouin woman and was driven away by her relatives. They threatened him with death if he returned to their encampment. The poem was recited by Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd. It may be interpreted thus: the poet longs for his friends. He visits the place where he was last encamped with them, remembers and laments, not knowing when and where he will meet with them.

Verse 2. Ḥullân here means the negro's faithful friends and also his beloved. 'Amâmi are the Bedouins with whom he encamped and whom he served, for every negro has among the Bedouins a family whom he serves and whom he calls his uncles. 3. In the men's compartment a small pit varying in shape and size is dug for the fire, so that years afterwards it shows who had encamped there previously. 4. Some clans have a preference for horses whose eyeballs vanish in a white circle; they call them howka. 6. Šetâta and Lamlûm are settlements in Irak. Ostriches are hatched in the Nefûd south-east of Šetâta. 7. The plants upon which the camels thrive best are called by a single word, hamz.

1. *‘Ajni ġezat ‘an nowmiha bân al-ašbâh
w-‘ajni ġezat ‘an nowmiha w-asharatni*
2. *ġît al-manâzel rab‘ana w-ġît al-emrâh
w-laķejt marka delâlahom dakkaratni*
3. jâ dâr lâ tebċîn amren maẓa w-râh dowr as-sene jâ dâr erġîhom etni
4. fâraķatni jâ dâr ċal-bedr w-enlâh jowm erĥalat jâ dâr mâ šâwaratni.

1. My eyes have had enough of sleep, morning has appeared;
My eyes have had enough of sleep and have awakened me.
2. I went into the encampment of our comrades and to the spot where the herds had passed the night,
And I found where their coffeepots had rested, and these brought back much to my mind.
3. O camping place! mourn not for the thing which has passed away and vanished;
After a year, O camping place! hope and wait.
4. She left me, O camping place! like the full moon when its luster wanes.
And when she departed, O camping place! she asked not for my counsel.

The poet was a member of the Fed‘ân tribe, who went on a warlike expedition against the Šammar. He was wounded and taken prisoner, and when he had fully recovered he returned after about six months. His wife, of whom he was very fond, had fallen ill and died. Having learnt of his grievous loss, the Fed‘âni hastened to the camping place where he had last been with his wife and described his memories in a long poem, of which Blejhân communicated this fragment to me.

In verse 4 jowm erĥalat has the same meaning as jowm mâtat (or râhat), she died, passed away.

1. Jâ 'îd wa' wağdi 'ala rab'ana al-'âm
hâdi manâzelhom 'ala-l-'ajn helwât
2. tesma' zebîh neğûrahom tekel dammâm
nîrânahom min kitr al-wukûd hajjât
3. mislâfahom 'asren 'ala rab' rannâm
mâ jilhak al-metleb salafhom elja fât
4. kaṭ'ânahom jir'an elja habb lezzâm
tabra lehen sird al-emhâr ašîlât
5. muthejzemîn belka' mitl 'azzâm
çam fâresen darrabûh w-al-hejl 'ağlât
6. mâ jilbesûn illa kmâšen min aš-šâm
wa-nšâlhen min 'amal dâûd zejnât.

1. O 'Îd, alas! my heart follows our friends of last year;
This is their camping place, lying deserted by the fountain.
2. It is as if one could hear the angry voice of their mortars, like to the sound of a great drum,
As if one could see their fires fed with abundant fuel.
3. The journeys of their leading riders are burdensome for the companions of Rannâm, No pursuer can overtake their advance guard if they have passed him.
4. Their herds graze even when death is pressing on,
For behind them there are armed men on noble mares.
5. They are girt with sharp swords like the sword called 'Azzâm.

On how many riders have they inflicted defeat, even though their horses were the swiftest.

6. They are attired only in costumes of Damascus silk,
And they enwrap themselves in armor, the rings of which are of the best Dâûd's handwork.

This poem was composed by a member of the Dahâmše clan; I record it as it was repeated to me by my companion Târeš eben Melfi.

Verse 1. A troop of riders is passing across a broad empty desert and approaches a fountain, within the vicinity of which they had encamped a year previously with their kinsmen. Each kin had pitched its tents at a short distance from the others, had its pasture in the neighborhood, and met the others when the animals were taken out for water. The poet longs for his acquaintances. 2. In the opinion of the Bedouins the mortar is angry because coffee is beaten in it, and it emits sounds of anger and irritation, zebiḥ. A dammâm is a large drum, to the notes of which the inhabitants of villages by the Euphrates make merry all night. 3. The Dahâmše belong to the ʿAmârât tribe. Originally they are said to have dwelt in the neighborhood of Ḥajbar. From there they were led forth by their chief, Ġdê^c eben Haddâl, together with the Škûr and Selka, and by swift marches advanced to the borders of the lower Euphrates. The kindred of Rannâm, rab^c rannâm, who set out with them at the same time, returned before long to Ḥajbar, not being able to keep pace with them. The Rannâm were engaged chiefly in breeding goats and sheep, while the others bred camels. The flocks of goats and sheep cannot endure the long and swift marches which are performed by the herds of camels. The poet alludes to the feat of the Dahâmše and at the same time recalls that none of the numerous tribes encamping by the Euphrates and engaged almost exclusively in the breeding of goats and sheep could outstrip the former. All the tribes are compelled to send them gifts annually, if they do not wish to be the victims of their raids. 5. A belka^c is a pliant sword or saber of Persian workmanship, covered with gray and dark strips and patches. ʿAzzâm was the name of the Ġdê^c's sword. 6. Dâûd was a craftsman of Jewish origin, who made the best wire corselets and chain armor.

CHAPTER V

FOOD

All the Rwala are familiar with hunger and fear it, since they know that it is difficult for the hungry to overcome those who have eaten their fill. They have a saying: "The attack of the sated on the hungry is very vile, fatt aš-šab'ân 'ala-l-ğê'ân fatten žûwi." But nobody can see hunger, and therefore nobody can deride a hungry man as easily as one who is naked or insufficiently clothed. If a man comes half-naked to his true friend, it grieves him, for either the man has been robbed or else he pays no heed to the dictates of decency; hence the saying: "Go hungry to your friend, but do not go naked to him; it rafîžak ġê'ân w-lâ ta'tîh 'arijân."

The Rwala know that Heaven is the abode of God who looks after them and supplies them with food, while the human enemy, who begrudges them everything, inhabits the earth upon which we walk. A father often reminds his son: "He who provides thee with everything dwells in Heaven; he who hinders thee dwells on the earth upon which thou walkest; razzâk bes-sema' w-al-ğâsed bel-waṭa'." It is useless to be overanxious about the things for which all long. On every occasion Allâh cries out to man: "O my servant, thou hast desires and I have desires, but all thou canst do is to carry out the things that I desire; jâ 'abdi ent trîd w-ana-rîd w-lâ lak illa mâ-rîd." Man therefore comforts himself with the proverb: "I desire, but Allâh will nevertheless carry out what he desires; ana-rîd w-allâh ja'mal mâ jerîd."

Hunger forces a man to theft. To take from an enemy or a stranger all that he has is not a sin, but to steal anything from a neighbor or fellow tribesman is a sin, and Allâh does not bless the thing that He has forbidden, mâ bârak allâh bel-ğarâm.

The Rwala eat regularly twice a day. Their main and most abundant meal is supper, aša. They have this meal after sunset. Shortly before noon there is lunch, ṛada', at which they merely drink milk or eat what is left of supper or a piece of bread from the previous day, bâjet. Only for important guests do they bake fresh bread and prepare some sort of meal. If a Rwejli has a piece of dry bread, homš, and can soak it in water, he boasts of having eaten well. Breakfast is unknown to the Rwala. In order to loosen the spittle, fekk ar-rîž, they eat a grain of salt, a morsel of bread, or gulp down some milk. This is their usual breakfast, šubûh (eštebeh, take thy breakfast). On long marches they can keep going with this breakfast until evening, because they have no luncheon. The Rwala know that they will eat only after sunset and are grateful to Allâh if he gives them a chance of eating their fill at least once a week. Often there is not even a cup of cold leben, sour milk, for supper. Suppers of this kind, at which only a little milk is drunk, are called rabûk.

MILK AND METHODS OF PROCURING IT

Milk is the main nourishment of the Rwala. In order to secure a supply of milk for a whole year they make use of various devices.

If a young camel is weak they kill it as soon as it is born, and for seven days, samḥ lejâl, they do not milk, jeṛar-zûha, the female camel, so that she loses her milk, w-ḥi tra-rez. In this way she becomes strong and can carry loads. If they have insufficient milk, they gently stroke, jemsahûha, her udder morning and evening, and after a few days the milk flows again. If they have a sucking camel, they lead it to her; in order that she may let it suck, they draw her nostrils together with a rope, jeḥazmû ḥašmaha bel-akâl, or thrust a long, strong needle, mahjaṭ, through her nostrils. Thus they deceive the female camel, jezîrûn alejha zîjâr, who cannot smell the calf tied to her, becomes friendly with it, tarâm, and lets it have milk, taderr.

Sometimes they remove the newly-born calf, ğarraw laha, before the female camel notices and smells it. Then they kill it, tie up the female camel, and fasten to her an older calf, which they smear with a little blood from the calf that has been killed. The female camel licks it, makes friends with it, râmat, and lets it suck. In this way one calf sucks two female camels. This method is called ğerâr. Often they kill five and even seven young camels, and to all the female camels they bring the same calf, and all of them let it suck. This is called muğamma'a. The female camel which gives the least milk they leave to the calf, but on the udders of the rest they place thick nets, šamle, tied across the hip and under the tail, or they fasten to every nipple a firm peg sharpened at both ends so that the young cannot suck.

When they wish to milk, they remove the net or the pegs, jabhelûnaha, call the calf, and wait until the milk flows.

FIG. 20—A water trough, hawz (see p. 71).

The female camel gives most milk in the morning. As soon as her left forefoot is untied she rises and the young camel runs up; it is then possible to milk. The owner calls the herdsman from the tent: "Such and such a camel has risen yonder, milk her; jâ flân an-nâka al-flâne târat eḥlebha." The milker stands on the left side, the calf tries to suck from the right. The camel gives her milk when she sees that the young one is approaching the udder, ʿaṭṭafat an-nâka ʿaʿa waladha; this is called taʿṭif or jihenn al-ḳalb ʿala-l-ḳalb. The milker does not hasten; he holds the nipple with three fingers, pressing with the thumb, without pulling; the pressure makes the milk spurt in a strong jet, šuhb, into a wooden vessel, žedah. During the milking the calf has to be soothed and the female camel appeased, which the milker does by calling her name, for instance: "Hêj jâ ʿaliya hêj jâ ʿaliya." If the calf runs away, the female camel withholds the milk, fawwatat an-nâka.

If a traveler wishes to drink quickly, he milks into his hand; otherwise they always milk into a wooden pot, žedah, or small leather pouch, šakwa. The milker takes care that the milk does not splash on the ground, which would mean an unnecessary loss. Anyone who squanders something useful or necessary is compared to a milker who lets the milk flow on the ground, and there is a saying: "The jet of milk did not splash into my hand or into the pot, šuhben ṭafah lâ bîdi w-lâ bel-žedah." From one female camel the amount of milk which can be obtained each day is from one to seven liters. The better the pasture, especially when it consists of good annuals, the more milk is given. The fertile camel gives milk for twelve months, the barren camel for even longer. After a year the she-camel is conducted to the male. If she conceives, she loses the milk and bites and kicks her calf when it tries to suck.

The calf generally ceases to suck after a year, but many wish to continue even after that. Such calves are known as ‘abet. In order that a calf of this sort may not steal milk, a sharpened peg, helâl, is inserted under its nostrils, and if it attempts to suck the peg pricks the female camel, so that she at once drives the calf away.

The milk is either drunk warm immediately after it has been obtained, maḥaz, or is heated, saḥîn. The freshly obtained milk is called ḥalîb. If it is poured, jehaknûneh, into a leather bag, semîl, it is called leben, even though it may still be sweet. In the bag it becomes sour very quickly, jeta‘am (or mṭa‘am). The Rwala do not churn camel's milk. If they have too much, they boil it and from the curds make small cheeses which they eat either dry or stewed with bread.

A milking camel is called ḥallâba. It is not sold at any price, as it nourishes the whole family. Every Rwejlî is fond of milk, either fresh or sour. Those who cannot get accustomed to it are given the nickname of felḥ. The Rwala woman reminds her daughter of the white leben as soon as she wakes her in the morning, exclaiming: "O my daughter, white as milk! why art thou idle like the gazelle, taking thy ease until the dew has departed? jâ bunajje jâ leben wazḥa' w-al-rzejjel bel-menâm azḥa'." The freshly obtained milk has a salt taste, because the camels are fond of grazing on salt herbs. In consequence of this it has an aperient effect, especially on the foreigner; but after a short time he gets accustomed to it, likes it very much, and suffers no ill effects. If the camel has been feeding for a long time on fragrant or strong-smelling herbs, the odor can be noticed in the milk.

FIG. 21—A water trough, ḥawz
(see p. 71).

Milk is the chief nutriment of the Rwala. Many families live exclusively on it for months at a time; they suffer hunger when there is no abundant pasture and the camels accordingly have little to eat. As they cannot then provide themselves with other food in the interior of the desert, they seek it in the settled territory. The Rwala say: "We feed our children on the sour milk of our camels, mesažžemîn 'ejâlna min leben helâlna."

FIG. 22—A water trough, hawz, on a camel (see p. 71).

WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS

The Bedouins are convinced that the fellâhîn are obliged to supply them with food. Everywhere the remark may be heard: "The fellâh must provide food for the Bedouins, al-bedw 'ejšathom 'ala-l-fellâh." If the fellâh does not give it to them of his own free will, they have the right to take everything they find, and therefore they declare: "Take from the fellâh whatever ye find (or like), hod min al-fellâh mâ lâh."

Before the Rwala depart into the interior of the desert, ješarrežûn, they provide themselves with wheat necessary for sustenance. The allowance is one load per person, the load being the amount carried by a camel, about 150 kilograms. In addition to this the ordinary Bedouin carries an additional load for his guests. The head chief usually has fifty to sixty loads of flour and wheat, because he has to feed not only numerous guests but also many of his fellow tribesmen whose supplies enemies have stolen. These are known as zu'ûf or halâl. The men go from tent to tent and feed as guests; the women beseech the mistress of the tent: "Give me supper, little sister! give me supper! 'aššîni jâ hajje 'aššîni." When they receive the wheat they carry it to the children and the sick.

From the wheat is prepared every day a food called 'ejš, bread being rarely baked. The tribesmen grind the wheat grains themselves, only the chiefs taking milled flour into the interior of the desert. The Rwala do not believe that milled flour is genuine wheat, for they say: "Wheat is genuine only as long as it is in grain, al-kaṃḥ allī baʿad ḥabben ṣaḥīḥ." The wheat is beaten in a wooden mortar, mihbâš, with a pestle, ʿamûd, or it is ground in a small mill, rḥa. These mills are made by the Rwala women, who hew two pieces of basalt or lava into shape, hollow out an aperture, provide them with an iron axle, kalb, and make a wooden handle, hâdi, the mill now being completed. If they wish to use it for grinding, they spread a piece of leather or closely woven stuff, tfâl, on the ground, put the mill on it, pick up the grains in the left hand, shake them into the aperture in the upper stone, al-fowka, and the flour falls into the lower one, at-taḥta, and upon the outspread rug, jika ʿala-t-tfâl. While grinding they sing simple songs such as:

"As the mill handle turns (and yet does not leave the lower stone, would that this were so among people!) may each woman possess her beloved; ʿûd ar-raḥa mâ dîrah killen tâḥod ʿašîrah." Or:

"Today I am grieved, but the servant of the Bountiful is (appointed by him as) our guardian; al-jowm ana wağ-ʿâna ʿabd al-kerîm mwaşşâna."

They never grind for the purpose of storing up supplies; at the most they grind enough to leave something over for bread to be offered to guests for breakfast on the morrow.

If they wish to bake bread, they shake the flour on a ṣaḥn pan (or ʿelbe), salt it, add water, and knead it into a dough in a muḥmar. This they mix into a large loaf, take it out of the muḥmar, place it on a piece of leather or on a cloak, turn the muḥmar or ṣaḥn over, pull off a piece of the dough, and from it knead a large thin cake, teṭaḥḥen, on the ṣaḥn. When it has covered the whole of the ṣaḥn, a woman seizes it in both hands and, throwing it up in the air, draws it out more and more, till sometimes it is as thin as paper, tenassef tansîf. The ready-made cake she places on a minsâf. Before this she takes a deep bulging sheet of iron, sâğ, about

FIG. 23—A leather bucket, delw (see p. 72).

60 centimeters in diameter, turns it over on three stones above a fire, with a quick movement lays the cake on the convex side, and takes care that it does not burn. A cake of this kind is called rarîf; if it is as thin as paper it is called rahîf; and if it is thick, ġerîm.

For breakfast they sometimes prepare a thin batter for the guests, and this is poured into the concave side of the sâġ and baked. This bread, called maşli, when fresh tastes almost like our pancakes.

If bread is to be baked quickly, they knead one large cake from the dough, place it on the hot ashes, cover it with them, and light another fire above the ashes. It is turned once or twice and called ġamrijje.

Leavened bread is eaten only in the cold season. They prepare the loaf in the evening, add a piece of yeast, hâmer, to the dough, and bake the bread in the morning. The Rwala prefer unleavened bread, fatîr. They like to have the bread always fresh, ġedîd. Bread of yesterday's baking, bâjet, must not be given to guests.

In the season of abundance, rabî, they do not bake bread at all, and at other times seldom and usually only for guests. In two-thirds of the tents bread is not baked all the year round, and many of the women taste it only once or twice throughout their lives. They have an expression of praise: "This is the tent of bread; here bread is baked. So and So is very rich and bountiful; he has bread, he is the master of bread, râ'i-l-hubez."

In addition to milk the Rwala live mostly on ‘ejš. This is boiled from crushed wheat or wheat pounded in a mill. Among the chiefs the wheat is ground into groats, ġerîš. On the crushed or ground wheat water is poured, salt is added, and it is boiled into a thick paste. If they have enough leben, the women pour it upon the ‘ejš, tebajjež al-‘ejš, making be-jâza. ‘Ejš is prepared almost daily for supper. What is left over is served for next day's luncheon and eaten cold, berîde.

If the Rwala are proceeding on a short journey and know that they will find no tents for two or three days, they roast a little wheat on the sâġ, shake it into a leather sack, and feed on it. This is called hamîsa. As the old men do not have good teeth, instead of roasted wheat grain they take a couple of handfuls of flour and eat this without any preparation. They call it lehme.

Instead of wheat the poorer of the Rwala obtain white sorghum, dera' bêza', which costs half as much and can be used in exactly the same way as wheat. From it they bake bread called ṭurmud, boil 'ejš known as razîza, roast the grains to ḥamîsa, and eat the plain flour as lehme.

FIG. 24—A small tent, ṭuzz (see p. 72).

Semḥne or sebîb is the seed of the different varieties of semḥ plant. It takes the place of both wheat and dera', and from it food can be prepared in exactly the same way as from these. Those who have no other food and neither taste the seed of the ad-da'â' variety of semḥ nor eat the al-ḥawwa' herb, even though they may be tormented by hunger, are generally regarded as being hardy; hwa walad mâ dâḳ ad-da'â' w-lâ akal al-ḥawwa' jôm ġâ'.

LOCUSTS, DATES, SALT, WATER, EDIBLE PLANTS

For the poorer Rwala locusts, ġerâd, are an important article of diet. The large green varieties often cover shrubs by the myriad and do not move till the dew has evaporated. The Rwala women come and throw handfuls of locusts into large bags, tie them up, dig a narrow, deep trench, bûra, and make a fire in it. When the bottom of the trench is covered with glowing ashes they shake the locusts into it, shouting: "Father of roasting, roast them! jâ-ba-l-ḥmes eḥemseh." The dead locusts are dried in the sun and either ground immediately to powder, or strung on long threads, or scooped by hand into leather bags. The locusts taste like the tails of crayfish. They are eaten either without any preparation, neğdân, or food is prepared from them as from wheat.

In addition to bread, ‘ejš, and locusts the Rwala eat the following:

‘ašide, a gruel made of milk and some flour,

bečile, a paste made from dates and flour,

basise, a thin paste for young children, made of grape honey (debs) and wheat flour, madrûse, a thin paste made of dates, boiled wheat, and butter, maṭbûḥa, dates boiled in butter,

ḥmej’a, bread boiled in milk and covered with camel’s suet.

Burṛul, husked wheat, and ruzz, rice, are very seldom found with the common Rwala.

The Rwala buy salt in the settlements of the Sirhân depression. It is obtained in especially large quantities in the environs of Čâf and Eṭra. The settlers run the salt water into shallow pools, collect, jezabberûn, the salt left after evaporation into baskets made of palm fibers, zebîl, and shake it out in heaps, ḥawâşel. They measure it like corn and sell it. A single camel load (about 150 kilograms) costs a quarter or half a meğîdijje, according to quality, in addition to the tax for the chief. The best varieties of salt are those called ‘ažîž and eṭrâwi. Varieties of an inferior quality are known as sabhâwi, which is obtained from the dried-up swamps, and ṭhejni, or ground rock salt, of which there is an abundance in several regions.

For the preparation of food women require water, which they fetch themselves if a well is near, but which is brought by the herdsmen from wells at a great distance. Water is never wasted, and the Rwala look after it carefully, especially when they are on the march. On war expeditions or during raids the commander sees that each one obtains an equal amount of water. At sunset he picks up a pebble, places it in a wooden žedah, and pours water on it until it is immersed. This is each man’s share, mekşâd az-zelema. If hard pressed the Rwala kill the fattest camel, cut out the paunch, čarš, place it on a cloak, and squeeze the liquid from it into a leather bag, allowing it to cool and settle. They either drink it or, if it is too thick, they suck it into their throats through the nostrils. My guide, Mindîl al-Kaṭi, had drunk such water on eight occasions and there is nobody among the Rwala who has not tasted it at least once.

Things are more serious with those traveling on foot who have no camel to kill. Thus there were four men from the Bnejje kin of the Rwala, who were driven off during a raid. They lost their camels and their weapons and escaped with their bare lives. One of them tied a small bag, šakwa, beneath his shirt, in which there were about three liters of water. They made their way home through the desert, living on various herbs and always drinking a little water after sunset. On the third day they had about a quarter of a liter left. They were all thirsty and yet each one urged the other to drink, but none would drink because there was not enough water for all. At last they decided to pour it away. They sipped the dew and went for two days without water. It was in the season of as-smâk (March and early April). After two days they could go no farther. By the will of Allâh some Šlejb saw them, brought them liquid butter, poured it into their mouths, and when they could swallow it gave them also water, thus saving their lives. In the seasons of aš-šferi and aš-šta° (October 1 to February 20) a man can go without water for as long as three days, but in the midsummer, al-kêz, only for one day and one night, or at the most for two nights and one day. On the second day his throat becomes parched and he dies.

The Rwala know very well which plants can be eaten. Often after an unsuccessful raid they wander on foot through the desert and live only on various herbs. They are most fond of eating the dark-red ripened fruit, ṭel°, of the thorny mša° shrub. These are very sweet and have a bitter after-taste. The Rwala collect them and boil them into a thick syrup. From the wood of the tall rimt shrub there flows out in summer a sweet juice, which they likewise collect. Kzâma, the ripe fruit of the buṭum tree, they pluck, dry, grind, and mix with wheat flour. They also extract oil from this fruit. They eat the raw stalks or tuberous growths of the following plants: baḥatri, bsejjel, ṭummejr, ġirġîr, ḥârâ°, ḥumbejz (or hammejz), ḥamšîš, ḥawwa°, da'lûk, rubahla, rešâd, rorejla, ummu rwejs, šaḥhûm, tîṭa, zorrêṭ an-na'am, kurrêš, karrât ksejbre, lubbêna, lahjat at-tejs, mša°.

The following are baked: zebb ad-dîh, ṭartût, and mḥarût.

MEATS

Meat is not a usual food but a luxury, like bread. The Rwała eat hardly any other meat than camel's flesh. If they wish to slaughter a camel, they make it kneel down, jenaw-wehûnaha, tie all its legs, press its head to the ground, and the butcher shouts: "Lay its head on one side! rudd râsha." He then thrusts a sharp dagger into its throat, manhar, and cuts it through to the right and left. The camel trembles and makes a gurgling noise, tirta'ed, and the blood flows either into a vessel or upon the ground. The Bedouins cut off the tail of the slaughtered camel, cut through the skin on its back from the roots of the tail across the hump as far as the nape, râreb, and then flay it, jaslehûnaha. When the skin has been removed, they cut off the front legs, then the neck and the hind legs, and open the belly. The only things which are thrown away are the contents of the stomach and the intestines, fart, all the rest being cleansed and made use of. Pieces of the flesh of the slaughtered camel are sent as gifts to close friends and acquaintances. The most tasty parts are the flesh from the şerâjed, or two sides near the hump, and from the rijâši, or between the hump and the tail. The flesh of the forelegs is also very tasty; likewise that of the mnêher, or two sides of the throat where it joins the breast. From the chiefs the slaves and the blacksmiths always receive the flesh either from one of the hind legs or from the ribs, and the head with the throat.

The flesh is either boiled or baked. For boiling, tabh, the flesh, together with the bones, is hacked into small pieces, thrown into a kettle, covered with water, salted, and placed on three stones above the fire. When it has boiled, the mistress of the tent gives the order: "Take out the meat! onżow al-lahm." They take out the separate pieces with a large wooden spoon, meşşâka or miswât, place them on a karwa or şahn covered with ejš, boiled wheat, let them cool a little, pour on them a thick gravy, şafja, skimmed from the top, and carry them to the guests, jeķalletûneh. The rest of the gravy, mraka, they mix with ejš for household use or for the less esteemed guests.

Mişwi is the name given to the salted meat baked either on a bulging iron sheet, sâġ, on a slab, or else in red-hot ashes.

Habêt is meat roasted in fat and served on bread.

Sahr is a piece of camel's fat spitted on a small stick and roasted on the fire.

Camel's fat is known as šaḥm; cut up and boiled into suet it is known as mahlû or widač. In the kettle in which the fat is thus rendered a sediment called ḥalî, something like swards, remains on the bottom. The widač is poured into a leather bag, zarf (or naḥw), and kept for as long as three years. In the hot season the Rwala prefer it to butter because it is cool. Nobody sells camel's suet, except perhaps a very stingy person. Widač is a good remedy for boils and suppurating wounds.

The best meat is obtained from a fat she-camel, ʿadla, between four and ten years old. The flesh of an older she-camel, especially a lean one, helîme, cannot be properly boiled. It always remains tough and has no taste. The flesh of young camels less than three months old, ḥwâr, has a bad effect on the stomach.

The Rwala also feed on blood. Only a bird's heart they throw away for fear of becoming as timid as the bird. "He has a bird's heart, kalbeh kalb aṭ-ṭejr," means: "He is easily frightened."

MEALS

Members of the family of the tent owner take their meals in the women's compartment. Food for guests is carried into the men's compartment, where sometimes their host sups with them together with his eldest son.

When supper is ready, the host gives the order: "Pour water for the men so that they can wash! ṛasselû ʿa-r-reġâl." A slave, a son, or a younger relative takes a žedah, wooden vessel, with water, goes from man to man, and pours a few drops upon the contracted fingers of the right hand. If the master is waiting with his acquaintances for supper, he calls to his son, his daughter, or to a male or female slave: "Give us supper! ḳallet lena-l-ʿaša." The person who brings the meal places it before him, saying: "Here is the supper, hâhi-l-ʿaša." If an esteemed guest is present, the host himself goes to fetch the supper, accompanies the sons or the slaves carrying the šaḥn, and places it either in front of the most esteemed guest or at the side of the fireplace. The host calls by name those who are to take supper first, tafwît. The person thus invited rises, goes to the dish, kneels on his left knee, sits on the left heel, extends his right sleeve, jefasser ‘an ad-drâ’, and waits for the host’s invitation: “Call on (God’s name)! May Allâh preserve your life! sammû allâh jehajjîkom.” With the words “In the name

FIG. 25

FIG. 26

FIGS. 25, 26—Pack camels, al-mazhûr, on the march, carrying rolled-up tents and poles (see p. 76).

of Allâh” each one catches hold of the dish, rolls small pellets of ‘ejš’ or bread, throws one after another into his mouth, and swallows them without chewing. If there is a pile of meat in the middle of the dish, each one tries as quickly as possible to make a trench in the ‘ejš’ or bread till he reaches it. Nobody may clutch directly at the meat, as this is bad form. When the diner has worked his way underneath the heap, he may take whatever crumbles into his trench. A man who is esteemed must not gnaw the meat from the bone. He has to tear away the meat with the fingers of his right hand, without raising his hand from the dish. What he does not tear away he leaves on the bone, which he presses against the side of the hollow. Nobody is allowed to rise until all the men have finished eating supper from the same dish. Such a group of men having supper together is called kalṭa. When they have finished eating, they say: “May Allâh requite the hosts for this! ḥalaf allâh ‘ala-l-ma‘âzib.” The host replies: “Health and good digestion! ṣaḥḥa w-‘âfiye.” Each one licks the fingers of his right hand, jilḥas îdek (or jedeh), and goes to the side wall of the tent, against which he rubs one finger after the other, jinḥaš jedeh, and cleans his teeth, jinkāš

FIG. 27

FIG. 28

FIG. 27—Pack camels, al-mazhûr, on the march; a camel carrying a ġindib saddle and tent poles (see p. 76).

FIG. 28—Pack camels, al-mazhûr, on the march (see p. 76).

snûneh. The host then arranges a second group, kalât al-wasta, and, when this one has eaten, he adds more food; if by now the meat is gone, he mixes the ‘ejš with mraḳa gravy and calls on a third group, known as al-kalât al-mḥelijje. What is left over, ṛarîme, is received by the poor children who stand round the tent.

To an unsatisfied eater they say: "Thou hast gnawed the head of a camel, the head of a wether, and a hare together with its head; thou hast eaten a canful of paste made of dates and flour, and still thou sayest that thou hast not supped; râs w-rwejs w-arnab râseh beh w-žedah bečûle w-tḳûl mâ ta‘aššejt."

COFFEE AND ITS PREPARATION

All food is prepared in the camp by the women in their compartment. In the men's compartment coffee only is made. At the command: "Blow up the fire and prepare coffee, šibb an-nâr w-sawwi-l-ḳahwa," a slave, the son, the wife, the daughter, or sometimes even the tent owner himself, strikes the spark, lays the smoldering tinder into a piece of dry ših, whirls it round above his head until it bursts into flame, lays it under the fuel on the fireplace, and blows upon it until this also catches fire. Then the coffee maker lays beside the fireplace long coal tongs, miḳât, and takes the coffeepots (Fig. 32) from a circular basket woven of straw or palm leaves.

The coffeepots are generally four in number. The largest one is called maṭbâḥa or kumkum. Into it the grounds from which coffee has been decocted are emptied for several days. A slave pours water on them and places the pot by the fire. The other three pots he rinses out, ješarreb, pours the contents into the largest one, polishes them with a duster made of camel's hair, and sets them on the right-hand side of the fireplace, where there already stands a copper water jug, berîž, as well as a žedah, or cylindrical wooden vessel measuring about 20 centimeters in diameter and 6 centimeters in height and with a narrow edge. From the žedah water is offered for drinking.

From a leather pouch, šifen, or from a small leather canister, ḳarf (pl., ḳarâf), the mistress of the tent takes a handful of coffee, benn, a slave puts it on a shallow iron pan with a long handle, upon which the coffee is roasted, miḥmâse, and holds it above the fire, continually stirring the beans with an iron spoon fastened to the handle by means of a long copper chain, îd al-mihmâse. As soon as the coffee begins to turn brown, aşkarrat, he lifts the plate from time to time, shakes it until the beans jump about, blows on and continues roasting them. When all the beans have acquired a dark-brown color, he shakes them out upon a wooden dish, mibrâda, which is also provided with a long handle, in order that they may cool off, jebarradha. Meanwhile he takes the second smaller pot, pours boiling water into it from the first one, and sets it by the fire. He wipes a wooden mortar, mihbâš (or niğr), decorated with carvings, shakes, jekubb, into it the cold beans freed from their husks, picks up with his right hand or with both hands a long wooden pestle, jad (or mehwân), and, holding the mortar between his knees, pounds the coffee with measured and dignified strokes. After every five or six blows upon the beans he knocks the edge of the pestle against the sides of the mortar in order to get rid of the coffee clinging to it. The noise made by the mortar and pestle, ḥess al-mihbâš, is heard everywhere in the vicinity, and the people give their opinion as to whether these sounds are regular and artistic or not. The pounding of coffee is an art, and musical ability is judged according to the way in which it is done.

The coffee when ground to a fine powder is shaken out, jelažžemha, by a slave into his right hand or straight into the second pot, in which the fresh coffee is boiled. This pot is called maşfa (or ralâje). The slave takes the rag with which he has wiped the vessel, places it on the handle of the pot, and holds it above the fire, continually moving it farther away or nearer in order that the coffee may not boil over. When the coffee is thoroughly boiled, tbahat, he places the pot at some little distance from the fire in order that the coffee may settle. He then puts into the mortar a few grains of the fragrant spice known as cardamom and a pinch of saffron, beats them up, shakes them out into the third pot, which has been cleaned and warmed, and pours into it the boiled coffee from the second pot. The third pot, in which the coffee is boiled with the ground spices, is called mabhâra. From a circular box of wood, kawṭi, or copper, kafaş, the slave takes out small cups of solid stoneware, fanâğîl, pours a little water into each one, rubs them with his thumb on a piece of rag, and puts them on a copper platter called şinijje. When the spice-flavored coffee has boiled he empties a part of it into the fourth and smallest pot, known as delle, and pours from it a few drops of coffee into a cup, which he empties out on the ground as a sacrifice for Šādri, the first one to boil coffee. Then he again pours a little coffee in the cup, shakes it round to see its color, takes a sip, smacks his lips, and savors the coffee to find out how it tastes. Having gulped it down, he takes in his left hand from four to six cups, inserting one into the other, seizes the handle of the delle pot with his right hand, and from above pours into the cups a stream of coffee as delicate as a spider's thread. As soon as the bottom of the cup is covered, he hands it to the foremost guest. The latter takes it in his right hand, licks it, smacks his lips, and slowly drinks; it is not becoming to drink all of one's coffee at one gulp. Meanwhile the slave pours out for the rest. When the first guest has finished drinking, the slave pours out for him again, jedîr 'a-r-reġâl. The fourth helping the guest must decline with the word hâġe, even though he would like to drink more. After an interval, however, he may resume drinking.

Poems Relating to Coffee

Many of the Rwala, both men and women, are very fond of coffee and describe its preparation and taste in numerous poems. Prince an-Nûri eben Šalân composed a poem which he himself recited to me, as follows:

1. *Ķum saw fiġġâlen 'ala-l-kejj jâ 'îd
bedlâl jîšdenn al-btût al-ehdâfi*
2. *eĥmes w-zajjenha 'ala kill mâ-rîd
w-estaden mâ juž'ed min an-nâs râfi*
3. niġren 'ala ĥesseh jeġûn al-melâbîd ahl as-salâm w-ķawwakom w-al-'awâfi
4. w-bĥârha tis'a min al-ĥejl w-tzîd bez-za'farân mrawwaka jâ-s-snâfi
5. bšîniġjeten tumma derha lel-aġâwîd w-'oddah 'a-lli jetni ĥlâf al-mežâfi
6. alli jrawwi ĥarbeteh bel-mežârîd le'ujûn min ķerneh 'ala-l-meten zâfi
7. bint aš-šujûĥ muĥazzebîn al-bwâlîd ĥarîbhom lowhom ba'îden jîĥâfi
8. *w-en derhem aš-šâbûr mâ min tašâdîd
ĉam ĥâĉemen ĥallow 'azâmeĥ talâfi*

9. mirkâzehom jišba° bâh an-nisr w-ad-dîb
w-jišba° bâh ṣab°an min al-ğû° hâfi
10. w-etni °ala-lli w-en lafow leh ma°âwîd
rîf an-nišâma w-ar-rċâb al-ehğâfi
11. jazḥak heğâğeh low lafow al-ağâwîd
lâ jâ ba°ad ḥaṭw al-ċedûb al-ehlâfi.

1. Arise, prepare a cup of coffee as I would have it, O °îd!
In pots like to black and fattened geese.
2. Roast and adorn it even as I desire
And let the mortar approach, which awakens the drowsy people,
3. At whose sound they will come who are idling at home,
The people who say: "Peace! may He strengthen you,
and greeting!"
4. Spice it with nine grains of cardamom and add Saffron. When it has settled in beautiful cups
5. On a decorated plate, then give it to the heroes,
And return with it unto him who is a shield to the fugitive,
6. He who drenches his spear in battles
For the eyes of her whose tresses reach below her waist,
7. The daughter of chiefs, who stain their steel weapons, Whom their adversaries fear, even though they tarry afar off,
8. And of them none looks around again, if they set off at a trot on their camels;
Of so many leaders do the bones decay through their deeds!
9. If they set off at a gallop, they sate the eagle and the wolf,
And even the hyena which roves about in hunger.
10. Pour out once more for him who, if there come to him, returning from a raid,
The flower of youth with camels thin and worn,
11. Moves yet his brows with mirth, especially if heroes arrive,
(He who acts quite otherwise than) some feigning liar;
Oh, may he be afar off.

Verse 1. Saw, for sawwi; sawwi-l-ḳhawa, means "prepare coffee." The pots in which the coffee is boiled have a very pronounced bulge in the lower half, where they are almost circular, and as they are always blackened they resemble black wild geese, which are usually fat. 2. Zajjenha, adorn it; this is done when the roasted coffee is blown upon to free it from the loosened husks. 3. The noise of the mortar disturbs sleepers and calls together the idlers from all sides to utter their greetings and to reply to greetings, only in order that as soon as possible they may gain the favor of those present. 4. Nine grains of cardamom are ground together with a pinch of

FIG. 29

FIG. 30

FIGS. 29, 30—Pack camels, al-mazhûr, on the march (see p. 76).

saffron and mixed with the boiled coffee. The hejl, cardamom, gives the coffee a peculiar bitter taste, and the saffron makes it yellow in color. The coffee, when it has been allowed to stand and has been strained off, mrawwaqa, is poured into beautiful cups, as-snâfi. Har-rağğâl snâfi means "this man is handsome, perfect." 5. Şîniije is the name of the shallow decorated metal dish upon which the cups are placed; such dishes were originally brought from China and hence were known as şîni. 'Oddah for 'odah (or 'odha). He who protects the fugitives is to receive an additional drink of coffee. Akfow means "made their escape, retreated." 6. Trâd is the term for actual warfare. In the midst of the most dangerous and fierce fighting the girls encourage the warriors with words and gestures. With loosened hair and bared breasts they dash on she-camels where the danger is greatest, shout to their lovers and friends, remind the former of favors received, and threaten to desert to the enemy should they be disappointed by their own people. 8. Šâbûr are the camel riders who during the raid ward off the attacks of the owners of the captured herds. 9. Mirkâzahom signifies the galloping of the horse riders who from ambush attack the enemy engaged with the šâbûr. 10. Most of the coffee is to go to the owner of the tent, who entertains the warriors returning from a raid, ma'âwîd (or menâçîf), with genuine unaffected kindness. For whether the raid has been successful or not, on the return from it all are hungry, riders as well as animals, because as a rule every raid lasts much longer than was planned. 11. Al-çedûb al-ehlâfi is the term applied to a man who pretends to rejoice at some news, while in reality he is seething with wrath. It is used of the host who embraces and kisses the guest, but does not give enough to eat either to the guest or to his animals.

FIG. 31—Pack camels, al-mazhûr, on the march (see p. 76).

1. *Kum saw mâ jeğmed 'ala-s-şîn jâ dijâb
bedlâl jeşdenn al-bûṭ al-mahâdîb*
2. *w-eğmes elja min al-'arak fowḵha dâb
w-estaden mâ jeğdeb 'alejk aš-şerârîb*

3. niğren jilâli min al-ṛata dûm behzâb jel'i 'ala dubb ad-dahr w-al-mawâğîb
4. jâ tekel taṭla' çaffat aš-şîn behzâb warsen şobar beşfûf bîz ar-ra'âbîb
5. w-şubbaḥ limin kâd an-niṣâma lil-ağnâb bemafraseḥ jişba' beh an-nisr w-ad-dîb
6. w-eṭnah 'ala-lli low lefa'-z-zemel zaḇzâb jarḥaş be'omreh 'end zeml ar-ra'âbîb
7. w-ğezzah 'ala-lli low lafow leh 'ala rçâb telka bejteḥ miṭl ġezr al-kaşâşîb
8. w-bâzi-l-mela eṭbeḥ leh al-wafel low şâb raşşâş al-meğles ḥamîr al-meşâ'îb
9. alli nhâr al-kown jifza' bemşlâb kbârîn al-anfos sâheğîn al-mwâğîb.

1. Rise, prepare coffee which stains the cups, O Dijâb!
In pots resembling black, fat-backed geese,
2. And roast it till the sweat on the beans evaporates,
And take that which will summon the drinkers,
3. The mortar shining with wrath from unceasing blows,
And bowing as bidden by custom and duty.
4. Oh! thou might'st say it paints the inside of the cup with a yellow
Color, like that which dyes the lips of fair beauties.
5. Pour it for him who led the youths abroad
To the place of attack, where vulture and wolf glut themselves.
6. And pour it again for him who, when clouds of dust envelop the laden camels, Risks his life for the camels which bear the slender beauties.
7. And give more to him in whose tent the camel riders
Will find animals slaughtered as at a butcher's.
8. For the others visiting thee warm up the coffee grounds, even if they be gray,
For they are but people crowding into rooms for men,
like donkeys heeding only the short sticks,
9. People who on the day of battle hasten to help with stakes for stirring the fire,
Braggarts, neglecters of duty.

This poem was composed by Hâjes eben Meğlâd and recited to me by the negro Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 1. Mâ jeġmed means "that which adheres (sticks) and colors." The Bedouins prefer coffee which leaves dark-yellow stains on the white cups. The wild geese are called maĥâdîb from their fat bulging backs. 2. The roasting is finished when the fine drops resembling sweat disappear from the coffee beans. 3. Through prolonged use the inside of the mortar becomes very shiny, as does the spot outside pressed by the knees of the person working the pestle. Jel'i, the mortar bows because the beater inclines it from side to side when shaking off the coffee that sticks to its sides. Dubb ad-dahr means "as is the custom, life long." 4. Ĉaffat aš-šîn is the inside of a porcelain cup, wars (or kurkub) the plant from which the yellow dye is made. Šfûf was explained to me as lips, but it can also mean the stuff for a dress. 5. The first cup should go to the ʿaẓîd, or leader of the troop. Mafras signifies the spot where the enemy's horses were repulsed when trying to free the captured herds. 6. Zabẓâb is the term applied to the warriors mounted on horses. If the enemy attack a migrating tribe they are opposed by the salaf, a troop of horsemen who attempt to drive them from the camels which carry the tents, household goods, supplies, and women and children. If the enemy is numerically stronger, the troop opposing them may soon be scattered, in which case only the bravest will persist in defending the camels of the different families. 7. The owner of the tent, who sets meat before the hungry fighters on their return from a raid, is entitled to the most coffee. 8. Wafel is the twice-boiled coffee, which not only leaves no dark-yellow stains on the white porcelain but is almost wholly gray, šâb. It is good enough for such visitors, mela, as press, raššâse, into the men's compartment. Although they see that they are depriving the more esteemed guests and the tired fighters of their places, and that the host looks at them with an unfriendly eye, yet they do not leave the tent. At last the short stick, miš'âb, such as is used for urging on and driving away the donkeys, must be applied to them. 9. If the alarm cry is sounded, a true Bedouin instantly arms himself with his best weapon and runs to help, jifza', his attacked countrymen, but a scamp of the sort just described will only snatch up a thick stake used for poking the fire, mišlâb, thinking he can scare the enemy with that. Sâheġîn (or târeċîn) al-mwâġîb are those who are unmindful of their duties towards their clan and tribe and are conceited braggarts, kbârîn al-anfos.

1. *Bâh al-‘aza’ jâ-dîb kum denn-al-awrâk
kurtâš šâmi šâfijen tekel rarnûk*
2. *w-hâtû dwât al-heber w-ednû lena sâk
‘ûd al-jarâ’ bšadrat al-mûs mašlûk*
3. ekteb min al-abjât jâ-dîb mâ lâk mâ dâm kufl al-ķalb jâ-dîb mafhûk
4. žilen čema-d-dabwa’ elja siž w-ensâk ma’ šaḥṣaḥen ‘anaḥ šefa’ kill târûk
5. jâ mâ liķalben kill mâ-ltamm bel-ašfâk min ‘âm al-awwal beh dawâčič w-eḥfûk
6. *jigâhed ģnûsen biswâmih al-aṭrâk
w-tekšef leh asrâren ketamhen bišandûk*
7. elja ṭara li ṭarij al-ḥbâb w-eštâk ejza w-dakk bḥâṭri ṭarij aš-šûk
8. dannejt leh min šâfi al-benn mâ lâk bel-čaff nâžiha ‘an al-‘adf min as-sûk
9. eḥmes talâten jâ nedîmi ‘ala sâk rîhah ‘ala ģamr al-raza jifzah as-sûk
10. ijjâk w-an-nijje w-bêlak w-al-hrâk ešḥa ṭšîr blâhjet al-ḥams maṭfûk
11. elja-sfarr lownah tumm baššet bel-‘arâk ḥamra’ čema-l-jâkût jitreb leha-l-mûk
12. w-‘aṭṭat brîhen fâḥren fâḥzen fâk al-‘ambar rîhah bel-aswâk manšûk
13. šubbah bniġren jisma’ kill mištâk râ-i-l-hawa jitreb elja tdižž beḥfûk
14. w-laḳķem bdelleten mowle’en čannaha-s-sâk šâmiġjeten marbûbeten tekel rarnûk
15. *ḥallah tefûḥ w-râ’i al-kêf muštâk
w-elja ṭafaḥ bah ģowharen šaḥḥ lah lûk*
16. *ašṣrar ķmûrah čazamardaġ bel-aš-âk
w-akbarhen aṭ-ṭâfeh ‘ala šâfi al-mûk*
17. w-zellah ‘ala wazḥa beha ḥamst arnâk hêlen w-mismâren bel-asbâb mašḥûk
18. w-za’farân w-šmaṭri elja-nsâk rîhah ma’ al-‘ambar ‘ala-t-tâk maṭbûk
19. elja ḥtalaṭ ḥâda bhâda betifâk šubbah čefâk al-awķ ‘an kill maḥlûk
20. bifingâl šîni tertazi ‘anneh al-arnâk jâzi bkursijjen ḥadânen al-ma’šûk
21. en entalak min ḥâfetah tekel šebrâk aw damm ķalben w-en meza’ minneh ma’lûk

22. zajjah 'ala-l-finġâl jišbor elja râk
alli tşawwer bil-ħamâme 'ala-t-tûk
23. w-elja ħaşal mâ kilt 'endi bel-aşfâk
ŗerwen temezz eşfâh w-al-'onk mafhûk
24. ŗerwen ja'îl bħebbeteh kill mâ lâk
ħaddeh zaħâh al-bedr low bân beş'ûk
25. ċenn al-'arak min waġneteh ħossen arnâk
natren 'ala şafhât al-awrâk marşûk
26. w-elja zaħeċ min mabsemeh bâržen ħâk
'aġlen rafifen w-ratteh al-ŗarak beţbûk
27. jemši bridfen hâllen madmaġ as-sâk
jefşel heġûlen hazzah at-toġl min fûk
28. w-allâh low jemši şeķâķen bel-aswâk
min šowfeteh mâ jimtaħ al-ħams maħlûk
29. mâr elja ħaşal lak şâhebak w-ent muştâk
oķtof tamar mâ lâh w-al-'omr malhûk
30. minn as-şâheb alli kill mâ žîl bawwâk
'ajja jisażżini min ad-dubbal al-fûk
31. w-ķalbi ma' ad-dellâl jeġleb bel-aswâk
'âmên 'enda şhajjef al-waşf mawsûk
32. w-şalât rabbi 'adad bârežen ħâk
'ala-n-nebi al-hâşemi ħijâr maħlûk.

1. Grief descends upon me! Rise, O clerk! Pull out paper,
A sheet from Damascus, pure white as the crane,
2. And hither with the ink and the pen,
A stem of the reed split by the knife's edge.
3. Copy, O clerk! whatever verses are fitting —
As long as the lock of my heart, O clerk! is open —
4. Word (following after word), as when small locusts drive and are driven
And link the plain with the ridge of each enclosing slope.
5. Oh, how the heart loves best what it has stored up!
For a year past my heart has been filled with passionate unrest and suspicion.
6. Some thoughts it conquers by peaceful forgiveness,
But secrets also come out which it had locked up as in a strong box.
7. Whenever I think of the tokens of love, I yearn for them instantly,
And my bosom is tortured by the remembrance of my sweetheart.

8. I will hand to him (the clerk) as many whole coffee beans as are needed
After I have taken from them the various impurities of the market.
9. Roast them three times, O comrade mine! on a pan with a long handle
Above red-hot coal of raza, till their fragrance reaches the market place.
10. Be sure that both thy mind and soul are in the stirring,
Be not disturbed, while roasting.
11. As soon as it becomes yellow and glistens with sweat
And is red like rubies, it will gladden the pupil of my eye,
12. And a pleasant all-pervading smell it will send forth, better than that
Of the amber, which can be smelled in the market place.
13. Pour the beans into the mortar, whose sound everyone will hear who longs for the coffee,
And the lover will grow cheerful if thou poundest with
14. Then pour a handful into a Damascene pot, [care.
Which is like a well-shaped calf of the leg and shines white as a crane.
15. Let it be covered, as desired by him who likes his repose,
And when it is full of gem-like bubbles, then it has attained its full beauty.
16. The smallest of the bubbles resemble the emerald on a dagger grip,
While the largest would be like an eye flooded with tears.
17. Then pour it off to settle into a pot into which thou hast shredded five kinds of spice, Cardamom with powdered cloves
18. And saffron with two kinds of Sumatra spice, in the right order.
Its fragrance blended with that of the amber will remain in the closed room.
19. When these are thoroughly mixed, Pour it out — and Allâh keep all obstacles from thee
while so doing! —
20. Into a china cup, in which the drops are reflected,
And which shines on the tray always set beside the coffee lover.

21. When emptied, there will remain streaks like reddish fringes
Or like the blood from a heart from which the artery has been torn out;
22. Its color will cling to the cup after it has settled,
Just like the band painted around the dove's throat.
23. And if my wishes could be granted, I should like best A pretty maid, who would press her lips to mine with bent neck,
24. A pretty maid, whose kiss would embolden all, as is fit.
Her face is like the moon's reflection shining on a golden dagger grip;
25. The pearls of sweat on her cheek bones are like drops Scattered on sheets of the finest paper.
26. When she smiles, then from the place where she smiles
a flash of lightning is seen,
Soon followed by a copious rain.
27. She walks with enchanting hips above firmly built calves;
The weight of her body moves the rings above her ankles;
28. And, by Allâh himself! when she walks, the whole market place is in an uproar,
And, while looking at her, no one can close his fingers tight.
29. But if thy sweetheart permits and thou desirest it, Pluck the fruit as long as it entices, for life will soon be overtaken by death.
30. O sweetheart! thou who, as they all say, betrayest me,
Refusing to allay my thirst with thy incisors.
31. My heart — like something banded by the auctioneer in the market places —
Has dwelt for two years captive to her whom I have in few words described.
32. Oh! that my Lord's blessing may rest as many times as he sends out lightning
On the Hashemite Prophet, who is the highest of all created beings.

The honor of composing this poem belongs to Muḥammad al-Kâzi, who is said to have been a judge in the town of 'Anejza. To me it was recited and explained by Prince an-Nûri's clerk, Ġwâd. Its story is simple. The poet, two years before, had fallen in love with a woman of extraordinary beauty, but for the last year he had been tortured by doubts as to her faithfulness. In order not to lose her, he would gladly forgive much, but again and again in the market places he has heard insinuations which have exasperated him anew, filling him with melancholy. During a moment of such mental agony, he ordered strong black coffee to be prepared for him in his house in the 'Anejza market place and then dictated the poem to his clerk.

Verse 1. Bâh al-‘aza (or enkašef al-‘aza) means "melancholy has taken hold of me; grief is seen on the countenance too." Adîb in the poetical language of the district of al-Ḳašîm, to which 'Anejza belongs, is a man who can both read and write. Šâmi is paper brought from Damascus. The commercial relations of 'Anejza with Syria in general and with Damascus in particular always have been much brisker than with Irak and Bagdad. 'Anejza, it should be known, is the center of the 'Aḳejl camel traders, who buy up camels all over Arabia, drive them through Syria to Egypt, sell them there, and on their return stop at Damascus, where they buy articles needed in inner Arabia and bring them home. 2. Dwât al-heber signifies drugs which mixed together and with water give ink; also an inkstand. In the towns of inner Arabia no fluid ink is sold. The inkstand is a small vessel made of either brass or tin and closed with a well fitting lid, into which a small piece of cotton-wool or camel's hair is placed and steeped in the prepared ink until soaked through. The clerk sits on his heels, holds the paper with his left hand, and writes with his right, dipping his pen in the inkstand almost constantly. His pens he cuts himself. Buying a few long reeds or sedges, he cuts off, when needed, a piece about ten to fifteen centimeters in length, shapes it with a sharp knife, mûs, into a pen, splits it, and tries it on his thumb nail, and the writing instrument, sâḳ, is ready. Šadra is also pronounced šatra, corresponding to šafra. 3. Ḳufl mafhûk. The door lock in inner Arabia is more like a bolt than a lock. It is usually made of wood and both barred and unbarred with a wooden key. The iron lock and iron key are found only in mercantile booths and storehouses. Mafhûk, used when speaking of locks as well as bolts — and also of the throat — means, properly, "forced backwards or forwards." 4. Dabwa are young locusts whose wings are just growing. They are so numerous at times that they crawl in a long chain urging each other, sîž, and even riding one on another, ensâk. Şahşah is a plain shut in by the low yet steep slope of a tarak, or long flat ridge. Şefa is the flat top of such a ridge. The ascent from the lower plain, şahşah, to this upper plain, şefa, is quite difficult. The dabwa locusts appear sometimes in such enormous masses that they fill the space between the lower and upper plains. 5. Eltamm (or enğama), gathered together. Bel-aşfâk — that is, what is dearest to and gladdens the heart most of all — are the sweet memories of love; but the poet for the last year has been tortured by unrest, dawâcîc, and fears, hfûk. Enhafak, to be scared, to be filled with suspicion. 6. Al-aţrâk are demonstrations of peace or friendship; swâmîh is forgiveness. Şandûk, a wooden box, frequently lined with tin plates; in inner Arabia it takes the place of our burglar-proof safe. There the poet had hidden many a secret unpleasant to him, but the heart learns them notwithstanding. 8. To allay his grief the poet took out from a wooden canister a few coffee beans, picked out on his palm the impurities mixed with them in the market, and then handed them to his companion, nedîm. The coffee beans are exposed in the shops in open bags, into which apple cores, date stones, spices, and the like often fall. Such admixtures are called adf, a poetical expression for filth. 9. While being roasted coffee should be taken from the fire three times. In its preparation there is nothing more important than the roasting. Sâk is the long handle, much the worse for wear, of the pan used for roasting coffee. In the towns this pan is very small, but its handle is strong and ornamented. The poet sits in the room of his house, and the coffee is roasted in the same room before him. The coals of raza, which, when ignited, give a strong heat almost without smoke, are kindled on a square earthenware platter resembling a small trough. This hearth is either movable or attached to the earthen floor. During the roasting the window remains open so that the smell of the coffee can pass out of the room. And because the poet's house stands in the market place, the smell of roasted coffee is sensed in all the shops around. In the towns of inner Arabia the market place consists of a narrow street. 18. When the roasted and pounded coffee is being boiled, the burgher closes the window in order to save all its fragrance, which, like the coffee itself, has a narcotic effect on him. 19. The coffee is poured in from above, and, as the cup is often as much as a meter below the pot, great dexterity is necessary in order not to spill a drop. But even the best pourer spills when jostled — whence the sayings: “Ĉefâk al-awk, may Allâh save thee from an obstruction!” “Ĉefâk aš-šerr, may Allâh save thee from evil!” 20. Arnâk signifies anything that resembles a round grain, as, for instance, several kinds of spice, drops of water, etc. Instead of šînijje the poet uses the word kursi. 21. The coffee, very strong in itself, acquires through the addition of five different spices, as is the custom in the towns of inner Arabia, still more body and leaves on the cup a fine sediment, which the poet compares to red fringes, šebrâk, and to the blood of a heart, from which the main artery has been torn out, ma'lûk. 23. When he has drunk the strong coffee, he again longs for his sweetheart, rarw. 24. Ša'ûk and (16) aš'âk signify the grip of a sword or dagger, richly ornamented with gold and precious stones. In the larger towns of inner Arabia there are craftsmen, thorough artists in their work, who make to order such handles, often of wonderful beauty. 26. The ladylove laughs at one moment and cries the next. When she smiles her white teeth glisten. Hâk is the name for the quick flash of the lightning. 27. The calf of her leg is well turned and firm. 28. The town dweller in inner Arabia stretches out his fingers when surprised. 30. Ğwâd did not know whether to say minn or min, and was unable to explain what the word meant in this connection. Dubbal signifies the incisors, min fowk, of the upper row. 31. The poet's heart is agitated, as if the town crier or auctioneer had carried it about the market places, offering it for sale. Mawsûk has the same meaning as ma'hûd, a captured or imprisoned one. The clerk Ğwâd knew the Rwala dialect well and adapted himself to its pronunciation.

CHAPTER VI

DRESS AND WEAPONS

THE BEARD AND HAIR; TATTOOING; BODY BELTS

The Rwala devote much attention to the body,⁷ especially to the hair and beard. Almost everyone can shave and cut hair, and they render this service to one another, as they have no mirrors to shave by. Calling on his comrade with the words: "Shave me, ḥassenni (or zajjenni, or eḥlēkni)," a Rwejli sits down on his heels and patiently waits till his friend has prepared his soap, razor, and scissors. If he merely wishes the beard growing under his chin on the throat, ǧarǧûr, shaved, he says: "ǧarǧerni." If he wishes the back part of his head up to the ears, ṣôra, shaved, he asks: "Sawwerni." Otherwise the barber will shave both the half of the back of his head and the beard under the chin, trim his thin chin beard, laḥje (or daḥne), and his goatee, adesa, shave off his side whiskers, awârez, trim his moustache, šwâreb, clipping off its ends, subaḵ, and comb the hair over the forehead, cutting it short, ḵuṣṣa, at the same time. Individuals especially careful of their appearance have their front hair made into two, four, six, or even as many as eight plaits, krûn. A man wearing his hair

⁷ The big toe (thumb) is called bḥām; the second and third toes, ḥonṣor; the fourth toe, honejser; the little toe, bnejser; a finger (or toe) nail, zafer; the toes, aṣābe ar-riglên; the sole of the foot, ḥaff; the arch of the foot, ḥabd ar-rigēl; the heel, aṣeb; the instep, arš; the ankle, aṣejm ab-ar-raḥam or ka'ûb; the ankle joint, mifakk; Achilles tendon, arḵûb; the shank, sâk; the calf, ǧarbû'a; the extensor of the leg, ajn ar-rukba; the kneecap, zelâle; the hollow of the knee, mâbez; the thigh, fahd; the mons Veneris, hedde; the penis, ejr or zebb; the testicles, ḥaṣjân; the glans, faṣ'a; the groins, ḥâṣra; the hip, wirê; the buttock, šoṭijje or fiz; the navel, sirre; the loins, ǧamb; the ribs, zlâ; the breast, sadr; the breast nipple, dîd; the ensiform cartilage, razrûf al-ḥalb; the stomach, ḥabd; the intestines, ḥoṣbân; the kidney, ḥelwa; the spleen, ḥâl; the liver, stâr; the gall, marâra; the heart, kalb or ṣandûk al-kalb; the lungs, rije; the back, zahr; the lower part of the spine, ḥajjež; the vertebrae, ḥarâz az-zahr; the shoulder-blade muscles, daffa; the shoulder blade, ḥatf; the small of the back, rummân al-ḥatf; the neck, rukuba; the two fleshy parts of the back of the neck, elba; the hollow between them, nkejra; the atlas, fâ'ûs; the collar bone, turka; the pit of the throat, trejra; the external jugular vein, wirid; the throat, barrâḵa; the Adam's apple, zreda; the chin, adasa; the jaws, ḥnûk; the lips, barâṭem, or belâḡem; the corners of the mouth, šdûk; the cheeks, wînat; the nose, ḥašm; the nostrils, menâher; the ridge of the nose, arnân; the bridge of the nose, makren; the cheek bone, rummâne; the eyes, ujûn; the pupil of the eye, šbej; the eyelids, ǧfûn; the eyelashes, rimš; the eyebrow, ḥǧâḡ; the forehead, ǧabha; the temples, ṣawâber; the ear, iden; the lobe of the ear, ṣhama; the teeth, senân; the incisors, tenâje; the four eye teeth, nîbân; the molars, rahi; the glottis, ḥlejž al-mowt; the gullet, bel'âm; the top of the head, râdje; the cranium, ḥâmt ar-râs; the brain, dmdâr; the elbow joint, azd; the elbow, kû; the forearm, drâ; the arm hollow, durder; the back of the hand, mišt; the palm of the hand, ḥaff; the thumb, bâhem; the index finger, ṣawil; the little finger, ḥnejser; the hand, jad (or id; dual, idê; pl., idên); three hands, talât idên; five feet, ḥams riglên.

thus plaited and dressing with some taste, walad jensob, is called a ġâhel. In the case of men not wearing plaits the barber cuts the hair, šûše. His work finished, the barber salutes the shaven one with the words: "May'st thou preserve thy health and capture camels! eslam w-ernam al-bel." The answer is: "May Allâh reward thee! âġerak 'al-allâh," the barber adding: "May Allâh receive thee into his mercy! sâ-mahk allâh." The common barber is nearly always an independent, ħorr, Bedouin. He shaves for a good word, not for pay, and must, therefore, be thanked, for nothing is more disagreeable to an independent Bedouin than discourtesy and ingratitude for favors or services rendered; therefore the saying: "Bitter is the fatigue of a free Bedouin, ta'ab al-ħorr murr."

Long plaits are the pride of a childishly vain Bedouin, ġâhel, and often lead to his undoing. When pursued, he can be easily captured if the enemy catches hold of his plaits. For not only is he unable to escape, but his enemies can bind his hands behind his neck with his own hair and, besides, tie one or two plaits around his leg above the ankle. Hence the saying: "Thy hair is thy snare, râsak 'arâsak." Mindîl al-Kaṭî, my companion, told me that he was once caught by some men of the Tûmân clan of the Šammar tribe, whose camel he had tried to steal, and was bound by his own plaits. When they dismissed him the next day, they cut the plaits through. From that time Mindîl has worn his hair short, šûše.

When the Bedouin catches a thief, whether afoot (ħâjef) or mounted (mu'ajjer), from a tribe with which he is at war, kowmâni, he cuts off a piece of his plait, accompanying his action with the words: "I let thee go free for Allâh's sake, ana mu'težk lillâh," and adds: "If I catch thee again, I surely will cut off thy chin beard; in kaṣabtak laḳoşş la-ħîtak." To cut a man's chin beard is, in the popular idea, as bad as cutting off his head, laḳta' râsak. It is much easier for the relatives of a murdered man to forgive the slayer than for the kinsmen of a Bedouin insulted by having his beard cut off to be reconciled with the culprit. Sâbel an-Nu-sejri of the Rwala once went to the Beni Şahr tribe to seek his two she-camels which had been stolen from him, naḳîşa, some time before. He bore a letter of recommendation for the chief, given him by Prince Saṭṭâm, who asked the chief either to return to Sâbel his animals or to see to it that he was indemnified, jeddûn 'alejk. Not long after Sâbel's departure Saṭṭâm led his young warriors on a raid against the Fed'ân. In the depression of Sirhân he met Sâbel. "Where are thy she-camels?" "I haven't found them." "Why, were they not branded with the mark of thy kin? What did the chief say to thee?" "I did not go so far. I was caught by the Şhûr pasturing their camels, who bound me in my own plaits, put the Şhûr brand on my right thigh, cut off my plaits and half of my chin beard, and then drove me away with the words: 'Show thy relatives what thou hast got for thy she-camels!'" No sooner did Saṭṭâm see the brand mark of the Şhûr, than he shouted: "Let Allâh judge between them and us! Up and at the Beni Şahr! Jeşûf allâh lena w-lehom 'ala beni şahr." Then the Rwala attacked the Beni Şahr camp, captured more than a hundred men, cut off their beards with sabers and daggers, made the Rwala mark on both cheek and ear of every man, and took all their herds.

FIG. 32—Coffeepots (see p. 100).

Many elderly men have the whole head shaved. Such are called aşla'. Those naturally bald are nicknamed aḳra'.

A maiden is very careful of her hair. In the morning she waits for the female riding camel to get to its feet, and, catching its urine in a small dish, she washes her hair with it, tebawwalat. The camel's urine destroys the lice embryos, refreshes the scalp, prevents itching, and gives the hair a peculiar gloss. Then the girl takes a wooden comb with rough teeth on both sides, combs her hair, temaššaṭat, and braids it, telemm rāsah. The hair above the forehead as a rule she does not plait, but merely trims, so that it hangs down freely, kuṣṣa, but she plaits the rest of the hair on the top of the head and above the ears into braids, d̥wâjeb, and makes two small pigtales, 'akṣa', of the back hair. Each braid ends in a small knot tied with a small ribbon. The braids are neither wound around the head, nor rolled. Long unplaited hair is called ša'ar, plaited hair being known as žedâjel (or krûn). Trimmed hair above the forehead is kuṣṣa, nâṣije, or ğabhe. Tresses: židle, 'erf, or krûn. Short hair: hawâf, berčem, ka-kûle, râs, or šûše.

Long hair and long tresses are the chief ornament of a woman, and every youth longs to marry a girl or woman thus adorned. The older men do not care for the long hair and advise the youth: "Amuse thyself with a short haired one, if thou canst not get a girl whose tresses are ornamented with coins; telahha' bumm šûše ilja mâ tğik al-manḵûše."

Nearly all women are tattooed on the lips, cheeks, nose, forehead, breast, around the breasts, and on the belly. This is always done by a gipsy woman, nûrijje. First the gipsy pricks certain patterns into the skin, then dips the needle in indigo and transmits this dye into the holes. After this operation she binds the tattooed part of the body, and not until the seventh day is past are the bandages removed, when the spots are washed. The pictures thus produced, daḵḵ al-wšâm, generally circles and triangles, are supposed to enhance the maiden's beauty, min šân zerâfa.

Both men and women wear on their bare bodies a belt plaited from five thin strips of gazelle leather, the men's being called ḥaḵw (or sebte), and the women's barîm (or ru-sejni). Persons not wearing this belt are named ma'w or aslat. The Rwala buy the ḥaḵw from the Şlejb, usually for a quarter of a meğîdijje (22½ cents).

MEN'S CLOTHES

The main dress of the men consists of a white shirt (towb) reaching to the heels, with broad sleeves ending at the wrist

in a lappet more than a meter long, towb mrawdān. When walking or working, the man ties the sleeves behind his neck; when riding he lets them hang down loosely. On the breast the shirt is opened, ğejb, to be fastened below the throat by a button or a cord sewn to the shirt. A towb has no collar, but is sometimes ornamented with blue, red, and black embroidery around the neck and on the breast.

A well-to-do Rwejli puts on over the towb a garment called zebûn (pl., zebnât) made of light material, never of cloth. This resembles our shirt, except that it reaches to the ankles, has no collar, is open the whole length of the front, and is provided with wide sleeves overlapping the hand by about ten centimeters. The sleeves are slit open at the ends for about fifteen centimeters, lined with dark-red material to the same extent, and then folded back, kallâba, so that the lining is exposed. The ends of the sleeves, both the slits, and the edges around the neck and on the breast are bordered with a colored cord, herğ, which ends below the chin in two small strings, krân. At the tail the material is turned up to the width of about two fingers, kejtân. On the breast and at the hips of the zebûn two inside pockets, maḥba (pl., maḥâbi), are sewn on. The zebûn, if made of white linen without a lining, is called şâje; if made of white linen with a lining it is called zebûn bêza; if of black half-silk with yellow stripes it is called mejdâni; if of pure silk with variegated stripes it is called an-mar; and if of cotton with variegated stripes it is called dîma.

Both towb and zebûn are fastened to the body by a leather or woollen belt, maḥzam, of about a hand's breadth.

A man covers his head with a round cap woven of rough wool or camel's hair, taşijje, on top of which he lays a kerchief about 1.2 meters long and 1.15 meters wide. Folding it at first like a triangle, he throws the middle lappet, dîl, back over his shoulder, arranges the outside ones, riğlên, with both his right and left hands to an equal length, and then pulls the headcloth over the middle of his forehead. Most of the time the Rwejli wears cotton kerchiefs of some dark color, mindîl, seldom of pure white, kzâza. A mindîl woven of red and black threads is called şammarijje; a black mindîl shot with red is a hendijje; one with variegated dots is a stambûlijje. Homşi is the name of a mindîl with yellow or pink stripes; şmâr, of a blue or red checkered one. A kzâza, or white kerchief with a red or blue border and short fringe, hadab, is called hâšije. A silken kerchief is called maḵrûna; if interwoven with silver threads, it is known as a mḵaṣṣaba. Most popular of all is a dark-blue maḵrûna or a violet one shot with red. A pure white maḵrûna is worn by the chief alone and that only on festive occasions. As soon as it becomes soiled, the chief gives it to a negro. The kerchief is not tied to the head, but merely fastened with a cord about one inch thick made of wool or camel's hair and wrapped double around the forehead and the skull, ʿašâba. The lappets are crossed under the chin and pulled through under the ʿašâba, so that they project above the forehead like two small horns. A man who has the lappets of the kerchief, riḡlên, crossed under the chin, is known as mutalattam. If he does not wish to be recognized, he simply pulls them up above his chin, even over the nose, so that only his eyes are uncovered. Whoever meets a man thus disguised, shouts: "Remove the curtain, so that I can recognize thee; fukk al-lutma ḥatt-aʿrefk."

The most important part of a man's dress is the cloak, ʿaba. It is made from two pieces, each 2.5 meters long and 60 centimeters wide. These are sewn together along their long sides; the narrow edges are folded, and their upper ends also sewn together. In the two folds at the top, which are about sixty centimeters broad, holes are cut about fifty centimeters long. The cloak is then thrown over the shoulders and the hands thrust through the holes. Around the neck and along the breast the mantle is often embroidered, or a strip woven of yellow and gold threads is added. A light-gray mantle shot with yellow is called bišt; a light-gray one made of fine wool is a hâçije; a light-gray one of half cotton is a lûmijje; one of medium weight with long white and dark-gray stripes about ten centimeters wide is a mubaddaha; one of the same color but made of good wool is a rhejbâwijje; one of good wool with white and reddish stripes is a saʿdûnijje; a good woollen one with white and dark-brown stripes and ornamented at the neck and above the shoulders is a ḥasawijje; one of good wool or camel's hair, not striped, of a plain color (generally black or brown) shot with pink is a mezwi. The inhabitants of the oasis of al-Ġowf manufacture mantles of the bišt (Fig. 33) and mezwi varieties.

In the winter time a sheepskin coat, farwa, is worn by the Rwejlî instead of the mantle. If it covers only the breast, it is called obṭijje. A ḥarrâtijje is a sheepskin coat of white wool dyed with henna, unlined and reaching to the abdomen. A hajjâlijje is made of the same material but lined with cloth, mkabbaba, and undyed. A baḡdalijje covers the hips also, has sleeves falling fifty centimeters below the hands, and is made of good skins, is usually black and lined with darkblue cloth. It is also provided with clasps below the neck and on the breast.

FIG. 33—A Bedouin dressed in a bišt.

In warm weather the Rwejli either goes barefoot by preference or ties around his heel and big toe a sole cut from undressed camel's hide, na'al. The herdsmen wear a low shoe made of rough leather, zerbûl, with a thick sole, na'al (or hedwa), a stiff instep, hawra, a low and wide heel, ʿaž-bijje, and clasps, bzîm, for tightening the shoe. The Rwala wrap the feet around with rags, hašwa (pl., hašâwi). The young chiefs buy shoes, šurmâje, of the kind worn in the towns. The riders wear boots of fine red leather, žazme (or ğazme), with high shoe irons made of rolled sheet iron, ħadw. The best of all are the žazme ħalabijje (Aleppan žazme); the cheaper kind is called niswânijje and is generally of a yellow color. Žazme reaching to the knees are called rabbâtijje.

Those who can afford it buy a short coat, not unlike our waistcoat, made of a many-colored thin cloth, either unlined, nusšijje, or lined, derfil.

The yearly expenditure of a common Rwejli for his clothing is as follows:

ħakw , body belt	$\frac{1}{4}$	meğîdijje	(\$ 0.22 $\frac{1}{2}$)
towb , shirt	1	"	(" 0.90)
zebûn , outer shirt	1	"	(" 0.90)
mahzam , outer belt	$\frac{1}{4}$	"	(" 0.22 $\frac{1}{2}$)
tâžijje , cap	$\frac{1}{4}$	"	(" 0.22 $\frac{1}{2}$)
mindîl , kerchief	$\frac{1}{4}$	"	(" 0.22 $\frac{1}{2}$)
‘ašâba , kerchief cord	$\frac{1}{4}$	"	(" 0.22 $\frac{1}{2}$)
‘aba , mantle	3	meğîdijjât	(" 2.70)
farwa , fur coat	3	"	(" 2.70)
zerbûl , shoes	1	meğîdijje	(" 0.90)
Total...10 $\frac{1}{4}$ meğîdijjât (\$ 9.22 $\frac{1}{2}$).

In addition to this his obtijje, short fur coat, costs him 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ —2 meğîdijjât (\$ 1.35—\$ 1.80), his kzâza, white kerchief, $\frac{1}{4}$ meğîdijje (22 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents), and his nusšijje, short coat, $\frac{1}{2}$ meğîdijje (45 cents).

In winter the Rwejli puts on all the clothes he has, thinking that otherwise he would never get warm. A proverb says: "He who does not put on heavy clothing will not get warm by carrying it, alli mâ jetažžel mâ jenažžel."

WOMEN'S CLOTHES

A woman (Fig. 34) wears a dark-blue shirt or dress, towb aswad, with broad sleeves ending in a long lappet. The shirt fits close to the neck and is about one meter longer than the wearer. Nearly every woman sews it herself, two pieces, bejramtên, of cotton fabric each eight drâ (6 meters) long being necessary for a shirt. The ordinary fabric is called mastîka, the better sort abu rwêše. A woman's shirt is without any decoration. It is held to the body by a broad belt woven of red and black cotton or woollen threads and called šwêhi. At the front the woman tucks up the long shirt under the belt so that her ankles are free, forming the shirt into a kind of a skirt, htûl. Her head she wraps in a large dark ker-

FIG. 34—Rwala women.

chief, maḵrûna. This she folds in the middle into a triangle. Holding the left lappet to her left cheek, she throws the kerchief over her head in such a way that the middle lappet falls on her back; the right lappet she then passes under the chin, covers with it the left lappet on the left cheek, and folds it over her head again, making it hang down the right side of the face. Then she folds a mindîl, or dark cotton kerchief, into a band about five centimeters wide and winds it around the maḵrûna, or large kerchief, on her head and forehead. In place of the ordinary mindîl she may use a band of some fine material, such a band being called şafa'a (or mer'ez), or a ḵrajša of fabric so loosely woven that it may be stretched as if it were crochet work. The wrap made from these finer goods is called şıṭfa.

A woman's cloak is made like a man's, except that it never has the long stripes and is either black or dark-brown, mezwi.

The wealthy Rwejlîjje wears a short jacket of blue cloth with narrow turned-in sleeves. This is called a ġibbe. Good cloth is known in the trade as ǧôḥ mâhûd, common cloth as ǧôḥ ḥafîf. Mezâwi is a silk caftan worn by wealthy women over the dress, towb. It has narrow sleeves and covers the arms down to the wrists.

Almost every Rwala woman goes barefoot, but all possess some jewelry. Around the neck they wear a mahnaka, or necklace of red coral; on the breast a želâde, or pendant of glass pearls; on the elbows small black glass rings, maâzed; on the wrists similar trinkets, sbat; above the ankles small glass or copper rings, ḥǧûl; in the ears copper rings, turżijje; on the fingers rings, ftâḥ; and sometimes in the right nostril a copper ring, zmâm. The women dearly love this cheap jewelry; they save up camel's hair for a long time and often steal grain in order to buy it.

The wealthier women wrap, jetalaffa'en, their heads in a covering called šumbar. This is a red shawl 42 centimeters wide by 3.2 meters long. They dye it black, leaving only about six centimeters as red stripes at both ends. Next they cut the shawl lengthways down the middle and sew both parts together in such a way that a covering is formed 84 centimeters wide and 1.6 meters long. If they want to wrap their heads in this shawl, jetalaffa'en beh, they lay one lappet on their left shoulder, stretch the shawl over the head, throw the other lappet from the right under the chin, and cover with it the lappet on the left shoulder. Then they fasten the shawl with a folded kerchief to the forehead and skull, pull both lappets up the back, and tuck up the shawl in the front till it covers the chin. Young girls like to wear both the maḵrûna, or large kerchief, and the šumbar. Both lappets of the maḵrûna hang loosely down the breast, while the šumbar is crossed under the chin. If a girl who is fond of dress, bint rawjâna, owns a maḵrûna only, she will not tie it to her head with the mindîl, dark cotton kerchief, but prefers it to fall down a little, as then her tresses can be seen to advantage.

Every woman likes to dye her palms and nails, and if she be old also her hair, with yellow henna, either of the Egyptian variety, maşrijje, or of a variety brought from Mecca, makkâwijje; the latter is the better.

Both the youths and girls are fond of dyeing their eyelids black with kohl, collyrium or antimony powder, using a small sharp knife, mirwad, in this operation. Moistening the mir- wad slightly, they touch the kohl, which is kept in a tiny tin box, mikhale, and then rub the color along the borders of the eyelids, believing that the use of kohl strengthens the eyesight. Many therefore even rub kohl on the edges of a telescope, being firmly convinced that the instrument then gives a much better view.

The woman's dress costs:

barîm , body belt.....	1/4	meğîdijje	($ 0.22 ¹ / ₂)
towb , shirt.....	2	meğîdijjât	(" 1.80)
şwêhi , belt.....	1/4	meğîdijje	(" 0.22 ¹ / ₂)
maķrûna , kerchief.....	2	meğîdijjât	(" 1.80)
şitfa , head band.....	1/4	meğîdijje	(" 0.22 ¹ / ₂)
ğibbe , jacket.....	2	meğîdijjât	(" 1.80)
mezwi , cloak.....	3	meğîdijjât	(" 2.70)
maĥnaķa , coral necklace.....	4	piasters	(" 0.18)
želâde , pendant.....	4	"	(" 0.18)
ma'âzed , elbow ornaments.....	4	"	(" 0.18)
fatĥa , finger ring.....	4	"	(" 0.18)
zmâm , nostril ring.....	1/4	meğîdijje	(" 0.22 ¹ / ₂)
Total.....	10	meğîdijjât , 16 piasters	($ 9.72).

PEDDLERS; CARE FOR PERSONAL APPEARANCE; INFANTS; STAFFS AND CANES

Whatever the Rwala need for their finery and ornaments they either buy from the merchants who visit them when they are camping in the settled territory in the months of July and August, or from the peddlers, who accompany them the whole year through, even going to the inner desert with them. A peddler or wandering merchant is called either Rĥejbâwi or Kubejsi: Rĥejbâwi after the ancient town of ar-Raĥba, Kubejsi after his native place, the little town of al-Kubejsa. The terms Rĥejbâwi and Kubejsi have come to mean any wandering seller of textiles or general merchandise and are now applied even to merchants known to hail from other places. Thus a peddler from Bagdad is called a Rĥejbâwi Bar-dâdi or Kubejsi Bardâdi. When a youth overfond of dress, dêķân, visits a wandering merchant to be measured for a suit of clothes, he gives his order in the words of the ancient verse: "Measure me, O merchant! for a shirt with long sleeves, measure me, O merchant! O Rĥejbâwi! Faşşel li jâ tâġer zâfi erdâni faşşel li jâ tâġer jâ rĥejbâwi."

Some say: "The clothes are the wings of the descendants of Adam, al-hdûm ġenâh beni âdam," as people always consider a well-dressed man something better than he really is. Others again claim that the clothes do not add to a man's good qualities. "A good man will be good even if on rising from bed (he has nothing on but his shirt), while a scamp will be a scamp even if he scrubs himself with soap; az-zên zên low ħa'ad min manâmeĥ aš-šen šên low tarassal beṣ-ṣâbûn."

A maiden suing for a youth's favor is careful of her appearance and dresses to the best of her ability, but as soon as she knows herself to be loved she cares no more for dressing finely and thinks only of her lover's qualities. A popular ditty says:

W-allâh jâ ġerd larmîk w-albes ġedîd ajj al-ġedîd w-ajj al-ġerdi ilja šuft az-zên 'akli jerdi ekrûn aš-šowk rumĥ as-serdi.

By Allâh, I shall cast thee aside, old dress, and put on a new one.

But which is the new and which the old?
If I see a noble youth, my judgment is gone,
For has not my beloved plaits as long as a spear carried by the Serdijje?

At home in his tent the man can leave off his cloak, 'aba', or his sheepskin coat, farwa, or he can go, as the saying is, in a dress below his belt, behdûm al-maḥzam; outside, however, he must not appear in that condition, for that would be an offence against common decency. If a traveler arrives without his mantle or sheepskin coat, he makes it known either that he has been robbed or has lost those articles. In dangerous districts a Rwejlî will only loosen his belt in the evening and will go to bed fully dressed. Elsewhere he sleeps either in his shirt or even naked, merely wrapped in his mantle. If suddenly awakened by noise at night, he jumps out of his bed, snatches up his arms, and pressing the cloak to the body with his left hand, rushes out to see what has happened.

The hips of a baby are plastered with dry camel's manure, dimne; the baby is then wrapped in a long shawl tied with a thin string and fastened by two ropes of camel's hair to the two main tent stakes, and the cradle, mhâd, is ready.

The dry manure absorbs the baby's urine and excrements. In its second year the child gets a dark-blue shirt, twêb, and its little head is covered with a hood, ḡaba, tied with two cords, elṭa, under the chin. Likewise shoes, ḡzejme, are put on its feet.

Every Rwejli carries a stick, as staffs are generally needed for directing the riding camels. These sticks are thin and about eighty centimeters long; they are called meḡḡân and are as a rule made by the Rwala themselves from strong saplings, preferably those cut from almond trees. One end is perforated and a strong cord tied into a sling pulled through the hole. The hand is then passed through the sling and the meḡḡân hangs from the wrist. The other, or thicker, end of the stick is carved into an ibis head to the length of about eight centimeters and a width of, say, three and a half centimeters. The bâkûr is a stick also provided with a cord at one end, the other being bent in a semicircle. The maṭraḡ is entirely straight. Both the bâkûr and maṭraḡ are bought from the peddlers; they are rattan, ḡajzarâni, sticks. The ḡana is a heavy cane about seventy centimeters long and ending in a knob. The maslût is a staff 1.2 meters long, stout but not too heavy. In the first third of its length it is perforated and a thin strap forming a sling is pulled through the hole; the staff hangs from the saddle by the sling. The maḡrûb closely resembles a maslût but is much stouter, heavier, and from the middle upwards visibly thicker. All three, ḡana, maslût, and maḡrûb, are properly weapons.

SMOKING PIPES

Many Rwala — both men and women — are fond of smoking. Every smoker has a pipe. A man's pipe is called sebîl, a woman's raḡjûn. The Rwejli either carves a sebîl himself from a soft stone or buys it from a Kubejsi. The sebîl is a one-piece pipe, forming an elbow. Its thinnest part is the horizontal mouthpiece, which is about nine centimeters long and is called the dêl. The angle of the elbow is named ṭîz; the vertical bowl about five centimeters long is the râs, and the inside the baṭn. The mouth of the bought sebîl is enclosed by a brass ring, ṭowḡ, from which hangs a chain, sinsile, with a brass cap, ḡab'ijje, to prevent the smoldering tobacco from falling out. A wire, mibḡâš, serves as the pipe cleaner. A chief shouts to his negro: "Fill my pipe, ‘ammer li-s-sebîl. Clean the pipe so that it will not clog, ebḥaš as-sebîl lâ jinsedd." A ṛaljûn consists of three parts: the pipe proper, bûz, a long wooden stem, ḵṣuba, and the mouthpiece, maṣṣa.

Both the tobacco and steel and tinder for lighting it the Bedouin carries in leather pouches known as sfara and ṣifen respectively. The flint is called ṣalbûḥ, the steel zenâd, and the tinder ġadḥa. The last the Bedouin either prepares himself from dry, powdered šîḥ, or ḵuṭejn, or buys from a merchant.

Poems Relating to Smoking

* The pipe and the effects of smoking are mentioned in more than one poem. The first two verses of the following poem composed by Nimr eben ‘Adwân are universally known, while the rest could be recited by a few only:

1. *Jâ šama‘at aṣ-ṣubjân ‘ammer lena-l-bûz
w-emlih min at-titen al-ṛwejri w-nâseh*
2. *aḥejr ‘endi min ḥebb kill mambûz
‘azmen ṭwâl al-lejl jiṭred na‘âse*
3. *ma‘ delleten je‘abba leha-l-hejl w-al-ġowz
w-ašrîn ‘ûden ‘ârefîn žijâseh*
4. *ma‘ šât muṣlâḥen leha-l-‘atel markûz
w-mzajjenen ḥabb al-leḵejmi elbâseh*
5. ja‘ben ad-dasmîn aš-šwâreb hal-ar-rûz fakkâkt al-maḥhûr jowm eḥtwâseh
6. *rab‘i hal ar-raddâd mâ ṣarbehom hûz
čam wâḥeden min fe‘lihom ṭâḥ râseh*
7. w-lâ hom mšâwert al-‘aġâjez hal al-kûz alli maḥâčihom drûb an-neḵâše
8. jâ rabb jâ-lli tenbet al-‘ešeb ledrûz lâ teġma‘ al-fuḏza al-bâži nahâse
9. *čam ḵâleten rollah wara-ṣ-sadr maknûz
w-tamzi w-hi bil-čabd mitl al-ḥalâše.*

1. O, merry youth! fill the damaged pipe for us,
Fill it with tobacco from Rowr and give it here,
2. For dearer to me than the kisses of any full-hipped maid
Is that little bone which in a long night drives away slumber.

3. And, likewise, fill the pot into which cardamom, nutmeg,
And twenty fragrant stalks in the proper quantity are put.
4. Bring also a fat sheep, to hold which a caldron is put on the fire,
A sheep to be wrapped in a garment garnished with mouthfuls of grain.
5. Then with fat shine the mustaches of grave men, Liberators of chattel-burdened camels found in the midst of fighting.
6. My comrades can parry well, their blows are not feints.
How many have already lost their heads through their deeds!
7. They consult not old women, nor are they engaged in selling butter;
They are not men who talk only of satisfying carnal passion.
8. O Lord! O Thou who causest plants to grow also for Druses!
Take not the silver to thyself, leaving the world nothing but worthless copper.
9. How many a calumny, causing pain when treasured up in the breast,
Will vanish, and yet it dwelt in the heart as if it were pure truth.

The reciter was Ġwâd al-ĠĠni.

Verse 1. A short pipe, sebîl, often breaks at the elbow. If the peddler has no pipes for sale, the smoker provides for himself. The broken mouthpiece is replaced by a small thin bone which he fixes into the remnant of the pipe, tying it with leather and sewing it firmly together to prevent the smoke from escaping. A pipe thus repaired is called bûz. But the same name is given to the pipe bowl, while the small bone held in the mouth is called ʿazm, or bizz, or bezz. 2. ʿAz̤m al-bûz is the bone piece held in the mouth. Al-mambûz is a woman broad in the hips and shoulders and with a slender waist, umm ar-rdûf w-al-ktûf šetâjâha mambûzât. 4. Muṣlâḥ is a conscientious herdsman whose flock does not suffer from hunger, therefore šât muṣlâḥen signifies a fat sheep. ʿAtel is a poetical expression for a large kettle, or židr. Markûz, placed, because a kettle is placed on three stones over the fire. Habb al-leķejmi is the dish of ʿejš prepared from grains of wheat; the eater takes small bits, loķm, in his fingers and wraps it around small pieces of meat. 6. Hûz means a jest, a feint in dueling. 7. Kûz is a pear-shaped earthen vessel, used for measuring butter. The men who sell butter are misers. The butter should be consumed in the tent.

Hmâr abu 'Awwâd knew the first two verses. According to him, the second one runs as follows:

aladd w-aḥla min naba kill mambûz
'azmen towli jetred na'âse.

More pleasant and sweeter than the word sent by a full-hipped maid
Is the little bone which pleasantly repels slumber.

Tumbac, Nicotiana persica, Lindl., is smoked in a water pipe by certain chiefs only. The common Rwala think that tumbac is injurious to the health and also stupefies the powers of observation. Often have I heard the verses:

Jâ šâreb at-tumbâk šârebk lâ tâl ajjâk w-ajji wâḥeden ḥâl dûneh.

O thou who smokest tumbac! if thou smokest long, Woe to thee and woe to me, for there is one who is drawing near.

Thus spoke a woman of the 'Aḡmân tribe, who camp on the Persian Gulf, to her husband, who could not, even at night-time, part with his water pipe, narkîle. Angered by this habit, she reminded him by that verse that she might find some one to take the place of the husband who loved nothing but his tumbac. No sooner had the Bedouin heard these words, than he threw the water pipe on the ground, seized his saber, and asked the woman to explain the verse. She hesitated at first, but, realizing that the husband was greatly excited, she said:

Šarrâbt at-tumbâk ma'hom fuḏa bâl
elja tâl šâreb wâḥeden jeḡašrûneh.

Those who smoke tumbac have a big heart,
If one smokes too much, he must be warned.

The man pondered over her words, became calmer, and promised not to smoke as much as before.

The Rwala add to the last verse :

Jistâhel at-tumbâk mitl eben haddâl alli jaşurreh bimtâni redûneh.

He cannot live without tumbac, like Eben Haddâl,
Who ties it even into the folds of his sleeves.

Fahad eben Haddâl, the head chief of the 'Amârât, who camp on both sides of the middle Euphrates, like many other chiefs carried his water pipe on his camel even when migrating or on long marches. During the short halts, when waiting for the pack camels to come up, he would pour water into the pipe from a small pouch, put some moistened and crushed tumbac in the bowl, lay a red coal on top of it, and smoke. Such smokers usually have the tumbac tied in the lappets of their long shirt sleeves. An inveterate smoker of tumbac is generally punished with asthma.

WEAPONS

In every camp there are men employed in hunting. The duty of some of them is to supply the chief with meat for a strictly fixed sum. Such men always carry an old gun and ammunition with them. The ammunition belt, medhar, is made of stout leather, sêr, to which two leather straps, ġnâd, are sewn behind; passing over the shoulders like suspenders, they are crossed over the breast and hooked by two iron clasps, bzîm, to the belt in front. To each suspender, ġenâd, two burnished copper tubes, teţârîf, for powder are fastened. On the right of the belt the scabbard, ġwa', of a dagger, şibriġje, with an ornamented grip, nşâb, is sewn; here also is tied a pouch, mahrat, containing lead bullets, small shot, raşş, and caps, kubşûn. A hunter who does not carry his powder in the copper tubes, keeps it behind his belt in a small horn, karn ad-dahîr, made of zinc or brass. Fastened to the belt with a long thin chain or leather cord is a large clasp knife, hawşa, used in cutting the throat of the captured game, so that the blood may flow out. The rifles used by the hunters have caps and even obsolete flint locks.

For fighting, the Rwala have rifles of aş-şam', aş-şêhâni, and Mauser makes. Among the common Bedouins before the World War the şam', an old English military gun, was the most popular. A genuine one cost 40 to 45 meğîdijjât ($36-$40.50) and was imported chiefly from Egypt; an imitation, tuğğâ-rijje, which came from India, sold for 28 to 30 meğîdijjât ($25.20-$29). The şêhâni is a Turkish military rifle, a Martini; the umm sunki kind of şêhâni could be bought for 50-60 meğîdijjât ($45-$54), the umm kufl variety for 40-50 meğîdijjât ($36-$45). All modern rifles are called Mausers by the Bedouins. Breechloaders are not liked by the Rwala and the rifles fitted with breechblocks, ummu-s-şba, are less sought after than those without. The original Mausers, especially the Mannlichers, cost 50-60 meğîdijjât ($45-$54); the imitations, tuğğâri, were sold for as much as 20 meğîdijjât ($18) less. All arms were brought from the seaports of Jidda or al-Kwejt. During my stay with Prince an-Nûri he was visited by six trade caravans with war munitions. One of the caravans numbered 210 camels carrying more than a thousand rifles with many thousand rounds of cartridges as well as much lead, gunpowder, and many caps. In the camp of every tribe an expert mechanic may be found, who can repair guns and manufacture cartridges.

From time to time both the sons and negroes of the chiefs practice shooting. Their target, nîşân, generally is a black stone, a stick with a kerchief tied to it, or an old piece of clothing. The best marksman is rewarded by the chief with the head of the first camel he slaughters. Ramje (pl., rami) signifies a report, a shot. "Bârûdi 'araft ramîha" means "I know the reports of my rifle; "w-allâh ramîha zên," "she shoots well." A binduk is a bârûd rifle with a flintlock or caps and is always feminine.

*Ma' binduken lafzât fammiha jeşebni
laha 'ala haṭwa-l-muğannah marâmi.*

A rifle, the reports of whose mouth help me to reach my aim
And whose shots are destined for many a feathered one.

The words for bullet are talâti, rbâ'i, ḥmâsi, stâti — the last being of the largest caliber. Şêşhâne, or şêşhân, are old rifles whose barrels are five or six-angled on the inside. If the barrel is round, or at least smooth, it is called ḥamra. Bindukijje are men armed with binduk rifles.

Of the ancient weapons the spear, sword, saber, and dagger still survive. The spear, rumḥ, consists of a steel or iron blade sharpened on both edges and a wooden shaft, ûd. The blade is either broad, in which case it is called šalfa, or narrow, harba. The šalfa either is brought from Persia, ʿaġamiyye, in which case it costs 2 or 3 meġġidijjât (\$1.80-\$2.70), or is a common one made by a blacksmith from iron for half a meġġidijje (45 cents). The harba, manufactured chiefly in the town of ad-Dejr on the right bank of the Euphrates, is also called ʿarejnijje and sells for a quarter to a half meġġidijje ($22\frac{1}{2}$ –45 cents). The sharpened edge of the šalfa or harba is called ʿasla; the lower end driven into the wooden shaft, ġibb. For the shaft, ûd, either a thin but strong piece of wood, ʿerċ, or a thick piece, šâċri, is used; shafts are also made from a hollow bamboo-reed, kšuba, costing generally 1 meġġidijje (90 cents). The lower end of the shaft is provided with an iron point, kunġâr, so that the spear can be stuck in the ground. Sometimes the spear is ornamented with ostrich feathers or thin chains fastened to the ġibb.

The sword, nemeša, is either a morrebi, with three long grooves, costing 2-40 meġġidijjât ($1.80-$36); a šentijân, very flexible, costing 2-10 meġġidijjât ($1.80-$9); or a hsêniyye, with a single long groove, also costing 2-10 meġġidijjât.

The sabers, sejf, are as follows: dâbân, 5-10 meġġidijjât ($4.50-$9); hendi, made of black steel, 40-150 meġġidijjât ($36-$135); aġami, of gray steel, 5-40 meġġidijjât ($4.50-$36); or the ġawhar, made of cast steel from Ĥorâsân, 150 meġġidijjât ($135). The grip, kuma, of the sword or saber often extends up to the šubbâk guard, where the blade begins, and is richly ornamented with gold and silver. The scabbard, ġefîr, is provided with two metal rings, hwâmel, to which the cord used in hanging up the sword or saber is fastened.

The dagger is either short and narrow, šibriyye, or broad and long, kdejmi, or broad and short, hanġar. It costs as much as 3 meġġidijjât ($2.70), but if the handle is ornamented with gold chains and precious stones it may cost 50 meġġidijjât ($45) and even more.

Spears are carried mainly by the poorer Bedouins, the sword and saber only by the more important men; but every one is in possession of firearms, be it a revolver or a rifle.

The revolver, redâni, is either the old heavy kind, karadâr, which was formerly used by the Montenegrins and is sold for 12 to 14 meġġidijjât ($10.80-$12.60), or the Mauser, either of the sântetên or enklêsi variety. The original sântetên, from

St. Etienne, cost 20-22 meğîdijjât ($18-$19.80); its nickel imitation, manufactured in Egypt and al-Başra, sold for 4-15 meğîdijjât ($3.60-$13.50).

CARE OF THE PERSON

To cleanliness the Rwala pay but scant attention. Water must not be wasted, as there is hardly enough for drinking and cooking. In a sand desert they rub their hands and faces with clean dry sand. The clothes are washed and a bath is taken only when they camp near a large rain pond. The youths make their ablutions in the day time, the girls in the evening. The clothes are washed, as a rule, by a negro or a Şlejb woman, the mistress of the tent and her daughters looking on disinterestedly, scratching themselves all the while, for it never occurs to them to rid themselves of their lice or to cleanse their dresses thoroughly. Once in a while, perhaps, a wife will delouse her husband, tefli brâseh, a sister her brother or sweetheart, a mother her children, and women other women. Soap is kept only by the chiefs for their guests. For themselves they gather šnân, drying, powdering, and then using it in washing. I brought European soap to some women, but instead of washing themselves with it, they rubbed it dry all over their hands and body for the sake of its pleasant odor.

The tribes and even the clans of the Rwala differ not only in their dialect, but also in their dress. All Rwala wear the same dress, but of different colors, cut, and ornament. If a Rwejli sights a troop of riders in the distance, he can tell at once whether they are Rwala and of what clan. He knows this from their saddles and decorations on their saddlebags; the color of their kerchiefs, mantles, boots; the fashion in which they are dressed; their style of sitting in the saddle, etc. He can distinguish from afar a Freği from a Kwêçbi, and these from a Mur'azi. Still greater are the dissimilarities between the Rwala and the Sba'a or Şkûr. A stranger needs months in which to learn the differences in the dress of the various 'Aneze tribes — and years before he is able to distinguish the members of the different clans of the same tribe.

CHAPTER VII

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS

It is the duty of every Rwejli capable of procreation to marry. This duty is laid upon him by his connection with his kinsmen. The more numerous these are, the more power and influence they possess. The individual who refused to defend the rights of his kin would be expelled, and whoever deliberately declined to multiply its defenders would meet the same fate. Without his kin, ahl, the Bedouin would be the most wretched of beings.

To marriage the Rwejli is led by mutual inclination or love. A boy of twelve has a liking for a girl of the same age, and it is generally recognized; no one objects. It is said: "Love comes from Allâh, al-mhabbe min allâh." The boy calls on his beloved in her tent, talks with her there, helps with the work, and the parents recollect the time of their first love. An older boy may join his sweetheart where and whenever he wishes to. He helps her water the camels, draw the water, strike and pitch the tent; he attends her on the march, and pays her a visit in the evening. Usually they meet in a tent that is either vacant or little visited. The Šarârât women whose husbands are serving as herdsmen or who are widowed gladly lend their small tents, ḥarâbîš, for the lovers' meetings. There in the cold seasons of the year they sit all night by the fire, parting only when the morning star makes its appearance. In the warm season, especially when camping in the Nefûd, the lovers sit down on a sand drift in the shade of a tall raza bush to talk of everything and nothing. Their love they declare to each other in these words:

"Thou art the slumber of mine eyes, enti nowm 'ajni; thou art my desire, ent murâdi; thou art my food and drink, enti akli w-širbi; thou art my creed, ent dîni," and so on.

The enamored Rwejli likes to say: "I wish to fast and pray, but only in honor of those with loosened hair; in honor of Allâh's countenance I shall not pray; ana-sûm w-şelli lnâ-kezât al-ačârîš w-illa lwağh allâh mâni mşalli." Or: "I will not pray until I get her who warms me in her broad sleeves; then I will pray; mâni mṣalli lawlaḥ ḥaṣṣ li zâfi ar-rdân ṣallejt."

LIMITATIONS ON THE CHOICE OF A WIFE

In the choice of a wife the Rwejli is considerably limited. He must not marry the divorced wife of his father nor her daughter, not even if she was begotten by another man. He is not allowed to marry the divorced wife of his son or his son's widow, the mother of his wife, the daughter of his brother or sister. Neither may he marry his foster sister. No member of the Eben Ša'lân kin will take to wife a daughter of the Ḥwêtât or Beni 'Aṭijje tribes nor allow his daughters to marry any of them. Neither the Ḥwêtât nor Beni 'Aṭijje are by birth equal to the Eben Ša'lân, because they paid, as late as the first half of the nineteenth century, a tax for protection, ḥwa, to the despised Šarârât tribe and camped with them as their kuṣara, or protected neighbors.

No Rwejli dares marry a member of the Šlejḥ, al-Ḥawâzem, al-Fhejġât, Šarârât, or 'Âzem tribes. All these are also called Htejm. They have their chiefs and their social organization, they live in tents and breed camels just like the other Bedouins, and yet they are not held in esteem. The reason is that they pay a tax for protection, ḥwa; that they are neither able to protect themselves nor gain full independence. Being thus compelled to buy the protection of the more vigorous tribes, they are not allowed to enter into blood relationship with their protectors. They are ḥwân, they pay ḥwa — and their sons will pay too. Their countenance, or honor, is as white as that of the Rwala, but they are not held in the same esteem. They do not live with the Bedouins as strangers, but as neighbors, kuṣara. If they serve them, they serve them as fedawijje, free servants, which is not considered a disgrace because members of large Bedouin tribes also hire themselves as fedawijje to the more powerful chiefs.

A Rwejli cannot marry the daughter of a blacksmith, ṣâne (pl., ṣunnâ) or other mechanic who camps with the Rwala or lives in their settlements. It is said of the ṣunnâ, that they are no aṣîlîn — that is, that they have no recognized genealogy — and even that nothing is known about their true descent, as they marry newcomers from various towns, settlements, and tribes regardless of whether they are autonomous, free, dependent, or slaves.

Marriages with slaves are also forbidden. A man marrying a slave would be killed by his kin, ahl. No one dares defile the blood of his kin.

Moreover there are inequalities even among the free Arab tribes. All those belonging to the 'Aneze group consider themselves aristocrats, hold the other tribes in contempt, and dislike forming matrimonial bonds with them. The children born of such wedlock often hear these ironical remarks:

"Thou wilt come to nothing, for thou art only half a Rwejli; blood will not mix well with blood; thou wilt resemble thy mother's kin," etc.

Rights of the Eben al-'Amm

The children of parents descended from the respectable old 'Aneze families are the best. Yet even here the bridegroom is not entirely free in choosing a wife, for according to the ancient custom every girl is to wed the nearest young relative whom it is permissible to marry, eben al-'amm. This is, generally, a son of her father's cousin; should this cousin have no sons or if the grandfather had no brothers, the girl falls to the nearest kinsman descended from the great-grandfather's brother. The eben al-'amm occasionally claims the girl, jehaġġerha, exclusively for himself, but, even if he does not, the girl cannot marry without his consent, for it is said: "No one but the nearest kinsman can tie or untie her, 'okdha w-hallha bjad eben 'ammiha (sic!)." Only when her father wants to marry again and gives her in exchange for his new wife, jebaddelha lnafsek, is the eben al-'amm's claim null and void. On the other hand, if the girl refuses to be wedded to her eben al-'amm, he may kill her without becoming liable for compensation.

If the eben al-'amm knows that the girl will not hear of him, being already in love with someone else, he forbids the marriage and the girl grows old.

If the father of the girl claimed by her eben al-'amm dies and the girl loves another, she goes immediately after the father's death to the relative who claims her exclusively for himself, called in this case haġġir, and asks: "My father has passed away; I want thee to release my neck; I want thee to release me in return for my father, who has passed away; ana abûj râḥ abrik teğûz min rukubti abrik tedaššerni 'awâz abûj râḥ." The ḥağğîr is expected to take pity on her and allow her freely to choose a husband for herself, but nobody can compel him to do so.

In case of his refusal there is nothing left for the girl but to elope. She flees with her youth to some distant tribe; there they put themselves under the protection of a powerful chief, jinḥâšûn jamm al-'arab jetazabbenûnḥom. They can then marry and live as man and wife in the same tent but are always threatened with the revenge of the eben al-'amm. An elopement is punished in the same way as murder, and the thirst for revenge must be satisfied.

'Ağğ al-Msêḥi was in love with a Rwala girl and wanted to marry her. To this her eben al-'amm would not consent. After three years of hopeless love, mutahâwîn ḥw w-ijjâha talât sinîn, 'Ağğ fled with his sweetheart to the Ahl aš-Šemâl, tribes camping in the neighborhood of the Ḥawrân. As soon as the news spread next morning that the lovers had escaped, innahom minḥâšîn, the eben al-'amm with his kinsfolk mounted their camels and went in pursuit of the lovers, ṭalab. But 'Ağğ reached his destination, was given a tent, and was united to the girl in marriage. His kinsfolk offered the pursuing relative a ransom, but the latter steadily refused. Leaving his tent two months afterwards, he went in search of 'Ağğ, whom he found and killed with his young bride. Returning home, he demanded in the name of his kin from the kin of 'Ağğ the blood money for seven murdered men, because the murder of an eloped woman, šemâṭa, is valued at that of seven men. Her lover should not have eloped with her, but, having done so, he should have protected her better, knowing the danger with which she was threatened.

If the eben al-'amm kills the man who has eloped with the girl, he pays only half of the blood money, as the eloper was himself the cause of his own death.

Dibân, the white slave of Meğwel's family, fell in love with a Rwala girl, who returned his affection. Both knew that they could never belong to each other, for a slave, though white, dares not marry even the poorest Rwala woman. So they decided to escape to some settled country and to live in one of the villages there. But they were pursued and the girl was killed by her own brother.

A single Rwejli of the 'Abdelle clan eloped with a white slave girl. The search for him proved useless — he disappeared without leaving a trace. Should he ever return, he would be killed by his own kin.

When a youth wishes to marry a certain girl, he confides his secret to some older friend, begging him to find out from his father whether he agrees to his wooing or not. It is considered bad form, ʿajb, for the son to ask his father for this permission. The father, who as a rule knows all the time which girl the son has chosen, says after hearing the news: "If it is Allâh's will, it will be good. Be it blessed. This day is already gone; to-morrow we shall realize his wish; al-jowm fât bukra nakzi ʿaradeh." Next day the father goes with some prominent man to the father of the girl. They sit down, exchange greetings, talk about various matters, and finally say:

"We want thy daughter X for the youth Y, nabri minak bintak al-flâne lil-walad al-flâni."

"All right. Salt cannot be increased except with salt again. Tajjeb mâ-zûd al-meleh illa-l-melâh. I am satisfied. Let them beget children together. Speak with her cousin, eben ʿammha."

Then they go to the eben al-ʿamm, sit down, salute, and converse a while. The youth's father rises, beckons to the cousin or the second cousin, leaves the tent with him, and they squat down at some distance from the tent, where nobody can hear them.

"We give thee good evening, numassîk bel-hejr."

"Oh, good evening to you both! jâ masa-l-hejr. You surely did not come to me without desiring something, mâ-ntom bela jâ ʿaraz."

"Yes, we come with a certain desire; na'am ġâjîn bel-ʿaraz."

"Then speak! ehreġû."

"May Allâh add to thy days! We want her for him, and what thou desirest we hold ready for thee."

Now if the eben al-ʿamm agrees to the girl's marriage, he says: "I want this and that." If he does not, he answers: "She is destined to be my wife. I will not give her." But if he has no intention of marrying the girl himself and wants no compensation, he ends the parley with the words: "I wish you well."

The dowry or price demanded for the bride is expressed by the word siġâk. This means only the value put on the bride or on a mare. The siĵâk is not strictly stipulated. If the eben al-amm asks much, much must be given him. It is always to him that the siĵâk is delivered. Only when he dies and there is nobody else to care for the girl, the whole siĵâk goes to her father as soon as the wedding is over, a'ras alejha. The usual compensation for the bride is one or two she-camels and the first mare captured after the wedding. One she-camel always goes to the mother of the girl for having nursed the bride. This animal is called ba'îr al-kûc, elbow camel, because the mother used to lean her elbow against the ground when suckling her daughter.

LOVE DITTIES AND POEMS

The delights and sorrows of love are expressed by the Rwejli in short ditties known as heġejni or tatwîh. Some compose their own, others borrow and adorn them with their own name, as if they were the authors. It is said in this respect:

Heġejnijjeten kalladawha-l-akâl kalladawha-l-brijjesem w-rîš an-na'am.

The heġejni ditty they adorned with a head rope,
Adorned it with silk and ostrich feathers.

When a warrior pardons his enemy, he lays his head rope, akâl, around the latter's neck as a sign that this particular enemy belongs to him with all he may possess, and then he throws himself into the fight again. The composer of a heġejni song adorns it not merely with his head rope but with silk and ostrich feathers as well, so that nobody can steal it from him — but all this without avail. There are many who like to appropriate a pretty song, although it does not belong to them.

In Praise of Lovers; The Delights of Love

*Jâ ammi wa' bint al-ṛarâwi
tabrîni w-ana-rîdaha
w-elja taḥaṭṭat bel-ḥazâwi aḥadat klejbi bîdaha.*

Oh, uncle, Ṛarâwi's daughter
Wants me and I long for her;

When she goes by in her fringed kerchief,
She takes my little heart away in her hand.

Al-Rarâwi was a Rwejli whose daughter was famous for her beauty. Ḥazâwi means the long elaborately twisted fringe of a silk kerchief, maḵrûna, with which a belle covers her forehead and face.

*Hâdi ṭwâref ʿarab ḥelli
jâ marḥaba jâ ʿarab šîḥa ʿadrûb aḥûha jîġîb aš-šowl čam râʿijen ʿawwadeh šîḥa jâ ḥdejdeha bwêrež al-hemlûl min mizneten bass laha zîḥa.*

These are the borders of the Arab camp where dwells
Hail, O Arabs, with whom Šîḥa camps! [my darling.
ʿAdrûb, her brother, brings sumpter camels as booty.
Oh! how many a herdsman has he taught to utter the warning cry!

Her cheeks are like flashes of lightning from a rainy belt,
From a cloud which appears full of milk.

Aḥûha is the lover of Šîḥa. Jîġîb aš-šowl means "brings, or leads, in from a raid camels able to carry heavy burdens." When the tents are being moved, all supplies are loaded by the women, who therefore like strong camels. The herdsman is not in a position to defend his herd; he merely gives the alarm cry. Hemlûl is a long, narrow streak or belt of rain coming from a cloud where there is constant lightning which gives the cloud the appearance of being filled with milk. The milky white luster issuing from it reminds the poet of the white, rosy cheeks of Šîḥa.

*Jâ wenneti wennet aš-šenne rabâbaten bjad laʿâbi rîḥat ʿašîri leha benne
jâ ʿambaren bjad ġallâbi.*

My sigh is like the sigh of the hide stretched
On a rebec in the hand of the player.
The fragrance of my beloved is as pleasant
As amber in the hand of the hawker.

Senne is the piece of an old, thoroughly dried hide which is stretched over the round hole of the violin-like rebec. It forms the sounding space and vibrates whenever the bow is drawn across the strings. Rîha means, properly, a vile and benna a pleasant odor. Ġallâb is a merchant who does not sell for money but furnishes the women with perfumes and ornaments, taking from them camel's hair, traveling bags, mezâwed, fancy saddle bands, sefâjef, etc., in exchange.

Jâ hêh jâ râceb al-ʿatli sallem w-rudd as-salâmâti sallem ʿala-lli nwa žatli kul lâ lâ hajjen w-lâ mâti.

Hail to thee, who ridest a bony camel,
 Salute and the salutes return!
 Greet him who has resolved to destroy me,
 And say I neither live nor am dead.

ʿAtli (or ʿatel) is a bony camel. Rudd as-salâmâti, return the salutes—the visitor first salutes all present and is in turn saluted by each of them separately; he again answers every salute. To the ditty just cited the Rwala add the following:

w-tnejwâteh tekel šatli
w-nhejdeh bêž al-ḥamâmâti.

Her teeth are like grains of rice
 And her breasts round as the eggs of a pigeon.

Judged by its content this verse does not belong to the ditty; it may be a fragment of another with a similar rhyme.

Šatli is the same as ḥabb ar-ruzz or ḥabb at-tummen, grains of rice or of tummen.

Al-wağd wağdi ʿala dbajje
wağd al-abkâr al-maʿâtiši dâğen w-lâğen ʿala-t-ṭajje
w-al-maʿ baʿiden w-lâ nîši jâ krûnaha jâten al-mijje mitl as-sefâjef ʿala-l-ğîši jâ nhûdaha bêž kudrijje tazfi ʿalejh al-ʿacârîši.

Young she-camels, especially when fully grown, suffer much from thirst. Niš is the name given to a person drawing water, jenûsheh. Kudriyje is a bird resembling the kaṭa, sand grouse, except that it is slightly smaller and has black feathers in its wings.

O Allâh, who for the falcon createst his feathers
So that he can fly to the bright heavens at will!
Alas, my eyes, struck with blindness,
Have poured their cool waters over my beloved.
Slender is her waist, her neck like that of a glass vessel,
And her hips, Allâh be thanked, how shapely!
When she walks towards thee, she steps like the daughter of the kbejše mare,
And sweet she appears, when her step comes near.

*Jâ mhejmed w-al-bala' ġâni jâ 'ašîri ċejf asawwi beh nâhaz al-makrûn w-arwâni bêzat al-kudri ħadar ġejbeh kđalaha šertân dehbâni manwet al-'ašân jadli beh
'ajûnaha jâ mowġ rudrâni šâfijen tâbat mešârîbeh nehdaha finġân diwâni sâjer al-'aġemi lâ wâlî beh.*

O Mḥejmed, what torment has come upon me!
 O sweetheart, what must I do?
 She opened her hooked dress revealing to me
 A kudri's egg below the slit at her breast.
 She has plaits on her temples like cords of gold,
 A thirsty one may wish to let down the bucket with them.
 Her eyes are like the waves of a pure pool,
 Where those fare well who drink from it;
 Her breast, a coffee cup like one used in the chamber of the lord,
 A Persian jeweler could not make such a one.

The lover complains both to his comrade, Mḥejmed, and to his sweetheart, to whom, captivated by her charms, he has promised to perform a dangerous deed.

Towb maḵrûn is the woman's garb when closed below the neck. Nâhaz al-maḵrûn means to lift and open this part of the woman's garment on the breast. Ġejb is the slit from below the neck down to the stomach. Farther down the garment is sewn together in the same way as our shirt. The slit of the woman's garb has only one buckle, immediately under the neck. When the garment is lifted, the slit widens, and the woman can nurse her child. Ṛadîr is a pool of water in a valley channel. Dîwân is a drawing-room of the rich, where coffee is presented in cups often artistically made and expensive.

Jâ temânen 'ala şâḥebi low jabî' miṭl hal-barad bilejâli-r-rabî'.

Oh, if the eight teeth could be sold to the lover!
 They are like the dew crystals of the frosty spring nights.

Barad signifies crystals of frozen dew.

*Jâ razâl ad-daḥal
 jâ ḥazîb al-ejdejn ja'lam allâh
 ju'azzi 'an al-wâlidejn.*

O thou gazelle from the Nefûd!
 O thou with the dyed hands!
 Allâh knows that a glance from thee
 Will comfort me in the loss of my parents.

Dahal stands for the Nefûd, the numerous funnel-shaped hollows of which resemble dahal, or dolines, and are favorite resorts of the gazelles. The maiden has dyed her finger nails and palms yellow with henna.

Jâ razâlen jeğurr at-towb
w-ad-dwâjeb raššenneh rîžeh jâ 'asal jadowb
w-hani min riwi minneh.

Oh, that gazelle! she trails her dress after her,
 While her tresses strike against her.
 Her spittle is like melted honey itself;
 Blessed is he who may drink of it.

Jâ šowk 'atni hebbetak malkûš raşnen twašša' leh harîr jâ-bu tamânen mitl darr al-bûš
w-al-hadd beh rîh ad-darîr.

Darling, give me a kiss, one as light
 As when silk clings to the twig that catches it.
 Thou hast eight teeth as white as the camel's fresh milk,
 And thy cheeks give forth a fragrance like darîr.

Malkûš signifies a thing which, although but slightly connected with another, cannot be easily parted from it.

Az-zejn low hw wara-l-bâbi lâzem en 'ajûni jerâ'enneh
'aslûğten haşw at-tijâbi
w-an-nhûd lat-towb šâlenneh jâ mâ hala naz' at-tijâbi
w-erkâj senni 'ala senneh.

On a beauty, even if she stands behind the door,
 My eyes must dwell.
 Slender she is and yet fills her dress,
 And her breasts lift up her garment.
 Oh how sweet she is while undressing
 And while my teeth are pressed against hers!

'Aslûğ is a woman neither thin nor too fleshy, but of slender waist, tall and yet with broad hips which stand out under her dress, haşw at-tijâbi.

Harrân jâ lâbes al-mezwi lâ jâ ba'ad man nazel ġubba ħalaft mâ kiltaha hazwi jista'hel al-ħozen w-al-ħubba.

Harrân, dressed in a light black mantle,
Oh, that he who has dwelt in Ġubba may live long!
I vowed earnestly
That he deserved both my bosom and kiss.

The loving maiden promises to reward Harrân, who has returned from a lucky raid to the vicinity of Ġubba, a settlement in the Nefûd.

*Aħîl dîrat mselli
w-en ħâl dûnaha 'asâma
jâ zâmer al-baṭn jâ-lli mâ tdûk ta'âmen w-lâ ma' jâ 'ejâl 'elwa halen li elja ġâ nahâr az-zahâma bârûdahom mustaġilli jaḳsom metîn al-'azâma
jâ niġmet as-ṣubḥ jâ-lli hâzaw 'alejč an-nišâma.*

I wish to see the land of Mselli,
Even if scorched deserts divide it from me.
O thou with a sunk-in belly, who Tastest neither food nor water!
O sons of 'Elwa, of my kin!
And if the day of horror comes,
Their gunpowder will be famed far and wide,
For it breaks the bones of the spines.
O morning star! O thou
About whom the flower of the youth gathers!

The lover was dispatched by his chief to look for pasture in the direction of brilliant lightning. On clear nights lightning can be observed even on the distant horizon. The old men among the Bedouins then judge whether it lightens from rain clouds or not and in what territory. "Where do you place this lightning? wên thîl hal-barž." "I place it, I judge that it lightens, aħîleh (or aħajjeleh), there or there." If they wish to be perfectly sure, the chief sends out men mounted on camels to examine the region in question. This is done especially in years of little rain, when both the Bedouins and their herds are threatened with want. The lover approaches the territory of Mselli of the 'Elwa kin, to whom he is related. Mselli means, according to 'Awde al-Kwêčbi, a sweetheart; according to Ĥmâr, a region in Neğd. 'Asâma is a sunburnt desert without pasture or water. The lover, desiring to be near the girl of his heart, must cross this desert. Niğmet aš-šubḥ, the morning star, signifies in this verse the beloved girl, excelling all others in beauty. In the moment of greatest danger she throws herself against the enemy. Then the flower of the youth gathers around her and, encouraged by her, beats back the enemy.

*Al-wağd wağdi 'ala ḥurma low hi 'ağûzen w-mağnûna
w-al-faḥaḍ minha čennaha-š-šelfa
w-tetajjer al-kalb be'ajûnah.*

Alas, for my grief for a woman!
Even if old and foolish
And with a thigh as lean as a spear blade,
Yet she sets the heart in motion with her eyes.

1. *Jâ râčeben malḥa' tebûğ ašhab al-âl
ejza w-lâ 'alejha radîfen maḥanha*
2. *awwal nahârha bass mašjen w-dowmâl
w-tâli nhârha tajjer ar-rabḥ 'anha*
3. *w-eḳṭa' leha min râjet al-lowz miḥğân
w-estadnîha bin-nâjfa min šaranha*
4. telfi-l-bejt rab'ateh čannaha-l-ğâl low ġît bejt aš-šwejhbi fekk 'anha
5. *fkûk rižak ṭal'at aš-šams finğâl
w-ḥâjel temân ijâm jenda' šahanha*
6. čejf riğlak jâ dera' kill mišwâl elja târ 'an serd as-sebâja jaḳkanha
7. jâ lejt šarrak jinžesem bën al-endâl jâ rabb riğl šwêḥbi 'ef 'anha.

1. O thou who ridest a black she-camel which examines the gray quivering air
On the march and is worn out by no second rider,
2. In the first hours of the day keep her at an easy pace,
But at its end let pebbles and sand fly from her.

3. Cut for her a miḥġân stick from the best almond tree
And tickle her with the longer prong under the tail.
4. A tent thou wilt reach, whose men's compartment resembles an escarpment,
And before the tent of my beloved put off the saddle.
5. A cup of coffee thou wilt get to loosen thy spittle,
And for eight days the platter will be moist with fat.
6. How does thy leg fare, O shield of all animals that raise their tails?
When from the group of raiders he emerged all were afraid.
7. Would that the evil thou hast met had been destined for cowards!
O Lord! take pity on my darling's leg.

A girl of the Durmân clan had a lover whose leg was shattered by a bullet during a raid. They brought him to the tent of Eben Haddâl, the head chief of the 'Amârât, where he was attended to. His sweetheart composed and sent him this poem. The reciter was Trâd eben Saṭṭâm.

Verse 1. Buġ lena hal-bilâd means "examine, scout this country for us." Âl is the quivering of the air on a hot day. The nearer the ground, the stronger the vibration. Grasses and bushes seem to be in motion and assume large dimensions. It is impossible to distinguish a rider from a bush at a distance of two kilometers. 2. A good female riding camel is at her best speed before and after sunset. The rider should not hold her back. Rabḥ are the small stones scattered by the hoofs of a galloping camel. 3. To make the she-camel go at the utmost speed the rider thrusts the two-pronged head of his stick under its tail, jistadniha. Some riders even dig the prong in deeper than necessary, making the poor beast run madly. 4. The tent is pitched for male visitors only, whether strangers or natives. Ġâl is a long steep scarp by which a high plateau falls off to lower level country. 5. Fakk ar-rîž is the breakfast; the real meal is the supper. With Eben Haddâl a guest may stay not three but even eight days if he wishes, and during all this time he gets meat from fat, sterile she-camels. The ṣahn — a large flat pan — is always moist with the fat. 6. Mišwâl is a fast mare or she-camel which raises her tail high when galloping.

*Mâ-rîd ana nâzel aṭ-taffa
w-lâ-lli saken 'aklat al-wâdi lâ' mâ ḥala mḵâbel aṣ-ṣaffa
w-al-ṛašmeri ḵarm al-awlâdi.*

I desire not him who camps on the plateau,
Nor him who lives at the well down the valley.
How sweet is he whose tent is pitched on the opposite side,
For he is the subduer, the flower of all youth.

It is the maiden's wish that her lover may pitch his tent on the other side of the valley. Taffa is a plateau intersected by a deep valley. In a territory where no hostile attack is feared the clansmen pitch their tents where it suits them. Many choose the plateau itself, where their camels can graze freely; others prefer to be near water and therefore pitch their tents near the 'akla well; others again — and these are the most numerous — select some wider and more level part of the channel bank, protected against the wind and sand and where they are also safe from the herds crowding down to the water. The tents are generally pitched in two rows separated by the channel. The sides of these tents as a rule are closed towards the wind, so that it is impossible to look from one into the other. But the women like to lift the canvas in the back of the tent and to peep through the chink at what is going on in the tents on the opposite side. To the last song they add:

*Alli delûleh leha haffa
min fowḵeha-l-ḥurġ w-šdâdi jâ mâ ḥala lam'at ad-daffa' ĉân al-ṛaṣi jammana bâdi.*

Whose she-riding-camel is swift as a tempest
With a bag and a saddle on her back.
Oh, how sweet is the glitter of his mantle,
When the desired one rides hither in the evening!

Haffa means a gallop as fast as a gale or tempest, an unsurpassed speed, during which the wind resounds in the ears. Hurġ is a double bag that can be thrown across the camel saddle and also a smaller bag of the same kind to be put on the horse saddle. A daffa is a heavy winter cloak. Men fond of dress buy mantles embellished between the shoulder blades with a broad ornament of glittering silver, or at least copper, threads. The hem made from these threads reaches as far down as the abdomen. Such an ornament glistens when the night is bright. Bâdi (for sâjer) is one paying an evening call; bâdi 'alejna (or musajjer 'alejna), he is coming to spend the evening with us.

Jâ-bu ḥalâḥel w-zmejjem
w-al-ḥadd barrâken jelûḥ jâ mâ ḥala' kazb al-brajjem
w-al-'omr ṣajjûreh jerûḥ.

Oh, she with rings above her ankles and a little ring
in her nostril,

Whose cheeks glisten like lightning,
Oh, how sweet to take hold of a little body belt of
For, as for life, its end is sure. [leather;

Brajjem (dimin. of barîm) is a thin belt of leather strips worn by the women on their bare bodies.

Râ'i-l-ka'ûd al-mešaddar ma' wâdi-s-sidr jinḥa' ḵum hebbini lâ te'addar
w-al-'adr mâ-ni bṭerijjah.

The rider on an unruly camel
Has turned into a valley overgrown with sidr.
Rise, kiss me, and excuse not thyself,
For an excuse I will not brook.

A lover during the march asks a kiss from his beloved, whose husband has just ridden out of sight, for his camel nibbles at every patch of good grass or woody plant. He turns into a valley overgrown with sidr trees and full of thorns. If he had to watch his unruly camel before, he must now among the sidr be even more careful and is thus prevented from watching his wife riding in the rear.

1. Jâ barḵ jâ-lli tâli al-lejl lawwâ' ṣuftak w-ana bheġat an-nâs wâ'i
2. min rūṣ 'âlen ṣummahen čedd bihen fâ' biljâl ṛurren bîz^{as} 'aġelen še'â'i

3. ḵum šidd w-erčab fi ḵaraḵ kull maṭwâḵ
w-ebʿad zôreh ʿan malâwi-drâʿi
4. hawwâḵ bawwâḵ lid-daww maddâḵ
ḥorren trawweḥ maḵ reḵârîž ḵâʿi
5. w-elja šibatteh bar-rasan hâḵ w-eltâḵ
čenn aš-šedaḵʿala ġenâbêh fâʿi
6. ar-râs râs allî semek baʿad al-ḥzâḵ
bisemekteh šâf al-leġâġe w-zâʿi
7. jâ šibeh hêžen ḥâderen baʿz ar-rijâḵ
w-melḥ aš-šefaḵʿala ġenâḥîh tâʿi
8. neheġ selem ḵwâjmeh jîtroḵ al-bâḵ
ġinḥân zâden al-ḥarîš eḥtirâʿi
9. čazîḵ zâḵ mzawwaʿen jowm jînzâḵ
ḥorren saʿaḵ biṭard min ḵabl jâʿi
10. ḵult âh min ʿelmen lefaḵ-l-ḵalb w-eltâḵ
saḵaḵ šerîč ar-rûḥ samm al-efâʿi
11. min al-jowm awmaḵ li nôbtên bel-ašbâḵ
mitl al-bedr jowm entahaz bertifâʿi.

1. O lightning flashing at the close of night!
Awake while others slept, I saw thee
2. Appearing from summits high, hard of ascent,
On clear white nights in which the rays of light quickly spread.
3. Rise, saddle and mount the obedient (camel),
And see that the shin of the foreleg rubs not against the breastbone,
4. So that she may take life and, with a stride a fathom long, hurry over the plain,
The pure-blooded beast, hastening to her night's lodging over a plain strewn with coarse sand.
5. And if thou pullest the rein, she roars and prances
As if a spook were crawling along both her flanks
6. Towards the head; then she lifts her bowed head
And, seeing what haunts her, takes to flight.
7. Oh, how like she is to the male ostrich descending through some defile,
At whose wings men have fired from the upland.
8. To save himself he flees. His legs measure fathoms,
And both wings increase the fright of the mad bird.
9. He runs like one driven or driving, when he hurries under the impetus of flight;

The pure-blooded bird knows how to trot both in defense and attack before he is able to use his reason.

10. I said, 'Ah! What a word has reached my heart, which has rebelled,

For my soul's mate has given me to drink snake poison.'

11. But since the day when she beckoned twice to me with her fingers

The full moon [of my bliss] has reached its zenith.

The poet was an unknown Šarâri; the narrator, Mas'ûd aṣ-Šbejhi, who accompanied me on my journey toward the oasis of Tejma'. The poet wakes up towards the end of the night between the twelfth and the eighteenth days of the lunar month; noticing lightning above the high hills shutting in the horizon, he asks his comrade to saddle the she-camels, and both then ride as fast as possible over the plain. The fast gait of his animal he compares to the mad gallop of a terrified ostrich and thinks of his sweetheart, who caused him much grief at first but later much gladness.

Verse 3. Zôr is the spot in the middle of the lower part of the breast, on which the kneeling camel leans against the ground. When kneeling, the shins of the forelegs touch the zôr. To "remove the zôr from the shins of the forelegs" means to induce the camel to rise and start. 4. Reḵârîž ḵâ'i are plains covered with coarse sand, where mirages may often be observed, mostly at noon. Raḵrûḵa is a plain covered with weather-worn debris; ḥamâd, a plain covered with hard gravel and much flint. 5. Šeda' means any kind of a spook; it is frequently seen by the animal alone and is supposed to be especially fond of the taste of brains. 9. Tard are the movements of attack and defense of a horse in a fight. It takes some time to train a horse to the tard, while a pure-blooded male ostrich knows it long before he can use his reason, ḵabl jâ'i. 10. Šerîč ar-rûḥ is a sweetheart. 11. The poet's soul was comforted when his beloved gave him the longed-for sign.

In Praise of a Sweetheart's Kinsmen

*Hala hala jâ 'arab farḥân jâ marḥaba bdâbel ar-rîži
w-ahl az-zêne mâ hom šerdân ḥamâjeten lil-mesâwîži*

Welcome, welcome, O Farḥān's Arabs!
Hail to her, who dries up the spittle!
For the kinsmen of my beauty take not to flight;
They are the protectors of those who drive the booty,
And, when encountering the enemy,
Discharge weapons spitting fire.

The lover welcomes and praises the relatives of his sweetheart. Hala for ahla, ahlan, jâ-hla, jâ hala. Dâbel ar-rîž is a charming beauty, with whom one immediately falls in love so passionately that the saliva of the mouth dries up as if one were in a fever. The mesâwiž are warriors driving the captured herds. As they have to prevent the animals from escaping, they are unable to defend themselves properly and could easily be killed by the pursuing enemy.

1. *Jâ râceb alli ber-redef tekel marži
azwâl rebden muğaffalen ma' az-zerâži*
2. *w-lâ hamâm mrawwehen leh al-bergi
'okb al-mežil mrawwehen binze'âži*
3. jâ resel jâ-lli lal-ma'âzib terži lâzem tsûf an-nâr mitl as-serâgi
4. jad'ik bejt beh meğâles w-hergi râ'ih mâ hâšat jammeh harâgi
5. semi maršûf al-ħadam jâ-bu margi salab 'adîli min zamîri w-mâ ği
6. *salab 'adîli salab kâbûn sergi
w-'ajni tekubb rurûb mojjen hamâgi*
7. 'alejh min râli-l-mežâmîn dergi zâfen 'ala sâken tekel 'azm 'âgi
8. alli banat bel-ķalb ķaşran w-bergi banat bešam'en lown ķaşr al-ħafâgi
9. 'adrûb aħûħa surbeteh tekel 'arği jatni-lja țarat 'ajûn al-ħarâgi
10. jâ lâjmen maķtû' mâ 'âd jarği jowm al-ħara' mâ 'âd 'endeh jidâgi.

1. O thou who ridest a she-camel whose back has almost to be climbed by a ladder, [Whose speed is] like clouds of dust in the blue air raised by startled ostriches,

2. Or like pigeons longing to roost in the castle,
Who hasten thither after the noon heat has passed.
3. O messenger! O thou who speedest to the hosts,
Thou canst not help seeing a fire like a big lamp.
4. It is a tent that calls thee, where sit and talk the visitors,
And to whose owner no one comes to collect a tax.
5. The name [of my beloved is] 'Woven from metal rings,'
O father of the 'Son for whom thou yearnest';
She it is who has stolen the fat of my heart and entrails,
6. She has stolen my fat and the soft cover from my saddle,
Making my eyes shed full basins of salt water.
7. She is dressed in clothes of costly stuff,
Which cling to her ivory calf.
8. She, who has built a manor and a castle in my heart,
Built with mortar like al-Hafâġi's castle.
9. Shame on her brother? As if his troop were lame!
Why, he still resists when the eyes of the babblers look around in flight.
10. Oh, may he who reviles him be parted from all that he longs for and
On festive days may no one accept gifts from him.

The poet was Muḥammad eben Mhelhel.

Verse 1. Zowl is the indistinct outline of a man's figure observed from afar. Azwâl rebden are the clouds of whirling dust enveloping fleeing ostriches. 2. Pigeons prefer to nest in old ruins, especially if they lie far from settled countries. After sunrise they fly to the cultivated regions for their food and drink; after noon, when the heat is most oppressive, they hide somewhere in the shade, later feed and drink again, then return about two hours before sunset at the utmost speed to their ruins, often more than thirty kilometers distant. The fast gait of a she-camel reminds the poet of a fast disappearing dust cloud whirled up by ostriches, or of flocks of pigeons hurrying to roost, murawweh. 3. A brightly blazing fire in an open tent indicates a generous host. A miser will build his tent in valleys and gullies, so that it may not occur to any one to appeal to his hospitality. 5. The girl sung of by the poet is called Der', which means a short shirt of metal rings. Instead of naming her plainly he uses a periphrasis for her name, which is dear to him, semi, the words marşûf al-ḥadam, meaning a coat of mail. Abu marġi is the father of several girls, who wishes for a son. Here a friend of the poet is meant. Mâ ġi, for mâ ġwa or mâ ġwî, means "what is in my heart." 6. Adîl is fat or flesh; adla is a fleshy, fat she-camel. Arabna mu'addelîn abâ'erhom 'âjifet aš-šahm means "our Arabs are satisfied because their camels are covered with fat." Adel has the same meaning as simen, fat; hence adla is synonymous with semîne. Smân abâ'erhom means "their camels are fat." Kâbûn serġi is a very soft cover for a horse saddle. Love has deprived him of both his fat and soft flesh to such an extent that his saddle galls him as if the thick, soft cover were not there. 7. Derġe (pl., deraġ) is a piece of cloth cut for one person. 8. Ḳaṣr al-Ḥafâġi is the name given by the Rwala to Ḳaṣr eben Aḥejzer or âl Aḥejzer, southwest of Kerbela. The better the mortar, the stronger the building. The Rwala admire the firmness with which the mortar has cemented the stones and bricks used in building the al-Ḥafâġi castle, making it impossible to demolish it. 9. The brother of the girl Der was often publicly insulted with the taunt "Adrûb, shame," but the poet defends him. The troop led by him does not limp but merely rides slowly in order to protect its comrades fleeing in fear. 10. Jowm al-ḥara is the day set apart by the Rwala for visiting, entertaining, and bringing small gifts to each other.

Meetings, Greetings, Good Wishes

Fâteri rawweġi 'an ḥamw keġzaha
'ašžeti râlije mâ-ḥmal reġzaha.

Hurry, my old she-camel, for a night's lodging from the heat of the mid-summer,
 My beloved is dear to me, I could not bear her anger.

The warrior returning from a raid in the keġz season, mid-summer, longs for his sweetheart and urges his tired animal to greater speed.

Zel ġubba zemah The rugged hill at Ġubba begins to appear mitl râs at-ṭaḥât Like the border of a dark cloud!
marḥaba jâ nwa Hail, O Nwa', jâ 'anûd al-banât. O thou wilful maiden!

The settlement of Ġubba lies in the Nefûd, lat. 28° 2' N., long. 40° 40' E. Close by rises a tall, dark, rugged hill, visible from both the north and south for a great distance. In this neighborhood the sweetheart Nwa' was camping.

Marḥaban jā-lli tûleh w-tûli suwa' jâ-lli ḥabbet fwêha burûd az-ẓuma'.

Hail to her, who is as tall as I!

The kiss of whose mouth refreshes like cool water in thirst.

Ẓuma', thirst, is a word commonly used by the Bedouins. Thirst tortures travelers. Dispersed raiders often perish of thirst; the lack of water makes both the women and children in camp lament. Often a woman with parched lips goes from tent to tent begging with dumb gestures a drink of water for her child. If a mere mouthful of even tepid water refreshes one when thirsty, how much greater the relief from a drink of cool water. A person tormented by love resembles a thirsty man.

As-salâm 'alejkom	Salutation to you!
w-ḵûlû hala'	And answer: Welcome!
jâ ferîẓen 'alejkom	You in the little camp through which
ṭarîẓ al-ṭala'.	Leads the road to my sweetheart.

The lover going to call on his sweetheart greets the small camp through which he is passing. Ferîẓ is a group of no more than ten tents.

*Elja ġît mazbûr an-nahad jâ m'ejdi sallem li 'alejh abu tamânen mġellijât,
w-al-ḵalb malkû'en 'alejh.*

Shouldst thou come to her with the full, firm bosom,
O M'ejdi! give her my greetings.
She who has eight burnished teeth
And to whom my heart clings.

*Jâ-hal al-'ajrât sîraw jâ šafâti
'an senaḥen lâ t'ûġûn al-maṭijje elja lifejtom ūweġhebi ṣallaw waṣâti
'allemau be'ulûm râ'i-l-arîċijje
'end abûha delletên mut'abâti rîf ha'll heġnen mezâhebhen ḥalijje wa' hani min ḵâzebah ġejb al-'abâti
w-enṭawa' bḥozejn mambûz aš-šaṭijje.*

Sen^c is the fast gait of the she-camels at night time. They do not graze, do not suffer from heat, and speed along at a measured pace. Râi-l-arîčijje is supposed to mean one who is well posted in all affairs and who therefore can tell truth from exaggeration. Delletên mut'abâti, two fatigued pots: in the one pot coffee is steadily boiling and from the other just as steadily poured out.

Uncle, see! three female riding camels come to us;
Rise, seek news of them!
They have come to me, and I drive away the young camels
From the depression, so that [their camels] may find their pasture untouched.

The maiden rightly guesses that the matchmakers sent by her lover have arrived and asks her uncle to find out their errand, while she takes their camels to the fresh pasture, kafr, as yet untouched by any herd. Ažahžer al-hejrân means: "I run here and there behind young camels, driving them away." Howr is a depression without an outlet, containing abundance of grass.

Welcome, welcome, thou who art dressed in a light black mantle!
Oh, mayst thou live longer than all the Singâra!

May Allâh bring thee back from the raid!
May Allâh rescue thee in the attack!

The maiden wishes her lover, who is taking part in a raid against the Singâra, all success. Mezwi is a light woollen mantle of black color shot with red. Lâ jâ ba'ad means: "mayst thou not depart." The Singâra is one of the four main tribes of the Šammar.

Jâ ḥabîbi jâ-l-ḥebbe
w-ḥelw tari an-nakâjef fowk aš'alēn mutlaḥebbe jeḡfel min zell as-sefâjef.

O darling! Oh, that kiss!
Sweet is the news of their return from the raid.
He is mounted on a broad-breasted dappled camel,
Which shies at the shadow of the gay ribbons.

Nakâjef are returning raiders. Mutlaḥebb is a camel broad of breast and bony. Sefâjef are long multicolored ribbons, hanging from the back of the saddle.

Elfen hala beš-šakra
w-elfên hala. brâ'îha en cân 'ašsâne šakra
bedmû' 'ajn ašžîha.

Welcome a thousand times, O sorrel mare!
And two thousand times, thou who ridest her!
Should the sorrel be thirsty,
I will water her with the tears of my eyes.

Jâ-hal al-'aḳla	O you who tarry by the well,
jâ-lli želî'en madâh	Which is so far a journey,
lâ te'ezlûn nafsēn	Drive no one away
ḡazat 'an hawâh.	Before he has satisfied his desire.

'Aḳla is a well in a valley or dry river bed, which must be cleaned after every heavy rain. Želî'en madâh (or ba'iden madâh) refers to a long road or journey leading to the well, Kala'na madâh (or ab'adnâh) would mean: "We moved it farther, extended the distance between it and ourselves." A man comes from afar for water to an 'aḳla, and it is a sign of cruelty to drive away such a person, nafs. Hawa'

means lust and passion of love. If the separated lovers meet at last, no one should hinder them.

Lovers' Parting; Sorrows of Separation; Pain of Love

*Jâ şwejhebi 'ajn rîmijja lâ jâ raži lâ tansâni
low 'ajjarowk al-'arab fijja
w-eşber ala-l-'ajb min şâni.*

My darling, like a white gazelle's eye,
Mayst thou, O desired one, mayst thou not forget me!
And if the Arabs revile thee for me,
Suffer the abuse for my sake.

*Hawijjeti hâberah harfûş jâ 'ajn rîmijjet al-wâdi ğaffalowha ra'jân al-bûş jâ lejtaħa-l-jowm tenşâdi jâ râsaha jâ sebîb ekrûş
w-tenassefeh aş-şakra beṭrâdi.*

My beloved — but Harfûş knows her —
Has eyes like a white gazelle in al-Wâdi,
Terrified by the shepherds of clamoring herds.
Oh, that I might catch her today!
Oh, the hair on her head, as long as curled horsehair,
Which in the fight streams along the back of the sorrel.

Al-Wâdi is the name given by the Rwala to the depression of Sirhân. Bûş is the same as tarş, herds of camels. Râs is the hair on the head. Sebîb ekrûş is the hair from the horse's tail curling naturally. Tenassefeh means a mare which, while trotting and making short abrupt jumps, lifts her tail so that its long hair streams over her back, covering even her flanks.

Jâ hajji bel-lejl lâ tasri lâ tenleğem jâ ba'ad 'ini čân enna klejbak 'alejğ ğasri bez-zow testafi ad-dîni ħannejt ana bâniğ al-kaşri kill jowm w-ahleh mużîmîni.

Dear brother mine, do not set off on a visit in the nighttime,
 Do not put on the bridle, O thou paragon of mine!
 If thy heart longs passionately for me,
 Carry away that which I owe thee in daylight.
 I bless him who has built for himself a strong house,
 For his kinsmen dwell in the same place every day.

Ḳaṣr is the name of any house built of stone or mud bricks. A desert ḳaṣr forms a square courtyard enclosed with a high wall, against which abut the dwellings of the several families. Thus the whole kin lives together. In the desert the members of one kin also usually pitch their tents together, but sometimes one or another joins another kin, so that the lovers become separated. The maiden fears lest some one attack her lover at night and asks him therefore to call on her in the day time.

*Hala hala jâ dahîlallâh jâ-lli 'elûmek te'azzîni wuddi bikom mâr ḥalk allâh čatrat 'elûm all farrâžîni oḥtak lja rēbat az-žalla
 jâ 'ejn nâder šijâhîni.*

Welcome, welcome, O Dahîlallâh!
 O thou, to hear of whom so gladdens me!
 I would fain go to you, but Allâh's creatures
 Have spread reports which prevent me.
 Still thy sister, when seated in a shaded litter,
 Looks like a noble falcon.

Dahîlallâh, a Šammari, falling in love with a Rwala maiden, was frequently a welcome guest with her parents. Unfortunately a near relative of the maiden was found killed with his herds, and the murderer could not be discovered. The kinsmen suspected Dahîlallâh of having killed his rival from jealousy, and pressed the girl to refuse the stranger. But she remained faithful and sang these verses. Az-žalla is the žetab litter with a covering thrown over its upper horizontal pole, so that the woman is shaded. She speaks of herself as sister, thus a blood relation of Dahîlallâh, as a proof that she will not give him up. She contemplates the threatening faces of her kins-folk with the look of a noble falcon, whom even the largest beast of prey cannot terrify.

Jâ dîč arîdak ma° al-amwât mâ tekṭa° al-ljas jâ šêni ṛada beh msammeh al-kâlât muṭi al-efûn al-ba°ârîni.

O cock! I would thou wert among the dead.
Why disturbest thou my peace, thou wretch?
He has given himself to rest, he who never pays heed
He who gives camels even to loafers. [to gossip,

The maiden is vexed with the cock for reminding the lover visiting her that it is time to return. efûn is the name given to the fat loafers who take no part in raids. The booty captured by her lover is so considerable that he can bestow she-camels even on such a fat loafer, especially if he is related to his sweetheart.

*Jâ neğûm as-sama °akabenna sârijât wâ°adenna-l-kamar
w-aḥlafenna al-mabât.*

The little stars of the heavens,
When beginning their night journey after we parted,
Gave us a tryst for the moment when the moon
showed itself,
But did not keep their word all the night through.

The lovers agreed to meet at the rising of the moon.
But the sky became clouded, so that both the stars and moon did not appear until early morning.

*Jâ ḥajji mâ ġâ-l°arab ṭuršân
hom mâ lefâhom °an al-ṛâli
w-kalbi jâ-lli ṛada čettân
w-hammi jâ-lli saraḥ ḥâli.*

O little brother of mine! have no travelers come to the Arabs?
Has no one arrived from my darling?
For my heart belongs to him for whom it wears away like soft rock,
And my fears are for him who has robbed me of my peace.

Târeš (pl., trûš or turšân) is a native traveler. Čettân means a rock or stone that is falling or crumbling to pieces. The maiden's heart dries up or crumbles with passion.

Min 'addar waġhi elja rommad min ba'adacom jâ-l-kawâčibi
w-aḳfejtu w-slejjakom 'ammad
w-anî nahart at-tarârîbi.

Who will excuse me if my face is covered with ashes and dust,
 Because of my parting from you, O you Kwâčbe!
 For you have turned back, and a troop of your warriors
proceeds on a straight course,
 While I go to the settled territory.

The maiden is sad because the Kwâčbe, kinsmen of her lover, are going to camp far in the rear, while her relatives have started for Syria. If a woman loses a near relative, she throws dust and ashes on her head and face. The loving maiden would like to do the same but fears to be chidden for it. Slejj (dimin. of salaf) is the armed troop at the head of the migrating clans, which does not ride now to the right, now to the left in search of good pasture but follows in a straight course, 'ammad, because the grazing grounds have already been found by men sent out for that purpose and even the camping place has been decided upon. The verb rarrabow is employed with reference to Bedouins going to the settled territory in whatever direction. The maiden was to camp in Syria, the youth in the inner desert.

Jâ jumma ġâni belâ' muhlef
waš hîleti waš ana sâwi dam'i 'ala waġneti jadref
w-aṭneb ṭanîb ašhab al-wâwi.

O little mother of mine! a sorrow has come upon me
 What shall I do now? [without warning.]
 A tear flows down my cheek,
 When I dwell in the neighborhood of a wolf howling.

Tanîb is a neighbor whose tent ropes, aṭnâb, touch the tent ropes of another. The maiden or woman has either lost her lover in a fight or he has proved unfaithful. She must not cry in the tent, so she goes behind the camp and there cries and laments to relieve herself. Ašhab is a wolf, who also wails and laments and is therefore called al-wâwi, the wailer. On the border of the desert the jackal is called wâwi, in the inner desert there are no jackals. Wâwi is a word imitative of the jackal's cry.

Lâ wa° bi nawwow jinḥown jamm ġirat allâh jâ° arab ḥelli jidkor °ašîri nahâr al-kown jeruddeha w-ar-radi dellî.

Alas, my sorrow! They are to set out in another direction.

Oh, may you camp in the neighborhood of Allâh, O Arabs of my friend!

My beloved on the day of the fight will remember

And turn his mare, while a scamp will flee like a coward.

Lâ wa° bi or lâ wa° b°ejni signifies much the same thing as jâ ḥasreti; it is the usual expression when something dear is lost. According to our song the lover's kin have moved in company with the kin of his sweetheart, who fondly hoped that they would also camp together. But her lover's kinsfolk have unexpectedly turned aside. Then she comforts herself again with the thought that her youth will not forget her and will come to her aid if her camp should be attacked. And even if the stronger enemy should force him to retreat, the thought of his sweetheart would make him turn round and begin the fight anew. Jamm ġirat allâh (or ma° ġirat allâh) has the same meaning as ma° ḥafez allâh, under Allâh's protection.

*Zell ar-rabî° w-dâhelen bel-kejz
w-al-rarw mâ wakna °alejh jâ-bu nhûden çannehen al-bejz
w-al-ḳalb malkû° °alejh.*

The season of plenty is gone and midsummer begins,
And yet my sweetheart and I have not met.
Oh, the maid with the egg-shaped breasts,
To whom my heart so firmly clings.

*Zall ar-rabî w-ḥawdarow lal-kejz
w-al-ṛarw mâ wakna 'alejh jâ-bu nhûd čannehen al-bejz
w-al-ḵalb waḡlânen 'alejh.*

Gone is the time of plenty, and they have departed to the pastures of the midsummer;
But the beauty we nowhere saw.
Oh, for her with breasts like eggs!
My heart is grieving for her.

In the time of the sultry heats of midsummer, al-kejz, the Bedouins camp in the lowlands, where water is found in abundance; therefore they have descended, ḥawdarow, from the plateaus.

*Abri ataraṭṭa bel-manâm
w-al-'ajn mâ hi nâjime
'eddi šawîben bel-manâm
mâ žawwedû ḥazâjimeh.*

I desire to cover myself in my bed,
But my eyes cannot close in sleep;
I feel like one lying wounded on his couch,
Whose bandages they have failed to renew.

'Eddi or čanni means: "I feel like." Šawîb signifies to be wounded seriously, but not fatally. Ḥazâjem are poultices and bandages. If not applied well and renewed, mâ žawwedû, they cause still greater pain.

Ḳilt a'arżûni 'ala-z-zarḵa čann-ar-ramad šâjeben 'ajni ḥabb al-ṛaḡi bel-ḥaša jarḵa muḥṭar 'ala-l-čabd čâwîni wa' šejb 'ajni min al-farḵa čân al-'arab bân šowrîni.

I said: 'lay me across a gray horse,'
For it seems as if blindness had struck my sight.
Love for the desired one grows in my entrails,
And burns me like red-hot iron laid on the stomach.
Ah, my eyes will become gray from the parting,
If the Arabs take different courses.

The Arabs are unable to agree as to where they should remove their camp. The lover fears that his sweetheart's kin may encamp in a different locality from his own people and thinks that his eyebrows might become gray and his eyes blind, should he not see his beloved.

Wa' šejb 'ajni, "ah, my gray, clouded eye," and wa' šejb kalbi, "ah, my gray, clouded heart," are sayings used in misfortune.

*Jâ râceb alli demîlaha zên kamran ejdêha šarârijje jâ manweti-lli haleh mežfîn
w-illa rarîben naša hajjeh.*

O thou who ridest a she-camel with good paces,
With bright white forelegs, and of the šarâri breed!
O thou desire of mine, whose kin has moved back!
Even if far away, yet thou wilt come near to thy sweetheart's kin.

Demîl or derhem is the trotting pace of a camel, when both halves of the saddle bag rise at the same time. Kamra is an ash gray female riding camel, whose forelegs are of a whiter hue than the hind legs. The Šarârât breed the best riding camels. When the clans wander into the inner desert or return, as a rule they all follow the same direction, so that the herds may pasture evenly along their routes. In the season of plenty, when the pastures grow again in a few weeks and the luxuriant perennials promise to yield abundantly, the regular movement in fixed directions ceases and the different clans move forward or backward according to the locality best suited to them by reason of the grazing land and water. Those going back are called mežfîn. The lover's clan has moved backwards, the maiden's forwards. Hajj means kin, ahl. The lover, even if encamped far away, still approaches, naša, the camp of his sweetheart's kin, naša hajjeh (or naḥar ahleh).

*Jâ mdahrağ ḥuf li 'ala-š-ša'ejle čarreb li al-heğên bešdâdi al-'afw mâ-kšarč lejle ḥaššejt šanâdiž al-fwâdi
w-ašči leč jâ hajje jâ dwejle
w-ašûf hajjâneč kaffaw râdi.*

Jâ lahad kum 'atni al-mahzam nabŕi nuŕarreb 'ala-n-nukra jâ hajji w-kałbi al-wâred waredat 'aššânen 'ala mukra.

O Lahad! rise and hand me my bandoleer,
For we wish to go to the settlers of an-Nukra.
There, little brother of mine, my heart is speeding,
As speeds the thirsty to a rock well with rain water.

The lover in the desert longs for his sweetheart, already camping in an-Nukra west of the Hawrân.

A mahzam is a broad leather belt with pockets for cartridges. Nuŕarreb is an expression used by the Bedouins when they wander from the inner desert into a settled country in no matter what direction. Mukra, or moŕr, is a half natural, half artificial cylindrical well dug in a rock to a depth of five to ten meters, where rain water accumulates. Its opening is usually narrow, so that any large stone can close it. In a rock well of this kind the rain water will remain as long as a year and a half before evaporating. As there are no large watering places in the regions where such fountains are dug, the thirsty man hastens to them full of nervous fear, since he knows that he will die of thirst if the moŕr contains no water.

*Jâ wanneti wannejtaha
baŕsa'-z-zumâjer hâjera lejteni šenâšel toŭkaha
w-al'ab 'ala zumâjerah.*

This is my lament; I weep for her,
I who in the depth of my soul am troubled.
Oh that I might be a chain on her necklace
So that I could play on her bosom!

The lover longs for his sweetheart, who camps far away from him.

*Jâ râcebînen hafâhîf
jâ wâredînen 'ala zmejr
jâ mufarrežîn al-alâjef
ana-šhad mâ-ntom 'ala hejr.*

O ye who ride on slender she-camels!
 Ye that draw water in Dmejŕ!
 Ye who separate lovers!
 To you I declare that it will fare ill with you.

Hafâhîf are slender she-camels, very cautious mountain climbers. Dmejŕ lies east-northeast of Damascus. Mâ ent 'ala hejŕ means "thou dost not feel well, thou art ill." Allâh punishes with sickness those who separate lovers.

Prince an-Nûri once became enamored of a married woman, whose husband was in the habit of pitching his tent in the same camping ground. Once in the kejš (midsummer) season an-Nûri was camping at the junction of the as-Sâhna and az-Zerka creeks. He rode through the camp in all directions, but the tent sheltering the object of his affections was not to be seen. To inquire he did not dare, lest he should rouse the suspicions of his relatives and slaves. Finally he sat down in his tent, melancholy and speaking to nobody. At that moment his comrade Fejšal came in, lamenting that the best goat out of the flock, which he had bought from the 'Adwân Arabs in order to entertain his more distinguished guests, had been lost. The whole evening Fejšal continued to wail: "Alas, where is that goat of mine? If I only knew where to find it. Wa' 'anzi wejn mâdri wejn nalkâha." An-Nûri kept silent. After midnight both Fejšal and the other visitors left, the guests lay down to sleep, but the Prince still sat quietly leaning against a camel's saddle and looking into the dying fire. At last he raised his head, called his slave, whom he ordered to make fresh coffee for him and to wake up his clerk Ğwâd, and then, sipping coffee, he composed the following poem:

1. Jâ ğwâd wa' 'anzi wa-na-dûr čallejt
wa' 'anzi alli mâ tebjjen ĥabarha
2. čallat maĥârîfi wa-dawwer wa-ĥalwejt
bemaĥran as-sejlên mâ-ĥaden ďakarha
3. naţtejt ana al-merĥâb wa-šufejt
wa bajjen lijje-lli mitteţi min šaġarha
4. faţan 'alejje rarîren wa-wannejt
wa ĥalbi 'alejha bân al-aţlâĥ jarha
5. en mâ thaġje min tamânah trawwejt
wa 'ajni-lli mâ jebaţţel saharha

6. wa-nnejt wa-nna wannet al-ḥaj ʿala-l-mejt wannet ḥaṣīm as-sâḳ mâ-ḥaden ġabarha.

1. O Ġwâd, while looking for my goat I grew weary;
Alas, of my goat there is no news.
2. Ended are my inquiries, and still I search and promise reward,
But no one at the junction of the two creeks has spoken
of it.
3. I ran up to the lookout, glancing all about me,
So that even [the tents] hidden by the trees I saw.
4. Then I remembered my darling and groaned; Groaned for her till under my ribs my heart writhed with pain.
5. I did not succeed in drinking my fill from her eight teeth,
Therefore my eyes will not cease to wake.
6. I lamented and still lament, as one who lives bewails one dead,
Or as he groans whose shin bone is broken and whom no one can cure.

Ġwâd, however, understood perfectly well what manner of goat an-Nûri was after, and the next day he went on an-Nûri's mare to inquire among the tents how many camels they had for sale. In one tent he found only women. One of them looked at his mare attentively, took her by the rein when Ġwâd dismounted to enter the tent, petted her, stroked her mane, tied her to the tent peg, brought her water, and could not tear herself away from the animal. To Ġwâd this unusual care paid to a strange mare seemed—to say the least—peculiar, and he looked sideways at the young and pretty woman; their looks met, the woman's face reddened, and Ġwâd guessed why she tended Prince an-Nûri's horse so carefully. Returning to the prince's tent in the evening, he found him in the same brooding mood as yesterday. After the visitors had left, the guests retired to bed, and when an-Nûri again ordered coffee to be prepared for him, Ġwâd spoke to him thus:

1. *ʿAzzi râ'i al-ʿanz jeḳûl ʿallejt
bemaḳran as-sejlên mâ ḥaden dakarha*
2. *tarâni bšîrak ʿân terḥaṣ w-halwejt
ʿanzak ʿemîn beẓamîri ḥabarha*

3. 'anzak behâk an-nazel taṭri blaha bejt
 ḍiben jenâzerha wa ḍiben 'atarha.

1. Patience! The lover of the goat says 'I grew weary;
 At the junction of the creeks none spoke of her'.
2. See, I bring thee a joyful message, even shouldst thou Get rid of me cheaply, though a reward thou hast prom-
 Of thy goat news is hidden in my bosom. [ised.
3. Thy goat bleats in her tent in the camp yonder,
 A wolf guarding and a wolf ensnaring her meanwhile.

The prince stretched out his hand, shouting: "Be quiet!"

1. Lijje fâterēn jowm akûl ebha taḡta' rahârîh dâwîjje
2. min nasl ša'lân nâğebha
 'alejha wusejm al-'awâğijje
3. tazha-l-mijâreč manâčebha
 aṣlah wukâden šarârîjje
4. mabhûl jâ-lli t'adder ebha
 mâšijet merwâḡaha bijje
5. adûr knejne w-medhebbha
 mâ šifet 'ajn an-nedâwîjje
6. jâ mâ ḡala jowm alâ'ebha
 w-an-nahad jâ bejz kudrijje.

1. An old she-camel I have, who now, while I sing of her,
 Runs about in the sunshine on the glistening plain.
2. It was from Ša'lân's descendants that I received her,
 And her brand is that of the Âl 'Awâği clan.
3. Her shoulder blades are adorned with a cushion,
 And from the Šararât she most certainly hails.
4. A fool only could find fault with her;
 Why, hast thou not seen how she moves under me?
5. I am seeking Knejne and a trace of her, Hast thou not seen her, thou who hast the eye of a she-falcon hunting in a dense fog?
6. Oh, how sweet when I play with her!
 Her breasts are like the eggs of a kudrijje.

The poet was an unknown Rwejli; the reciter, Mindîl al-Kaṭi. The poet rides out on an old but well-bred she-camel, a gift of Eben Ša'lân, to look for his sweetheart, Knejne.

Verse 2. Âl 'Awâgi is the name of a clan of the Weld Slejmân, who encamp southeast of Tejma. The 'Awâgi captured the she-camel from the Šarârât and, in turn, were robbed of it by the warriors of Eben Ša'lân. 3. Mîrake is a leather cushion. The rider crosses his legs on it. Sometimes two mî-jâreč are used. One, serving rather as an ornament, falls as far as the camel's neck, while the second, the smaller one, is the mîrake proper. 5. An-nedâwijje is the female of a hunting falcon, who finds her prey even when the atmosphere is filled with damp fog which settles down like dew, neda. 6. Kudrijje is a bird about the size of our jay, but more squat in body, of dark brown plumage, and with one half of its wings black.

1. Jâ-bu rašid ašči lak al-ḵalb malkûš
jâ muntaha' šakwâj w-al-ḵalb murṭall
2. al-'afw lâ mîrsâl lâ telfija ṭrûš
maza' šahar šawwâl wa-ḵsajjeren zall
3. jâ-bu nhûden čannehen ṭala' baṭṭûš
bêz al-ḥamâm ar-râ'bi aw hen ašçal
4. al-'ejûn ječsen ḥadd al-owġân ba-r-rmûš
sowdan maṛânîġen ḥadabhen lehen zall
5. ḥaddeh čema'-d-dehdâr mâ jedni-n-nûš
wa-traf'eh šemt al-ḥadâjeb 'an aṭ-tall
6. nhûdeh ḥača' bêzen 'ala-t-ṭa'es mafḵûš
wa-ḵdeleteh čar-rîš sowden tahalhal
7. al-baṭn leh rabbûṭ lâ ḵoṭn manfûš
lâ mer'ezen lejân baṭneh w-lâ zell
8. jâ bint min jatni li jâ kamal al-hûš
w-en dowbaḥow 'awč al-marâkîz mâ dall.

1. O father of Rašid! with my wounded heart I shall complain to thee,
O thou last comfort of my sorrow and of my heart filled with passionate desire!
2. Have mercy! Neither messenger nor travelers have come to me
For the last month of šawwâl, and now the end of al-ḵsajjer is near.
3. O maiden with breasts like the fruits of the baṭṭûš
Or eggs of the cooing pigeon or some still fairer thing!
4. Her eyes, whose lids cover her cheeks
Are black, and the curved lashes cast a shade.

5. Her cheeks are as smooth as gossamer, which none must touch roughly
And which a light breeze lifts when unburdened with dew.
6. Her breasts thou wouldst liken to eggs, the halves of which lie on a sand drift, While on her temples the hair waves like black [ostrich] plumes.
7. Her belly — neither fine cloth nor cotton Nor even the Kashmir wool is as soft as her belly, not the smooth wool used for weaving rugs.
8. O little daughter of him who stands firm when the terror is at its height
And proves no coward when all rush about and bend over the necks of their horses.

The author of this poem was Čen'ân âl Tajjâr, a member of a once famous kin, the remains of which now usually camp in the neighborhood of Dmej. Abu Rašid was a friend of the love-stricken Čen'ân, whose sweetheart, a chief's daughter, was staying with her father in the inner desert.

Verse 1. Malkûš is one wounded or stricken; lakešni has-sejf means "this saber wounded (struck) me." Muntaha šakwâj means "my last consolation, or comfort, is the man whom I trust the most." Al-ḳalb murṭall or al-ḳalb beh ṛoll (or hamm) means the heart filled with unsatisfied, passionate love. 2. Al-'afw or jâ-llâh 'awntak, meaning "May Allâh have pity on you!" or "May Allâh help you!" is a usual cry when one hears of a great misfortune. Allâh visits man with torments for his sins, hence the exclamation "al-'afw," meaning "Forgiveness!" "Mercy!" or "Pardon!" If Allâh forgives the misdeeds, the misfortune is past. Šawwâl is the tenth month. Čen'ân, who lived permanently with the settlers, uses this word, which is not usual in the desert. Al-ḳṣajjer is the name given by the Arabs living in the neighborhood of Damascus to the eighth month, ša'bân. The poet's sweetheart moved with her father to the inner desert in the month of šawwâl, and now al-ḳṣajjer was nearing its end; thus ten months were almost past and, still, neither messenger nor traveler, ṭareš, had come bringing word of her. 3. Baṭṭûš is a plant with red fruits preserved for their pleasant odor. 5. Dehdâr is gossamer. 6. Hača or tekel means "resembles." A te'es is a smooth drift of rosy sand. The halved shell of an ostrich egg lying on the smooth rosy sand reminds the poet of his sweetheart's charms.

7. Ṛabbût is the finest cloth; koṭn manfûš is cotton lint; mer'ez, the wool of the Kashmir goats. Zell is the fine wool with a silky gloss, from which the prayer rugs are woven. 8. Al-hûš signifies terror or panic breaking out in a small camp attacked by a strong troop of the enemy. He who remains cool in danger, jaṭni, checks, encourages, and tries to inspire his comrade to continued resistance and does not prove a coward, mâ dall, even when he sees the men fleeing, marâkiz, swarming, 'awč, all around him and pressing their heads to the necks of their mares, dowbaḥow, so that they may escape the shots of the enemy.

1. Jâ min je'âwenni 'ala-l-'afaš w-az-zâğ
katben beşafḥ seğilaten mâ ba'ad zîž
2. w-jâ min je'âwenni 'ala-l-kâf muḥtâğ
hejta ma' al-arjâḥ jabri-s-swâhîğ
3. kam lejleten mabrak delûli 'ala tâğ
w-nowmi 'ala rorr at-tanâje ramâlîğ
4. wa-mkejzaha 'an wâhğ al-kejz fertâž
beḥşûm selma' şâfijâten şarâhîğ
5. w-maṭ'ûm al-hunṭa 'ala şâhen as-sâğ
w-maşrûbaha lbejn al-abkâr al-lwâhîğ
6. w-elja hanaf jinbâğ 'an mitl al-flâğ
'an şuddaben mitl al-lwâli mefâlîğ
7. erdâfaha ṭe'esên min 'oḳb al-wudâğ
min fowḳ sîžânen swât ad-darârîğ
8. tensef 'ala-l-matnên dâğen wara dâğ
w-tensef 'ala-l-matnên zên ad-demâlîğ
9. lağğen ḥalâḥîlaha čema lağğat al-ḥâğğ
w-lağğen ḥalâḥîlaha bzên ad-dwâlîž
10. w-ğatna teḥaṭṭa čannaha zaḇi-l-anğâğ
teḥza' laha sûd al-'ajûn al-ḥadâlîž
11. hi 'anz rîmen riḥaha 'ambar fâğ
ḳâdat al-ruzlân al-ğwâzi-d-dwârîğ
12. riḥâneten bemenḳa' al-ma' elja râž
mâlat brazzât al-roşûn al-'awârîğ
13. ḥams al-ḥanâşer behen aš-şerk mâ lâğ
w-'ajûn jaḳtelen al-hwâwi medâ'îğ
14. semiḳjeḥa ma' wağḥ al-roşon jin'âğ
bâb aš-šemâl w-lâ leži leh maḥârîğ
15. jâ-llâḥ jâ farrâğ jâ wâli al-frâğ
jâ-lli ranijjen w-al-ḥalâjež maḥâwîğ

16. tefreġ lalli ċenneh bħaḳken min al-‘âġ
mutahajjeren zâḳat ‘alejje al-menâhġ.

1. Oh, who will find for me powder of gallnuts and copperas
 With which to write on a paper as yet unused,
2. And who will help me to the verses needed
 That like gentle breezes shall allay the storms [of my heart]?
3. Many nights did my camel rest by the hole of a snake's den,
 And even in sleep I thought of her with the white teeth.
4. To escape the heat in summer, at Fertâż she hides
 On the spurs of Selma, where are rifts with clear water.
5. She eats wheat bread baked on a red-hot sheet of iron
 And sips the milk of young white she-camels.
6. When she smiles, she uncovers teeth like white snow,
 As white as cleft pearls.
7. Her hips are two sand drifts sprinkled with light rain
 And rest on two calves like the rollers over which the well ropes pass.
8. She lets one lock of hair after another—
 The fine braids of her hair—fall down her back.
9. The rings above her ankles tinkle like a pilgrims' procession,
 And still the rings above her fine thin ankles tinkle.
10. To us she came, stepping with care like the gazelle leading her flock,
 Upon whom the expressive black eyes [of her flock]
 are turned.
11. She is like a white gazelle emitting the fragrance of amber
 And leading gazelles in pairs.
12. She is like the sweet-smelling flower growing by the pond, while the water is clear,
 Spreading its luxuriant leaves which ever tremble.
13. Five little fingers she has, which none but I as yet has touched,
 And night-black eyes, which kill the love-stricken.
14. Her name is like the branches which incline
 To the north, and none can expound it.
15. O Allâh, thou comforter! O Lord of consolation!
 O thou who art rich while thy creatures always are in need!

16. Thou wilt comfort me whose love is ivory white
 And who am still in torment, as those who appoint my road oppress me.

This poem was composed by Čen'ân âl Tajjâr and was recited to me by Prince an-Nûri.

Verse 1. ʿAfaş, the gallnut, and zâğ, green vitriol (or copperas), powdered, are used to make ink. Sğile is a sheet of paper. Ziž means dyed, blackened, covered with writing. 2. Kâf is a verse or a poem. Swâhîğ are the torments of the soul, excitement, a passionate outburst. 3. The poet used to speed to his beloved, who dwelt far from his camp; therefore he had to sleep in the desert, often beside his she-camel which knelt, mabrak, over a snake hole, tâğ. Tenâje are the four lower and four upper incisors. Ramâlîğ means "perpetually moving or dreaming with the eyes half closed." Fair women are fickle in love and changeable, which causes the lover much anxiety. 4. Mkejz or mekîz are midsummer camping grounds. Ğaw Fertež lies southwest of Hâjel. Şarâhîğ (for şahârîğ) are deep rifts in a rock, with narrow openings where the rain water keeps fresh for a long time. 5. Hunṭa is another name for wheat, kaṃḥ. The beloved maiden is evidently the daughter of a well-to-do Bedouin, as she can eat wheat-flour bread baked in the shape of thin cakes on a sâğ, iron sheet about forty centimeters in diameter. The milk of young white she-camels is said to taste the best. 6. Flâğ, or felğ, for telğ, means snow or ice. Šuddab are small pieces of dry raza wood, from which the bark has been peeled off; they are of a glistening whiteness; šâdeb (pl., šuddab) is equivalent to bejaz (pl., bîz), meaning "white." 7. Te'es is a conical sand drift. Its sides have gentle slopes, are very soft, and when sprinkled by light rain, wudâğ, shine with a peculiar pink glitter. The sîžân, calves, are round and plump, like the darârîğ or rollers used for letting down the rope with the dip bucket. This roller rotates in holes in two posts which are set in the ground and with the roller form a triangle. 8. Tensef, she lets down, is said of a woman who undoes her combed or plaited hair, allowing it to fall down her back. Dâğ means, properly, the separate tresses of the combed hair; demâlîğ those already braided. 9. The small rings worn above the ankles are usually of glass, but the wealthier women have them made of copper or even of silver, ornamented with fine chains from which hang tiny bells. These trinkets knock together at each motion of the wearer, the chains rattle, the bells jingle, and the sounds thus produced remind the poet of an approaching or departing procession of pilgrims riding on camels covered with ornaments and bells. Dwâlîž are slender shins above the ankles, which allow the rings to move around freely. 10. A fine firm step finds much praise with the Rwala. Every herd of gazelles has its own leader, usually an old animal which walks a few steps in advance of the others with a firm but prudent step, looks both forward and sideways, catches every scent, and is always ready to flee, should a suspicious object come into view. Ḥa-dâlîž signifies expressive, lively eyes or persons. 12. Rîḥâne is sweet basil or other scented plants thriving especially at the edges of water holes in the channels where rain water remains for a long while. Before this water reaches the putrid stage it is pure and clear, and during that time the rîḥâne grows luxuriantly, its juicy twigs, razzât al-roṣûn, rising and falling with the slightest breeze. 13. The fingers of the poet's sweetheart are so small and beautiful that he calls them all little fingers. 14. The name of the maiden is not easy to ascertain. 16. Al-menâhîğ are men who repair the roads and thus enable the laden camels to move along easily. Here the maiden's kin is meant, who refuse to permit the poet, a member of another tribe, to marry her.

1. Bint eben lâfa w-al-mšaḳḳa ḥalîfa
abçi latîfa ḥâl min dûnaha-l-lâl
2. lejtah radîfa fowḳ warç al-ʿasîfa
aladd w-aḥla min mrâdafk jâ ḥâl
3. lejtah fedâha w-aṣḥanak bedwâha
w-abîʿ belâm al-ḥebajjeb mijjet ḥâl
4. šifetah bsarḥa wa-mtalaʿ-l-ḳalb farḥa
min kubr ġarḥa mâ žuwît anḳol al-ḥâl
5. šifetah behîše tenḳoḻ al-ʿançerîše
w-lâ-rîd ʿîše illa rîžah elja sâl
6. lâbesat al-mezâwi zâwi ar-rûḥ zâwi
ḥasaʿ-l-fedâwi mâ jigîb ṭîb al-afʿâl
7. ğîtah bʿašwa mizneten taw našwa
allî mṭarḥa zerʿ ḳalbi minneh ṭâl
8. ğîtah telumma râḥ ḳalbi jehummah
w-jaʿan abû-mmah mâ tesammîh çattâl

9. šifetah tekâdi wa-wkedat fwâdi
mohra tšâdi min emhâr eben haddâl
10. elja barat četli dallat teltefet li šamsen badat li min wara hâjeṭ al-ğâl
11. bint al-ekhejle ġallelat kill al-lejle
w-dâfe'e zahraha 'an rekûben lin-naddâl
12. dâfi hašâha saḥḥatên 'ašâha
mašrûb ma'ha mâ jîġi rib' finġân.

1. I lament for Laṭifa, the daughter of Eben Lîfa, I, the sorrowful Ḥalîfa; for, without her, changed for me looks the bright plain.
2. Would that she sat with me on the thigh of a stubborn she-camel!
It would be sweeter and pleasanter than to sit, uncle,
with thee!
3. Oh, couldst thou be sacrificed for her, so that I could use thy ashes to paint her eyelids!
For peace with my sweetheart I would sell a hundred uncles, indeed!
4. I have seen her on a plain overgrown with grass, and my heart joyfully followed her then.
The blow [of her loss] has bereft me of strength to describe that situation.
5. I have seen her in the thicket unbraiding her plaits
And had no care for food, except her spittle.
6. She wore a silk coat, covering her charms;
Shame on this hired servant who does his work not well!
7. I came to her after supper; she was like a newly formed cloud
Whose rain made the seed in my heart sprout.
8. I came to her just when she was combing her hair, and my heart warmed to her.
A curse on her mother's father, who did not call her Jailer!
9. I saw her with her escort and my heart caught fire,
For she was like a young mare from the Eben Haddâl stud.
10. When she desires to imprison me, she turns to me with gestures
Like the sun appearing from behind the long wall of a mountain.

3. Memories of your distant sweethearts will come to your mind; for them you will long.
Her neck is like a gazelle's alarmed by a shot.
4. Her teeth glisten like Egyptian sugar,
Sugar, the food of rulers, of sweet taste.
5. She is not of those who emit a disgusting odor,
But an odor appreciated only by men of sense.
6. The fragrance of hzêra her tresses emit,
Oh, may the eye be blinded that is incensed at this beauty!
7. When, O people, she comes nearer, her eyes enchant, And when she ascends from the valley, O people, she slays with her charms.

The poet was a member of the as-Sba'a tribe; the reciter, Blejhân eben Meşreb. The poet went out on a plundering expedition, muḥanšel. On his return he was told that his kin were camping east of Salamja. On arriving there he saw from the tracks that the camp had been removed farther west. He therefore ascended a high hill and looked over the western horizon, hoping to see a few tents he knew, among them the tent of his sweetheart.

Verse 1. Al-ferîž mužîm signifies a few tents, which remain for a considerable length of time in the same place. 4. The cane sugar, which contains more of the glittering crystals than the best European sugar, is made in Egypt. 5. The Bedouins hate all strong odors, believing that some odors give rise to many diseases, or at least irritate old wounds; for this reason they stop the nostrils of sick persons. It is considered a matter of individual taste which odor is harmful and which helpful. 6. He who cannot tell an injurious odor from one that is beneficial looks with disfavor on the person or the object by which an odor is disseminated. 7. Šetanjaha or štûnaha are the several charms of a beauty, in this case the girl's full hips.

1. Jâ meḥsen al-wejlâd ʿankom radû bi hal-hzûz allî wasîʿen tenâjâh
2. kazzejt mîrsâl w-lâ radd nowbi
w-lâ ġâb lî ʿelmen šefijjen w-lâ ġâ
3. jâ rabb lâ tarzoḵ ḥatât al-čedûbi
allî jehumm al-ʿelem min dîn melfâh
4. m-âkel w-low ḥattû ʿala-š-šetel ar-rowbi
barbûr šejfen sâḥenâten šwâjâ

5. ‘al-esrija telkaṭ lahalha ‘arûbi
w-ḥomṣ w-ḥama laha mebi‘ w-mešrâ.

1. O Meḥsen, at your wish the Welde have deprived me
 Of this bliss to which a broad passage leads.
2. I sent a messenger, but he did not carry out my bidding, Brought no refreshing news, nor returned at all.
3. O Lord, withhold gain from a heedless liar, Who takes messages but delivers them not to those for whom they are destined!
4. I could not eat even if they laid before me, on rice boiled in sour milk,
 Pieces of warm roast from this year's lamb.
5. At Esrija she used to gather fuel for her kinsfolk,
 And Ḥomṣ and Ḥama' were her market towns.

The poet hailed from the as-Sba'a tribe. He loved a daughter of Meḥsen Raḥîsarrûḥ, the chief of the 'Ebede, who refused her to the poet and sent her to his sister, who was married to a chief of the Welde encamped on the left bank of the Euphrates. The poet camped with his Kmuṣa division of the Sba'a west of Palmyra, longing in vain to meet again his sweetheart. I took down his poem as it was recited to me by my companion, Blejhân eben Meṣreb.

Verse 1. A tenijje (pl., tenâja') is a passage between two rows of tents. The clans engaged chiefly in breeding goats and sheep arrange their tents in the form of an ellipse. The side ropes of the different tents meet, only two wide openings, by which the camp is entered, being left on the two narrow sides of the ellipse. In contrast to this, the Rwala, who breed only camels, usually put up their tents in parallel lines. The space from end to end between these tents is also called tenijje. The wider such an opening or space, the more room for the guests; hence the saying wasî' tenâjâh has the same meaning as bâ-leh wasî' or ḥalkeh wasî', his heart, his nature, his solicitude is wide, he is generous. Ḥzûz are expressions of bliss or love, ḥazz. 2. Kazzejt has the same meaning as ba'att; nowbi (or nebâi), my commission. 'Elem is a detailed report, a long message. 3. Ḥaṭât or ḥaṭwa means many a one, someone, or anyone. Melfa' is the person for whom the message is intended. Melfâk 'ala flân means "thou wilt go to this or that one"; min hw melfâh, "to whom shall I deliver this?" 4. Šetel or tummen is the rice grown on the lower Euphrates and Tigris.

Rowb, also known as leben râjeb, is sour goat's or sheep's milk. 5. Esrija, the ruins of a town north-northwest of Palmyra, is one of the main camping grounds of the 'Ebede division of the Sba'a. Ḥomṣ and Ḥama lie west of Esrija.

1. Jâ rāčeb min 'endana tisa' mâjât
w-tisa'in w-elfen tizâdi
 2. mrabba'ât keĵzaken misterîhât
w-en saneden limrêṭbe w-at-tanâdi
 3. jilfen abu sbejjel 'adim al-me'eġzât
jekzi raradna min ġamî' al-bwâdi
 4. bâri jidûr swejhebi bel-mhâfât
jidawwer al-bedw hamm jidawwer al-blâdi
 5. ķil jâ bint ana min 'okbikom šufet lô'ât
hâli naĥat jâ bint w-al-hamm zâdi
 6. al-ħalk tebât al-lejl bel-'own mâ-bât
w-al-'ajn 'an nowm al-mela mâ twâdi
 7. mâ-lûm ana râ' al-hawa kitr mâ fât
w-iblis ma' râ' al-hawa biġithâdi
 8. en mâ lakejtek hajj telkâh žid mât
ħaffet 'alejh al-ķabr w-ermel hwâdi.
1. O thou who ridest from us, leading nine hundred
And ninety and still another thousand [camels],
 2. Almost square with fatness, rested during the midsummer;
When they go up to the wells of Mrêṭbe and at-Tanâdi
 3. They will reach Abu Sbejjel, who knows no fatigue
And who will do all that we need among the Bedouins.
 4. I desire him to search for my sweetheart, no matter where she may be;
Let him search among the Bedouins and in the settlements, then.
 5. Speak thus: "O daughter mine, I have suffered without you heart's torments;
My content is gone, and the torment grows.
 6. At night all creation sleeps, but verily, I do not,
For the eye will not catch the sleep of rifferaff."
 7. I reproach not my beloved with what is already past,
As Iblis is wont to tease every beloved one.
 8. If thou shouldst find her not alive, if thou shouldst find her dead already,
Make lighter her grave and strew with sand the three stones on which she used to place her kettle.

Composed by Fejhân eben Žâ'ed eben Zrejbân, the chief of, the Dowšân clan of the Mtejr tribe in Neğd. The reciters were Mḥammad al-Ḳaḏîb, 'Abdallâh al-Maṭrûd, and Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd. In one of the camps which he rode through when returning from a raid Fejhân happened to see a woman whose beauty dazzled him. For months he tried to forget her but in vain. Then he sent this poem to his friend 'Abdallâh eben Sbejjel, who was living in the settlement of Nefi, which is tributary to the Dowšân, with a request to find her camp and also to inquire whether the woman would marry him.

Verse 1. Fejhân's messenger accompanied a large caravan, called ḥadra, which had set out from the inner desert for the lower Euphrates to buy food, clothing, and ammunition. 2. Traveling in the kejš season, midsummer, is most fatiguing for the she-camels. Saneden, they went up, signifies that the caravan was already on its way back, because the trip towards the Euphrates is expressed by the verb ḥadaren, they went down. Mrêṭbe and at-Tanâdi are large watering places near the settlement where 'Abdallâh was then living. 3. 'Abdallâh furnished the Dowšân and their chief with everything they needed. Every large clan has a purveyor of this kind. 7. Iblis is the tempting angel, not Satan. 8. In many tribes it is customary to pick up a pebble from the grave of a friend and to throw it aside so as to lighten the burden. On the grave of a girl or woman they also lay the three stones, hwâdi, that held the kettle in which the deceased cooked in her last days. Another custom is to sacrifice a goat or sheep on the grave; some then smear the stones with the blood of the sacrificed animal, others strew over them a handful of sand.

1. Jâ fâṭri ḥobbi maḥâri ṭomijje
jowm eḡlahazzat miṭl ḥadd al-ḥṣâni
2. ḥobbi ṭomijje w-al-fejâz al-'adijje
w-tanaḥḥeri berzân zejn al-mebâni
3. ana ḳzejt al-lâzem alli 'alejje
al-lâzem alli mâ ḳzâḥ al-hedâni
4. al-ġedi ḥaṭtejteḥ bwarč al-maṭijje
w-mutnaḥḥeren jamm shejl al-jemâni
5. bâri nidûr aṭ-ṭiflet al-'aswaġijje
rîḥat nesemḥa čazeḇâd al-'omâni
6. mâ li 'ala-ṭ-ṭajjeḇ w-lâ leh 'alejje
allâḥ jelûm ṣwejḥebi mâ tanâni

7. mâ ġâh şabr howlên lawwal zaĥijje
w-lâ şâf tâli rurbeti waş ġerâ li
8. jumma rada' râkân bel-mehmehijje
w-illa w-hw jâti mitl al-ĥeşâni
9. w-allâh mâ-rîdah low hi nebijje
low enn harġak ċideb w-ĥaçet al-lisâni
10. âhed bedâlah 'andalen šowšelijje
mâ lamsah aš-šâbûr bekurb al-'anâni 11. mâ ĥammaha ĥajjâl ĥabli šufijje
w-lâ şâf malk al-mowt barzen danâni
12. en hazzejt aš-šelfe ĥarejt at-taĥijje
w-en žil jâ-hla-l-ĥejl ĥalbi lwâni
13. min 'âfena 'afnâh low hi meniġje
low hw ġenîn al-ĥalb mâ beh meġâni.

1. O thou old she-camel of mine! keep to the border of the sandy hills,
Look to see if the cheek of a horse shows on the horizon,
2. Keep among sandy hills, ridges, in healthful valleys,
And make for Berzân, the finely built.
3. The duty laid upon me I have fulfilled,
A duty not to be accomplished by a coward.
4. With the North Star over the hips of my animal
I went straight for Canopus in the south.
5. I yearned to search for a maiden with her neck raised high,
Whose breast is scented like 'Omân civet.
6. The man of honor owes me nothing — nor I him!
But Allâh will rebuke my mistress for not waiting for me.
7. Her patience did not last two years, but only till the first feast of zaĥijje,
And therefore she has not seen the end of my stay abroad and [learned not] what there happened to me.
8. Râkân either in the desert will perish
Or like a stallion will surely come back.
9. By Allâh, I would not have her if she were a prophetess,
Even if it be proved that all thou sayst is but lies and jest.
10. A pure-bred young mare I will take instead,
By spur and bridle as yet untouched.
11. No rider like me has ever made her leap,
One who has not seen the death angel on the plain.
12. When the wedge of my spear I swing, it is a greeting,
And if there is a cry of "O horse!" my heart pulls me there.

borders of stony dells which often overtop the latter by fifty meters and remind the Bedouin of a horse's nose or the side of his head, according to the direction from which he sees them. Their ends sink into the stony plain like a nose and their sides are like the horse's cheeks. 2. Fejâz al-ʿadijje (for ʿadije) are long, narrow dells among sand drifts; there a camel will always find good pasture and a traveler plenty of fuel and a warm, safe night's rest. The Nefûd is the most healthful district in the whole Arabian desert. Berzân is the name of a strongly fortified castle owned by Eben Rašîd at Ḥâjel. 3. This duty, fate, was imposed on him by Allâh, i. e. to be imprisoned in a foreign country. 4. From Palmyrena to al-Ġowf he proceeded in a southerly direction, thus having the North Star over the hip of his camel and Canopus in front of him. 5. He knew that his young wife found shelter in Eben Rašîd's territory. ʿAswaġijje means a woman walking erect, with unbent neck. 6. He is not angry with her new husband. The mere notion that his wife could prove unfaithful to him while she was continually in his thoughts even when he was in prison killed all his desire for her. 10. He wishes to seek consolation in fights. 11. Ḥamm is the word used in Neġd for the action of a horse in an encounter between two riders. The horse rises on its hind legs and with the front legs lifted high leaps forward like a wild beast. Šufijje was explained to me as meaning the same as mitli or aḥsan minni, like me or better than I. The whole verse means that the mare which Râkân desires to ride has not yet been in a fight, as arż danâni signifies sahl (or maḥâs), battle ground. 12. Taḥijje is a Bedouin greeting, such as "Jâ hala," or "ḳawwak"; among the settlers it means the profession of faith: "Lâ ilâh ill-allâh wa muḥammad rasûl allâh." "Jâ-hla-l-ḥejl, O horse!" is the alarm cry of the watch on sighting the enemy.

A fragment of the same poem according to Nawwâf eben Šaʿlân:

1. Jâ fâṭeri debbi twâref tomijje
w-en ešmaḥarrat mitl ḥašm al-ḥşâni
2. debbi tomijje w-al-bilâd al-ʿadijje
lijâ mâ jabdi leč shejl al-jemâni
3. nabṛi ndawwer dîret al-ṛaşmerijje
rîḥat ġasadha čaz-zebâd al-ʿomâni

For whom the people can find no guide.

Alas, my lament is the lament of one thirsty

In a scorching summer, who in search of water went astray.

Alas, for thee I lament, thou swiftest falcon among the youths,

Whom the she-camels have left in al-Wâdi.

The beloved youth did not return from a raid, having fallen in a fight in al-Wâdi (Sirhân). Hejla^c is the swiftest hunting falcon (quarry hawk).

*Jâ zejd jidkar ḥabîbi mâṭ min ʿokbaha waš ḥajâti lah dinjâk hâdi tegi zerrât elja ġâ-l-ḳadar žallat al-ḥîla
w-ğedd ḳalbi ʿala mâ fât ğedd ar-rša min maḥâḥîlah ḥallina narkab ʿala-l-ʿajrât fejḥân sâlen hadâlîl lah.*

O Zejd! they say that my beloved is dead.

Without her what is life to me?

This world of thine hurries from one deceit to another,

For if fate comes running, all self-help is useless.

My heart is torn in two by what has happened,

As the bucket rope breaks on the axle of a hoist.

Let us mount she-camels accustomed to far journeys,

For the Fejḥân valleys are said to have water enough.

The lover, crushed by the report of his sweetheart's death, intends to join a dangerous raid. Fejḥân is a lowland situated at lat. 28° 50'—29° 30' N., long. 43° E. From there incursions can be made into the territories of the Šammar and Zefir tribes. Hadlûl (pl., hadâlîl), a shallow valley ending in a lowland or without an outlet.

1. *Az-zowl zowleh w-al-ḥalâja^c ḥalâjâh
w-al-fe'el mâ hw fe'el wâfi-l-ḥašâjel*
2. lâ wa^c ḥalîli kill mâ ḥall ṭarjâh wa^c mâ debaḥ min ʿajn ċabšen w-ḥâjel
3. lâ wa^c ḥalîli tadfoḳ as-semen jimnâh en edbaḥat ḳiṣr as-sinîn al-maḥâjel

4. *lâ wa' ḥalīli kill mâ-kûl ana-nsâh
jâ mâr tefattennih min al-heġen ḥâjel*
5. lâ wa' ḥalīli tefsek al-heġen low lâh down tetwâmi rûsehom bel-ḵwâjel
6. *lâ wa' ḥalīli kill ġawen šireb mâh
w-mâ ḵaṭa' min 'ajn sarḥa ḥamâjel*
7. *lâ wa' ḥalīli jehreġ an-nezel beṛnâh
'alejh min šurġ as-sabâja fa'âjel*
8. lâ wa' ḥalīli bân dowlâk w-dowlâh elja mâ debaḥenneh mubremât al-fetâjel.

1. Though like him in figure and in every motion, Yet his bearing is not the bearing of him who in so many virtues abounded.
2. Would that he had not left me! Ah, that man of mine!
Whoever met him [will testify]
How many choice wethers and barren she-camels he has killed for his guests!
3. Would that he had not left me! Ah, that man of mine!
His right hand poured out for the guests melted butter,
When years of want came upon us.
4. Would that he had not left me! Ah, that man of mine!
Whenever I say that I will forget him,
Then, lo! the barren female riding camel calls him to my mind.
5. Would that he had not left me! Ah, that man of mine!
Were he here, the female riding camels would not have been ruttish,
For they only nodded their heads even in the greatest heat of the day.
6. Would that he had not left me! Oh, that man of mine!
There is no watering place from which he has not drunk,
And how many clans has he not robbed of their best herds!
7. Would that he had not left me! Oh, that man of mine!
The camp resounds with songs of him,
For his deeds are the bravest among the raiders.
8. Would that he had not left me! Oh, that man of mine!
Here and there he dwelt, until
He was killed by rifles fired with a twisted fuse.

Eben 'Arûġ, the famous chief of the Beni Lâm, fell in a fight. His wife then married his brother. The fallen man had a remarkable female riding camel on which he took part in a great number of raids, bringing back much booty from them. In his last raid he was shot down from this she-camel. The animal saved herself by flight and was inherited by the dead chief's brother, who, however, did not go out on a raid for a whole year. Owing to this the she-camel became so fat that her humps began to hang over to one side. Want soon made itself felt in the tent. The woman was obliged to cook, and there was neither wheat nor dera', millet; she had to sew shirts for both herself and her husband, and there was no linen nor any camels to exchange for these necessities. Naturally the woman pined for her fallen hero, and so it came about one evening that, as she was grinding the wheat begged from some neighbors, she happened to observe with more attention than usual both the fat she-camel and her own dilapidated dress; in fear of still greater misery she composed this poem, which was recited to me by Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 1. Zowl is the outside appearance, contour, or shape. Ḥalâja' is the manner of acting, behavior, speech, and movements. 2. Lâ stands in place of lâ tab'ad, meaning "Oh, mayest thou not go away! Oh, hadst thou not left me!" 4. and 5. Heġen is a poetical expression for reċâjeb, meaning riding camels. The husband did not remain at home. Between one and three o'clock in the afternoon the heat is at its highest. The rider who wishes to keep his she-camel in good condition should let her rest during that time, ġâjile, otherwise the animal degenerates and becomes incapable of bearing young. 6. Ġata'-hom ġaṭ' signifies "looted them completely, took everything from them, leaving neither camels nor tents." 8. Mubramât al-fatâjel, twisted or woven fuses: this phrase indicates that the poem dates from the time when rifles with flint locks were still in use in battle.

1. Jâ râċeben min fowġ ḥorren šemâli
mâ jilḥaġ al-miš'âb 'âli mtûneh
2. ḥorren za'zâ' muḡarrjen lil-eġfâli
jeṭîr low hw bar-rasan jinċa'ûneh
3. naṭtejt ana riġmen ṭawîl w-'âli
wa-dmû' 'ajni ċal-ṛadar sajjalûneh
4. badejt awaṣṣef šâḥb illi zaha' li
w-nâšed aš-ša'âr mâ jidakrûneh
5. abu krûnen mitl ṭajj al-ḥebâli
w-al-żidle riš al-hîž low ṛalabûneh

6. ḥwâḡebah ḡarr al-ḡalam beh ad-dwâli
w-ʿujûnaha ʿujûn al-fahad low zaʿalûneh
7. ḡebînaha jâ nâs zowḡ al-helâli
w-al-ḡadd barken lâʿġâten mezûnah
8. ḡašmah dbâbij al-hendi jilâli
min al-lîlu w-al-merġân wašfat esnûnah
9. jâ rižaha terjâk jidkar dwâ li jabri karîš ad-dâbb jowmen sakûneh
10. jâ ʿonḡ šowḡi tekel ʿonḡ al-razâli
šât al-rorejri bil-ḡanaš ṭarradûneh
11. w-šidraha murassaʿ bel-maʿâni w-al-râli
bilâd al-aġam w-aš-šâm mâ tammanûneh 12. wa-nḡûdaha tuffâḡ jâ zejm ḡâlî
fiġġâl šîni bez-zeraf ḡaʿadûneh
13. derʿânaha burġân fužza jilâli
w-ašejbaʿah ḡlejm ad-daḡab low barûneh
14. w-mraffaʿa mâ-zen ḡâbat ʿejâlî
jâ šibeh ʿûd al-mejs low hazzaʿûneh 15. jâ sâmeʿîn as-sowṭ ertû ḡâlî
jâ muslimîn al-majjet mâ terḡamûneh
16. hâtû ʿašîri w-eʿrezûneh ḡbâlî
w-low mett ana min fowḡ šadri ḡadderûneh
17. min lâmeni jâ lejt mâ leh ḡwâni
w-illa ḡažib al-kofr jistajsarûneh.

1. O thou who ridest a pure-bred camel of northern descent,
The top of whose back a stick will not reach,
2. A pure-bred, shy one, who from youth is often frightened
And who flies in spite of the check of the rein!
3. I climbed a high, steep pile of stones
And the tears of my eyes turned [the pile to] a pool.
4. I began to describe my sweetheart, who has blossomed out for me,
And I ask the poets why they do not mention her.
5. She has plaits as thick as twisted ropes
And a fringe as fine as a male ostrich's feather.
6. Her eyebrows are as though drawn by a pen filled with ink,
Her eyes, the eyes of a panther in wrath.
7. Her forehead, O people! is like the reflection of the new moon,
And her cheeks are like the lightning igniting rain clouds.

8. The bridge of her nose glistens like the blade of an Indian sword;
To pearls and corals her teeth I compare.
9. Oh, her spittle! Like viper-wine it is used,
For it heals one bitten by a snake as soon as he drinks
of it.
10. Oh, the neck of my darling! like that of a gazelle
Or the white antelope which men hunt on horseback.
11. Her breasts are adorned by tattooing with gems precious and costly.
Which neither the wealth of Persia nor of Syria could buy.
12. Her breasts, they are apples, — alas, for my loss that has bereft me of reason! —
A china cup set on a tray.
13. Her arms glisten as a silver pot,
And her little finger is a burnished gold stick.
14. How slender is she! I think not she has yet born children.
To a sprig of wild cherry I liken her, as it sways in the air.
15. O ye who hear this voice, have mercy on me!
O Moslems! will you not pity one dead?
16. Bring here my mistress, set her before me
And on my breast lay her when I die.
17. Oh, may he who reviles me have no kin,
Or become a captive seized by unbelievers.

The poet was Nimr eben 'Adwân; the reciter, Ġwâd al-Ġ'Âni. The poet sits on a steep stone pile, laments, and describes the beauty of his dead sweetheart, with whom he wishes to be buried. Verse 1. Ĥorr šemâli is a camel recognized as pure-blooded by the tribes camping in al-Belġa' and the Ĥawrân districts, whereas the tribes living farther east and south deny this, declaring it is by no means certain that both of its parents were thoroughbreds. 3. Riġm is an artificial pile of stones. Such piles are usually found on the most prominent hills and serve as shelters for the watchers or spies, who, lying down at their post, may observe the whole country around. Ĥadîr is a hollow in a channel where the rain water remains even when the stream had dried up. 5. Ĥalab is a feather from the hips of an ostrich, used as an ornament or bouquet. 9. Dâbb is any poisonous snake of some length; short ones are known as efâ'i. 11. The breasts are often covered with tattooed patterns in imitation of various jewels. 12. "Jâ zejm hâli, Oh, gone is my reason!" is the cry of one surprised or dazed by something. Zeraf, saucer or tray, was pronounced by Ġwâd as zeraf. 14. Mraffa'a is a slender, delicate one. Ūd al-mejs is a sapling or sprig of the cherry tree, which grows wild in al-Belḡa, where the poet was camping. From these very flexible sprigs stems are made for smoking pipes known as raġjân. 16. E'rezûneh means, properly, "extend or stretch out the limbs" to enable the poet to see them better. 17. Kâni is the name given by the 'Adwân to the kinsman whose duty is to avenge wrongs done to his kin. He who has no kinsman and thus no avenger is subject to all misfortunes, like a captured Moslem carried by the unbelievers to foreign lands.

1. Jâ sîn jâ umm 'akâb jâ sîn jâ sîn
jâ mitl 'anz ar-rîm temši waḥadha
2. mâ la'ebāt as-summejr bēn al-feriẓēn
w-lâ ḡaṭṭ ab-al-'amalāt rāwaz wa'adha
3. w-lâ ġarrat al-ṣaṭrūf bemidneb al-'ejn
w-lâ 'ala-l-ġirân tūmi bjadha
4. ḡalaft ana w-allāh dīnen baṭar dīn
w-ḡajāt min hw beš-šwāber lakadha
5. en šāfaten za'lân lāzem terazzīn
mitl aš-šefūk alli telahleh waladha
6. ġatni 'aṭa mâ seket biha metâmīn
šīmet ḡamūle kill men ġa' ḡamadha
7. jâ 'akâb wa' ḡazzi defentah benimrīn
bḡadd al-wa'ar jâ 'akâb bemustanadha
8. 'ejāli ṣadaw jâ 'akâb ḡamse ma' eḡwēn
w-lâ žīl 'ejni sāhera min reḡadha
9. mâ ḡammani jâ 'akâb rejr alli wēn
alli čema riḡ al-ḡzēri ġesadha
10. mâ zâr kalbi 'an ḡawâha w-lâ al-'ēn
w-en zarzarat 'ejni ġazâha ramadha
11. low ġann banāt al-bedw jâ 'akâb ṣaffēn
jâ-ḡaj mâ-ḡod rejr waḡḡa waḡadha.

1. Alas for my loss, O 'Akâb's mother, my loss!

Alas for her, who like a white gazelle used to walk
all alone!

2. She never took part in the amusement of summejr between the two camps,
And not once did a gallant dare to ask her to a tryst.

3. She never drew the knife with blacking around the edge of her eyelids,
And never raised her hand to threaten the neighbors.
4. I swear to Allâh, oath upon oath I swear,
As well as by the life of him who spurred her,
5. That as soon as she saw me wrathful she tried to appease me
As a kind mother tries to soothe her boy.
6. She came to me as a gift, not in exchange for animals of value,
She was the boast of the kin, for all who came praised her.
7. O 'Aḳâb! that bliss of mine! thou hast buried her in Nimrîn
By the impassable crags, O 'Aḳâb! opposite the water.
8. Five of my sons died, O 'Aḳâb! five, and my two brothers,
And none can say that my eyes had a sleepless night.
9. No one with grief filled me, O 'Aḳâb! except the one who dwells—who knows where?
And whose body was scented with the fragrance of hẓêra.
10. Never did my heart prove faithless to my love, nor my eyes,
And whenever she whispered, my eye was as if with ophthalmia struck.
11. No matter if in two long rows come the Bedouins' daughters, O 'Aḳâb, Thou little brother of mine! I would take none but Wazḥa alone.

The poet was Nimr eben 'Adwân from al-Belḳa; the reciter, Mindil al-Ḳaṭ'i.

Verse 1. Jâ sîn (or jâ hejf), Ah me! 3. A raṭrûf is a mîl, or small knife for rubbing on the eye black. 4. A married woman is often likened to a saddled mare and her husband during sexual intercourse to a rider. 6. Among the 'Adwân a fixed number of she-camels, sheep, or mares must be given in compensation to the father of the girl whom a man wishes to marry. This custom is known as sijâk. 7. Nimrîn is the name of a small creek in al-Belḳa, where lies the burying ground of the 'Adwân. 9. Hẓêra is a plant which emits a strong smell.

1. Jâ wenneti wennet ḥalûḡ eben rūmi
alli farreḡat ʿan maḍbaḥ waladha idêha
2. ḡâha ḡelîl al-mejz jerkoḡ bešûmi
kaṣṣam ḡnûbah min šefâteh ʿalejha
3. waʿ tejreti ṛadat w-ana-šîḥ w-awmi
aždaḥ laha-š-šawlâḥ mâ fâd bîha
4. amsejt arawčib nâbijât ar-rḡûmi
ṛadat w-ḡalbi haḡînen ʿalejha
5. ḡalbi ʿalejha jâ-bn ʿablân jowmi
awmât ʿawḍ al-ḡejš jowmi ʿalejha.

1. This is my lament, the lament for Eben Rûmi's unhappy
she-camel,
Who spread out her two front legs over the spot where her young was killed.
2. A brute with a club came a-running
And broke her ribs, instead of speaking to her kindly.
3. Ah! my little she-falcon has lost her way, and I shout Wave a cloth, but all in vain. [and signal to her,
4. Yesterday I climbed some great stone heaps on the hills,
But she has lost her way, and now my heart for her is grieving.
5. My heart, O son of ʿAblân! beckons to her;
As a plant in a stream bends, so it bends to her.

The poet was Nimr eben ʿAdwân; the reciter, Mindîl al-Ḳaṭî. Nimr mourns the loss of his wife.

1. Ḥalûḡ is a she-camel whose calf is killed immediately after birth and who notices it. Eben Rûmi was a Christian who used to bring to the tribes camping on the slopes of the Ḥawrân sugar, coffee, and clothing material, taking in exchange camels, which he sold to the farmers again for plowing and threshing. Once he acquired a pregnant she-camel which bore a calf on the road. Instead of hauling it aside and there killing it before the mother rose to her feet, he left it lying where it fell and shattered its head with a stone while the mother was still standing and licking it. The dead calf he then threw into a gully near by, but the distracted old animal remained standing over the spot splashed with the blood of her offspring, moaning and refusing to move. The infuriated Eben Rûmi now began to beat her savagely; he broke some of her ribs and would have killed her too, if the Rwala warriors had not chased him away. In 1915, on my way from the Šammar territory westwards, one of my she-camels gave birth to a calf. At the same moment one of my companions pressed her head to the ground, while another pulled the calf to a neighboring rock crevice, where he killed it. But its bleat, weak as it was, did not escape its mother; the moment she rose she began to smell over the ground, found the scent, and followed it to the crevice. She was unable to enter it or to see her calf, but remained standing before the opening, uttering heart-rending moans. When we finally drove her away, she went along with the others; but every day, at short intervals from sunrise to a late hour at night, she gave vent to her grief. After a few days this became unbearable and even dangerous, as it might have been heard by our enemies, thus exposing us to their attack. In vain did we try to calm the animal; at last we tied up her snout with a rope, but even then she uttered muffled moaning sounds. 3. Šawlâh is the piece of cloth waved about by a falconer when he desires to coax the falcon back. 5. Ḳejš are the smaller depressions in river beds, where the perennial called ʿūd al-ḳejš thrives.

1. *Sâr al-kalam jā ʿakâb bel-heber sâra
bizejzaf al-ḳurtâs jā muhġeti sâr*
2. *aʿwi ʿawa sirhân lejl w-nahâra
w-ahenn hanîn at-tilb tâwi ʿala-d-dâr*
3. *jâ ʿakâb lâ w-alli mdîr an-nahâra
meġri safînat nûh birebb al-abhâr*
4. en ġammaʿû jā ʿakâb kill al-ʿadâra min sahr neġd il-bâb tûnis il-as-singâr
5. low ġann banât aš-šlejb fowḳ aš-šihâra wa-mʿawraġen biġdûdehen nakš al-wabâr
6. *w-en ġann banât al-bedw fowḳ al-ebkâra
w-ʿala-l-hawâdeġ dellelen kill ħawwâr*
7. w-en ġann banât al-ḥazar mitl al-amâra mutadallelât bel-rawaʿ tekel nawwâr
8. w-en ġann banât at-turk šaffen tebâra malbûsehen jā ʿakâb min rali-l-asʿâr
9. *w-en ġann banât al-kufr hom w-an-našâra
w-jeḳâl jā nîmr aš-šeži tobb w-eġtâr*
10. aṛîd ani maznûn ʿajni hejâra aš-šâheb alli farr ʿakli maʿeh w-târ

11. rîhat ġasadha mitl rîh al-ebhâra
w-bên ešfetêha ħardalen bîd ħammâr
12. aškah šekġâh w-beh târef ħamâra
w-min al-ġemâl al-jûsufi zâd ben-nwâr
13. w-lâ kâjilen ċidben w-lâ hw kamâra
eġza w-lâ-ni lit-temâtîl bejtâr
14. min lâmeni lâ tour w-lâ hw ħemâra
at-tour ašwa' en žîl leh dâr jindâr
15. w-allâh mâ-lġâha w-lâ bil-ħawâra
w-lâ ĵinfa' at-taššif balli ġara' w-sâr
16. w-allâh min 'oġbeh ĵâ 'omri ħasâra
mâr aš-šabr billâh 'allâm al-asrâr.

1. My pen filled with ink begins to move,
It moves over smooth paper, O my little heart!
2. Like a wolf I wail by day and night,
And like a deserted, toothless she-camel unable to rise from the camping ground I lament.
3. O 'Aġâb! I swear by him who limits our days
And who drew Noah's ark from the seas:
4. If, O 'Aġâb! they should gather all the maidens From the mysterious Neġd to the gate of Tûnis and to Singâr;
5. If the daughters of Šlejb on pure-bred asses should come,
Their cheeks tattooed with the needle in triangles;
6. If the Bedouins' daughters were to come on young she-camels
And in litters adorning every she-camel of the inner desert;
7. If the daughters of the settlers were to come like prin-
Proud of their gaudy flower-like dresses; [cesses
8. If the Turks' daughters in closed ranks should come
With dresses — be assured, O 'Aġâb! — made of costly stuff;
9. If the daughters of infidels and Christians should come
And should say to me 'O Nimr! poor fellow, come, take thy choice,'
10. I should choose her, who is ever before my eyes,
The beloved one for whom my reason has fled away.
11. The fragrance of her body is like the fragrance of costly spice
And between her lips thou wilt find ħardal such as is used by the seller of strong drink.

12. She is clear white, pink, and bordered with red,
And her glory exceeds the beauty of Joseph.
13. No untruth I speak, nor is it a fable,
For, after all, I am no maker of stories.
14. He who will revile me must have less wisdom than a bull or she-ass,
For easier it is to persuade a bull which when bidden turns.
15. By Allâh! I shall not find her even among the houris.
Therefore, to describe what has passed away is of no help.
16. By Allâh himself! with her death my life is destroyed;
Hence wise is moderation for the sake of Allâh, who knows all secrets.

This poem, composed by the poet Nimr eben 'Adwân, was recited to me by Trâd eben Saṭṭâm, who learned it from his mother, who hailed from the Sirhân tribe.

Verse 1. Ḳalam is a pen cut from stout reed. Zeḡzaf or nâ'em means "smooth, soft." 2. Tilb is a she-camel, old, toothless, and therefore very emaciated. Tâwi denotes such a beast which can kneel but on account of its weakness cannot rise again. Sometimes a feeble she-camel of this kind is left behind on the camping ground; the poor beast tries to get up, but every time sinks down again uttering bitter moans. Her deep sighs are heard far around. She longs for her companions whom she is not to see again, and is afraid of the wolves. 4. Adâra is the name for all young women, whether virgins or not. A virgin is called bikr; a female who has lost her virginity, mâḥûda. Singâr is a mountain ridge southwest of Mosul. 5. The daughters of the Şlejb excel by their perfect shapes. Şihâra is the name given by the Şlejb to their pure-blooded asses, which they often cross with the wild asses. The Şlejb women are often elaborately tattooed on their cheeks. 6. Hawâ-değ, quiverings, shakings, the poetical term for ḡetab, means "large richly colored litters which rock freely." Hawwâr signifies a camel of the inner desert, inured to thirst, whereas a ḡûdi is a camel from districts with plenty of water. A ḡûdi is stronger, but a hawwâr will endure more fatigue. 9. Tobb denotes "come near," "step into the center." 12. The cheeks are clear white and pink and red at the edges. According to the story, Joseph, the son of the patriarch Jacob, was very handsome. 13. Ḳamâra is a story pleasant to hear but fictitious. A beḡtâr is a blacksmith, who beside swinging the hammer also understands the art of healing; likewise a bejtâr is a maker of metal ornaments in the shape of various animals or plants. 14. The 'Adwân tribe, to which the poet Nimr belonged, is occupied principally with agriculture and the breeding of cattle. As they use bulls for plowing, they force the bull to turn at the end of the furrow.

1. Habîl jâ na'âj tejren jahûmi
tejr al-hawa' kill al-mela bâk bîha
2. hasâjef ad-dinja frûh al-gerûmi
alli jšalleken al-habâri idêha
3. alli lehom 'end al-mežâhîr jowmi
šejhâtahom jakteren al-amrâğ bîha
4. hadowk hattaw bez-zumâjer resûmi
w-allâh al-hasâjer 'okbehom wuš 'alejha
5. w-allâh ent ten'a dakğât al-wušûmi
alli-hadaha-l-mowt lâ tertegîha
6. jâ hejğ ten'a-lli bhaddah rešûmi en mâ thajjet šîmaten nešterîha.

1. He who has lost his sweetheart, O thou of many laments!
is as a falcon that circles,
A falcon of passionate love to which all common folk are victims.
2. The troubles of this world are like young falcons which mind not the thorns,
But with their claws tear the habâri (bustards).
3. [The youths] who are summoned to the she-camels laden with chattels, Whose alarm cries add to the numbers of the riderless horses running to and fro,
4. They will put a remembrance into the entrails of the foe;
By Allâh himself! when once they are gone, what a loss is ours!
5. By Allâh! thou who mournest for her who is adorned with tattooing,
Know that death will not restore her whom it has once taken.
6. Shame on thee! Thou mournest a woman with a tattooed cheek.
Why, if she come not as a gift of honor, we shall purchase her.

The poet was Eben ʿAblân of the ʿAdwân tribe; the reciter, Mindîl al-Ḳaṭʿi. Eben ʿAblân reproaches Nimr with doing nothing but mourn for his wife.

Verse 1. Melaʾ are people not remarkable in any way. 2. Frûḥ al-ğerûmi are young falcons who never leave their prey even though it crawls into the thorns to hide. 3. Mezâhîr are she-camels carrying the chattels of the moving clan. As a rule they are led by the women, who beckon to the youths to defend them when attacked by the enemy. The youths utter their alarm cry and throw the enemy from their saddles, so that the mares run around without their riders. Such mares are called amrâğ. The young men defending the laden camels are considered the real heroes, because the enemy will always hurl themselves at these animals when they have scattered the warriors who opposed them first. The fall of one of these youths is considered a serious loss to the tribe.

Elopements

Hîh jâ râʿi-l-bakrat al-ḥazʿalî
wuddi-rċab maʿak mâr abûj jezʿalî.

Hail to thee, who ridest the young she-camel captured from the Ḥazʿal!
I would fain ride with thee, but my father is angry.

The father will not let his daughter wed her lover. Ḥazʿal (for Ḥazâʿel) is the name of a tribe which camps on the lower Euphrates.

Waʾ hêh jâ râʿi-l-bakrat an-nâjife
wuddi-rċab maʿak mâr ana ḥâjife.

Ah, hail to thee, who ridest the she-camel taller than all others!
I would gladly ride along with thee but am afraid.

The maiden fears the fickleness of the lover, who intends to elope with her.

Jâ solejmân ḵalbi mḥâlef ʿalleḵ al-ḥebb al-ağnebîjje mâ ḥala-t-towb fowḵ ar-radâjef
w-al-ğâʿad lejjeten fowḵ lejje.

4. Thou hast destroyed me, thou who mightest make me
rend the shirt on my breast;
The wounds caused by thee are secret, known to no one.
5. Oh, the eye of the gazelle, who stamps noisily on the rocky slope
Scenting the breeze, while the other gazelles follow her,
6. Forming after her a waving line.
As she is agile in the open air only, so am I only when with her.
7. By Allâh! she would not have mastered me but for her bosom;
By Allâh! her trimmed forehead hair availed nothing, for all can grow that.

The lovesick maiden is tortured by grief because her kin opposes her marrying the man of her heart. He therefore resolves to elope with her.

Verse 3. Ṣaḥîf al-ḥaša is a girl measuring no more than a span around the waist. 4. Mefrijet al-ġîbi is the name given to his beloved, for in case of her loss he would bewail her in the same manner that a sister laments her brother or father, by rending the shirt on the breast. 5. ʿAnz is the old she-gazelle which leads and guards a herd of gazelles. She takes her post on a height, scenting the enemy. If she scents something suspicious, she looks eagerly in that direction and stamps her foot angrily when she cannot at once discover the cause of her fears. On catching sight of the enemy she flees, with the other gazelles following her in a long line which wavers to the right or left according to the direction taken by the old doe. 6. Al-maha means the pure air of the desert in which the gazelle thrives.

Treachery in Love

Hejjeh jâ-bu žedîle
bdîni radejt
ataḥseb en mâ-ni jammak
w-ʿajni ʿalejk.

Hasten, thou with a small plait on the temples,
Thou hast no trust in my faithfulness.
Oh, thinkest thou I shall not be with thee,
When my whole soul belongs to thee?

The maiden doubts whether the lover will keep his word and is therefore slow in coming to the meeting.

Ente jâ râ'i-l-waşem
had-dâbele hebbeni w-efhaḵ an-nadel
lel-žâbele.

Thou with the fine tattooing,
 Thou with the fair teeth,
 Kiss me and break the neck of the coward
 For the next night.

Dâbele is a woman with fine small teeth.

Ente jâ râ'i-l-waşem
hal-hâjere
hebbeni w-efhaḵ an-nadel
lad-dâjere.

Thou with the fine tattooing,
 Thou, who canst not decide,
 Kiss me and break the neck of the coward
 For the next year.

If the coward refuses to divorce her, she is to rid herself of him by violence, so that she can marry her paramour.

‘Awwejt ‘awat az-zaḥa’ ‘ala ‘ašîren bâḵani
min ‘oḵbehom mâ li ‘aza’ ‘an as-sawâlef ‘âḵani.

I wailed as a wolf wails when the dew has past
 For the lover who has betrayed me.
 After all this suffering I have no courage left
 To resist the claims of my kin.

The loving girl thinks she has been betrayed and will no more oppose her relatives, who want to marry her to another.

‘Awat az-zaḥa’, wailing in the middle of the forenoon, is much stronger than ‘awat al-‘aša’, wailing at evening, or ‘awat al-lejl, wailing at night. If the wolf captures his prey in the evening or during the night, he rests till afternoon; if he howls in the morning after the dew has evaporated, it is a sign that he has not got enough at night to satisfy his hunger.

*Wa' hânât aš-šowk jâ ġûde nawwa 'ala-l-bowk jâ hajje w-al-jowm mâ 'alemt bisdûdeh
w-enn-al-razi bâjecken bejje halaft ana 'âd mâ-ûdeh
halli daffenni w-ara hajje.*

Alas, the treachery of my lover, O Ġûde!
He has deceived me, O little sister of mine!
Today I have heard no excuses.
And because my desired one has deceived me,
I have sworn not to return to him any more;
And do thou hasten and bury me, even if I am still alive.

A girl loved a youth with all her heart. She knew that her eben al-amm had laid claim to her and that he would not consent to her marrying her lover; therefore she was willing to flee with him to another tribe. The death with which she was threatened by her revengeful kinsman had no terrors for her; for her lover she was ready for any sacrifice. Shortly before the day of the flight agreed upon, the Arabs were suffering from thirst, mazma'. There was no water for either men or animals. At that moment the youth confided to his sweetheart that he had found under the dry channel bank a small hole filled with rain water, rdejjer, where he would fill the water bags belonging to his tent and then water his camels. The girl kept watch and, when she saw him ride away with the camels, tied two empty water bags to the water saddle, mounted a she-camel, and drove her herd after him, not coming up with him until they reached the hole. He was just filling his water bags, holding off the camels with a long spear. Catching sight of his sweetheart's camels, he dragged the full bags from the water, jumped down into the hole, poured the water into a small hole, over which a hide was stretched, and with his long spear stabbed the girl's camels as they crowded to drink. It was in vain that she begged him to fill at least one of her bags. He cared only for himself and his herd. Then the girl sang the following heġġeni (ditty):

1. Lêh teşfež zamlana jowm jişarre
rûh min mojj al-baħar dawh heġâni
2. la'all mâ teşfež haġât al-medarre
min fowk mâ tekşom 'azûd al-'anâni
3. lâ wa' ħasâjef hebbeti jowm afarre
jowm az-zmejjem šâre bet-temâni.

1. Why dost thou strike our pack camels when they come near the water trough?
Water them with the water from the basin [coaxing them with the words:] dawh! my white one.
2. Thou wouldst better strike an armed man, While thou sattest in the saddle, than kick the shoulder blades where the bridle rests.
3. Alas, woe is me! I regret the kisses at the time when I loosened my hair
And when my darling drank from my teeth.

Verse 1. Al-baħar is a leather trough resembling a deep basin and fastened to wooden legs. It serves for watering camels, who are coaxed with the sounds dawh! dawh! and ati! ati! 2. The maiden doubts if her lover would strike his mailed foe with the same courage; she thinks he would kick or press, tekşom, with his left foot the upper part of the left foreleg of his camel, thus forcing him to run away. 3. Az-zmejjem means a small ring hung at the left side of the nostril, in this instance an ungrateful lover.

1. Šallejteni jâ-l-razi šella
hali ba'idîn w-ana ħâfi
2. ar-riġel mâ tadni al-mella
w-ana 'ala-l-ħarr wakġâfi
3. akfejt jâ râceb az-zella
w-ana 'ala darben nakkâfi
4. 'ajnen terâġiç lel-ralla
kalben terâġiç lil-ħâfi
5. jâ-l-bîz mâ-nten 'ala mella
ħâda ħarregenneh w-da lâfi.

1. Far out hast thou enticed me, O beloved one!
Far live my kin, and bare are my feet.
2. The foot cannot touch the red-hot soil,
And yet motionless I stand in the heat.

3. Thou hast gone back, thou who sittest in a shady litter,
And I return whence I came.
4. Be condemned to suffering, the eye that would look upon thee,
And torn out the heart that would long for thee.
5. O you white ones! who can know you?
While you dismiss one, another enters.

Fahad eben Šbejh loved Kazzijje, a daughter of the Âl Wahîf kin. He remained with his people in the neighborhood of al-Ġowf, while Kazzijje went with hers to an-Nukra, west of the Ĥawrân, rarrabow. When the rest of the Rwala returned to the inner desert, šarraḳow, where they encamped in the vicinity of al-Ġowf, Fahad began to search for Kazzijje and learned that her kin were camping with the Ṭajjâr kin somewhere between Damascus and Palmyra. Later, in the season of the greatest heat, a traveler brought him news that his sweetheart's people were encamped near Tejma. Mounting a camel he went there, despite the warnings of his own kin that no Rwala were just then camping along the western borders of the Nefûd and that war had broken out between them and the Šammar. Fahad succeeded in reaching the watering place of al-ʿAssâfijje, where he found the relatives of his sweetheart preparing to move. He also learned that Kazzijje had married in the meantime and was shown her new litter, which was just bearing her south. Crushed by grief, he set out north for home. East of at-Ṭâjât he was set upon by the Šammar, who took his camel away from him and his arms as well, leaving him only a pouch filled with water. Now he had to make his way barefooted over a scorched rocky desert back to his people, who were encamped near the eastern border of the Ĥawrân. Broken in body and spirit, he composed this poem, which was recited to me by Ṭrâd eben Saṭṭâm.

Verse 5. Ṭharreġenneh means "this one you let out (drive out) from your heart"; lâfi, "another one enters at once."

Lovers' Quarrels

Rihâneten nimt ana bzellah naṭejtaha w-al-hawa' sâčer čam 'âšžeten fâraḳat hellah bsâ'aten mâ beha dâčer

w-afrah elja šift zwêl lah
w-hânat al-ʿajn mâ tenâčer.

I slept in the shade of sweet basil
 And went away when my passion was allayed.
 How many sweethearts part from their friends
 In a moment not pleasant to remember!
 How glad I am to see even the outline of her figure!
 And the eye — that deceiving one — is not deluded.

The lover has quarreled with his sweetheart, they have parted, and still he longs for her. Zwejl (diminutive of zôl) are the outlines of a human figure observed from afar. The identity cannot be ascertained; only the fact that it is a human creature is apparent. The lover is not sure whether it is his sweetheart or not, his eye can cheat him, but he feels that he does not deceive himself. "Hânat al-ʿajn, Oh, the treacherous, deceptive eye!" is said even in a tranquil mood, the expression being almost one of endearment.

A chief's daughter loved a poor Rwejlî. Although often upbraided for this, she remained faithful to the man of her choice. Once they camped in the midst of a good pasture, but far from water, so that they occasionally suffered from thirst. As the well was very far and the region not safe, only young men went to bring the water, the lover of the chief's daughter among them. She did not drink for two days, saving up her share so that she could welcome her darling with a dainty dish when he returned. When on the third day the outposts signaled with their kerchiefs tied to their long spears that the youths were returning with water bags filled, the girl quickly made up flour for a small cake, added plenty of butter, and baked a delicate fatîta cake. With this in her hand she mounted a she-camel and rode out to meet the young men bringing in the water supply, rwa. The women generally ride out with a small water pouch when they either have thirsty children at home or want to prepare a meal for the hungry ones, for the camels carrying the full water bags move but slowly, while a woman on a riding camel gets her pouch filled from the first youth she meets and can quickly return. As soon, then, as the chief's daughter met the first young man with the water, rawwâj, she was told to take as much as she needed; but this she declined, saying: "Our rawwâj rides in the rear." This was repeated several times. At last she sighted her lover. He drove before him two camels, each of whom carried two large water bags made of camel's hide and holding about 150 liters each; on a third, less burdened, he sat himself.

"Give me some water," begged the girl.

"Thou hast met so many rwa. Did none of them offer water to thee? Then if thou didst not get a drink from them, thou wilt not get any from me!"

Then the girl pulled out the appetizing cake. The hungry lover looked at it longingly, but she threw it to a dog near by and said:

"I shall not drink from thee, thou wilt not eat from me any more!"

Jumping down from the camel the youth now poured out the water for her, but she refused. When he called on her in the evening, she drove him away and sang the following heğênî:

1. Haṭwa-l-walad jebči low mâ te'aşša
jēzḥak w-low aşbaḥ 'ala çabdeh az-zâd
2. w-lâ hazhazanneh meḇadât al-ma'aşša
hadâk allî jîzher rajûb al-awlâd
3. lâ wa' ḥasâjef nehdi allî tnaşša
jowm al-ğehal w-arḥaşt leh kill mâ-râd.

1. Many a youth cries when he gets no supper,
And laughs when filling his stomach from the food taken for the journey.
2. But he who is not disturbed when a she-camel carries him away from his supper,
Shows himself to be a pearl among the youths.
3. Oh, woe is me! how do I regret that he has inhaled the fragrance of my breast,
In a moment of heedlessness, when I permitted him
all that he wished.

Verse 2. Meb'adât al-ma'aşša, making distant the place of supper, are female riding camels moving away with their riders from the home tents, where supper was sure to be had, and speeding into the desert, where it is never known when a hospitable camp may be reached. Even if the riders are provided with flour or wheat, they are always uncertain where and when to prepare their supper. If a hostile troop or its traces are discovered, such a thing as cooking a meal is not to be thought of. 3. Jowm al-ġehal refers to those moments when, blinded by passion, one acts regardless of the consequences; such a person is called ġâhel.

Unrequited and Thwarted Love

Jâ ħmûd wa° ârezni šâbi ġard al-hawa° ġizt ana minneh akûd wazzâh an-nijâbi hadâk minni w-ana minneh.

O Ĥmûd, alas, my gray hair is a hindrance to me.
 Enough now in amorous contests;
 Only she with the white teeth,
 She is my love and I am hers.

*Mâ-bri °ašîri walad kowbân mitl as-slûki jelobbi le jâ lehjeten minka° aš-šîbân
 w-al-ḡaml w-er°û ženâdîleh.*

I will have no lazy glutton for lover of mine,
 Who would cling to me always like a slûki.
 Oh, that chin beard of his, basin for nits
 And lice; and only look at his big head!

Kowbân or °efen is a fat loafer who likes to eat and sleep but is no lover of raids. Slûki (or sluki) is a greyhound. While other dogs are not allowed to enter the tent at all, the greyhound indulges himself both on the rugs and in the bed and will not stir from his master and mistress, eagerly waiting for a mouthful to be thrown to him.

*Šowḡi jâ °uwejd aš-šam°a wa° mžejjilen beš-šîḡa hâdi °elûmak tegîni
 w-allâh ani mustarîḡa
 edd edd mâ tšûfak °ejni
 jâ hâreb °ala-z-ḡîḡa.*

Oh, that lover of mine! that little stalk of šam°a,
 Ah! in šîḡ plants he hides at noon.

Such are the reports I have heard of thee—
And, by Allâh himself! I am at peace.
Be gone, be gone, so that my eyes may never perceive thee,
O thou, whom the mere sighting of the enemy turns to flight.

A maiden rejects her lover for hiding like a coward during a raid. Šiḥa is a plain covered with ših growing as high as sixty centimeters, so that a man lying in it cannot be seen. Mžejjilen is one who likes to rest in the hottest hours of the day, from one to three o'clock in the afternoon. Edd for ruh, away. Ziḥa is the first sight of the enemy.

*Jâ w^{en}neti w^{en}net a^t-t^entên
 ř^ađi waladhen maflâhen en rawwâhen jez^ažen šowtên
 w-en ekbel al-lejl betnâhen ‘alejk jâ žâdel al-karnên kalbi šfûken limâtâhen.*

This is my lament, like the lament of two she-camels
Whose calf is lost in the pasture.
When they come back for the night, they wail with two voices,
Even when it grows dark and their legs are tied.
O thou, whose hair is plaited into two tresses,
My heart pities thee because of their meetings.

A youth warns the girl he loves, but who does not return his affection, that her lover has others beside her. If the Bedouins want to milk a she-camel whose young is a weakling, they kill the calf at birth and put another in its place. Both mothers now take this calf for their own, caring for and nursing it. When such a young camel gets lost in the pasture, either by falling into a pit or becoming the prey of a wild beast, both mothers wail day and night for a long time.

*ʿAzzâk jā barken jelûh
wara-t-tawîl şowbaha jâ hejf jā ʿašîreti
waʿ-l-mubreza ʿajjaw baha.*

May Allâh comfort thee! The lightning flashed Beyond at-Tawîl, whither she wanders.

Oh, woe is me! sweetheart of mine!

Alas, she was angry with me, that is why they refused her to me.

A maiden in her anger persuaded her relatives to refuse her to her lover and moved away with them beyond aṭ-Ṭawīl ridge. The expression ‘azzâk is used when lightning flashes. In the desert people are often killed by lightning; therefore Allâh is asked to comfort the survivors. The parting with the girl of his heart has struck the youth like lightning.

Niğmet aṣ-ṣubḥ dannat fanâğîlaha ‘okdeten biğmîri w-ana-dîraha jâ ḥwâlen ‘alla-llâh tadâbîraha.

The morning star has shot her rays
 Like a knot into my bosom, where I feel it constantly.
 Alas, these changes! No one but Allâh can restore my fortunes.

It is to Allâh alone that the disappointed lover looks for help. Fanâğîl mean not only glittering coffee cups but the pale rays of the morning star and the reflection of a beauty's white cheeks. The lover has sought his girl in marriage, but without success because her kin object, although at first they were not opposed to him.

Elja ‘âd ani min šammar
waš wala‘ani bruwejlî en šarraḳaw ṭâb al-kejj
w-en ṛarrabaw jâ wejlî šikren dwâjeb zahra
mitl al-bark blejlî.

Why did I, a descendant of the Šammar,
 Become attached to a Rwala girl?
 If they come to the inner desert, I am cheerful of mind,
 But should they go to the settled country, then, Oh woe
 Zahra with her blond tresses [is me!
 Shines for me like lightning at night.

The Šammar camp in the Nefûd and to the south of it, and seldom leave their territory. Only a few Singâra clans sometimes go to the settled country, ṛarrabow, generally to the Euphrates between al-Kûfa and as-Samâwa, to provide themselves with grain. Our Šammari can therefore meet his Rwala maid, Zahra, only in the inner desert, šerk. Women fond of dress dye their hair yellow with henna.

*Fâteri tazla' al-jowm min riġlaha
jâ ba'ad žâdelen karkasaw haġlaha.*

My old she-camel with her hind leg lame today,
Oh, may she live longer than she with hair clipped above her brows and ankle rings clashing together.

*Ajj as-samar walla'-l-bajaž
low čent ani 'aššâkeh hebb as-samar helwt al-ğowf lâ wa' hani min zâkeh.*

Whether black or white,
If I were only his sweetheart!
The kisses of a negro are like the helwa dates from al-Ğowf;
Truly, much relish to one who has tasted them.

A paramour was reproached with having been intimate with a negro; she answered with the ditty just cited, which is very popular, especially with the negroes.

Helwa is the most delicious variety of dates raised in the basin al-Ğowf. Some of these dates are as much as five centimeters long and two centimeters thick; they are black with a bluish tinge.

1. *Națtajt râs al-'abd w-lâ šufet al-adbâš
w-lâ ġâni min maznûn 'ajni munâbi*
2. mâ šufet țurķijje w-lâ šufet al-awnâs min dûn maznûni telâla'-s-serâbi
3. *hani lowni lil-ma'âlîk fattâš
w-alli bkalb šwejhebi mitl mâ bi.*

1. The summit of al-'Abd I climbed, but saw no herds, Nor did any one come to bring word to me from the one for whom my eyes watch.
2. No travelers, no man at all I sighted;
Between me and my ward a mirage quivers.
3. Oh, may he who examines the heart bring my desires to a good issue, [Allâh] who dwells in my mistress' heart and in mine too.

The poet was 'Ali al-Ḥāzemi; the reciters, Mḥammad al-Kaẓīb and 'Awde al-Kwêḥbi.

Al-'Abd is a hill northwest of al-Ġowf. Lowni (or ḥāli), condition, heart; waš lownak is equivalent to waš ḥālak, how are you?

1. Warāk tezhed jerješ al-'ajn bīna
tekūl ḥajjāl al-eğra zejn taşfîh
2. allāh laḥad jā mā raḥejna w-ḥabīna
jā mā ḡāsemna ḥalāl al-meşālîh
3. jā mā ta'ātejna-l-ḥwa' bîdīna
jā mā raḥebnaken 'aşejr al-mrâwîh
4. al-howş mā hw bass lizā'anīna
ḥesem w-hw bēn al-wġîh al-mefālîh
5. al-bedw w-alli bel-eğra nâzelīnah
killen 'atâh allāh min habbt ar-rîh
6. jowm al-fzûl beḥellteḥ şāre'īnah
w-al-ḥejl beḥwāneḥ swât az-zenânîh
7. jowm inkasar rumḥi ġedabt as-senīna
w-awda't 'anneḥ al-ḥejl şumm al-medâbîh
8. aş-şedeḡ 'endeḥ mar lâ teğḥadīnah
ta'nezi beş-şedeḡ jā zejnt ar-rîh
9. jâ-bu nhejd ḥema fiğāl şīna
razzât lel-ḳalb al-mşakḳe dawâbîh
10. lâ howḥ w-lâ rummân w-lâ tala' tīna
w-lâ mişmiş al-başra w-lâ hen tefâfîh
11. şuḥfen belutfen binhezâ' belīnah
jâ raşen mowz hazhazeh nâsem ar-rîh
12. hejjeḥ e'tīna-l-ḥakḳ hejjeḥ e'tīnah
w-en mâ 'aṭejtīneh w-allāh lâ-şîh
13. lâ-şîh şîḥat min ṛalla' lah ġenīnah
w-illa ḥalûğen zaḡjeowha-s-serârîh
14. w-asamme' alli bel-eğra nâzelīnah
w-aḳûl bâri al-ḥakḳ 'an at-tefâzîh
15. min 'âfana 'afnâh low hw ḥadīna
w-lâ jinfa' al-'atşân kitr at-tesâbîh 16. low nebi min al-ḥazrân wâğed lakīna
mar ḳilna-l-bedw aḥsan at-tesâmîh
17. alli nabih al-jowm 'ajja jabīna
w-lâ jindara-l-ḥīra wejn al-meşālîh.

1. Why does she knit her brows at us,
Saying: "The rider from a hamlet is good only for trade."

2. As there is one Allâh only, Oh, how often have we gone on a raid and crawled on our bellies!
Oh, how often have we divided among us the herds of those who bred them!
3. How often have our hands given presents to the poor!
How often have we ridden [our camels] at evening,
craving for a night's lodging!
4. Fighting was not allotted only to those who move from camp to camp,
But it is also the lot of other fortunate men.
5. For, as to the Bedouins, so to villagers too,
To all has Allâh given a chance for success.
6. When the Fẓûl laid hands on thy chattels
And like wild beasts their riders attacked thy brothers,
7. When my spear was broken and I grasped the sharp saber, Then I drove from thee the riders, who destroy those who sit in tents.
8. Thou knowest the truth, then deny it not,
For from the truth thou goest astray, O fragrant one!
9. O thou with thy little breasts like china cups
And full of juice — they give deadly wounds to the heart —
10. Not peaches, pomegranates, nor the fruit of the fig tree Nor apricots from al-Baṣra, nor apples, [are they,
11. But sheets of paper close lying, curved, and smooth.
O thou fruit-bearing branch of a banana plant rocked
by the wind,
12. Give here what to us belongs, here give it to us —
And if thou givest not, by Allâh! I will cry out,
13. Surely cry like her whose only child is lost Or like a she-camel deprived of her young and forgotten by the herdsmen.
14. Let those who dwell in villages hear me
When I say: "I desire redress for the public insult."
15. Him who shunned us we also will shun, though he asks our protection,
For a thirsty one no prayers will help.
16. If we desired [a bride] from the settlers, we should find many of them,
But we said that there is more honor in the ways of
17. She whom we desired refused us, [the Bedouins.
And none knows what is for the best and where to seek virtuous people.

The poet was Fejşal al-ʿAnḳari; the reciters, Mḥammad al-Ḳazīb, Ġwād al-ʿĀni, and Ḥmār abu ʿAwwād. Turki eben Ḥmejd eben ʿArejʿer, the chief of the Beni Ḥâled, camping by the Persian Gulf in the territory of al-Ḥasa, had a good friend in Fejşal al-ʿAnḳari, the elder of a small village near al-Başra. Fejşal negotiated in Turki's name with the authorities, sent him foodstuffs, cloth, arms, and ammunition, advanced him money, and took in exchange camels and horses, which he sold to Persia and India. With the approach of the mid-summer season, al-kejš, Fejşal used to leave his village with his servants for a change of air on a visit to Turki; bwaḳt al-kejš jiṭlaʿ ʿend al-bedw jebaddel hawa. The latter had a daughter, Fejşal a son, and the fathers agreed together that their children should marry. It happened that at the beginning of mid-summer both Fejşal and his son came to Turki for a long visit. On the first day an old fat she-camel was killed in their honor. On the next day the Bedouins arranged an equestrian display, leʿeb al-hejl, depicting a fight with the enemy, in which both Fejşal and his son took part, the women standing by their tents, meanwhile, to watch the riders circling around the camp. A female relative of Turki's daughter called her attention to Fejşal's son's performance, praising his strength and dexterity. The girl's answer, however, was: "Let him be gone from us! A rider from a village is fit only for trade, kubbih ʿanna ḥajjâl al-eġra zejn at-taşfiḥ," and she would not hear of becoming the mother of settlers. This caused much laughter among the other women who heard the words; they shouted them from tent to tent, and before long even the children cried: "Ḥajjâl al-eġra zejn at-taşfiḥ." This insult naturally pained old Fejşal deeply, especially coming from the girl whom he had selected for the wife of his brave son, and he made preparations to leave, but Turki succeeded in appeasing him.

Soon after this incident Turki's herds were suddenly attacked by the Fẓûl, a kin of the Zefir tribe. Responding to the alarm cries, the riders hastened to defend the herds but encountered superior numbers and were slowly beaten back to the camp. In order to raise the courage and perseverance of his warriors Turki had a fancy litter fastened to a she-camel, in which his daughter had to seat herself. A virgin sitting in fancy litters and inciting warriors to fight is called 'Aṭfa', the same name being also applied to the litters. Throwing aside her kerchief, loosening her hair, and unfastening the clasp which held the shirt below her throat, she placed herself in the litter. Her girl friends, likewise, mounted she-camels and rendering at the top of their voices the sounds called onomatopoeically zarârît, mingled in the thickest of the fray. For a while they succeeded in bracing up the courage of both their kin and friends, but the superiority of numbers soon told. Fighter after fighter began to disappear, some being killed, many wounded; of others, again, the tired mares refused to obey any longer.

Finally the 'Atfa and her female companions found themselves among the tents again. When it became certain that the enemy would capture the tents, the girls called to the 'Atfa to hide, as it would be the greatest insult to the reigning family as well as to the whole tribe should the enemy capture the 'Atfa too. Turki's daughter drove her animal in front of her father's tent, compelled it to kneel, jumped off and, unhooking the litter, tried to pull it inside; but the tent was already surrounded by the enemy, shouting: "Seize the 'Atfa, seize the 'Atfa!" Thoroughly frightened, the girl called on the 'Arej'er kin to help her, tenha âl 'arej'er, but their battle cry sounded only in a few places and at great distance.

Seeing herself deserted by her own kin, the 'Atfa caught sight of Fejşal and his son sitting in the men's compartment of the tent with their servants, and appealed for help to them. In an instant everything was changed. Fejşal, his son, and their men quickly mounted their horses, seized the horses of the enemy, who had scattered to rob the tents, cut their girths and took off their bridles, which they stowed in their own saddlebags, and then began to slay the surprised enemy. In a little while the whole camp was filled with riderless horses without saddles or bridles, a great number of the enemy were lying among the tents, and the rest sought safety in flight, pursued by Fejşal's troop and Turki's men who had now rallied. There was much joy over the unexpected turn affairs had taken, especially as many of the warriors came back with one or two mares, claiming to have lifted their riders out of the saddles.

Before long Turki's tent was crowded with both young and old warriors who boasted of their various achievements, while the chief's daughter listened behind the low partition dividing the tent. When she saw Fejşal's party returning she stepped up to the partition, took hold of the middle tent pole, and said:

"As sure as I hold the middle pole so surely do you all deserve to be chased out by my father. Here you are, bragging that you have swept the riders from their saddles, that the enemy were afraid of you and fled. Where are your proofs?"

Turki knew her to be in the right but tried to appease her with the words: "Yes, these youths have proved their mettle, they do not exaggerate, mâ jekasşerûn."

"Chase them away, papa, all of them. The man who saved us has not come yet."

"Thou art right, my girl," replied the father, already greeting Fejşal with his son and servants, who were now seen at some distance.

Fejşal's party dismounted, exchanged greetings with Turki, and, sitting down beside him, leaned their tired bodies against camel saddles. As soon as they were seated, Turki's daughter came in, walked straight through the men, and kissed Fejşal on the head. This made all present flush with amazement. Then she stepped up to the bags which had been taken from Fejşal's horses and, pulling out the halters with which they were crammed, she cried out:

"O you braggarts! Was it you who captured the mares? Here are the proofs. I saw who saved the 'Aţfa and in what manner. Father, I would not have any of these youths for my husband. Give me the son of al-'Anḳari."

Turki looked at Fejşal, who said: "After dinner." He then replied: "Ask Allâh's protection, my daughter. After dinner I shall ask for you."

Towards evening the girl was adorned by the women, and all expected Fejşal to ask for her as a wife for his son. But Fejşal kept silent. At last Turki reminded him of what all were expecting him to say. Then catching up a rebâba, Fejşal played a tune and said: "Min 'âfana 'afnâh low çân râli; him who refuses us, we also refuse though he be ever so dear to us."

The girl, who was listening behind the tent partition, fainted, after which the poem cited above was declaimed by Fejşal.

Verse 1. Warâk according to the generally accepted explanation is equivalent to lêh (or lês), for what cause? wherefore? The pronunciation "jerješ" was defended by both Mḥammad and Ġwâd, who claimed that jerješ means brows, whereas Ĥmâr said "jâ riš al-aj̃n," which, of course, means the same thing. An eğra is a small village or hamlet with huts built of mud bricks. Taşfiḥ or tahrîf signifies any act performed for money or simply as a display. 2. Ḥabîna stands for the activity of the participators in small predatory excursions or of the scouts sent to find out by whom certain herds are owned and the whereabouts and size of the enemy's camps. They often have to crawl on their bellies so as to escape notice and avoid bringing destruction upon themselves and their comrades. 3. Ḥwaʿ is the call to supper during a raid. Fejşal enumerates his deeds among the Bedouins. 5. Habbt ar-rîḥ is a favorable wind, a good opportunity for success, booty. The partakers in a raid shout when mounting their animals: "Habbî lana jâ riḥâna, blow us, O breeze [to our success]!" 7. Senîna is a sharp saber.

Difficulties Due to Kinsmen

Jâ ḥamad jâ-l-hnejdi	O Ḥamad al-Hnejdi!
žetalni hawâk	Love for thee has been the ruin of me;
w-an-nâs brağʿa-llâh	While others put their hope in Allâh,
w-ana birağʿâk.	I put my hope in thee.

Enhazem jâ selîm	It were well for thee to flee;
lâ tabet al-ḥalaʿ	Do not pass the night behind the camp!
şâḥebi min žedîm	My friend has long ago
sammani bel-ṛalaʿ.	Poisoned me with love.

The maiden warns her lover against the meetings at night behind the camp. Ḥalaʿ means everything behind the camp. Ṛalaʿ is the passion of love.

*Jâ šowk mâ taʿti-l-mabri kalb al-maḥâlîž jadrûni jâ bint ana ḥâreben ṭabʿi lijje ʿala-l-bîz ʿorbûni jâ bint ana-ḥâf min rabʿi
w-al-kill jabrič min dûni.*

Sweetheart, wilt thou not give me what I most desire
Before the creatures discover me?
O maiden! I am ruining my character,

Since many fair ones have received pledges from me.
 O maiden! I fear my own folks,
 Though, whoever it be that wants thee, is beneath me.

*Jâ šowk hedd al-židle
 w-esma' hali nâdûni kaṭṭâ'aten lal-lowze
 w-allâh mâ jehjûni.*

O darling mine! loose my forehead hair,
 Hear, my kin is calling me.
 They would cut my throat and,
 By Allâh himself! would not spare my life.

Masfûh kalbi hâk al-masfûh masfûhena al-jowm mâ dâġi akbal 'alejna-hleh raddûh akfa' čema-l-rošen men'âġi hebbet 'ašîri sukkaren dakḡûh min bën ašâfîh darrâġi.

The little fool whom I love, the little stupid,
 My little fool has not come to our tryst tonight.
 He started towards us, but his kinsfolk made him turn
 And he went back like a swaying twig. [back,
 The kiss of my darling is like sugar, powdered,
 Bubbling out from between his lips.

Masfûh means one who has lost his heart, žâje' kalbeh, either from love or fear, one who has no self-control, knows not what he is doing, and acts as though feeble minded. Dâġi is a young man going on a dark night to meet his lover. Rošen men'âġi is a twig that sways continually, owing either to the wind or, if it grows in a stream, to the flow of the water.

*Jâ ḡalaf jâ ḡalaf
 ġowz az-zêne ḡalaf er'aha 'end ahalha manâmha ṭaraf.*

O Ḥalaf! O Ḥalaf!
 The beauty's husband has gone on a journey;
 But see, she stays with her kinsfolk
 And sleeps at the very border.

Dalaf means "went abroad either to work for wages or on business" — for example, to work as a driver of camels bought by the 'Aḳejl. The wife of the absent man left his tent to return to her kin, whose tent was pitched on the very border of the camp.

*Jâ şâhebi w-an-nebi mâ-ḳfejt
w-lâ-trejt ana-l-bowḳ min ḥîni raşb 'alejje jâ-l-razi ġazzejt darben 'ala-ḡ-ḡiż ḥâdîni.*

O my beloved, by Allâh himself, I am not untrue to thee!
From the very beginning never have I thought of treachery.
Against my will, O my desired! as I told thee,
By a road leading to distress he drives me.

The second cousin or another near relative, eben al-'amm, presses his own claim on the girl. She apologizes to her lover. W-an-nebi is a very common saying, used even by the Christians. Aḳfa' signifies a fighter who in fear turns his horse around. To this, special blame is attached, as he thus betrays his comrades and exposes them to greater danger. Min ḥin means "from the very beginning"; lâ-trejt al-bowḳ, "no thought of treachery has occurred to me"; razi, "the desired, the one eagerly expected"; arzi, "I long for, I wish for." Ġazzejt, for ḥačejt or şihet. A ḥâdi is a camel driver.

*Mişerfe jâ ḥajâti nâdîni radejt
la'an abu min jerodd
'an alli barejt.*

Mişerfe, thou life of mine,
Call me, for I have lost my way.
Cursed be the father of him who keeps me
From what I desire.

In a dark night the lover, in a terrain unknown to him and cut up by numerous gullies, cannot find the spot agreed on for the meeting with his sweetheart; he also curses her folk, who will not allow him to come to their tent.

1. *Jâ wenneti wennet ba'rîn telle
biḥowş eben 'âmertes'at ajjâm be'ḳâl*

2. al-bard ġâhen w-al-maṭar mardefen leh
wa' meżġilhen 'an ħerwat aš-šams beżlâl
3. waliġġehen 'abden w-lâ-ħad faṭen leh
w-lâ zunneti żawihen jašbat al-ġâl
4. ċân en šowkak żâ'ed bħawṭaten leh
šowki ma' al-bedwân jarha ma' al-âl
5. fowk awzaħen ma' zemlen ahalha teġill leh
jatli za'an šejħen ma' ad-daw w-aš-šwân
6. jâ mâ ħala kattat šarâja mużelle
wâdi-l-mra ċân al-obejjeż ma'ah sâl.

1. This is my lament, a lament for the camels of Telle,
In Eben 'Âmer's courtyard fettered for nine days.
2. The cold and the rain have come upon them;
Alas! at noon they rest in shade instead of in the sun.
3. They are cared for by a negro, with none to control him,
So that, methinks, the strongest of them will not climb
the slope.
4. While thy lover squats in his garden,
My sweetheart slowly rides with the Bedouins in the air, vibrating with heat,
5. On a white camel and watches the pack camels of her kin, Following the chief's family over the vast plain and flint-strewn rolling land.
6. How fair is the green in the shady gullies of The valley al-Mra, when water flows through the valley al-Obejjeż.

The poet, Ḥamad eben Nâjef eben Ša'îlân, had a sweetheart named Telle, married by her kin to the settler Eben 'Âmer of the village of Čâf in the Sirĥân depression. They brought her to him towards the end of February. There being no pasture in the neighborhood, they fettered the camels in the courtyard, intending to return the next day. But at night a cold rain began to fall, and the party, coming as it did from the sunny and warm Nefûd without winter clothing, was compelled to remain in Čâf for nine days. After their return Ḥamad composed this poem. The reciter was Met'eb walad Kurdi.

Verse 4. Ĥawṭa is a date palm grove enclosed by a fence. Âl means air quivering with heat at noon and distorting the outlines of all objects. 6. Wâdi, or Še'îb, al-Mra' joins al-Obejjeż valley on its right side.

Rivalry in Love

*Jâ rabb jâ râzek hadlân
 bumm al-‘ujûn al-meẓâlîlî min ‘okb mâ jetûlî khejşân mitl jetîm al-mahâlîlî.*

O Lord, thou bestowed'st on Hadlân
 A maiden with eyes shaded with long lashes,
 After his humbling of Khejşân, so That the latter now is like an orphaned, weaned young camel.

The lover Hadlân compelled Khejşân, his sweetheart's cousin, to abandon his claim to her. A mahlûl is a camel more than three months old, which feels lost when parted from its mother. The other she-camels drive it away, because it pricks them when it tries to suck with the sharp piece of wood fastened to its upper jaw. No she-camel will advise it where and how to graze. If the herdsman did not take care of it, the poor little beast would perish of hunger and the injuries inflicted by the she-camels.

*Hawwel jâ râ'i-ş-şakra hawwel w-e'îni 'elûmak en cân 'âşek rejri
 lâ w-an-nebi mâ-lûmak.*

Alight, thou rider on the sorrel mare,
 Alight and give me thy news!
 Even if thou shouldst love another,
 Verily, by Allâh himself, I will not reproach thee with it.

The loving maiden desires certain news of her lover's treachery.

*Jâ şowk kalbi rada şa'nên tefarraken w-ent malfâhen
 ent talkâhen behargên zên
 w-illa ma' al-hejd tanhâhen helja 'aşîri had al-ħaşfên ma' ar-rahârîh marbâhen.*

O sweetheart! my heart is like a stream divided into two channels;

Chattering and evildoing,
 I would fain, when a slanderer comes to the Arabs,
 Take his measure and make my dearest ready,
 So that we might saddle our strong she-camels, mount
 And ride directly for al-Ḥôr and Şfajje. [them,

The lover wants to settle with the slanderer and then depart with his beloved, Nîra, for the inner desert. The price Nîra's kin ask for her is very high; in order to pay it, the lover wishes for a hundred yellow she-camels.

Aċġleh means "take his measure, settle with him"; uċajjel, prepare, make ready, load, weigh. Al-Ḥôr is a depression in the center of al-Ḥamâd; the Habra Şfajje is located there.

*Jâ zejd lâ tazreb al-maḥbûb
 hw şâhebi w-ent kowmâni howse low żarżarat at-towb lâ jâ ba'ad kill ḥajjâni.*

O Zejd, do not beat my dear one!
 She is my friend, thou mine enemy.
 When Howse lifts her garment,
 Oh, that I may live longer than the whole kin!

Şâheb means a friendly tribe, kowmâni a hostile one. Żarżarat at-towb: she raises the dress covering her breasts in such a way that they show through the enlarged slit. If a girl or a woman wants to encourage her kinsmen to the greatest bravery in a dangerous fight, she does so not by words alone but also by significant deeds. So, for instance, she opens her dress on the breast as a sign of how she means to reward the bravest. Her lover then forgets everything else, only wishing not to perish in the fight, in order that he may enjoy the promised reward. Lâ jâ ba'ad means "Oh, that I may not be absent, that I may not die." Ḥajjân are the kinsfolk, who keep together even in a fight.

*Jâ wanneti wannejtaha
 w-an-nâs mâ darjaw baha lâ wâhani min ġâza'aha
 bên al-berîm w-tawbaha.*

This is the lament which I utter,
 And none knows of it;

Verily, he has stricken me who lay by her side
Between her leather belt and shirt.

Ġaza° means to roll or throw down; ġāza°, to lie by somebody; enġaza°, to lie sideways.

1. Jâ bint ana kalbi °alejkom °ašâni
râ°en lekom jâ bint kalbi nušûhi
2. jâ munakraš ad-der°ân sâfi-t-temâni
dâbat °alejhen jâ-rjaš al-°ajn rūhi
3. čân al-hbejjeb nijjeteh mâ sakâni
waš °âd jâ-l-°aslûġ bâbat srûhi
4. jâ-t-tirf jâ ġâli-t-temân al-wazâni
mitl al-barad min rûs mizneten jalûhi.

1. O maiden! my heart rebels for thy sake,
My heart which is a true herdsman to thy family.
2. O thou with tattooed arms and eight bright teeth
Which destroy my repose; O thou with long, thick eye-
3. If the beloved will not reward me, [brows!
Why should I drive out to the pasture, O thou of the fair shape?
4. O thou twig, which cleansest her eight even teeth,
So that they are like hailstones that glitter from the heights of a black cloud.

°Awde abu Burkân al-Kwêčbi loved a girl named Rušna.
To gain her he hired himself out to her father as a herdsman.
But Rušna did not return his love at once, so he composed this song and sent it to her.

Verse 2. Munakraš (or munakkaš), painted or engraved.

3. °Aslûġ is a girl neither thin nor fat, but nimble and of perfect form.

1. Al-°awd °âl w-°alejteh ġarhadijje
bel-°own °awdak °âjezen leh tesâfiž
2. jâ-l-°awd lâ tečseb be°omrak ħatijje
tara-l-manâja nowb telfi tawâfiž
3. ma°i ršâš w-binduken °ademlijje
milfâzaha jerm-as-saħar w-al-ma°âlîž
4. melħen nazîf w-minžihâteh idejje
w-ħesseħ čema neġmen žarab leh šawâhîž
5. rušna ħamar jâ ršejd mâ hi ħafijje
al-ħubba alli mâ waṭowha-l-mahâlîž

6. waṣṣ kṛānha tisaʿīn ġowzen w-mijje
ʿalejh min riš an-naʿājem zerāniz
 7. šebh at-trajja jowm tudaffež delijje
tenbet ber-rijāz al-maḥājel zemāliz
 8. jezūṣ kalbi jowm taṭri ʿalejje
zowʿat ġehām min al-ḥadab lat-tešārīž.

1. The old man does wrong and his evil deed is notorious,
 Verily, thine old man ought to be slapped.
2. O old man! let not thy sins be the only loot in thy life,
 For see, death will come sometime to settle with thee.
3. I have with me lead bullets and tried rifle;
 Whatever leaves its muzzle will reach both entrails and
 heart.
4. Clean powder I have also prepared with my own hands;
 When it fires it sounds like a star falling upon high mountains.
5. Ṙuṣna, O Ršejd! is like the moon, she cannot be hidden,
 Or like a dome never trodden by men.
6. Oh, her tresses! they are a hundred and ninety pairs
 And ostrich feathers are entwined in them.
7. She is like the Pleiades; when they pour out the water from their bucket,
 They make the grass seed sprout in the bare lowlands.
8. When I think of her my heart leaps Like camel herds hurrying from al-Ḥadab to the inner desert.

The previous poem finding favor with the maiden, she began to pay more attention to ʿAwde, and they hoped to marry some day. But Ṙuṣna was claimed by her kinsman, Ršejd, a man already old, quite gray and sickly, of whom the girl would hear nothing. Her parents, ʿAwde, and she herself begged the old man to let her marry ʿAwde, but Ršejd insisted that she must become his wife. Then ʿAwde composed this second poem.

Verse 1. ʿAwd, old stallion, is used sneeringly for šāʾejb (or iḥtijār), old man. ʿĀl ʿala flān has the same meaning as taʿadda ʿala flān, he hurt somebody; ʿaʾje, the same as taʿdije, to hurt, but in a disparaging sense meaning "he commits an evil deed." Ġarḥadijje signifies an affair spoken of everywhere with contumely. Ršejd's behavior was, therefore, generally condemned as dishonorable. ʿĀʾjez leh or muḥtāğ means "he would deserve, he would need"; bel-own (for beṣ-ṣaḥîḥ), there is no objection, with the consent of all. 2. Tawâfiṣ or bel-wafak, beṣ-ṣadfe; tawâfakû or taṣâdafû: they happened to settle it among themselves, they punished each other. 3. Rṣâṣ are balls, usually leaden ones. ʿAdemliḡje is an old rifle with which the marksman is so well acquainted that he never misses his aim. Saḥar may mean the lungs, liver, or stomach, while maʿâlîṣ signifies the heart and the arteries leading to it. 4. "My hands have mixed, anṣeḡan, this powder." The Bedouins frequently prepare their own gunpowder, trusting it more than that sold by the wandering merchants, who mix it with crushed charcoal, while the Bedouin knows that his powder is pure, naṣîf. Anḡaḡt hal-binduḡ, however, may mean "I loaded this rifle." The sound of a shot is compared to the sound of a meteor falling on a high hill. According to the Rwala this is a frequent occurrence, and they preserve the pieces of broken meteors as keepsakes. 5. Thus ʿAwde threatens to shoot Rṣejd, if he does not give up Ruṣna. Rṣejd would like to marry the girl secretly, but that is no longer possible, as everybody is talking about her and she is looked upon in the same manner as the moon or the dome dedicated to some Mohammedan saint, which can be observed from afar. Both ʿAwde and Ruṣna were encamped at that time in an-Nuḡra, a region south of Damascus, where along the old Pilgrim Road to Mecca many white domes were built in honor of various saints. Ruṣna is then likened to a dome trodden by no man as yet, hence a virgin. 6. She has very thick hair and her tresses end in ostrich feathers entwined in the hair, zerânîṣ. 7. All that Ruṣna handles succeeds, grows, takes life, just as the trajjâwi rain gives new life to the grass seed. The constellation of the Pleiades catches water in a large bailing bucket and then pours it over the scorched lowland. Rijâṣ are depressions in the bare plains into which most of the water runs, fertilizing them also with the mud it carries along. The seeds of the annuals, which sometimes lie dormant for two to four years in these depressions, begin to sprout after an abundant trajjâwi rain, and with more rain the lowland becomes a blooming meadow. 8. The thought of Ruṣna quickens the beating of ʿAwde's heart. The camels do not like the pasture in the settled territory; they yearn for the inner desert, to which they proceed either to the east of Damascus or to the south of Derʿât. Near the latter town rises the hillock of al-Ḥadab; from here the Rwala march south-southeast to the inner desert, lat-tešârîž. The inner desert is called šerk.

1. Ḳaṣart riġli ʿan murâka-t-tuwâjel
w-ʿajni tšâtelni ʿala râs mešrâf
2. jâ-l-karm mâni ʿan zaʿalhom masâjel
ḳalbi ʿala waẓẓâḥ an-nijâb mîlâf
3. al-ʿajn ʿajn alli tadebb al-masâjel
ḳalbi ʿalejha mežrešen jûžef wžâf
4. mâ-nsah law hattaw ʿalejje-n-netâjel
allâh w-law-l-žijâl jenzel ʿala čâf
5. allâh w-ṭawîl al-felġ jenzel beḥâjel
w-ḥawrân jenzel min waraʾ bird w-ruwâf
6. w-ḥâmi rarîfen žâl danna-r-rahâjel
raḥal w-ʿazzal leh maẓâhîr w-slâf
7. hatta-nni-nsa nâkeẓat al-žedâjel
w-amši btûʿ alli ḥačaʾ li bel-enkâf
8. jâ-bu tamad mežed šeraʾ kill ʿâjel
jâ zebeḥ min ḥallawh w-al-ġejš muḥtâf.

1. My legs I have shortened by climbing high hills,
And my eyes draw me steadily to the summit.
2. O sir, it is not their anger I dread,
For my heart is given to her with the white teeth.
3. As she warily creeps through the channel
My heart anxiously follows her and at times ceases to beat.
4. I shall not forget her till they shovel earth upon me —
By Allâh! even if the mountain Žijâl settled in Čâf,
5. By Allâh! or if Hermon should settle in Ḥâjel,
And Ḥawrân quarter itself beyond the Bird and Rwâf,
6. Or if it should be said of Ḥâmi Raṛîf that he took his pack camels,
When moving, and separated them from the fighters —
7. Still I should not forget her, who unbraids the hair on her temples,
Nor obey him who always tells me to return without booty.
8. O father of Tamad, thou who correctest the wrongdoer
And protectest him whom the frightened camel riders have deserted.

Abu Tamad, the father of Ruṣna, advised ʿAwde to try to forget her, because in any case he would not get her to wife. ʿAwde answered him in this poem.

Verse 1. 'Awde climbs high hills to see the route taken by his sweetheart, who prowls or creeps cautiously, tadebb, to the channels in order to meet him without being observed. 2. Ḳarm is a poetical form of address, referring here to Ṛusna's father. 4. Netâjel is the earth with which a stone-covered grave is filled. The hill of Žijâl is 46 kilometers northeast of al-Ġowf. 5. Tawil al-Felġ (the High One With Snow) is the name given by the Rwala to the Hermon mountains, which are covered with snow most of the year. Ḥâjel lies about six hundred kilometers southeast of Hermon. Bird and Rwâf are mountains about four hundred kilometers south of the Hawrân. 6. Ḥâmi Raṛîf rises beyond Tiberias. Dannû ar-rahâjel, bring hither the female pack camels, is the order of the tent owner when he intends to move. Meṣâhîr are the camels when laden with tents, utensils, and litters for the women. Salâf are warriors riding one or two kilometers in front of the laden camels. 7. Enkâf is the return from a raid without success and without booty. 'Awde will not desist until Ṛusna becomes his wife. 8. He who tries to drink from a wooden cup, but continues talking all the time, cannot pay attention to what he is doing, so that the cup often inclines to one side and the water is spilt. Then his comrades correct him with the words: "O So and So, the cup is tilted, al-žedah mutašâweren." Likewise one who does wrong also bends, partly because he is ashamed, partly with intent to deceive. Abu Tamad makes straight or rebukes such a crooked fellow, ṣeṛa' kill 'âjel, and thus prevents injury.

THE WEDDING

The wedding, as a rule, takes place immediately after the wooing. In the morning some one—even a slave—kills before the bridegroom's tent a she-camel, as a dbîht al-'ars, wedding sacrifice. Neither of the betrothed needs to be present. Towards evening a small round tent, heğra, is pitched by the women near by and the bridal bed made there. Among the poorer people a corner of their inhabited tent is partitioned off for the young couple. Two or three of the bridegroom's female relatives go to the bride to bring her towards sunset to the prepared tent. A little later the bridegroom also enters, after which the tent is closed altogether, jehağğeren 'alejh heğraten.

There are no special wedding ceremonies. Part of the meat from the slaughtered she-camel is distributed among the members of the bride's kin and acquaintances, the rest is served for supper in the bridegroom's tent. Nobody is invited, nobody brings any wedding presents. There is no party, no dancing; neither the girls nor women sing or shout with joy. Often even the relatives of either the bridegroom or the bride do not know that there is going to be or has been a wedding. Neither does the slaughtering of a she-camel signify anything especially important, because an old or wounded animal is killed quite frequently. The tiny round tent, heğra, alone shows that there has been a wedding. But if it was put up at sunset and the camp moves elsewhere next morning nobody takes notice of it, except perhaps the nearest neighbors.

The morning after the wedding night the bridegroom goes to the men's compartment, rab'a, of his family tent, where he is saluted with the words: "Be blessed, may good be thy portion! lâfi 'alejk al-hejir." The bride is likewise visited by the women, who greet her: "Mayest thou bring good to thy cousin!" The young bride receives a gift from her father-in-law, then leaves the heğra to join the other women of her husband's family in the tent, although she need not work for seven days after the wedding. Her husband attends to his work as usual, also buying her trousseau, which consists of various blankets and rugs, as, for instance, the bsât, wool carpet, nasije, thin fabric rug, siğâde, prayer carpet, lhâf, European quilts, and of dresses and kerchiefs. The trousseau is given to the wife after, never before, the wedding night, elja-ras 'alejha, and she is not obliged to return it.

If a widow or a divorced woman marries again, she is free from work for three days only.

When a man marries for the first time he stays with his wife for seven nights, but if he already has another wife he devotes himself to her also.

A young husband is greeted with the words: "Blessed be the tent! mbârak al-bejt," his answer being: "May (Allâh) bless thee still more! bâreč lak bel-mubârak." When speaking of a woman's husband the word rağolha, her man, is used; of a man's wife, mruteh (or hurmeteh), his wife; and the husband addresses his wife as râ'ijet bejtена, the mistress of our tent.

The Rwala usually have only one woman in a tent, seldom two, and very rarely three. A young Rwejlî almost always marries a girl whom he loves, and remains faithful to his young wife till the sixth or seventh month of her pregnancy. Then his love cools and in many cases he begins to look for another girl or divorced woman whom he also marries, unless he is setting out on a raid. If the latter is of several weeks' duration and he comes back exhausted, he desires no new marriage and waits for his wife's confinement. If she bears a boy, the young father is so happy that he clings to her again and banishes the thought of all others from his mind. If the wife behaves with sense, keeps the tent in order, can cook cleanly, is not strongheaded and quarrelsome, the husband often remains faithful to her all his life.

PLURALITY OF WIVES

In case a husband is not fully satisfied with his first wife, he generally takes a second one. The first wife in the beginning is much displeased with her new companion or neighbor—ġârti, as she calls her—and abuses her to the best of her ability. "Why didst thou come to me? Couldst thou find no one but my man? O thou daughter of So and So! O thou cursed in both thy parents! Lêh ġîtini mâ lažejtî rejîr ġowzi enti jâ bint flân jâ mal'ûnet wâlîdejn." However, the resistance put up by the first wife is, as a rule, not of long duration. In a comparatively short time peace is concluded by the women and they live together like sisters.

When a man has two wives, each cooks for him a day in turn, and on that day he usually eats and sleeps with her. Such is the woman's right, ħakķha, which nobody is allowed to violate. If he sees that his wife is dissatisfied, the man asks: "What art thou angry about? I have not infringed thy right. Lêh taz'alîn mâ-ħtejt 'alejċ beħakķeċ." Even when he does not love his wife, the man should devote himself to her on the nights belonging to her. He need not have sexual intercourse with her, but neither must he with the woman he loves. In such cases he usually sleeps in the men's compartment, or lying down at his wife's head he says: "To night I wish for nothing, mâ-nî bârî hal-lejle," and the woman dares not say a word. Sometimes the women haggle among themselves: "Let me have the man tonight!" "What wilt thou give me for it?" If they come to an agreement, the woman who has the right of sleeping with the man that night, dowrah, says to him: "I grant thee furlough, now go to thy wife over there! ana msâmḥatk eršed ʿenda maratḥ hunâk." But should the man infringe the right of one of his wives and spend several nights with the other, the deceived woman may rage as much as she will, but it will not do her any good, especially if her husband has paid to her kin the price asked for her. If a near relative of the woman dies, the man may and even should have intercourse with her for several nights, to comfort her in this way at least. During her monthly period, ʿalejha-l-ḥejz, the man must not touch the woman for from three to five days, and not for forty days after the birth of a child. During the monthly period the woman cooks and eats with the others as usual. If a man wants to beget a boy, he must have intercourse with a woman on the night of Thursday to Friday, ġâmaʿaha lejlt al-ġumʿa, as the name of Friday, ġumʿa, recalls sexual intercourse, ġemâʿ.

TREATMENT AND DUTIES OF WOMEN

The rôle of the woman is to bear and bring up children, to prepare the meals, to sew, and to pitch, strike, and load the tents, teḥajjeṭ, tebni, tarmi, tešil al-bejt; also to load up the entire outfit of the tent, to collect the camel's hair and weave from it the bags and various saddle ornaments, tentaʿ, to procure water, trâwi, to gather fuel, teḥaṭṭeb, to go out to buy wheat and barley, tesfer, and to supply the mare with fresh ših and naši, tešajjeḥ w-teḥušš lal-faras, etc.

The man who loves his wife helps her in all these labors. He never lets her pitch, strike, or load up the tent alone, but along with his herdsman, servants, and sons always aids her. The camels carrying the supplies are guarded on the march by a servant or slave, the master or his son once in a while coming to see whether any of the pack camels needs help. Hauling water from a distant well is likewise usually the work of the son, servant, or herdsman; the master himself in this case drives out the herd to the pasture. A careful husband often loads two or three camels with fuel, especially dry branches and small stumps of raza or arṭa — all this to save his beloved wife labor. Even the grass and hay is brought in by the sons and servants.

On the other hand, a man not on good terms with his wife lets her do all the work herself, urging her on to greater speed all the time. When the whole camp is on the move, the man saddles both his mare and camel, lights a fire near his tent, makes coffee for himself, and watches his wife with the servant or daughter strike and load the tent, furniture, and supplies. When this is done, he attaches the mare by the rein to the camel, mounts the latter, and rides forward to the head of the moving camp where he joins the warriors, salaf, not troubling in the least about his pack camels. On arriving at the new camping ground he selects a place for his tent, takes off the saddles from the animals, leans against the camel saddle, and waits for his wife to come and pitch the tent, spread out the rugs, and bring fuel. Only when all this is done will he enter the tent, build a fire, and make his coffee. Thus he acts the master until a reconciliation with the wife takes place; then he helps her again.

When guests arrive in the man's absence the woman says to them: "See, O guests, the master of this tent is not at home, tarâkom jâ zujûf râ'i-l-bejt mâ hw hâzer." Then she brings into the part of the tent reserved for the men fuel and red-hot coals, gives the guests the canister with coffee beans, water, and the coffeepots, and then returns to the women's compartment to prepare supper. When this is ready, if the herdsman or the servant is not back by that time, she calls the youngest of the guests or the one she knows to be the lowest in rank and hands him the dish with the food to carry to the others. If the wife is acquainted with the guests, she joins them after supper, drinks coffee with them, and amuses herself in their company till midnight.

DIVORCE

The husband cannot be compelled to divorce his wife; there are no reasons which would either require or prevent it, en tallezha 'ala kejf. If he wants to divorce her he can do so without telling her the reason, even should she beg him on her knees to keep her. Often he does not know the reason himself, for he has none. He simply takes a notion to divorce her and he does so, even though he may regret it soon afterwards. This is done most frequently by the younger chiefs who for political reasons are obliged to advance themselves by marrying the daughters of other chiefs. After six months or, at most, one year they divorce their young wives, regardless of whether they have borne them children or are pregnant, and marry another girl or woman, so that they never have more than one wife in the tents.

According to common opinion, a man should divorce his wife as soon as the one becomes disagreeable to the other. As the proverb has it: "Reproach a herdsman or a wife with nothing; if thou hast occasion to reproach them frequently, thou hadst better dismiss them; ar-râ'i w-al-mara lâ tenâ-kerhom elja tabri tenâkerhom daššerhom." When divorcing a woman the man says to her: "Go away! See, now thou art divorced and may attach thyself to another man! kowteri tarâč tâlež w-ar-rağğâl âlež." Or he says: "Thou art free altogether. Thy saddle cover is spread over thee! Hažra mazfi âlejč ģelâleč." This means that in the same way as a saddled mare may be ridden by any one, any man may marry a divorced, and thus perfectly free, woman. The divorced wife gathers together her dresses, pillows, blankets, and rugs, saddles her she-camels, and loads her property. Just as she is about to depart the man says to her: "As soon as thou reachest the tent of thy kin and settest foot in the tent of thy kin, thy divorce will overtake thee in the tent of thy kin, elja wašalti bejt haleč talâžeč jeğič jâselč ila bejt haleč," for on the way from her husband's tent to that of her parents she is still under his protection. The moment she enters the tent of her kin, she breaks definitely the ties binding her to her husband and belongs to her ahl, kin, and to no one else. As long as her father is living, he is the representative of the whole kin for the divorced woman; after his death her eldest brother is the representative. If there are no brothers, the duty falls to the nearest relative, either an uncle or cousin.

The divorced woman may be remarried three times by her former husband. If he will not remarry her he proclaims: "Thou art divorced three times, enti tâlež bet-talât al-ħawârem." The man who divorces his wife without claiming what he has paid to her relatives may limit her freedom, jeħağğer tağğir, by stipulating: "I let any one have thee except So and So, to him I will not give thee; an-uħallîč likill aħad 'oķob flân (or kowd flân, or rejr flân) mâni mħallîč leh." Or he may say: "Anybody may take thee but So and So, an-uħallîč likill aħad ja 'oķob (ja kowd or ja rejr) flân." When a man wants to marry a second time the woman whom he has divorced, her kin may ask a new siĵâk, dowry, for her, provided he has had no children by her and she is not pregnant. If the man divorces the wife of his own accord, he is not entitled to compensation, but if the wife asks her husband: "Let me go! ṭalležni," he may reply: "Bring what I have paid for thee! hâtî-lli warâč."

No quarreling, words of abuse, or lamentations of married couples are ever heard in the Rwala camps. A man ought never to be seen beating his wife or vice versa, as by doing so they would disgrace, ʿajb čebîr, themselves and their respective kins for all time. Woe to them, therefore, should they do so — for then the husband's kin and the woman's kin as well as all the neighbors would come over and expel them from both the camp and the tribe. This is the reason why a man never quarrels aloud with his wife, although he may often and thoroughly beat her, jeĵtelha (or jedebbaha), being careful, however, that nobody shall see him. In the daytime he does so in a corner of the tent, at night in bed. The punishment is applied with the stick used in driving his camel, and that unsparingly. The wife generally covers her face with the bedquilts or presses it into the pillows to prevent even the least sound of her crying from being heard. Otherwise the man might keep on beating her still longer, and any other man might come in, on hearing her, to assist the husband. If the ill-used woman complains to her relatives, she has to return to her husband without getting any satisfaction.

Mišref eben Kurdi once beat his young wife, a daughter of Prince an-Nûri, for more than an hour not only over her back but over the head as well, so that it was swollen for ten days. On complaining to her father, the only satisfaction she received was that she would get still more if she did not behave herself. She was known to torment Mišref in a hundred ways, while he repaid her with sound beatings. For no sooner was she born, than Mišref, her second cousin, claimed her for his future wife, ħağġarha. When she grew up she could not bear the sight of her bridegroom-to-be, but the more she scoffed at him, the more he insisted on marrying her. Prince an-Nûri himself and his son Nawwâf also begged Mišref to give the girl her freedom, but, appealing to his privilege as her nearest relative whom it is permissible for her to marry, eben al-ʿamm, he maintained that he would not do so before she had become his wife. Finally Nawwâf himself advised her to consent, comforting her with the hope that Mišref would free her immediately after the wedding. Then she answered: "I shall not disregard the counsel my father and my brother give me nor act against their advice, ana mâ-tla' min šowr abûj w-ahûj w-lâ-hâlef šowfathom." On the wedding night she escaped from the round tent, heğra, and would not allow Mišref to come near her. After becoming Mišref's wife she admitted that she was in love with Mamdûh eben Saṭṭâm and resolved to remain a virgin until she could marry him. Mišref, who loved her greatly and was now suffering not only from jealousy but also from the sneers of his friends, gave vent to his anger by beating her and swearing that he would never give her back her freedom.

A woman in fear of a beating leaves the tent and follows the first man she meets into his tent, or she may enter any tent, where she asks for protection. There she may stay as long as she pleases. Such a woman is called za'lâne. The owner of the tent sheltering her will never ask her to leave or to return to her husband's tent. The latter will, as a rule, send some relative or servant to her. When they return to him with the information that she is inclined to be reconciled with him, he waits for her at the time of the next moving, leads her camel to his tent, where he makes it kneel, and says: "Enter the tent! fûti-la-l-bejt." The wife obeys without further ado and takes up her work as if nothing had happened. But if the man is really angry with the woman who has run away from him to another tent he will not send her word to return to him; he ceases to care for her and pretends not to know her at all. Such a woman is to be pitied, indeed. Her husband is not obliged to feed or clothe her, because she has left him voluntarily; neither will he divorce her without receiving compensation, and her relatives are vexed with her for the disgrace she has put upon them. If she is not young and pretty, nothing is left to her but to work as a servant in some tent; if she is, she looks for some one to elope with her and thus help her to freedom.

In the case of dissolutions of the marital bonds as here described it is not always easy to return to the man his bride's dowry, if he has paid it in full. For her relatives may have already divided the amount among themselves and may be unwilling to restore it or make compensation. The woman who desires to be released for a compensation is called ‘ajûf. All she can do is to appeal to the sympathy of her kin. She calls on either her father, brother, uncle, or cousin, pleading: "I do not want him! Return what you have received from him!" But they try to evade her request with the words: "Go back! Thou surely wilt get used to him!" She, however, keeps on begging until she finally persuades one of them to help her. If she does not succeed and they all refuse to do anything for her, nothing remains for her but to elope, for should she seek protection from others against her own kin the father or brother could kill her, as she is considered to be the property of her father. He begot her, and her brother inherits her from him.

A man who divorces his wife, even if she has stayed only one night with him, must give her a camel and a pack saddle, hedâġe. Nobody has the right to take these away from the woman thus divorced, mutallaka. Yet anything in addition, karam, received from her husband his heir may demand back. The trousseau bought for her by the husband belongs to her only. In case she has young children she takes and cares for them till the age of seven; then they return to their father's tent.

In the later stages of pregnancy the divorced wife may remarry at once. If her pregnancy is not yet visible, she has to wait at least six months, leha ‘edda, and as soon as it is clear whether or not she bears the seed of her husband in her womb, she may become the wife of another. The Rwala fear quarrels and lawsuits regarding the paternity of a child born after a married couple has separated and therefore require the woman to wait. The disregard shown by the chiefs for this rule is often a cause of protracted litigation.

Thus, to give an instance, the chief Fahad eben Hazzâ‘ eben Ša‘lân divorced his wife, whom before long another chief, Ĥalaf âl Iden, took to his tent. After about a year she gave birth to a boy to whom she gave the name of Trâd and who grew to maturity in the tent of his father; but when he was about to marry he quarrelled with his father and moved to another tent. This was due to the story told him by his old slave that he was not the son of Ĥalaf but of Fahad, who had in the meantime become the prince of the Rwala. To Trâd Prince Fahad naturally seemed much grander than a small chief like Ĥalaf, and therefore he at once went to him, introducing himself as his son. Without giving the matter much consideration or making long inquiries, as he was at feud with Ḥalaf, Fahad acknowledged Ṭrâd as his son and asked his brother an-Nûri to give the young man his daughter to wife. But when an-Nûri acquainted the girl with this proposal she swore that she would never consent. On learning of this Fahad commanded an-Nûri, whom he wished to ruin: "Either thou bringest thy daughter to the heğra tent thyself, or it will be done by me without thy consent." An-Nûri therefore bade his female slaves to get the heğra in readiness and to bring his daughter there after sunset. The girl, however, in the meantime had persuaded her brother Nawwâf to wait for her at night by the place reserved for the riding camels and to save her from Ṭrâd. When this youth entered the heğra she began to converse with him, pretending to be sorry that she knew him so little and saying that she should be much happier if he would marry her for love and not from compulsion; and when Ṭrâd tried to assure her that she had already been the object of his desire for a long time, she asked him for proofs. Ṭrâd now began to cite at some length all the instances where and when he had seen and inquired about her, by whom he had sent word to her, etc. The time flew and the moon set. Suddenly she rose asking Ṭrâd's permission to step out in order to satisfy a natural necessity. Ṭrâd nodding his consent, she left to return no more. To the man guarding the female riding camels she gave the same reason that she had given Ṭrâd and then walked some distance farther into a small gully where Nawwâf was waiting for her with a saddled she-camel. He then leaped into the saddle, she took her seat behind him, and on they rode to Eben Ğandal.

Ṭrâd was patiently waiting for his bride in the tent all this time. Realizing at last that the girl had outwitted him, he was ashamed to alarm the camp and said in the morning that she had left with his consent. That very day Fahad received a visit from the chief Ḥalaf âl Iden with his wife, Ṭrâd's mother. Both swore that Ḥalaf was the real father of Ṭrâd, because, after having wedded Ḥalaf, the youth's mother had still had her monthly period three times in succession. Yet Ṭrâd appealed to Fahad to protect his son and not to believe a false oath. Fahad finally declared that Ḥalaf must appear in court at al-Ēla. The latter duly went to this settlement with three witnesses and, appealing to the judge there, laid his case before him and asked him for his decision. The judge took a long iron spoon used in roasting coffee, stuck it in the fire, and, when it became red-hot, asked the witnesses to examine Ḥalaf's tongue. As soon as this had been done, the judge quickly lifted the hot spoon to Ḥalaf's mouth. Ḥalaf licked its red-hot part, rinsed his mouth with water, and showed his tongue to the witnesses anew. As the tongue was not burned, they declared Ḥalaf's oath to be true. The judge, al-mballe, received from the latter fifty meġīdijjât ($45) as his fee. Trâd was acknowledged to be his son, and an-Nûri's daughter kept her single state, because, Ḥalaf's son not being her cousin, Trâd had no claims on her.

A married woman, mara berkubat raġġâl, has plenty of opportunity to make the acquaintance of other men. Divided from the men's part of the tent by only a low, thin, almost transparent partition, she can observe and hear all the visitors and guests who call. While the tribe or clan is migrating she is often joined by some member of the clan, or at least of the camp, who helps her to pack, to lift, or to tighten the loosened loads; accompanies her on trips for water, fills the water bags, and ties them to the water saddle; sometimes he meets her as if by accident when she is bent under the burden of dry fuel, loads it on his mare or she-camel, throwing it down only when the camp is reached; altogether there are countless accidental meetings of this sort. But that man ingratiates himself with the woman most of all who defends her and her camels when attacked by the enemy on the march. To such a protector her heart is given.

Of her love for another man no secret is made by a woman, and soon it is said publicly: "So and So's wife is in love with So and So, marat flân hawjânaten ʿala flân." If this comes to the husband's ears and he is a man of a magnanimous disposition, he releases her without raising objections and asks no compensation, although he is entitled to the return of the dowry he had given for her. A man of this kind is wont to say: "She is a free daughter of a free tribe. Allâh made her love another man, so I will not hinder or make a slave of her." It is only the base men, arâdîl an-nâs, who take advantage of their wives' love to benefit themselves, asking five and even ten times as much as they themselves had paid. Such a demand is called kejje. If his wife's lover cannot meet the demand and her kin will not help, the lover can only elope with her. Then they seek refuge either with the Šammar between the middle Euphrates and Tigris, or with the Lhejb in the vicinity of Aleppo, or, perhaps, with the Sirhân and Beni Šahr on the southwest border of the Hawrân. Once there the lovers care not in the least for either the husband's or the wife's relatives. An elopement carried through successfully dissolves the marriage as completely as a divorce itself. The eloper may now make the woman of his heart his lawful wife but must not return with her to his kin before a reconciliation with her former husband and relatives is effected; otherwise he would expose both himself and her to taunts of every imaginable kind. Therefore he sends to them one messenger after another with entreaties for a reconciliation, which, however, is not easily attained. The former husband is generally obdurate much longer than the woman's kin. These accuse the husband of having himself caused the elopement by his unwillingness to let her go and also because he was unable to guard her better in the first place. They sometimes go even as far as to threaten that they will demand from him compensation for staining their honor, should he not forgive both the lover and the wife with whom he has eloped. For has she not been carried away from them as much as from him? And was he not her proper guardian and protector? The deceived husband must not kill either the eloper or the woman, for then he would furnish a reason for revenge. An elopement of a married woman is brought about by stratagem, not by force, and stratagem is not punishable with death.

If a plain but healthy girl cannot find a husband, it is the duty of her nearest kinsman with whom marriage is permissible to marry her; should he refuse he would be a butt for jokes among all his kin forever. In this manner a girl of al-Witre (or al-Wuṭara), subject to Eben Fâ'ûr of the 'Ebede tribe, was married in 1909.

PENALTIES FOR UNCHASTITY

Whoever accuses a female, whether girl or woman, of unchastity and cannot prove it, forfeits his hand; this is cut off by a kinsman of the accused. If he puts himself in good time under the protection of some powerful personage, he must give ten camels to the girl or woman he has insulted.

Many a Rwala girl becomes pregnant before the wedding. As soon as this is noticed by her relatives, they try to help her by various means, even if injurious to her health. Should the girl die from an abortion nobody will ever hear of it, as the women keep silent and the men as a rule pay no attention to matters concerning women. If the girl cannot rid herself of the foetus, she presses her lover to marry her at once, but in case he refuses or is absent at the time she often commits suicide. For should her father or brother find that his daughter or sister is with child, he would coax her on some pretext outside of the camp, kill her, cut her body in ten pieces, and then bury them. Nobody will take the girl's part, nobody asks the reason, they simply talk of her as if she had died a natural death. Her kin, ahl, would not allow a single girl who had become a mother to stay among them. Her child would not be a member of the kin, and, because it would not be acknowledged by the father on account of its illegitimacy, it would be without a kin and would stand in the clan like a stranger, without protection, without help. But a position of this nature is so contrary to the views and customs of the Bedouins that it is never allowed to arise. A pregnant girl may escape from her tribe and seek refuge in the settled territory or in a large town and try to make a living there. If she disappears without making herself conspicuous, no one will pursue her; she is soon forgotten, yet must never return. Her kinsfolk consider her dead and would kill her should she come back to them. The girls, of course, know the punishment meted out to them, and therefore place a saber between themselves and their lovers at their night meetings, with the warning: "I am a maiden! Fear Allâh. Ana bint hef min allâh."

Only when the girl has been raped, mařûba, will her relatives spare her, but in this case they kill both the violator and the child without mercy, and then demand from the murdered man's kin the blood price for the child. This cannot be left alive, as it would have no kin, ahl, and compensation for it is asked because it has weakened the girl, a member of their kin.

CHARACTER OF BEDOUIN WOMEN

The Bedouin women are renowned for their acuteness. They comprehend quickly but use much caution in expressing themselves, as the following story will illustrate:

A young Bedouin was riding on his mare to a neighboring camp. Being thirsty, he halted in a small camp through which he was passing, before a tent where he saw only two women. One was old, the mother, as he thought; the other much younger, her daughter, perhaps. The younger one stepped out from the tent, and the rider addressed her thus:

"If we knew the name, we should salute; low 'arefna al-isem sallemna." Her answer was:

"If we knew the name, we should return the salute. When dost thou grasp thy saber? ḡazabt sejfak."

The rider understood the meaning of her words and, because he expected to grasp his saber in a revolt or bloody quarrel known as fetna, he addressed her by this name and indicated his own by pointing to the beauty of her face, ḡasan.

"Be strong, Fetna! What manner of face hast thou? ḡaw fetna naẓar waḡheč."

Without a moment's hesitation the girl replied: "I welcome thee, ḡasan!"

The rider asked for water. She filled a small wooden trough, ḡedaḡ, and held it to him so that he could drink more easily. As he was sitting in the saddle, she had to raise her hands, the wide sleeves of her shirt slipped down to the arm pits and her arms were bare, revealing to the rider the hair under them. With a sigh he said:

"What a pity! If only the nether hair were as long as the upper! jâ ḡejf en čân wâtîh mitl 'âlîh."

To indicate that she understood, the girl replied: "It is still without a master, min žillet wâlîh."

Glad of conversing with a virgin and liking the looks of her, the rider asked:

"Will you receive a guest gladly? 'endakom laẓ-ẓejf ekrâm."

"Certainly, if he is destined to eat of our food; elja čân leh naḡîb baṭ-ṭa'âm."

He then jumped off his mare; as the girl was leading it aside she stooped down in order to tether the animal to some object. Noticing near the tent a heavy spare peg of the kind used for securing the tent ropes and also a few smaller pegs for fastening the back tent wall, she took the heavy peg in her right hand, one of the smaller ones in the left, and tried to drive it into the ground in order to tether the mare. But the ground, being scorched and hard, the peg could not be driven in. She therefore complained to her mother, but in a careful way so as not to offend against decency. Hence she preferred to say wood, ḥašab, instead of peg, wadd:

"Mama, I hammer wood with wood, but the ground will not let in the wood. Hand me a big stone to hammer the wood with. Jâ jumma-dukk al-ḥašab bel-ḥašab w-al-kâ mâ taḵbal al-ḥašab jâ jumma ḥâti li rżuma adukḵ al-ḥašab."

The youth marveled at the girl's good sense as at the orderliness which he found in the tent. He called again when her brother returned from a raid, and made the girl his wife.

A Bedouin once had three wives. The first, whom he had married in his youth, bore him several children; the second he had taken to wife two years before; and the third, a blooming girl, had been in his tent scarcely two months. Once he went to an itinerant merchant for a short rug, kaṭîfe, and brought it home. The women began to quarrel as to which of them the rug was bought for. "It belongs to me," said the first one, "to me the mother of his sons." "I devote myself to him day and night. The kaṭîfe was meant for me," said the second. "He has already tired of both of you," exclaimed the third, "you ought to know that what is old cannot be made new again and an enemy will never become an intimate friend, al-atîž mâ jirġa' ġedîd wa-l-'adw mâ jirġa' şiddîž. I am young, still new to him; therefore I taste the best to him. He bought the kaṭîfe for me." The man listened but held his tongue, while the wives went before a judge to decide between them. The judge decided that the kaṭîfe belonged to the third woman.

CHAPTER VIII

CHILDREN

BIRTH AND NAMING OF CHILDREN

A woman who has had sexual intercourse with a man is called a waḥama during the thirty days while it is as yet unknown whether she has conceived or not. If she has conceived she is called nâzel or ḥâmel. For her delivery a Rwala woman never sends for a midwife. Kurdi's wife, for example, bore a child while sitting in a žetab litter on the march and never ceased to guide her camel. She cut the navel cord herself, wrapped the child in her dress, dismounted in the new camping ground, and carried the baby boy, ʿajjel, to her tent.

A woman who has miscarried, ramat, and the fruit of whose womb has perished, rmaʿ, is an object of fear.

A woman after confinement, nefesa, lives just as before the delivery, with no change in her diet.

When a son is born, the father is congratulated by his nearest relatives but expresses no particular joy; neither does he send out invitations to a meat supper. No animal is sacrificed or slaughtered at the birth of a boy or girl.

For seven days after its birth the child is bathed in camel's urine and rubbed with salt. On either the tenth, twentieth, or fortieth day wheat is gathered by the female relatives of the confined woman, shredded, and then a dinner prepared from it in her tent, to which all the women from the camp are invited. This festivity is known as the examination of the child, ḥlâʿat al-ʿajjel. The mother goes with the child on a visit to all her relatives, a custom called taṭlîʿa. Everybody presents the baby with something, often either a young camel or a colt, the gifts remaining its property.

Its name the child receives from its mother alone, this being one of her privileges. Sometimes she selects a name without thinking long about it; at other times, again, she may be directed by various influences. Thus, for instance, Prince an-Nûri's wife gave birth to a boy when camping near the castle of Âl Aḥejzer — or, as it is called by the Rwala, al-

Ḥafâḡi — and named the boy Ḥafâḡi. Another woman was delivered during a heavy rain and she called her little son Maṭar, Rain. Kurdi's wife bore two girls although she greatly wished to have a boy. So she prayed to Allâh, and he granted her wish some time afterwards; she gave the baby boy the name of Raḡa', meaning "The Granting of Favor." The wife of 'Awde al-Kwêčbi had a very painful delivery, te'assarât, and therefore said: "Thou shalt be called 'Asîr, Born in Pain." Another woman, filled with wrath because her husband had just taken a second wife, named her son Muṛîz, Enraging. The wife of the slave Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd received a beating from her husband shortly before a son was born to her, and, still being angry with him, she called the boy in remembrance of his mother's ill-treatment, Za'al, Anger. When delivered of a girl a little later, she said: "Thy father's name is Donkey, Ḥmâr, so thou shalt be called Cow, Baḡara." There is no beast nor plant after which a child cannot be named.

Up to its seventh year the child is spoken of as waṛad (pl., wurdân), warâc (pl., wur'ân), or 'aḡi (pl., 'aḡjân). After his seventh year a boy is called 'ejâl. The name for a dead baby is faraṭ (pl., afrâṭ). For these a sacrifice, temîma, must be brought at the next memorial festival in honor of the dead, ṣahîjje.

CIRCUMCISION CEREMONIES

The Rwala circumcise their sons between their third and seventh years, usually in the season of aṣ-ṣejf (thus in late April or May) on either Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday immediately before the fifteenth day of the lunar month or just after that day. Two days before the circumcision the girls from the whole camp come to the tent of the man whose son is to be circumcised, decorate the main tent pole with ostrich feathers, red kerchiefs, and ribbons, razzow al-mṣanna', and proclaim with joyful cries, ẓarrût, that a circumcision, mṣanna', is being prepared for. After sunset the whole youth of both sexes of the camp assemble there, the young men forming a semicircle open towards the tent, where a mighty fire is burning. An adult girl with her face covered so that only her eyes are visible then posts herself between the fire and the youths. The ḥâšî, as this girl is called, holds in her right hand a sharp saber. The youths begin to stamp, clap their hands, and rock their bodies to right and left and forward and backward. Shouting in deep tones: "Look out! look out! dahhî dahhî," they touch the girl with their hands. She draws back and defends herself with the saber; the youths accelerate their movements, attack the hâšî with more passion, while she swings the saber still more ardently. The saber flashes like lightning, the girl steps aside, gives way, and advances; all her movements are silhouetted against the glare of the fire behind her; the ground groans under the feet of the stamping youths and in their deep voices, hoarse with fatigue and lust, they cry: "Dahhî dahhî." When tired they drop down on one knee, the girl follows their example, and the fun goes on till the nearly exhausted girl jumps up and runs away. Then a rest is taken. Sometimes a young man recites a poem, the men and women present exclaiming after each verse: "O welcome to thee, welcome to thee! jâ hala bak jâ hala." The poem once ended, another girl is put on the scene by the host, and the amusement, dahha, starts anew. As a rule three or four girls, hašjân, succeed each other, and the dahha ends only at sunrise. On the next night the performance is repeated.

On the third day in the morning either the father or the nearest relative of the boy to be circumcised brings a she-camel to the front of the tent, cuts the veins of her forelegs with a saber, and then kills her amid the loud rejoicings of the women, jezarruten. Such an animal is called the circumcision sacrifice, dbiht al-mšanna. Her blood soaks into the ground, and the meat is cooked in large kettles, the boy's relatives preparing bread or soft boiled wheat, ejš, in the meantime. At noon the women carry the bread, the ejš, and the meat to the father's tent, where on this occasion anybody may enter and eat his fill. This dinner is called anijjet al-mšanna.

After dinner the father—or, in case he has died, the nearest relative—takes on his lap the boy, dressed in black on that day. He pretends to show him something, and then cuts off his prepuce, rulufteh, with a sharp knife. The boy cries with pain, the women rejoice loudly, jezarruten, the youths leap on their horses, shoot, and arrange a mock battle, trâd al-hejl, in front of the tent. When the boy has quieted down a little, they wash him, dress him in white, and the relatives hand and bring him gifts of all kinds, such as clothing, weapons, colts, young camels, etc. These gifts, nehîle, belong to the boy exclusively. When the mock battle ends the men amuse themselves with shooting at a target. This is the head of the slaughtered she-camel set up at a considerable distance from the host's tent, from which they shoot. He who hits it may take and cook it for himself.

Ditties Sung at Circumcision Ceremonies

In the evening the girls form two lines in the space before the tent, and a couple of them step inside the lane thus made. One without her kerchief and with her hair loosened dances, inclining both head and body to right and left, forwards and backwards, but she must not leave her ground. To prevent this, the second girl holds her hands during the performance. The other girls accompany her contortions with a quiet clapping of hands, meanwhile singing ditties called hafle, this also being the name of the dance.

*‘Ašîrken jâ-hl ranâdîr
mâ beh raġa’ low raġejnâh
w-alli jetaṛâleh al-maḥâšîr dowr al-ḥawâṭer bellejâh.*

From your husband, O you well dressed ones!
We can expect nothing despite our hopes,
And to him who thinks the cost too high
Why should our favors be granted for nothing?

A woman fond of dress and of being carried around in a litter needs a husband who does not object to the expense entailed. If one will not grant all her wishes, she seeks another one, more generous.

*Jâ râceb al-malḥa
kezz al-meċâtîbi
w-en dannaḡat tar‘a ‘otṭha-l-mešâ‘îbi.*

O thou rider on the black camel!
Fold again and preserve the letters;
And if thy camel lowers her head to graze,
Tap her with thy stick.

The maiden longs for a word from her lover, who has gone with some traders in camels to Egypt, and urges the messenger carrying letters for the chief to hurry.

*Zâ'û min al-[°]ejd w-mežfîni
w-mnaššerîn ad-dallâli [°]allemi bihom bel-makâtîni
w-mrakkezîn al-makâmî.*

After the holiday they departed, but in the opposite
Their best clothes donning. [direction,
Let me hear of their news, that they have encamped
And have erected a water hoist. [to stay

The maiden learns where her lover's kin have encamped.

Al-[°]ejd is the holiday of az-zaḥijje, when a she-camel is sacrificed by the Bedouins to every member of their kin who has died in the past year. Mežfîn means that they have not followed the other Arabs in their forward movement but have taken the opposite direction. They encamped by a watering place and for a long period, hence makâtîni. The word mektân designates a place where the Bedouins make a prolonged stay in summer time; thus kaṭanna [°]ala-l-kâra means "we camped a long time in al-Kâra." Maḳâm is the wooden apparatus for raising water, fastened above the edge of a deep well (see my Arabia Deserta, Fig. 35, p. 161). Such an apparatus is arranged only when the Arabs intend to stay at that particular well for some time. On that occasion they take out their best clothes and the women dress in their finest, munaššerîn ad-dallâl.

Ed'û râ'i-š-šowše an-nûri mâ ḥala' howšeh jâ mušarreden lar-radi bowšeh jâ howš at-turk jâ howšeh.

Wish long life to him with the short hair,
To an-Nûri — Oh, how graceful is he in the fight,
He who frees the herds captured by a wretch!
Ah, the fight with the Turks, ah, his fight with them!

Ed'û for jâ ṭawîl al-[°]omr. When going to battle every rider bares his head. The kerchief rests on his shoulders; the weight of the head rope hanging round the neck holds it to the body. Šowše means short, unbraided hair on the top of the head. As a rule only a tuft of it is left standing, the rest being shaven. Mušarred (or jifekk) bowšeh, liberates his loot. Fighting with the Turks (i. e. with the regular army) was difficult for the Bedouins and therefore greatly desired by them.

Jâ mnîfe jâ miznet aš-sejf jâ brâkaha jî'aženni tel'ab 'ala-l-bîz bel-kejf waš 'âd low jîz'alenni.

O Mnîfe, O thou rain cloud of the early summer!
How dazzling its lightning is to me!
Thou canst play with the fair ones at thy will,
For I [in thy place] should not care if they grow angry with me.

At the close of April, when summer begins, each rain is accompanied by a violent storm by which the atmosphere is greatly refreshed. Mnîfe, the wife of the head chief, needs not envy her female companions, as she excels them in both beauty and power.

*Jâ bejt abu nawwâf
jâ minwet al-bâdi
w-rwîjhom bel-kêz
habra lel-warâdi
wa-šhûnahom bel-lêl
tawhî lha menâdi tehûfehen mnîfe
jâ bint al-ağwâdi.*

O thou tent of the father of Nawwâf!
O thou goal desired of the night pilgrim!
In summer their large water bags are
As a great rain pond from which water is brought.
To their dishes at night
The criers noisily invite;
They are prepared by Mnîfe,
A daughter of noble ancestors.

Abu Nawwâf is Prince an-Nûri; his wife Mnîfe is a daughter of the late Prince Saţţâm. Bâdi, like sâjer, means a traveler by night, or a visitor. By both the men's and the women's compartments of the tents blazing fires are kept up, attracting the traveler even at a great distance. Rwijhom means water bags, each made from half of a camel's hide and holding about 150 liters of water. If there is a scarcity of water in the ķêz season (midsummer) everybody gets it at the chief's tent. Habra (pl., habâri) are the level spaces of various sizes on a vast plain, in which the rain water from the higher ground accumulates. Shûnahom are extraordinarily large pans with two handles, often as much as a meter and a half in diameter, in which supper is brought to the guests whom either the chief or his representative invites to sit down, calling each by his name. In the dead of night these calls can be heard from afar.

Subjân towb al-mâl	O youths, a costly garb
lâ telbesûneh	Put not on!
jista^hheleh nawwâf	Of that Nawwâf is deserving
w-ĥejfi zebûneh	Whose caftan is not new,
elja ġâ nahâr al-kown	When on the day of the fray
w-je^aazžed redûneh.	His long shirt sleeves behind his neck he ties.

Towb is the man's long shirt made of white linen. Towb al-mâl is a shirt with decorative stitching around the neck and on the breast. The sleeves of this shirt are often as much as a meter and a half long and end in a sharp angle. During a fight or when the wearer is engaged in some hard task the sleeve ends are tied together and thrown behind the neck. Zebûn is a garb made from variegated fabric and worn over the shirt. Nawwâf, as the bravest of all, should also wear the best clothes.

Tabaššerû ĵâ hla-l-ĥejl nawwâf šara-l-maⁿnakijje sîžân mešâ^eel darârîğ
mîn taĥat ^ud al-ĥaniijje ķâl erċabi lâ thâfi
mâ zâl râsi ^alijje.

At the glad news rejoice, you riders:
 Nawwâf has bought a mare of the maⁿnakijje breed;
 Mešâ^eel's calves like the rollers appear
 Under the pole of a curved litter.

He said: "Enter and nothing fear,
While on my shoulders my head remains."

The women and girls praise Nawwâf and his spouse Mešâ'el, daughter of Saṭṭâm and Turkijje.

Ma'nakijje is considered one of the best breeds of horses. The good news that a ma'nakijje mare has been bought signifies Nawwâf's wedding with the daughter of the late Prince Saṭṭâm — that is, with the offspring of the best family. When entering a litter the woman must bend and involuntarily show the calves of her legs. Darârîğ (sing., darrâğe) are spindles wound full with thread. Al-ḥaniijje signifies a litter of the žetab variety, with long curved poles. Mešâ'el may sit tranquilly in her litter. Nawwâf will repulse any hostile attack threatening the women during the march.

*Wa'-šûf žebâl aš-šaṭṭ bujûten tbanna nawwâf jâ mesčâj
nabrî waṭanna.*

Ah, before the Euphrates I see
The pitching of tents.
O Nawwâf, thou appeaser of sorrow!
We long for our country.

A few Kwâčbe kins revolted against Prince an-Nûri, left the Rwala, and encamped with the 'Amârât on the Euphrates. Their women and girls sent word to Nawwâf to intercede for them with the prince, his father, in order that they might return home.

Waṭan, territory, is used but seldom; the common expression is dîre.

*Tasamme'û jâ-hla-l-hejl
flân jeṭawwel šebâbeh mâ tûl ḥajj 'ala-l-hejl
aṭ-ṭarš killen jehâbeh.*

Hear ye, O riders!
So and So, may Allâh prolong his youth!
As long as he shall live and ride horses,
Any herd will be afraid of him.

*Jâ nawwâf nâdû zênakom
 şâlha taḥaṭṭa' bēnakom tiswa salâjel hejlaikom.*

O Nawwâf, call for your beauty!
 Şâlha, who paces among you,
 Is worth whole herds of your mares.

Şâlha was a daughter of an-Nûri and sister of Nawwâf.

*Jâ şâlha w-esma'û jâ nâs
 w-hejleċ nâfelîn an-nâs ahl hadda w-hal nowmâs
 w-hal la'eben 'ala-l-frâs.*

O Şâlha, hear, ye people!
 Faith, thy little kin is the most generous of all.
 They know how to attack, how to win fame,
 And how to play when sitting on mares.

Wa'-ş-şafra bawwal al-râra jâ nawwâf şâ'at adkârah.

Ah, in attack the white mare is first;
 O Nawwâf, far and wide she is remembered!

*Lâ mâ ḥala' der'âneċ şîta bel-waşâm mu'aşrakâti
 mâ ḥala' haddat ahalha
 w-as-sujûf muḥannijâti
 mâ ḥala' towrat ġemalha
 beş-şerâja mubajjenâti.*

Ah, how beautiful thy arms, O Şîta,
 With blue tattoo marks!
 How beautiful the noise of the attack of her kin
 And the sabers blood-dyed as if with henna.
 How prettily her camel to its feet is rising
 Adorned with purchased ornaments.

Şîta, a daughter of the late Prince Saṭṭâm, was married to Prince an-Nûri. Hadda means the noise, during an attack, of shooting, war cries, neighing of the horses, and groans of the wounded. Muḥannijât, dyed with henna, are sabers stained with blood. Şîta used to ride a strong gray camel when the tribe was migrating. Her litter, žetab, was ornamented with various red blankets bought in the markets.

Al-aškah mâ hala' haz'ateh
jâ šîta terteb wad'ateh.

How beautiful the gait of the gray camel!
It is Šîta sewing small shells [of its litter] on a pattern.

The litter carried by the camel and its halter are ornamented with small white seashells, forming little stars, squares, and other patterns. With the rolling gait of the animal the litter also rocks and the white shells flash with a peculiar glitter.

Al-aškah w-en denni 'atab jabri-l-ḥmejri w-ad-dahab.

The gray camel which should kneel hops on three legs;
Perhaps it desires the red blankets and gold trinkets.

As soon as the slaves had forced the gray camel ridden by Šîta to kneel and had tied its left leg in order to take off the litter more easily, it arose and began to hop on its three legs, because it did not wish to be deprived of the red covering and fringes interwoven with gold thread.

Al-awzaḥ jaz'až al-beddi
jâ šîta min zana ḡeddi.

The white camel tears the cushions supporting the litter;
O Šîta, thou hailest from the kin of my ancestor!

Šîta also used to ride a pure white camel. Beddi is the word for the cushions against which the wooden žetab litter rests in the saddle. A spirited camel turns its head back and tears the cushions with its teeth.

Jâ šîta bint ḡeddêni ḡedden jenzel as-sâka
w-ḡedden jentah al-ḥêli.

O Šîta, who hailest on both sides from brave ancestors!
The one used to camp in the places most dangerous, While the other used to throw down the riders with his lance.

Şîta's mother, Turkijje was the daughter of the head chief of the Fed'ân. Şîta's father, Saṭṭâm, usually selected a place for his camping ground where his clans were exposed to the greatest danger. Such a place is called sâka. His wife's father was a hero of renown whom no troop of riders could resist.

Razâlen daššakom A gazelle ran in amongst you mâ hâb And feared not.
jâ bint muḥazza' O thou daughter of him who chopped off al-arkâb. Heads!

Şîta was not frightened even when the enemy succeeded in entering the camp. She inherited her father's character.

Jâ şîta bintena-r-razne
çetîr al-mâl jaşriha
želîl al-mâl wa' ḥazneh.

O Şîta, our cold-blooded daughter!
 Only a rich man could buy her,
 While a poor one would, alas, grieve vainly for her.

Şîta was both astute and cool-tempered. At times when an-Nûri trembled for his life Şîta watched over him day and night to prevent his being poisoned or assassinated in his own tent. Such a woman can be bought only by a rich man.

Ahal şîta jîhellûn
sukkâra mâ jîdellûn
'ala-s-sâkât ju'ajjûn
w-hal saḥnen jîhoṭṭûn.

Şîta's kinsmen fall upon the enemy as if on sheep for
 Like drunken men, nothing can frighten them; [sacrifice,
 Careless they are of the most dangerous spots,
 And their dishes they constantly fill.

The warriors act in the battle just as if they were merely slaughtering sheep, jîhellûn. Sâkât are places exposed to the direct attack of the enemy and therefore highly dangerous. A chief of renown not only ignores this danger but even selects localities of that kind in order to avert the danger from his people and to destroy the enemy himself. Thus praise is given to Śīta's kinsmen for remaining calm in danger and for their bravery and generosity, because they put food on the pan, ṣahn, before their guests.

Jâ şîta mehzemeč ģebri O Şîta, splendid is thy belt, ‘alejh min ad-dahab šebri. Which is gilded a span wide.

The daughters and wives of the powerful chiefs wear over their dress, towb, as a rule, a belt of wool or silk interwoven with gold or silver threads.

Ġemal šīta šaba-l-maṭlâ^c ġa'al min tabroḏeh tenlâ^c jamût wlêdaha-r-rzâ^c.

Śīta's camel climbed a summit,
 O Allâh! grant that she who looks angrily at it may lose her color,
 And that her baby boy whom she nurses may die.

Šaba' al-maṭlâ' means that a camel carrying a pretty litter climbed a height; thus the litter projected above the horizon and was visible from afar. The Bedouins think that an angry envious look can do man even deadly harm, and, therefore, that a woman who looks at Šita's camel in that manner should be punished by Allâh. Tenlâ' means a woman who grows extremely thin and loses her healthy color. A wlêd, baby boy, is preferred by a mother to a girl, because he adds and will yet add to the esteem she enjoys in the tent. In losing him, her life's happiness is often lost. She is then divorced by her husband and may have to wait long before finding another, owing to the fear that an evil spirit is after her.

Jâ mohra žîdat	Oh, that little mare, which was being led
min bên nazlêni	Between the two camps!
karwâdha hâled	She was led by Hâled,
lâ jâ ba'ad 'ênî.	Oh, that I may look long at him!

Mohra means in this case the young wife of Hâled, the son of the late Prince Saṭṭâm; her relatives were camping not far off on the wedding day.

*Jâ bakraten ħorra
jâ mašjaha zafzâf*

rakkâbaha mamdûh
jakloṭ w-lâ jahâf
tesell selîl al-ma'
taḥtom 'ala-l-aslâf
jarmi w-lâ jehṭi jak'od w-lâ jenšâf.

Oh, that noble young she-camel,
 How swift her gait!
 She is ridden by Mamdûh,
 Who strikes down all in front of him and knows no fear.
 The she-camel as quickly as running water vanishes,
 Running ahead of the first troop,
 While he shoots, never missing,
 And bends down so that he cannot be seen.

Mamdûh was the youngest and most daring son of Prince Saṭṭâm. In a fight no enemy could stand against him. The enemy flees, and Mamdûh strikes him a blow from behind, so that he falls on the neck of his animal. Jakloṭ means either to bend or to knock forward a saddle or rider. Selîl al-ma' is a wild flood which dashes down suddenly and disappears as quickly. Many a valley — or rather channel — is as much as two hundred kilometers long and dry for years. If copious rain of long duration falls, the waters rush with lightning speed through the channel, surprise the Bedouins who happen to be camping at its lower end, and as quickly vanish again. Such a flood is not a sejl, brook or stream, but a selîl, a temporary torrent. Mamdûh's she-camel appears as unexpectedly, but just as speedily is gone owing to her great endurance in running. Salaf is a troop of warriors riding at the head of a migrating tribe. Mamdûh's she-camel constantly runs ahead of the salaf. Jak'od signifies that Mamdûh, a youngster still, bends down at every shot in order to take better aim; he thus cannot be seen behind the neck of his animal. In 1909 he was only eighteen years of age.

RAISING OF CHILDREN

Until their seventh year both boys and girls remain with their mother, going to their father only for an occasional talk. If their mother is not divorced by their father, they live in the women's compartment and help with the lighter work. If they deserve it they are spanked with a stick, not only by their mother or father, but by the slaves both male and female. The Rwala believe that the rod originated in Paradise, al-ʿaṣa aẓharat min al-ġenna, and that it also leads man back to it. The older boys attend to the mares, guard them on the pasture grounds, take them to water, and ride on them while migrating; they also bring fuel to the men's quarters, serve the guests with water, etc. They squat with the men around the fire listening to the conversation and learn also to recite poems and songs, in this manner acquainting themselves with all public affairs. Boys learn to shoot before they are fourteen and take part in at least one raid before they are sixteen. At this period the father would not think of punishing the disobedience of his son simply with a stick but uses a saber or a dagger instead. By cutting or stabbing them the father not merely punishes the boys but hardens them for their future life. In the opinion of the Bedouins the son who disobeys is guilty of rebellion, for which the proper punishment is the saber, as-sejḥ lemin ʿaṣa.

BOYS' GAMES

The boys are never idle. When they are not helping their parents, they play. Some of their games are dangerous; all, however, tend to harden them and sharpen their faculties.

In playing ramḥa two lines are formed. The members of each side, holding their companions by the hand, take position and advance against the other side, kicking their opponents till one whole side rolls down, jetarâmaḥûn. Many leave the game with their bellies black and blue, but will stand up as long as they can bear the pain.

A very dangerous game is šâra. The boys bring their slings, mižla (pl., mažâli), gather a supply of pebbles, separate into two hostile groups, and, declaring war on each other, throw stones from their slings, jetašârûn. Blood always flows. Often a boy loses an eye, gets a broken head or a split bone in his hand or leg, or even falls down dead; and yet the parents never forbid the game. For a dead boy the kin of the player who killed him must pay the blood price; for other serious hurts half of that. If the guilty party cannot be found, the relatives of all the boys participating in the game must pay, compensation of this kind being called medda ršejje.

Ma'kâla, another game, is not so dangerous. The boy takes off his kerchief, ties a knot in the middle of it, first putting a round pebble into it, posts himself at the goal, mîd, and then throws the knotted kerchief to his comrades who are waiting about fifty paces away. The boy who catches it beats the others with the knot while they run to the goal. Then, returning to his place, he throws the kerchief among the boys, who shout at him: "Give the kerchief to him who gave it to thee, 'aṭha min 'aṭâkîha," and the game starts over again. Here also many a bump on the head or bloody bruise on the body is carried home from the game.

At night the boys play what is called mudmaḥ sara'. They take a peg sharpened at both ends, šzâz, of the kind used to fasten the back wall of the tent to the roof. One of the boys takes his stand at the goal, mîd, and throws the peg to his playmates posted about twenty paces from him. The boy who catches it cries: "Mudmaḥ sara', mudmaḥ goes with me," and runs straight for the goal. The others throw themselves on him, trying to get hold of the peg and shouting: "I am the father of strength, I shall crush thee, ab-al-arejč w-âreč." The assailed boy defends himself as best he can, stabbing with the peg, kicking, and biting, so that he may reach the goal with the peg in his possession. Most of the scars resulting from this game are, of course, found on the clothes of the players.

When hâġije is played, a pit is dug on a level plot of ground, and inside it a smaller but deeper pit. On the edge of the larger pit a stone ball, hâġije, is laid; and a similar ball, sîč, only some sizes larger, is thrown from the goal at the first ball so as to knock it down into the large pit where it must roll into the smaller one. When all have had their turn, the boys who have succeeded in putting the ball in its place mount the backs of their less fortunate comrades, who must carry them like horses from the pit to the goal. That the riders seldom forget to kick and cuff their horses to get more speed out of them hardly needs to be added.

In the game of hejl w-hejl riders and horses are chosen by drawing lots. The riders take their places, the horses carrying them to the goal. There the horses cry: "Al-hejl aklâb," roll over to one side and then sit on the backs of their riders.

For the game of taḳka every boy arms himself with a large tent peg. The boy chosen by lot lays a small sharp peg, šzâz, on the highest stone near by, taps it with his large peg enough to make it fly up a little, and when in the air gives it a good blow so as to make it fly to the other players who wait at a distance of about thirty or forty paces. Every one of them tries to hit the flying sharp peg with his own peg in order to send it back. As long as no one succeeds, the peg is returned to the first boy, who continues to bat it until one of his comrades finally strikes it and takes his place. When striking at the šzâz peg the head or shoulders of a player often come in contact with it, with consequences easy to imagine.

Many a kerchief is torn to ribbons in the game called dehdwa. One boy rolls a large stone down a slightly inclined plane, while the others try to stop it, ‘akašha, with their kerchiefs. The one succeeding in this is entitled to roll it, jedahdîha.

‘Akê ‘akab is a game in which all the boys run for the goal, about a hundred paces away. He who reaches it first shouts: “‘akê ‘akab,” a command for the others to turn and run back to the starting point. The first boy to reach it now calls out the same words, “‘akê ‘akab,” and flies with the others to the goal again. This is repeated until all are exhausted. Finally the one to reach the goal first exclaims: “A pile of wood, korkob hašab,” and sinks to the ground; the others follow his example, lie still for a while, but then begin to kick and strike out all around regardless of whom they hit.

DITTIES SUNG BY GIRLS

The girls have no such games. Occasionally at night they form two choirs and alternately sing, jesemran, various ditties called summejr:

Tafawwelû bel-faza	For a good sign take a great plain,
jâ-lli talab fâli	O all ye who ask me for a good sign!
fâli ršêden w-ar-rašed	Fortunate is my sign, for luck
tajjeb al-fâli.	Is the best of all signs ye may want.

When the women and girls are about to start their summejr, the men and youths gather not far off. Before a raid or any act of importance every man observes the first word uttered by the woman or girl dear to him. That word they take to be their sign or omen, fâl, and try to guess from it whether their enterprise will meet with success or not. Knowing this the girls begin with the ditty quoted above. A faza, or vast plain where the Bedouin cannot be ambushed, is to him a good sign. Better than any sign, however, is the luck itself or the successful result.

Enhowderû les-summejr
w-az-zemel bel-misrâh min hw jehedd at-tejr ma'lûk klejbeh râh
jelfi 'ala marteh
jâ niġmet al-miṣbâh
erhi trejf as-sejr
žîfi 'ala-l-mebtâh.

Gather for the summejr,
 For the pack camels are out in the pasture.
 Who is that training the hunting falcon?
 The falcon to whom his heart clung disappeared and
 Will soon reach its wife.
 O morning star!
 Loosen the end of thy leather belt
 And stand leaning against the long litter pole.

The girls and women invite everybody to their entertainment, summejr, as it is unnecessary to get up so early next morning, since the chief's pack camels are not yet back from the pasture. They hear some one training his hunting falcon and later pity him, because the falcon has flown away and returned to its wife. When about to move they call out to the prettiest woman of the camp to stand up in her litter and shed light all around her like the morning star.

The word enhowderû, gather down, come down together, is used because the summejr is always held in a low piece of ground protected against the wind. Erhi trejf as-sejr means "loosen the end of thy leather belt." Every woman wears a belt of small leather strips on her bare body. On entering a litter she loosens this belt in order not to be incommoded by it on the journey. Žîfi, stand leaning, for žîfi.

Jâ rabbi jâ hâlež al-lejl
hât al-maṭar min saḥâbeh

*mâ zâl nawwâf 'ala-l-hejl
w-al-mâl killen jahâbeh jista'hel al-wared w-al-hejl
w-an-nadel jakmah šebâbeh.*

O my Lord! O creator of the night!
Let us have rain from thy clouds,
Nawwâf goes out on raids constantly
And all the property of the enemy fears him.
Of both rose and cardamom he is worthy,
And the overcautious only hold back his youthful courage.

Al-wared means the fragrance of roses as well as the rose itself and the love of women. Hejl, cardamom, is added to coffee, which thus prepared is to be served to none but heroes. Nadel, cowards, vile ones, signifies here the older, more cautious chiefs, who with Prince an-Nûri at their head would not allow Nawwâf and his youths incessantly to raid even hostile tribes. They feared revenge.

*Jâ rabbi jâ m'awwel t'awwel 'ala-helna
nabni bujût al-'ezz nanzel manâzelna
narhal 'an had-dîre
w-'an wastha ġilna
jislam abu nawwâf
jarhal w-jenazzelna.*

O my Lord! O thou who returnest!
Lead us back to our kin,
Where we may pitch our tents as is seemly
And encamp on our own grounds.
We shall move away from this region
Forever to disappear from its midst.
Hail to the father of Nawwâf!
Would that he may move and allot to us new camps.

If the pastures in the territories owned by them do not suffice for their needs, while the territories in dispute abound in plenty, rabi', the Rwala march as a rule to some of their tributary settlements in the inner desert, unload their supplies, litters, and large tents, usually leave the women, children and aged persons there, and move with their herds to the disputed territory for at least one month of grazing. There they live in small tents, many even in the open; they cook their own meals or let one woman or a female slave do the cooking for several tents, and they always camp in the midst of their herds, ready for defense by day or night. The women and girls who have accompanied them soon tire of this mode of life, as is expressed in our song.

Bujût al-‘ezz are the complete tents required by the social standing of the kin owning them. Ġâlow means “they disappeared from this territory”; enġâl al-ṛejm, “the fog vanished, dissolved.”

Jâ rabbi jâ mâli ‘aṭni faza bâli
fowk awzaḥen ‘âli
ma‘ waset ḥijjâni
w-ġowzen ‘ala bâli
wa-zmejjem ḥamrâni.

O Lord! O my all!
 Give me a clear mind,
 (Grant) that I may ride a tall white camel
 In the midst of my kin.
 A husband give me to my taste
 And a nose ring of gold.

Faza bâli is a clear mind, a good conscience, a free spirit oppressed by nothing. It is the wish of every girl or woman to ride on the march in a fancy litter on a pure white camel. Animals of this hue are the pride of both the tribe and the family, the red ornaments hung about them being especially conspicuous. In the midst of her kinsfolk the girl is absolutely safe. The nose ring is now worn by only a few Rwala women.

Jâ râčeben humejla‘
râ‘îh mâ jûmi ‘aṣâh
jâ min dakar ṣwejḥebi
jâ dâjereh jâ min ‘lakâh er‘eh ma‘ dwejden ‘azîb wa-mzerfelen jamm al-fela‘ wa‘ lâ laḳejt illa-l-ḥala
w-ad-dîb ġellâni ‘awâh.

Oh, she who often rides a docile camel,
 She gives me no sign with her stick!
 Who is here that still remembers my sweet friend?
 Who has looked for, who has found her?
 See, she stays far beyond the camp with a small herd;
 To that pasture I hastened at a trot.
 Ah, but I found only a desert,
 And the howling of wolves made me flee.

Not finding his sweetheart on the new camping grounds, the lover inquires and searches for her. She used to ride in a litter on a humejla^c, docile camel of low stature, and to signal to her lover with a stick with which she guided her animal. A dwejd is a small herd owned by one family. When the son who usually cares for the herd goes out on a raid the herd falls to the care of the daughter. A ‘azib is a pasture at such a distance from the camp that the camels must spend at least three or four nights away and do not come to water or to the camp till the fifth day. Mzerfel, like dowmal, signifies the fast trot of a camel. Fela^c is a pasture with good grass and perennials.

Šiddû min az-zemel ‘aljân
šêl al-lahad mâ jedânîhi w-al-ḥokm ḥokm eben ša‘lân maḥrûden jâ-lli terâġîhi.

Saddle the pack camels called ‘Aljân,
 Who will not accept a galling load.
 As for the command, the command belongs to Eben
 Crushed be he who would oppose him! [Ša‘lân;

Zemel is the name given to the pack camels, always males, which carry the tent, supplies, and whole equipment of the chief. In the war cry of the Rwala all the herds are called ‘Alja^c, which is here applied to the camels in the word ‘Aljân. Lahda (pl., luhûd) are the callous spots or blisters on the camel's back and flanks caused by the heavy, unequally distributed load or by uneven saddles whether for freight, ḥe-dâġe, or for riding, šdâd. If these callous spots disappear, well and good; if they become blisters and open, suppurating sores, dabra (pl., dabar), are the consequence. The camels owned by the Rwala will not bear packs that hurt them, and the ruling Eben Ša‘lân kin will not bear opposition.

*Jâ rab'aten binjat šiddat 'arâwîha
w-rawwahat zerfât
jerġa-l-^caša bîha teĥûfaha mnîfe jeфраĥ biṭârîha.*

Oh, the men's compartment, it was put up
And its rope ends stretched taut.
For their night's rest the fleet-footed mares returned,
And each rider hopes to get his supper in the tent.
It is being prepared by Mnîfe,
The thought of whom makes them all glad.

Rab'a is the men's compartment in the tent of a chief; also, the whole tent. 'Arâwi are loops, or more properly the single bow knots of the tent ropes, which can be loosened or tightened according to the strength of the wind. Rawwahat zerfât are the slaves, servants, and other youths, who ride out on horseback in the evening to defend the returning herds against a possible attack. The word rawwah always implies a night's lodging.

*Jâ ĥajji jâ 'azweten li ṭarîĥakom lâ jazâmi
w-silâĥakom mustaġilli
jaḳsom ṣalîb al-^cazâmi ^caduwwakom mustamelli ^cajjet ^cujûneh tanâmi.*

Little brother of mine, of the same descent as I,
One thrown from his horse by thee suffers not long,
For renowned are thy arms,
Which cut in twain the backbones.
Thine enemy is shaken with fright,
And his eye refuses to close in sleep.

The maiden praises the bravery of her lover, who is closely related to her. The words 'azweten li, if spoken quickly, sound like 'azwet elli, because the en tends to double the following syllable, li. 'Azwe denotes kinship on the father's side. Min ejn ja'za' flân means "from whom does he hail, to what kin does So-and-So belong?" "Ja'za' min âl flân, he hails from such-and-such a kin." Ṭarîĥ signifies a warrior rolling on the ground, thus thrown from his saddle.

*Jâ hajji jâ mâli warâk li šenjân
 jâ hajji-bri-mâri
 bilammat al-‘orbân
 fowk aškahen ‘âli
 nowfen ‘ala-l-ža’dân
 ummeh ‘atejbijje
 w-abûh min al-‘adwân
 w-alâjefeh hağme
 sowden čema-l-rorbân.*

O little brother of mine! O my all!
 Both thy mother and thy sister hate me.
 O little brother of mine! I would fain show my bravery
 In a throng of Arabs
 On a tall ash-gray,
 Surpassing the stud camels,
 Whose mother hails from the ‘Atejbe
 And father from the ‘Adwân,
 And to whom is united a herd
 Of she-camels black as the raven.

The maiden wishes to accompany her Arabs into the fiercest fighting, hoping thus to gain the good will of her lover’s mother and sisters.

Warâk, behind thee, here signifies female relatives. In the part of the tent reserved for the men the male members of the family sit with their backs to the wall which divides them from the women’s compartment. Anyone who has transactions with the men takes a seat facing them and if he wishes to mention the female members of the family says briefly: “Behind thee, behind you.” Lammat al-‘orbân means “the Arabs will assemble (or flock together) to repel a hostile attack.” The ‘Atejbe camp east of al-Medîna and Mecca; the ‘Adwân to the southeast of them. In Neğd the predominating color of the camels is black, amlah.

*Jâ rabbi tsâ’efni ‘ala kill mâ-rîd
 fowk awzahen ‘âli
 bzên al-ma’âlîž
 wa-rlejjemen jatni
 elja jâbsat ar-rîž*

şafra suḥûbijje
biḳarm al-wâlîd.

O my Lord! Oh, mayest thou help me
 To all that I desire:
 I fain would sit on a tall white camel
 In a fancy litter,
 And with me a young hero who would protect me
 At such time when my spittle dries up;
 A young hero on a white mare with a long tail,
 Of noble breed.

Zên al-ma'âlîž is a fancifully ornamented žetab litter, fastened on a tall white camel. Ṛulâm signifies a young but valiant man. The saliva dries up from fear when the enemy falls upon the moving clan and tries to rob the belle of both the camel and the fancy litter. It is then that she needs a brave defender.

Jâ sema' rabbana O the name of our Lord!
biḍarâk nederreğ Shielded by thee we wish to walk.
naṭlobak ṭûlat al- Grant us, pray, that as long as we live
'omr mâ nefterež. We may not part.

The sweetheart will not part from her beloved.

Rîden baṛa rîden
suḥben darağ ma'ha
jalḑi 'ala šowḑeh
w-ḥelw lâma'ha
ja'ğîbeh beḑ-ḑalma mlâ'až ṭanâja'ha.

A lover longs for a sweetheart
 As for clouds which give rain.
 When he comes to his darling
 With lips, ah! so sweet,
 He is dazzled in the darkness
 By clinging to her teeth.

Jâ marḥaba jâ marḥaba beṭwêreš al-žible lefa'
w-elja lefa ġâna-l-ḥaja.

Hail, hail to thee,
 O little pilgrim! who didst arrive from the south,
 And when he came rain too arrived.

Ṭwêrež al-žible is the south wind, which is usually followed by rain.

Jâ ṭwêreš al-žible	O pilgrim from the south!
‘ajjent ḥajjâni	Hast thou not seen my kinsfolk?
w-alli wara bošra	They are wont to camp beyond Bošra
w-alli bhawrâni.	And in the Ḥawrân.

The south wind is besought to bring rain also to the territory northwest of Bošra and the whole country around the Ḥawrân so that the herds of the girl's kin may find good pasture when they encamp there.

CHAPTER IX
STRANGERS IN THE CAMP
NEIGHBORS OR ḲUṢARA’

In every Rwejli camp there lives a member of another tribe who has left his kin for some reason and who, for a time at least, desires to make his home in a different territory. Such a stranger generally comes to an agreement with some Rwejli that they will be neighbors, ḵuṣara (sing., ḵaṣîr), and as such will protect each other. A Rwejli cannot be a ḵaṣîr to another Rwejli, but may have for a neighbor a member of some other ‘Aneze tribe, whether friendly or hostile.

The Rwejli protects his ḵaṣîr against the Rwala and the ḵaṣîr does the same for the Rwejli against his own people. A ḵaṣîr, a guest, zejf, and a traveling companion, ḥawi, all of whom enjoy special privileges, are not subject to the ordinary regulations of the tribe, lâ jemšûn al-ḥaḵḵ. Their stick has as much force as another Bedouin’s saber, ‘aṣâhom sejf. The ḵaṣîr is treated as a man possessed of power, ‘azîz, and justice is always done to him, ḥaḵḵeh ḥâṣel. Even in cases where a Rwejli comes in conflict with a neighbor from elsewhere, the latter’s Rwejli neighbor obtains, by force if necessary, a fair decision for him; or, as the saying is: “With a drawn saber and a swaying [balance of] justice, bes-sejf aṭ-ṭâjel w-al-ḥaḵḵ al-mâjel.”

When a Rwejli has a claim against a ḵaṣîr, he may not make his demand himself but must put it in the hands of the stranger’s Rwejli ḵaṣîr. If the claim dates back to the time before the stranger became the latter’s neighbor, the usual answer is: “And why didst thou not seek thy rights before he was my neighbor? If thou couldst wait till today, wait now till he is my neighbor no more.” A Rwejli may not sue a ḵaṣîr. Yet should he do so and the judge, ignorant that the defendant is a ḵaṣîr, decide against him, the judgment never becomes valid. The Rwejli neighbor will say to the plaintiff: “What art thou doing? I am thy opponent, ana žedîmak laṭ-ṭalâjeb, not my ḵaṣîr. Sue me, but my neighbor thou hadst better leave in peace!”

If anything is stolen from a stranger kaşîr by a Rwejli, he reports it at once to his native kaşîr, who goes to the guilty person and speaks thus: "Doest thou not see that A is my kaşîr and as dear to me as my own kin and all my tribesmen in this camp? kaşîri bân al-'anâja w-at-tenâja. Why didst thou take it from him?" And, seizing the stolen object, by force if necessary, he returns it to his kaşîr.

Should a Rwejli assault the woman of a stranger kaşîr in her tent, she shouts for the native kaşîr to come to her assistance, which he is bound to do. If he kills the assaulter in his kaşîr's tent he not only is not exposed to the blood vengeance, but the murdered man's kin, or, if he was not killed, the culprit himself, must pay the blood price for having insulted the tent of a neighbor.

But if the stranger kaşîr kills a Rwejli he hastens to his native kaşîr's tent with the entreaty: "Help me escape! haz-zemni." The latter instantly summons his kin, ahl: "I want to help my neighbor to escape," and they all must support him in this. Should the stranger kaşîr express his willingness to pay the blood price, his native kaşîr protects him until all is settled.

When a Rwala camp is attacked by the enemy and among other things the stranger kaşîr's camels or mare are captured, it is the duty of his native kaşîr to return to his stranger neighbor all that was stolen from him out of the booty taken by the Rwala in their next successful raid. The reward given to the raider is a she-camel for a mare and two meğîdijjât ($1.80) for a she-camel.

In the same way the native neighbor is protected by the stranger kaşîr against the latter's own tribe. Only when both tribes declare war on each other, in the course of which the stranger's property is captured, is the native kaşîr absolved from helping him, unless he has made a prior agreement to do so. In this case he declares in the chief's tent:

"O you Rwala all! be my witnesses; thou too, Eben Ša'lân! I and my neighbor here have bound ourselves by an agreement to protect each other in any event. His tribesmen will not eat from my property and I shall not eat from theirs. Jâ rwala ešhadû w-ešhad jâ-ben ša'lân tarâni ma'âjifen kaşîri flân al-flâni enni hom mâ jâkolûn ḥalâli w-ana mâ âkol ḥalâlhom." The same declaration is made by the stranger kaşîr either in person or by a message in writing in the tent of the chief of his tribe. If then his tribesmen steal anything from his native kašîr they must return it, and vice versa.

When a member of a hostile tribe is hired by a Rwejlî to herd his camels and the herd entrusted to his care is attacked by his tribesmen, he is allowed by the raiders to keep for the Rwejlî three she-camels, one for riding and two for milking, ka'ada w-menâjeheh or rukûba w-ḥalûba.

WANDERING PETTY MERCHANTS OR KUBEJSÂT

In almost every camp there lives a wandering merchant called a Kubejsî (pl., Kubejsât), although he does not always hail from the settlement of al-Kubejsa, near Hit on the right bank of the middle Euphrates. He comes with one or two camels laden with his goods, quarters himself as a guest with a Bedouin, pitches beside the black tent of his host his round white tent, hejme, and begins to sell cheap kerchiefs, men's shirts, material for women's shirts, shoes, and numerous other articles of clothing, bzâ', and also tobacco, coffee, hejl (cardamom), and some drugs. He pays the owner of the tent where he boards with cloth enough to make one suit. The chief gets nothing at all.

Few Bedouins buy for cash, but nearly all buy on credit, paying 25 per cent interest in five months. The creditor, dajjân, presses his debtor, madjûn, all the time to pay what he owes him. He seizes his camels and often even his mare so as not to lose anything; for no Bedouin would ever pay if not compelled to do so; yet there are times when he, too, finds constant dunning unbearable. It is said:

Mâ hamm illa hamm ad-dên
w-lâ wağâ' illa wağâ' al-ên.

Nothing causes more torment than a debt,
And nothing greater pain than the eye.

The interest, fâjez, on borrowed money must be paid at once in cash. For instance, on borrowing 10 meğîdijjât (\$9.00), $2\frac{1}{2}$ meğîdijjât interest is paid for a year in advance and the borrower has to declare that he has borrowed $12\frac{1}{2}$ meğîdijjât, when as a matter of fact all that is left to him is $7\frac{1}{2}$ meğîdijjât. Both the debt and interest must be paid at the time when camel markets are held, namely in July or August, when the Bedouins camping in the tilled country sell their camels, wakt al-mowsem. Every debtor brings his bondsman, who declares in the presence of the creditor that so much is owed and that the principal together with the interest, marbah, will be paid at a certain stated date. Should the Kubejsi in the meantime die, his host, mu'azzeb, collects the amounts due to him and hands them over to his heirs. Debts contracted with the Kubejsât, the Bedouins pay regularly enough, mainly because they fear that otherwise no merchants would come to them.

When the Rwala camp in a settled region, some of the big merchants send messengers to the prince to inquire whether he will allow them to come to his camp with goods to sell. If the messengers receive the prince's assurance that he will take them under his protection, bwaġh aš-šejh, the wholesaler loses no time in dispatching his employees to the camp, and before long from fifty to seventy white tents, hijâm, will be seen in the prince's camp. In these everything is sold that the Bedouin's heart desires. For each of these tents one new pack saddle, hedâġe, and one roṭol (2.56 kilograms) of green coffee are delivered to the prince as his due. Their stay in the camp terminates about the middle of August, for at the end of that month the Rwala usually return to the inner desert.

In the settled territory many merchants take camels in exchange for their wares, thus enabling the Bedouins to provide themselves with everything they need or desire. The sons of the desert are like children in this respect, wanting all they see or whatever takes their fancy and little caring whether they really need it or not. They buy all sorts of expensive things, often toys, which they soon spoil and then simply throw away as useless. As long as they have camels, or at least the money received for them, they pay cash; when this is gone, they either borrow money or buy on credit without worrying when or if ever the debt will be paid. It is a common saying in the desert: "Debt eats away the profit of him who borrows, ad-dên ḡaṭṭâ rizž al-mežbel."

POEMS RELATING TO KUṢARA' AND KUBEJSÂT

There are frequent references to both the stranger ḡaṣîr and the merchant in Bedouin poems.

1. Allâh w-ma' hâda lek allâh lena kâr
'an ġârna mâ katṭ naḥfi-t-ṭarife
2. narfa' hdâmeh rafwat al-ʿešš bel-ṛâr
nôde' leh an-nefes al-żwijje za'ife
3. nabṛih elja baddal dâr bidjâr
w-kill min beġîrâneh je'edd al-waṣîfe
4. aḥaden leġîrâneh baḥatri w-nawwâr
w-aḥaden leġîrâneh ṣafâten maḥîfe.

1. Allâh — and yet, thine is Allâh, ours the labor.
From our neighbor we never may hide our dainties.
2. We shall make level what he has torn down, as the nest in a rocky wall is made level;
Even if our temper be stubborn, with him we always behave mildly,
3. Hoping that, when he leaves our camp for another,
To all his neighbors he will tell of our friendly services.
4. One proves to be to his neighbors a useful and fair flower,
Another to his neighbors a barren, flat rock.

The poet is unknown. The reciters were Ĥmâr abu ʿAwwâd and Mindîl al-Ḳaṭi. The Bedouin describes his relations with his stranger neighbor.

Verse 1. He reproaches his neighbor with something, but admits that the neighbor is under Allâh's protection, while to care for him is his own duty. Ṭarife is a delicacy like barîra, a rare tasty dish. 2. Ṛâr is a steep inaccessible slope or precipice with numerous crevices and cavities in which birds of prey nest. To prevent their young from falling out, the parent birds level the floor of the nest with their beaks and then build a stout wall of twigs and bones. 4. Baḥatri is Erodium cicutarium, L.

1. Hannejt ani bil-lejl dîċen ji'â'i lâ wa' hanijjak bet-tešâwît jâ dîċ
2. jâ wanneti wannet kerîš al-afâ'i
ješzah min summ al-ḥajâja swâhîġ
3. w-ḥâli alli ċannaha ḥâl sâ'i
ḥolli ʿala darb al-ḥaṭar w-ad-dwârîġ
4. ʿala ʿašîri ʿaḳseteh waḳm bâ'i
wa-mṣawwereh fattâḥ bâb aš-šebâbiċ
5. semiġjeha-lli ʿaliġjen birtifâ'i
jâ ʿârefîn al-kâf min hw semi dîċ

6. ʿaẓīdaha-lli maʿ awwal al-mâl râʿi
w-lâ jirtaʿ illa bir-rijâẓ as-swâhîẓ
7. ḥallû mtâḥi lil-ṛanam w-ar-rġâʿi
ḥadb az-ẓuhûr nâẓelîn al-mesâbîġ
8. miṭl an-nsûr brâs ḥabra meẓâʿi
w-ani min alli kafwahom kâʿeden hîċ
9. mâ-ni maʿ ġajjâbt al-fowd w-lâ-ni brâʿi
w-enkeẓ maʿ al-wardân laʿâbet aṣ-ṣîċ
10. mâr jâ-llâh jâ-lli ʿâlījen birtifâʿi
tefreġ limin hw kasīm ʿala-ẓ-ẓîẓ 11. mâ-kwa âkûm wâkefen ʿala krâʿi
w-ḥâċi-l-mahlûk w-arẓi-l-maḥâlîẓ.

1. To a cock crowing at night I wished health;
In truth, may thy song serve thy health, O cock!
2. This is my lament, as of one bitten by an adder,
Whose veins from the snake poison ache.
3. My lot is like that of a courier on a camel,
Deserted on a road of peril and death,
4. For my sweetheart with plaits a fathom long
Is adorned by him who opens all gates.
5. Her name is like that which is high and slender —
O ye who read tracks, what is her name?
6. Her betrothed, who went with the first herd as its herdsman, Pasturing it in level spaces covered with juicy grass only,
7. Has been left by the drivers of sheep, goats, and pack
Which carry on bent backs conical ornaments, [camels
8. Like vultures resting their tails against the bank of a rain pond;
And I am he who sits here far behind them.
9. I go neither with the food carriers nor with the herdsmen
But consort only with babes playing in the mud.
10. Yet thou, O Allâh! who art enthroned high above the earth
Wilt grant success to him whose lot is to suffer.
11. For I lack the strength to stand on my legs
And speak as a human being and yearn for human beings.

The poet was Jûsef eben Mġejd. His occupation was driving sheep and goats as well as pack camels carrying Persian fabrics from Irak to Syria. Once, while on a trip through north-western Palmyrena, he became seriously ill and had to stay in the tent of a Bedouin of the tribe of al-Ḥsene, subject to Eben Melhem. His comrades continued their journey, leaving him behind. Deserted and tortured with pain, he composed this poem, which was recited to me by Blejhân eben Meşreb.

Verse 1. 'Â'a' signifies the sound of a crowing cock. 2. Ješ-zâni râsi is the same as jowġa'ani râsi, my head is aching. Swâhîġ are the paths by which poison is spread; hence veins or arteries. 3. Sâ'i here means a messenger mounted on a camel traversing alone the desert between Damascus and Hît. 4. Bâb aš-šebâbič is the gate of a walled-in market place on which the windows of the selling booths open. Allâh grants or takes away the merchants' profits — he therefore opens the gate of their market place and adorns the poet's sweetheart with beauty. 5. Ârefîn al-kâf are men expert in reading tracks, whether of men or animals, and in telling how old they are and whether made by camels from the Nefûd or the Ḥarra. The name of the beloved maiden was Rumḥa, Spear. 7. Jatḥi or jutaḥḥi means that he calls for the sheep or goats with the words ethi, ṭha'. Mesâbiġ, as was explained to me, are the conical ornaments sometimes half a meter high forming the back part of the pack saddle. When the backs of the pack camels traversing a vast plain project above the horizon, these ornaments on a clear night resemble vultures standing upright.

1. Jâ râčeben ḥamra min al-heġen mehdâb
ġed'ijjeten kaṭ' al-fejâfi menâha
2. jâ tekel rabda 'ânekat râs merkâb
čann az-żwâri tenhašha ma' kafâha
3. elja twannat bass howza bimeš'âb
mâ danak ar-rakḳâ' jirka' ḥafâha
4. merbâ'aha bimfarra' al-heri w-aš-šwâb
eljamâ tekâmel šaḥmha bikarâha
5. fowkha řulâmen mâ jeḥasseb lil-aġnâb
šaḳkâr bi'ûd al-leġâwi ġedâha
6. račebtaha min dîrt aš-šâm ġallâb
abî 'ala-lli tammanha w-eštarâha
7. telfi labu řalfiž ředden lil-aġnâb
'awḳ ar-rudûm alli tṭarraḳ derâha
8. sukkar 'asal ḥelwen 'ala-l-čabed low dâb
semmen 'ala čabd al-ma'âdi saḳâha
9. saba' as-sbâ' al-firz lil-ḥukum dowlâb
low a'żamat kuṭr ad-da'âwi każâha
10. low hw 'ala-n-nahrejn w-aš-šaṭṭ w-az-zâb
w-illa 'ala kanzên mâlen fanâha

11. tara-t-talâta alli tekûlûn bedjâb
tara-t-talâta 'enda fâres hawâha
12. ṛâb an-neġem w-as-shejl w-al-ġedi mâ ṛâb
fâres 'ala kill al-ġezîre raṭâha
13. min fowk šakra šadraha čannaha-l-bâb
šelfa min damm al-ma'âdi saḳâha
14. šfûḳ 'akab leh šijârem lil-aġnâb
šwâže min 'akab 'amša ramâha.

1. O thou who ridest on a she-camel of the long-paced ones
Not yet four years old that over the vast desert longs to cross!
2. Oh, one might say of her that she is like a she-ostrich which with neck outstretched has climbed a hill
As if attacked by beasts of prey from behind.
3. If her fast gait slackens, a swinging stick is all she needs;
No cobbler will tire by tending her galled hoof.
4. In rabî she grazes where al-Herî and aṣ-Šwâb rise,
Till the fat of her back has reached its height.
5. A bold man is mounted on her, no stranger;
I, Šaḳḳâr, who guide her with an almond stick
6. From the land of Syria, I, a merchant, ride her
And I sell to everyone who gives a fair price.
7. (The she-camel) will come to the father of Šalfîž, an enemy of strangers,
Butcher of stout she-camels, whose humps shake with fat.
8. He is sugar, honey sweet when it melts in the stomach, But poison for the stomach of his enemies to whom he gives drink.
9. A leader among lions, to the Government he is a millwheel,
And, be the number of claims never so great, he will settle them all.
10. Whether camping between the two rivers or by the Euphrates or az-Zâb
And if owner of two stores, he exhausts them.
11. See! the three virtues ascribed to Dijâb, See! all these three virtues Fâres has.
12. Stars set and so sets Canopus, but the pole star never,
Fâres, too, outshines all Mesopotamia. [and thus
13. When riding his sorrel with gate-wide breast
The edge of his spear in the blood of his foes he dyes.
14. Šfûḳ begot swords against the strangers [tyranny.
And meteors born from 'Amša he hurled at the stranger's

The poet, Şakḳâr, a native of the settlement of al-Kubejsa, was a peddler among the branch of the Şammar tribe camping between the middle Euphrates and the Tigris. The chief Fâres of the reigning family Âl Ğarba' was his protector. The name of the chief's father was Şfûḳ, his mother's name 'Amša. Both father and son hated the Turkish strangers intensely on account of the wrongs they had to suffer from the governor at Mosul. In the poem cited above Şakḳâr praises himself and extols Fâres. The narrators were Mḥammad al-Ḳaẓîb and Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 3. Howza, instead of hezz, shake or nod. The hoofs of some she-camels are covered with too fine a skin. When such an animal walks for any length of time on rocky roads, especially in volcanic regions strewn with sharp pieces of lava, the hoof skin becomes covered with callous spots or scars so that blood flows at every step. In speaking of a camel in this condition the Rwala use the verb ḥafat, meaning "she has become calloused or scarred, she walks barefoot." To save his animal from loss of blood, the rider cuts out from a tough camel hide pieces of the size of the hoof, and stitches them, jirka', under the scarred hoof. The she-camel tries to rid herself of the uncomfortable sole by rubbing it against rocks and often cuts the stitches, which must be repaired at once, causing the rider much fatigue and delay (see my The Northern Heğâz, New York, 1926, pp. 194-196). 4. Al-Heri and aş-Şwâb are valleys heading in the northeastern part of the desert of al-Hamâd. 5. Ūd al-leğâwi is a stick made from an almond shoot. 7. Şalfîż is a son of Fâres. 'Awk ar-rudûm is a poetical term. Rudûm here signifies she-camels so fat that they can hardly move. 9. Fâres lived in perpetual discord with the Turkish Government, refusing to recognize its claims, crushing them as would a millwheel. 11. Dijâb eben Rânem was famous for his bravery, farse, generosity, karam, and judgment, 'akel. These three qualities gained for him the title şâheb al-mruwwa, meaning "famous for his great sagacity," or, possibly, "gentleman." 12. A rider in the desert at night cannot guide himself by stars which change their place. The pole star, being almost stationary, is the traveler's safest guide. 14. Şwâže' are meteors which crush everything upon which they fall.

SLAVES

Slaves are owned not only by the chiefs but by ordinary Bedouins as well. Adult slaves cannot be bought any longer; small negro children, however, are still brought from Neğd and offered for sale. In most cases they are the children of black prostitutes from the large settlements of central Arabia and from al-Medina and Mecca, but they are also frequently orphans. No negro is a chattel, mamlūk, of his master, for he may not be sold or killed and is free to choose another master. As a rule, however, the slaves remain with the same family all the time, min ġdūdhom. Every married slave has his own tent, camels, and weapons, all this being given to him by his master, to whom he must return everything, should he wish to leave him. Even the slave's clothing is furnished by the master. The slaves in the household of a prince or great chief live entirely care-free. If the supplies are not well guarded by their master's mother or wife, they help themselves at their pleasure, cooking, roasting, and frying in their tents without a thought as to whether anything is left for the prince or chief. Then when the supplies are gone, they merely say: "We are hungry," and the master must replenish his larder anew.

If the chief entertains visitors, the slaves eat up all that is left over, so that the chief has to go to bed hungry.

Work is shunned by the slaves whenever possible. If the master himself does not see that it is done, they remain leaning peacefully against their camel saddles, smoking their master's tobacco and drinking his coffee. Their chief work is watering the camels. If the chief owns a large herd of white camels, marâtîr, and a herd of pack camels, zaml, with two or three herds of she-camels besides, they often draw water for the animals for two nights and a day or two days and a night, especially if the chief is present. The slaves load and unload supplies and lead the laden camels. They also help the women with the unloading, loading, transporting, and pitching of the tent, but only when afraid of the master. However, if they know him to be on bad terms with his women, they at once take his side and will not move a finger to do anything for the women. They work voluntarily only when they expect to gain something by doing so. When important guests arrive, the complaisance and affability of the slaves is boundless. But should the guest fail to tip them well on his departure, they will not deign to notice him when he comes again. They are very eager to share in the raids, loot, of course, being their main object. All the horses captured by the slave must be delivered to his master, who, however, is obliged to give the slave a camel for every horse. One half of the captured camels go to the master, the others are the slave's share.

The little sons of the chiefs are brought up by the slaves; they make friends with the slaves' sons, and everything that they do is on the advice of the slaves and with their assistance. The slave is frequently the confidant of the first love of his master's son, negotiates with the girl's kin, protects his wife and children in a rebellion or hostile invasion, and is often the real guardian of his master's orphans, whom he also assists to regain their power and property. When the master's daughter marries into another tribe, as a rule she is accompanied thither by a reliable slave.

The slaves are the main support of the chief: they protect him against a sudden attack and execute any order he may give. Yet nobody deposes or kills a chief so readily or more frequently than his own slaves. In the disputes which sometimes arise between the members of ruling houses the decision lies with the slaves, so that a weak chief often is nothing but a tool in their hands. In camp every slave has a certain place allotted to him for his tent. They completely surround their chief's tent and in this manner prevent the entrance of unbidden guests. Whoever wishes his affair to succeed with the chief must first gain the head slave's favor. This man never opposes his master, but he generally arranges matters in such a way that in the end the chief cannot avoid endorsing every thing the slaves may desire.

The slaves call their master uncle, 'amm, claiming to be beni al-'amm, relatives or cousins, of his kin. The imperative "semm," "Mention!" or "Order!" is used by the slave, by a raider, and even by a Bedouin, when his master or chief calls for him; it is an invitation to the master to make known his wish or command.

Among themselves the slaves have kin, ahl, like the Bedouins. They form marital ties without paying any heed to their master, only the consent of their own kin being necessary in this case. The master has no right to choose a wife for his slave or to take her away from him. Killing and murder they avenge not only among themselves, but on the free Bedouins as well. The master who kills his slave exposes himself to the vengeance of the latter's kin and must pay the blood price. Should he refuse, the avengers place themselves under the protection of a more powerful slave, generally the head slave of a chief, who soon compels the Bedouins to assist him in humbling the guilty person. A slave can pursue or protect, leh wağh je'addi jesaddi, in the same manner as his master. Whoever hurts his protégé gains the enmity not only of the slave but of his whole kin, and of the slave's master as well, who must support the slave in order to have peace in the tent and his usual comforts.

Yet, no matter how powerful, a slave can never marry the daughter of even the poorest Bedouin; and, on the other hand, the least of the herdsmen would not think of marrying a slave's daughter. For even the poorest Bedouin is independent, ħorr, while the slave remains subject, 'abd, for ever. Not even the members of the most despised tribes, like the Šlejb, Šarârât, Htejm, etc., would marry a slave. In a certain manner they all are ħorr, despite the low esteem in which they are held, and a slave remains 'abd, no matter what power he wields. Only the sons and daughters of white blacksmiths, šunnâ', enter into blood relations with slaves. If a black slave marries a white girl, the daughter of a šâne', and their son also marries a daughter of a šâne' again, the third and fourth generations are quite white, and yet they do not become free, ħorr, but always remain slaves, 'abîd. In the settlements — especially in the cultivated regions — the origin of such whites is sometimes forgotten, but never among the Bedouins of the desert.

WHOLESALE MERCHANTS AND THEIR AGENTS, THE 'AĶEJL

As the Rwala are occupied almost exclusively in camel breeding, it is only in exchange for camels that they can get grain, clothing, arms, saddles, and other necessities of life. The camels they sell either in the inner desert or in the settled territory, nearly always to the same wholesale merchants who live in the larger towns on the borders of Arabia as well as in Egypt and India. The most prominent among these is the Eben Bassâm family, from the settlement of Bassâm in al-Ķašîm. Its members own large business houses at al-Başra, Bombay, at-Ţâjef, Cairo, and Damascus. They export camels from Arabia, they act as agents for the importing of coffee, spices, and rice, not only by ship or railroad but also by pack camels, and they supply the Bedouins with arms. There is no large settlement in inner Arabia where an agent of Eben Bas-sâm does not reside.

The Âl Sâlem family also is now engaged almost exclusively in the buying and selling of camels. These merchants hail from ad-Der'ijje but live at Bagdad and Damascus. Members of this family once helped the Wahnâbite princes of the Eben Sa'ûd family with money, and even now they have many friends in Neğd.

The third firm engaged in trading in camels — also in clothing — is the Âl 'Îsa family. They reside at Damascus and trade chiefly with the 'Aneze and Hwêtât tribes.

The wholesale dealers hardly ever visit inner Arabia. They have their middlemen to whom they furnish money for dealings on their behalf. All these middlemen or agents are natives of al-Ḳaṣîm and are called 'Aḳejl, whether they belong to the tribe of that name or not. An 'Aḳejli agent gets money from the wholesale dealer to buy camels from a certain tribe. He drives the animals which he has bought to Egypt or al-Baṣra or al-Kwejt where he sells them, dividing the net profit with the wholesale dealer in such a way that the latter gets two-thirds or half of it. If the agreement was that the wholesale dealer was to get two-thirds, he must stand the entire loss that may result from the transaction; in the other case the loss is shared equally. It should be said in explanation of this that the demand for camels is not always the same. Often prices in Egypt and al-Baṣra rise suddenly; the Bedouins learn this and ask more too; the middleman or speculator, as he might be called, has to buy dear, but when he brings the camels to the market the price may have fallen and he must sell at a loss.

Such an 'Aḳejli agent hires assistants, usually his countrymen from al-Ḳaṣîm, provides himself with light white tents, coffee, rice, and often also arms both for sale and exchange, and rides with letters of recommendation to the prince or chief of the tribe from which he means to buy. Having delivered the letters and gifts sent to those dignitaries by the wholesale dealer, he puts up his tents either in the prince's camp or, if permitted, in the camp of some chief. The chief of the camp where the trader has put up his tents is also his host, mu'azzeb, in so far as he protects him as his guest but does not board him. The Bedouins now bring their camels to his white tents, hijâm, and as a rule sell them for cash. Only when the agent has brought arms and ammunition from al-Kwejt or al-ʿAẓêr for sale, will they exchange their animals for these articles. On the sale of every camel the prince or the chief gets one-half or one meġġidijje ($0.45 or 0.90). The purchased animal is then branded with the ʿAġejli mark and left to graze in the herd with the others. For his herdsmen the ʿAġejli hires youths from the tribe where he is buying at the time. Many herdsmen accompany the agent's herds as far as Egypt and on their return tell of the wonderful things they have seen or learned on their trip. If the ʿAġejli buys camels in the inner desert, he remains with the purchased herds for many weeks, or even months, with the same tribe, waiting until it moves to the settled territory, generally toward the end of June. If he buys from tribes who never leave the inner desert he drives the herds he has bought from tribe to tribe, until he comes to some clan of a tribe which leaves as a rule in May or June for the tilled territory in order to supply itself there for its sojourn in the desert. On reaching the border of the desert, the ʿAġejli proceeds to the nearest large town where camel markets are held. If he can sell his animals there advantageously, he will do so and return to the tribe from which he came and buy camels again; but should he think that he could do better in Egypt, he will buy everything he can from other speculators whom he happens to find in the town and then journey on to Egypt.

The herds belonging to the ʿAġejl may be captured by strange raiders, just as the herds of members of the tribe with whom he happens to be migrating, and for that reason the ʿAġejl have in every large clan their brother, ah, to whom they pay, jehîh, from four to five Turkish pounds ($18 to 22.50), one good riding camel, and two or three good cloaks annually. This brother is obliged to restore to them every camel stolen by a member of his clan. Among the Rwala and the Weld ʿAli the ʿAġejl have brothers in the following kins: Eben Mašhûr, Eben Derʿân, Eben Ġandal, Eben Mġejd, Eben Meġel, and Eben Ĥamad al-Wlêdʿi or al-Wahbi (of the Weld ʿAli, also called the Beni Wahab). If the Rwala bring home from one of their raids camels bearing the ʿAġejl brand and there is no ʿAġejli camping with them, the ah drives these camels into his own herd and waits till some 'Aḳejli comes to claim them. Thus a brother's eye cares for the 'Aḳejl even during their absence, 'ajneh warâhom.

BLACKSMITHS

In the opinion of the Rwala, Allâh created with the first Bedouin also the first smith, ṣâne (pl., ṣunnâ). Every camp and every settlement of inner Arabia has its blacksmith who works for the whole clan or for the whole oasis. Often the same blacksmith family has camped with the same clan from time immemorial and yet cannot be adopted by it, for the ṣunnâ remain strangers forever. Among themselves the blacksmiths form kins of their own, and the blacksmiths of the Rwala are relatives, beni al-amm, of all the blacksmiths in Arabia. They live in almost the same way as the Bedouins or settlers and are subject to claims of vengeance among themselves; but they never make war or take part in raids, even as allies of the Bedouins. During an attack on the camp where their tents stand they go on with their work unconcernedly, defending neither themselves nor their neighbors, for they have their brother, ah, in every tribe whose duty it is to return to them anything of which a member of that tribe has robbed them. Among the Rwala a member of the Âl Miğwel kin is the brother of the ṣunnâ. If a Bedouin does any wrong to a blacksmith, the latter complains to Eben Miğwel, who must put matters right. When the raiders bring along, besides other booty, camels bearing the ṣunnâ brand, their brother takes them all into his herd and sends word to the blacksmith of the raided tribe: "Your camels are held by me." They then come, pick out their animals, and return home with them. But if camels branded with the mark of the brother's tribe are found among those of the ṣunnâ, he returns them to his tribesmen. For his trouble the brother keeps every fifth animal as well as such as are not claimed by the owner blacksmith.

The ṣâne not only shoes horses but repairs rifles, daggers, etc., and often makes new rifles, fine sabers, and spears, for there are many good artisans in his craft. For shoeing a horse he will make no charge. His reward is a two-year old she-camel, hežže, for every horse captured and all the horse saddles brought home from the raids, which he then sells for his own profit. When the Bedouins procure supplies of grain in the tilled territory for their stay in the inner desert, the blacksmith demands one meğîdijje ($0.90) on each horse in order to buy his provisions. Whoever slaughters a camel must give the blacksmith all its entrails and the shins of its hind legs.

No Bedouin, not even a member of despised tribes like the Šarârât, Şlejb, Ĥawâzem, etc., would marry the daughter of a blacksmith nor let his daughter marry him. For the şâne^c, although white, is not independent, is not horr.

CHAPTER X

POETRY

POETS AND POETICAL COMPOSITION

The Rwala love to hear, recite, and compose poems, which they call kaşâjed (sing., kaşide). A verse is called kâf. It usually consists of two halves, the first being nusş al-kâf and the second, which is always rhymed, âher al-kâf, being kâf at-tâli. The poet says of himself: "I composed a poem, kaşatt or kilt al-kaşide." Sometimes a poet will not say that he composed (a poem), kaşad, but merely that he uttered (a poem), kâl. The audience say to the poet: "Reveal us thy poem, ebdaha 'alejna." If a begging poet comes to a chief in whose honor he has composed a poem, he begins by saying: "There are a few words, O chief! which I should like to disclose to thee, O long-living one! endi çlêmât jâ şejh abri ebdiha 'alejk jâ tawîl al-'omr." "Out with it! hâtah." And the poet in a nasal voice begins to recite his poem. The first words he blurts out, the next he half swallows, and the last he utters in a falsetto. If the chief likes the poem, its author gets a reward. The begging poets are not held in much esteem, being reproached for their insatiability, for their disregard of honesty in praising even scamps for a reward, and also because they lie and steal. They steal the ideas, sentences, and even whole verses of others. It often happens that the hearers assail such a poet with the words: "Thou liest. Thou stolest it from So-and-So!" The poet defends himself, calling on others to be his witnesses, but the confidence of his hearers is gone, and they say: "A poet is a liar, kaşşâd kaddâb." When the poet learns that his composition or some of his verses are claimed by somebody else, he complains to the chiefs or even in the courts, but they all refuse to listen on the ground that a poet cannot be trusted.

On hearing a new poem the Bedouins inquire its author's name, lîmin hâdi. An anonymous poem is called mağhûla.

A poem is but rarely written down. As a rule the poet's friends learn it by heart, and others learn from them. Every Bedouin knows several poems but hardly ever the whole of any. He usually recites from six to ten verses and then says that perhaps someone else knows the rest. Hence, since every long poem must be collected piecemeal from a number of men, the order of the individual verses can seldom be accurately established. If two Bedouins know the same verses of the same poem, they never recite them in exactly the same way but change the original words and often whole verses. Sometimes these changes are due to later improvements by the poet himself, but in most cases his unconscientious or careless friends are to blame. The Bedouins often quarrel as to the original wording of the verses and frequently ask the poet himself about this, but even he is not always absolutely sure. Often the poet insists that a verse was at first worded in such and such a way, but his friends contradict him. This makes him exclaim that all the versions are good and original, and he ends by appealing to the omniscience of Allâh. After hearing this answer from a number of poets, I gave up the search for the original wording, as the task is not only most difficult but quite useless. At other times I found that the poet himself knew barely the first few verses of his own poem. The rest he had forgotten and was glad that his friends remembered more than he. Only poems dealing with subjects of common interest become widely known and are preserved, whereas poems describing particular events are recited only by the persons concerned and fall into oblivion when these persons are dead.

It cannot be denied that the Bedouins are poetically gifted. The composing of all kinds of ditties and songs is mere play to them, and they do not hesitate even at longer poems. They also hold that the words used in a poem must be out of the ordinary, not those heard in common everyday life. The more unusual words the Bedouin can put into his composition, the better he thinks it. The poet therefore revises every verse most painstakingly, repeats it many times, substitutes some words for others, and asks the opinion of his friends before producing his poem.

The Rwejli always explains the reason or occasion of the origin of every poem, believing that the poet had some motive for its composition. Often he forms his own opinion as to the origin of some old poem simply from its contents and is firmly convinced that he is not mistaken, and yet no one but the poet himself could say what induced him to compose it.

TYPICAL BEDOUIN POEMS

I give below some poems of the Rwala and of others camping with them. In some cases these were explained to me by the poets themselves.

Lament of a Man Dogged by Misfortune

1. Jâ râceb alli mâ laheġha-l-ġenîni
hamra' tešûk alli 'ala-d-daww šabbâr
2. ter'a min aš-šâma lġamm aš-šenîni
elġamâ rada fowk al-abâher tekel târ
3. jerdi-l-'amâs ekrânaha w-ad-demîli
w-rakkâbah mâ mall min kitr al-enšâr
4. telfi labu bejdar min al-rânemîni
bekrâjezen mâ ħâfaha kill faššâr
5. aķšar mâ 'endi nahâr az-za'îni
čejf az-zemâjel bass tentên wa-ħwâr
6. bel'ci jerdi min štûnen teġîni
'abbi-s-sebîl w-ħott bel-'azem lî nâr
7. 'azzi min mitli 'aduwweh bebtejni
lâ hw mšâwerni w-lâ jetî' al-ašwâr
8. jâ-llâh ŧalabtak žâre'ât al-ħanîni
bem'âķeb al-bedwân werden w-šaddâr
9. ħatt-en afraħ elġa-l-msajjer jeġîni
jâ zebeu min ħallowh w-al-ġejš ŧajjâr.

1. O thou who ridest a bay she-camel not yet oppressed with a calf,
Filling with desire those who dwell in the vast elongated!
2. From aš-Šâma to aš-Šenîni she grazes, Till, thou wouldst say, a long ridge with steep slope will rise above the fore part of her spine.
3. Her pace and trot permit of slumber
And tire not the rider on his many distant raids.
4. To Abu Bejdar go, to him who is one of the takers
With verses composed by no babbler. [of spoil,
5. The most painful day for me is when moving to another camp,
And little wonder, as only two pack camels and one yearling I possess.

6. What I only imagine, may really happen;
Fill therefore my short pipe and lay fire in its bowl formed from a bone.
7. Pity him who, like me, has an enemy in his own belly,
Who never consults me and takes no advice.
8. O Allâh! I prayed to thee for she-camels pitifully grumbling, In order that, as with various Bedouins, the one might be hauling water while the other was returning,
9. And that I might rejoice at the messenger's arrival From thee who protectest the deserted, even when all the camel riders fled.

‘Amlûš ab-al-Wkal of the Kwâčbe tribe was dogged by misfortune. If he took part in a raid, he not only did not capture anything but usually lost his own animal as well; if he stayed at home, his herd was attacked and some of his camels were stolen. Finally all that remained of his property were two female pack camels and one calf. Then it was that he composed this poem and sent it to the chief Abu Bejdar, who had just returned with rich booty.

Verse 1. Ĝenîni is a calf yet unborn. Laheğha is used of a calf which presses on its mother's womb or clings to its mother. 2. A she-camel that has grazed so well during the march as to become fat is the desire of every traveler. Aš-Sâma is the region lying east of the center of the Sirhân depression; aš-Šenîni (or Umm aš-Šenîni) is a rain pool on the road from al-Ġowf to Tejma. A ṭâr is a long, high, and steep escarpment. The hump of a fat she-camel as seen from either side resembles such a steep slope. 3. Elṭrân is a long, fast pace; demîl, the trot of the camel. Tedowmal has the same meaning as tederhem, she trots. Both the pace and trot of a she-camel are so quiet and even that they allow the rider to slumber peacefully, ‘amâs (or na'âs), and therefore he does not tire, mâ mall, even if making several long journeys, en-šâr. Enšerû is often used instead of emšû, meaning “Run!” “Go!” 4. Rânemîn are men who almost always return with booty, rañime. 5. Nahâr aṣ-ṣa'îni is the day on which the tent with all its contents is loaded on camels for removal to another camp. Ṣa'âjen are small groups of camels which carry the property of moving Bedouins. 6. A šatne (pl., štûn) is a thought, notion, or impulse of the Bedouin's heart, hwâğes alli bel-ḳalb. It occurred to ‘Amlûš to send his supplication to the chief, Abu Bejdar. Having done so he waited for the result. In the meantime he filled his short pipe, sebîl; but even that was no longer whole. The Bedouin often carves for himself such a pipe out of a soft stone. The bowl usually soon breaks off and is then attached to a bone. 7. While he smoked, 'Amlûš contemplated his ill luck and pondered on the mystery, thinking it was as if he carried his enemy in his own belly, btejn. Whether he acted on advice or without it, ill success was inevitable. 8. Now he prayed to Allâh to give him two she-camels pitifully grumbling — that is, she-camels which have left their young behind and are still full of milk. All day and all night she-camels parted from their weaned young utter their laments, jekra'en hanînahen. When the Bedouins camp far from water they keep two she-camels hauling water continually, one fetching it and the other returning. This is done for fear of thirst; hence they speak of two she-camels, of one bound for the water, wârede, the second returning with it, şâdere. 9. Al-msajjer is either a special messenger sent by 'Amlûš to Abu Bejdar, or a Bedouin who comes to visit him in the evening and brings the news that he is to receive two she-camels.

A Slanderer is Warned to Make Sure of His Own Paternity Before Reproaching Others.

1. Jâ mčajjel al-ḥamlât lejtak tettabba
'alejk min ġowf al-ḳabâjel ṭalâba
2. sažžem 'ejâlak lejt howšak jehabba ra'is nuwar tel'ab 'ala 'ers jâ-ba
3. low ent min ḥoşn ar-romak mâ tšabba
min 'adrat as-sâġûr w-alli reba' bah
4. ja-l-hebd jâ-lli bel-ḳaşâjed mlabba
turki leḳam leh loḳmeten mâ-htana bah
5. jegîk abu nawwâf min fowḳ ḳabba
ma' surbat al-âdân hom w-aš-šijâba.

1. O thou who bringest loads [of reproaches]! make sure of thy lineage,
For there are complaints against thee from the midst of the tribes.
2. Deprive thy little sons of health! May thy courage awaken!
Thou art a gypsy chief and at dances playest, O dad!

3. Even wert thou sprung of Turkoman stallions, thou wouldst not be used to breed,
Ay, even if thou hailedst from the manure heaps on Sâġûr or from those who grew up there.
4. O al-Hebdâni! O thou who with poems adornest thyself!
Turki swallowed a single mouthful and nobody wished him good digestion.
5. Abu Nawwâf will surprise thee mounted on a mare with narrow high hoofs
And the Âdân and Šijâb troops with him.

Mehde al-Hebdâni, a poet from the Fed'ân tribe, had assailed the Rwala in a poem beginning with the words:

‘Endi leben ša’lân ħmûlen ta’abba,
For Eben Ša’lân I have a good load [of reproaches].

These reproaches are answered by Muḥammad âl Mhelhel in our poem. Mehde was the son of a man who joined the Fed'ân, there married a Fed'ân woman, and not long after the wedding left again. Slandorous tongues claimed that Mehde was not the son of the man whom his mother had wedded; others said that his father was not a Bedouin and as such was not permitted to marry a Bedouin woman, and that he had disappeared through fear of being killed, should it become known that he had deceived the kin of his wife. Muḥammad advises him, therefore, to make sure of his descent rather than meddle with the affairs of the free Bedouins.

Verse 2. Because his descent is uncertain and he himself a coward, it would be best for him if he should deprive his little sons of their health, sažžem. Howš is the excitement, bravery, which takes hold of men when fighting, tahâwašown (or tahârabown). “Hebb” is said in anger, instead of “eḥs” or “o’ḥob” meaning “Shame!” “Away!” Lejt howšak jehabba means, according to the explanation given me by the poet: “May thy courage awaken.” Others, however, maintained that the words signify: “May thy courage be spat upon; may it be gone; away with thy courage!” The Fed'ân tribe camps for nearly six months amongst the settlers who invite gypsies to their weddings for merrymaking. 3. In the neighborhood of the river Sâġûr, where the Fed'ân also encamp, the pure blood of horses is not of much importance, a mare being admitted to any kind of a stallion. But even there Mehde could not find a girl to marry him, owing to the fear that he would beget cowards like himself. The pastures on the river Sâğûr are called by our poet ‘adra, besmeared or polluted, because they are defiled by the excrements of countless flocks. No Rwejli would buy a mare from the neighborhood of the Sâğûr. 4. Turki eben Mhejd, head chief and commander of the Fed‘ân, once gained a victory over the Rwala but was soon afterwards attacked and killed by them. Therefore he could not digest the mouthful he had won by his victory. “Haniĵan,” meaning: “Your health, well may it become you!” is the common way of addressing one who has just taken a drink of water. Nobody spoke in that way to Turki, mâ-htana’ bah. 5. Abu Nawwâf is the prince of the Rwala, an-Nûri. Âdân are the members of the Âl Iden kin. Šijâbe, beasts of prey or wolves, is the name given to the members of the reigning house of Eben Nâĵef, relatives of an-Nûri.

In Honor of the Author

1. Abdi bdiċr allâh ‘ala kill niĵje
rabben ċerîmen ‘âlîmen bel-ħafijjât
2. ĵâ râċeben min fowķ ħamra tenijje
ħorra ħamîma min erċâb aš-šarârât
3. mâ sâmaha-š-šarrâĵi b‘edâd mijje
w-lâ nawwahat leš-šêl dowmen ma‘fât
4. mirbâ‘aha beṭrâf neġd al-‘adijje
tar‘a zahar nawâr ward ad-dwâbât
5. fowķah šdâd w-al-mijâreċ zehijje
w-sefâĵifah lebb al-brîsem ħalijjât
6. maddat min beĵten ‘elûmah ṭarijje
aš-šeĵħ šejjâl al-ħmûl at-težîlât
7. min beĵt abu nawwâf dîb as-serijje
zejzûm meġles ċâsebîn an-nefâlât
8. fowķah řlâmen mâ ĵihâb ad-dwijje
jowšel ċalâm lidĵâren ba‘îdât
9. elĵa lefeĵt adjâr ħâk-as-semijje
ebdi-l-bešâra w-zîd minna-s-salâmât
10. ķel ħorren lefa min ‘endakom leh nwiĵje
neġmen šebîħ as-sheĵl mâ beh řabâwât 11. bâġ al-bilâd al-‘âmra w-al-ħalijje
be‘akl raġîħ mâ ĵihâb al-‘asîrât

12. aš-šejh mûsa 'elûmeh šefijje
hâfez 'elûmen min duhûren muzemnât
13. mâ ġâbat al-ħafrât mitleh ħalijje
w-lâ leh šebîh bešujûh al-bedâwât
14. ħâcem wazîren 'ârefen kill šijje
w-lî leh metîl kûd abu zejd bešfât
15. ħelw-l-metâjel bekfûfen saħijje
šebîh ħâtem mâ jihâb al-ħasârât
16. sinneh zahûk w-ġer'ateh bâslijje
firz al-kanâsel w-al-mešâwer ša'ibât
17. lejten rażanfar mâ jdâni-r-radijje
der'an ħasînan jidħarûneh al-'âzât
18. w-en jesser al-mawla w-zânat an-nijje
lâzem jiġîkom be'elûmen mutemnât
19. 'elûm al-bawâdi wa-ħzarha w-ar-ra'ijje
dijâr ar-rwala w-fed'ân w-arż al-'amârât
20. wa-djâr neġed w-al-frû' al-ħalijje
ma' dîret aš-šawwân w-arż al-ħwêât
21. ħâdi af'âl alli-ħsa' leh wafijje
kanz al-fahr baħr an-neda w-al-mruwwât.

1. My every purpose I begin by remembering Allâh,
The good Lord who knows all things, even the hidden.
2. O thou who ridest a bay she-camel not yet five years old!
A thoroughbred, fleet of foot, of the Šarârât female riding camels,
3. For whom no buyer has yet offered a hundred other camels,
Who has never knelt for a load, being well cared for;
4. In rabî' time she grazes on the borders of the healthful Neġd
Eating blossoms of many plants, such as tender roses;
5. She carries a saddle with a fine cushion upon which to rest the foot,
And her pied ribbons are of purest silk.
6. Out from the tent she rode carrying the latest news
Of the chief who burdens himself with heavy loads,
7. From the tent of Abu Nawwâf, that wolf of a picked troop,
The shield of those who gather there and whose booty of alms consists.
8. Mounting her is a hero who fears not vast deserts,
Who is to carry word to countries far distant.

9. If thou reachest such countries,
With glad tidings begin and our greetings add.
10. Say: "From you a hunting falcon with a firm resolve came,
Like the star Canopus, which cannot be hidden.
11. Countries both settled and desert he explored
With mind acute, of distress unafraid.
12. Chief Mûsa, of whom are none but glad tidings,
Over ancient events holds sway.
13. To another like him no chaste beauty ever gave birth
And of all Bedouin chiefs none equals him.
14. A ruler he is, vizier, all things knowing,
And none is his equal except, perhaps, Abu Zejd the fabulous.
15. What fair examples his generous hand gives,
Like one who spends and fears no losses.
16. With smiling mouth, of will indomitable,
He excels all consuls, can offer advice in the hardest cases.
17. A reckless lion he, with only contempt for rascals;
Armor stout he has which the oppressed would desire for themselves.
18. If the Lord helps and his aim succeeds
He will return to you with tidings important,
19. With reports of Bedouins, the dwellers in the settlements and nomads, too, who breed goats and sheep,
Of the lands of the Rwala and Fed'ân and the 'Amârât
20. Of the regions of Neġd, of valleys vast, [land,
Of the Şawwân country and the land of the Hwêtât.
21. By these deeds he has gained for himself
A treasure of fame and a sea of knowledge and noble qualities."

This poem was composed by Prince an-Nûri eben Hazzâ' eben Ša'lân with the assistance of his clerk Ğwâd, who recited it to me.

Verse 2. The Šarârât raise the best riding camels. 3. It was not for sale even if a hundred she-camels of the common breed were offered in exchange. 5. Mîraka (pl., mijâreč) is a leather cushion stuffed with wool or camel's hair, which hangs from the front knob of the saddle, covering the camel's neck and serving as a foot rest to the rider. These cushions are sometimes richly ornamented and cost as much as £T10 ($45).

Safâjef are variegated woven ribbons, often five to eight centimeters wide and over a meter and a half long, fastened behind the saddle and hanging down the sides of the animal's belly. 6. Šejjâl al-hmûl at-težîlât means "collecting important news with which he burdens his mind." 7. Abu Nawwâf is Prince an-Nûri. His tent is the gathering place of the needy, who carry away what his munificence gives. 10. Ḥorr signifies a hunting falcon of the best kind. A small star is easily hidden by a little vapor, but shejl, Canopus, shines even in a hazy night. 12. Aš-šejh Mûsa is the writer of this work. 14. Abu Zejd is the hero of the 'Antar tales. 19. Ar-ra'ijje are the fellâhîn who pasture their goats and sheep on the desert border and camp in tents. The Fed'ân and 'Amârât are members of the 'Aneze group. 20. Al-frû' al-ḥalijs is the territory of al-Wudijân stretching down to the right bank of the middle Euphrates. Dîret aš-Şawwân is the district west of the Sirhân depression. The Hwêtât camp in southern aš-Şawwân and on the Red Sea. 21. Neda' is experience, which makes every enterprise succeed in the same way that moisture helps the vegetation. Mruwwât are all the noble qualities which a model Bedouin should have.

*'Abdallâh Answers Fejhân's Reproaches*⁸

1. Jâ râceb min 'endana šej'arijjât
min sâs 'ajrâten e'râben ettelâdi
2. banât ḥorren faḥḥalowh aš-šarârât
bel-ğejš ja'na' leh ġamî' al-bawâdi
3. bitr al-fḥûd wrûkahen mistağellât
ḥoṣ' ar-ržâb mufattalât al-'azâdi
4. šîb al-rawâreb w-al-maḥâzeb emšîbât
min al-koḥl mâ zejjen lehen at-twâdi
5. beš-šadd waṭnât w-bel-maši 'ağlât
raff al-mesâme' w-an-nwâzer eḥdâdi
6. mirbâ'ahen kabšân lel-bedw mašhât
limâ beda' niğm at-twejbe' wkâdi
7. w-en hâṣ min bên an-neḥîfên hejzât
jer'an zahar mâ lâḳ bikill wâdi
8. ğâ' ḥaḳkena behen w-hen ḥaḳkehen fât
kaṭ' al-ḥarâjem w-ad-djâr al-ba'âdi
9. aš-subeh min râ'i nafi mistalgât
ješden rebden mẓajjeren ma' ḥamâdi

⁸ See above, pp. 181f.

10. w-al-ʿaṣr bdâr eben ʿaskar mwejjât
ʿajrât ẓajjerhen semâr al-bilâdi
11. eben ḥasan râʿi ẓruken maḥallât
ʿabdallâh alli lel-maʿâni sidâdi
12. menâsfen behen eṣḥûnen mellât
jermaʿ behen adnâb ḥîlen w-zâdi
13. aṣ-ṣubeḥ dannowhen mustadîrât
w-min ḥâjeṭ ad-dîre lahen iğtilâdi
14. ṛabb as-seraʿ muʿazzelâten w-ẓamrât
mitl al-ḥanâja-lli ḥanâhen istâdi
15. maṣow w-ḥallowhen ʿala-l-wağeh zâfât
misrâḥahen ẓuruk w-arzen ḥamâdi
16. waḳt al-maʿaṣṣa mišrefînen ʿala bjât
mâlen čema-l-ḥarra w-ḵubb tekâdi
17. w-enšed ʿan ar-ruḥmân w-al-ʿelem mâ fât
zemi at-thût lešejl ḥemlen wkâdi
18. w-illa an-alli hom w-ʿelwaʿ ḥrâbât
mâ bēnhom kûd eṣṭefâḵ al-ʿawâdi
19. dowšân ʿalaf sjûfahom kill ġumhât
ʿala-l-eždaʿ w-illa rejṛ žâdi
20. w-illa ʿan-alli bel-ḵaṣa jedbaḥ aš-šât
fejḥân eben žâʿed ḥarîb al-bwâdi
21. ḵil dazzejt li heğnen ʿarâwi mʿarrât
ʿendak ḥabar maḥsûbhen w-al-ʿadâdi
22. sâʿat lefenna ṣâr beṣ-ṣadr farhât
lejle ʿalejna mitl lejlet al-ʿajâdi
23. jowmen lefenna w-an-neğâjer msawwât w-al-ḥerz terz w-râʿ aṣ-ṣûf ṣâdi
24. jîben ḥaṣab w-ṣûf wa-ğlûd w-âlât
w-ʿejâl ẓarfînen ehfâf at-tanâdi
25. w-ʿaṣjân ahalhen killahen hejzarânât
wokûfen ʿala-r-riğlên mâ min eḵʿâdi 26. ḥabbart râʿ at-têl daḵḵ al-makînât
ṭaḵḵaḥ šemâl w-šerḵ w-ağnab w-ʿâdi
27. ʿaṭejt râʿ at-têl ḥasbet rijâlât
ʿadm al-ḥabar ʿanneḥ ġamîʿ al-blâdi
28. w-ḥallejt nuṣf al-ğejš ḥafâje w-radjât
w-nuṣf al-âḥar ġâlhen erteʿâdi
29. w-sannadet li neğd šîḥân w-râʿât
w-min šâfni bhal-ḥâl kâl ar-rakâdi
30. jâ šên lâ tamši ʿala rejṛ mašhât
w-al-ʿomr mâ jâti baʿad al-fuḵâdi

31. tabri te'gezni 'ala kill marmât
w-taħottēni mâ bēn kâfen w-zâdi
32. madmûh ċidbak jâ mu'azzi-s-salâmât
w-makbûl šidžak jâ muzannat fawâdi
33. mašrûf kalbi ħabl ħalbak behejhât
w-lâni mitlak jâ radij al-ğelâdi
34. mâ jinfa' al-mazjûm ketr al-mnâhât
w-lâ jîğzi az-zâmi ħazîz al-warâdi
35. râ' al-hawa ċaddâb w-iblîs mâ mât
dawwer 'ašîrak min ferîžak w-râdi
36. bēnak w-bēn ħbejjebak tis'at abjât
'ala-l-želîb w-manzeleh ber-rekâdi
37. w-al-ħakwe ennak tanzereh bel-ħabîbât
min al-mrâħ lad-dera' lel-hawâdi
38. w-illa ma' alli bel-ħeğâ' mustaċennât
al-ħakwe enneh jesma'ak low tnâdi
39. lak šowfaten waħede w-len-nâs šowfât
w-lâ wâdi sejleh jefajjez bel-wâdi
40. w-elja brejteħ saw ler-rağl markât
aħâf jedri bak ħaťât ar-rbâdi
41. w-lâ tâħod ad-dinja eħrâšen w-ħakwât
jekta'ak min nağl as-semûl al-barâdi 42. lâ tahker al-maħlûk tara bhom afât
en řa'etni jâ-ħûk etba' emrâdi
43. an-nafes lâ trawwik w-iblîs mâ mât
tara 'ašîrak muħarramen 'ala-l-ğwâdi
44. en ċân tûteh al-oħt bel-ħesen w-al-laddât
w-illa el'an al-mal'ûn marwi al-'ebâdi
45. edħel 'ala-lli 'âlemen bel-ħafijjât
w-iblîs lâ jerawwik bedarb al-fasâdi
46. aš-šejħ mitlak mâ jedawwer al-ħanâbât
w-az-zejn 'end 'elwe min adn al-bawâdi
47. kubb as-swâlef w-al-'elûm ar-radijjât
w-otrok edrûben mâ mašowha-l-eğdâdi.

1. O thou who ridest from us at the head of stubborn she-Hailing from she-camels of the best breed, [camels
2. Daughters of a pure-blooded sire destined by the Šarârât for breeding,
Which every Bedouin musters in the riding troop.
3. Thighs they have as if cut away, rounded hips;
Level are their necks, their shoulders muscular,

4. The shoulder blades gray; below their belts they have white spots;
Herdsman have not yet made sharp clamps from dry
stalks for their teats;
5. At saddling they remain quiet; they hasten on the march,
Carry their ears high, and their eyes keep sharp lookout.
6. In the time of rabi' they graze in the Kabšân ridge, by Bedouins desired,
Surely as soon as the at-twejbe' star rises,
7. And if the rain of at-twejbe' moistens well the depression between its two scorched hillsides
They eat of such blossoms as in no other valley are found.
8. We can use our rights over them, for their right (to rest) has already passed,
And we can ride through defiles and far lands.
9. In the morning they will depart from the lord of the settlement of Nefi
Like dark-brown ostriches madly speeding over a gravel
10. In the mid-afternoon in the house of Eben 'Askar [plain.
The female riding camels throng, frightened by the dark gardens of the oasis.
11. Manners worthy of praise has Eben Hasan
As his name 'Abdallâh alone rightly shows.
12. On trays of straw are big platters heaped up with food,
To which he adds fat tails of sterile sheep and adds still more.
13. In the morning they bring the frightened camels, and Because of the settlement's brick walls they are beaten.
14. Yesterday has made them empty, and sunken in are Like arches bent by an artisan. [their loins
15. At the start of the march they let one after another And graze on low hills and gravel plains. [speed on 16. At supper time they see tents
Looking like land covered with lava, and then the stamping of hoofs is heard opposite.
17. Inquire for ar-Ruĥmân; the report will not deceive thee, For it would take a stout camel to bear the load of true reports of him.
18. If he be not there, inquire for them who fight against the 'Elwa,
Amongst whom nothing but the clashing of spears re-sounds.

19. The sabers of the Dowšân kin feed on all skulls,
Whether they be hungry or not.
20. Or ask for him who, even when the guests are still afar, slays a sheep,
For Fejhân eben Žâ'ed, who so dearly loves to fight the Bedouins.
21. Say to him: "Thou hast offered me female riding camels which came without saddle,
Both their price and number thou well knowest.
22. When they reached us, joy filled our breasts,
And we spent that night as a festival.
23. When they arrived, tips were paid and The cost cast up, and a dealer with woolen bags, thirsting for gain, appeared.
24. Saddles, saddlebags, and water bags for the she-camels were wanting; also arms.
Greedy the riders were, needing no invitation.
25. Flexible rattans they held
And stood without taking a seat.
26. Their desires I reported to the telegraphist, who tapped his wires at once and Announced it north, east, south, and then gave me the
27. A few reals I had to pay the telegraph clerk, [answer.
Although he received a report from no settlement.
28. Of the she-camels I dismissed one half, for they were galled and worn out,
While the other half shook with fever.
29. So I went up to Neğd to the chiefs and semi-Bedouins,
And whoever saw me in that state said: 'Stay,
30. O stupid one! walk not by a way desired by none,
For thy life will not return shouldst thou once lose it.'
31. Thou wouldst declare me unable to face trouble
And wouldst place me amidst the strife of defenders and opponents.
32. Thy lie must bow its head, O thou who in safety takest thy ease!
Thy words those who suspect me may have believed.
33. Renowned was my heart long before thine,
For I am not like thee, thou baldhead.
34. Him that has once been oppressed no hints will help, Just as the few drops in the bag of those who go for water will not suffice for the thirsty.

35. He who by love is disturbed is given to lies, for Iblîs is not yet dead —
Seek thy sweetheart in the camp and beyond it.
36. There are nine tents between thee and thy sweetheart,
By the well and on a plain.
37. I think thou wilt see her among the darlings;
From the place where the flock rests look towards the curtain which protects from the wind and towards the three stones on which the kettle is placed.
38. Shouldst thou not see her, she must be with those hiding in the corner
And surely will hear thee if thou wilt call her.
39. Thine own view thou hast of it, others see it differently,
For no valley would allow its creek to vanish into another vale.
40. If thou desirest to go to her, let the men be watched,
For I fear that some of those idlers will hear of thee.
41. Take not the world so lightly or as thy fancy dictates,
For he who carries a pouch of cold water will destroy thee.
42. Despise not men, for thou mightst need them!
If thou obeyest me, thy brother, let my will guide thee.
43. Be not seduced by thy desires, for Iblîs is not yet dead—
See, thy sweetheart is forbidden to the highborn.
44. If only he would be satisfied with one of his kindred, so beautiful and charming!
If not, cursed be the damned seducer of Allâh's servants!
45. Put thyself under the protection of him who knows all secrets
And let not Iblîs lead thee on the road of sin.
46. A chief like thee does not seek his own ruin,
And beauties thou wilt find with the 'Elwa, the Bedouins nearest to thee.
47. Shun all stories and infamous reports
And such ways avoid, as our ancestors did not follow."

The poet was 'Abdallâh eben Sbejjel, lord of the oasis of Nefi; the reciters, 'Abdallâh al-Maṭrûd, Mḥammad al-Ḳaṣîb, and Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd. 'Abdallâh eben Sbejjel, while searching for a beauty much desired by Fejhân eben Ḥâ'ed eben Zrejân, learned that she was the daughter of a blacksmith, ṣâne', thus a girl whom even a common Bedouin must not marry if he does not wish to be expelled from his clan. He therefore acquainted Fejhân with the result of his search but could not convince him, Fejhân's opinion being that 'Abdallâh either had no taste for his errand or feared the revenge of the girl's betrothed because he had found her another lover. 'Abdallâh answered by this poem in which he tells of his journey from the settlement of Nefi to Fejhân, describes his she-camels, reproaches Fejhân for having cheated him on the delivery of other she-camels as well as for suspecting him of fear and weakness. Finally he tells him to look for another girl, whom he may find in his very neighborhood.

Verse 1. E'râben means a descent universally acknowledged. 2. The Šarârât are famous as raisers of pure-bred riding camels. 4. Their shoulder blades are gray and they have white spots below their belts, šīb al-ṭawâreb w-al-maḥâžeb emšībât, because they are on the road all the time. The shoulder blades rub against the cushion on which the rider rests one foot while the other foot touches the maḥâžeb, the spot covered by the breast girth, which holds the saddle behind the forelegs on the breastbone. The she-camels alluded to have had no young as yet, therefore the herdsman has not needed to close their teats with sharp clamps to prevent their young from sucking at will. 5. A good camel will utter no sound while being saddled; this is very important at night or in a dangerous territory. On a forced march a camel is expected to listen well and to observe the country in all directions so that she can, by quick breathing, arching her spine, or by a motion of the neck, call the rider's attention to any possible danger. 6. Kabšân is an extensive ridge in the 'Atejbe territory. If the niğm at-twejbe, Aldebaran, due about the middle of December, is accompanied by copious rain, the waters of this rain irrigate all the basins and in Neğd produce luxuriant grass, and perennials spring up there as if by magic. 8. After exhausting marches the she-camels are given at least three months' rest; to this repose they are fully entitled, as their riders often require them to traverse by day and night regions where there is neither good pasture nor sufficient water. When these three months have expired, the riders are justified in setting out on a new trip. Ḥarâjem (sing., ḥarîme) are defiles or passages between steep slopes. 9. Râ'i nefi signifies here the inhabitant par excellence, or the lord of the oasis of Nefi; râ'i-l-ğowf means an inhabitant of the oasis of al-Ğowf. One may often hear "râ'i mâred," "râ'i kna," "he is an inhabitant of the Mâred fort" or "of the settlement of Kna," "râ'i-l-keriġe, he is a settler." 10. 'Abdallâh eben Ḥasan eben 'Askar was the lord of another settlement. The Bedouin she-camels are easily scared by the shade and the rustling of palm groves, as well as by the high walls enclosing them. 14. Rabb as-sera' or 'oġb al-bârġa means after yesterday. The well-fed she-camels on yesterday's march were still a little lazy, for their bellies were full and much of their food not yet digested. As they found no pasture on their whole trip from Nefi to Eben 'Askar and all they got in his house was a little dry grass, they digested all that was in their stomachs and emptied their bowels, which caused their loins to sink in. 16. The black Bedouin tents stood in the basin, while the she-camels were approaching across the plain. When they were in sight, the Bedouins sent out a rider to meet them and find out who they were and whither bound, also to inquire about the camping places of their friends. 17. Eben Ruġmân was chief of a small kin of the Dowšân clan. Zeml at-thût or zeml at-tġâl is a camel able to carry heavy loads (more than three quintals). 18. The Dowšân belong to the 'Elwa division of the Mġejr but are often at war with the other Mġejr, as they will not submit to the head chief. 20. Fejhân eben Zâ'ed eben Zrejġân, the Dowšân chief who ordered the search for the beauty (21), offered 'Abdallâh the assistance of a large number of his tribesmen mounted on she-camels, but cheated him in this. 'Arâwi m'arrât are she-camels on which the riders sit only on a piece of cloth fastened between the hump and hips. 23. An-neġâġer msawwât was explained to me by Mġammad to mean the same thing as al-ešidde, riding saddles, while Ḥmâr thought that it signified ġalâwa, reward or gratuity given to the herdsmen. Al-ġerz terz means, according to Ḥmâr, the bargaining for the pay to be given to the hired camel riders, while Mġammad understood it to be the total expense of the expedition. Râ' aš-šûf is a seller of fancy bags for horse and camel saddles. 24. Before he could use these she-camels he had to have good saddles, ġašab, bags, šûf, water bags, ġlûd, and arms for their riders, âlât. The riders too had many wishes and were insatiable in their demands. 25. Their stopping and shaking the little sticks used in guiding their camels signified that they threatened to leave if 'Abdallâh would not grant all their demands. The rattans were sold by the dealer in bags. 26. 'Abdallâh relates in a sarcastic manner that he tried to telegraph for everything the riders asked for, but he could not get them anywhere. 28. Ḥafâje is the name given to she-camels with bruised soles which bleed at every step; such camels cannot, therefore, be used on long marches. Erte'âdi means shaking of the loins, a sure sign of fever and sickness. 29. Having been deceived by his friend Fejhân, 'Abd-allâh sought help from other chiefs in Neğd and was in such haste about it as to rouse everybody's wonder. 30. He addresses Fejhân. "Jâ šên, O shameful!" O rascal! is used in both a friendly and hostile sense. 31. Fejhân would reproach him with fearing to win the beauty for him. 33. Radij al-ğelâdi is a bald-headed man. 34. Ḥazîz is what remains of water in a folded leather water bag. 35. He woos for Fejhân a girl of his own kin, as a kin usually forms a ferîž, smaller camp, of their own. 37. He can see her cooking behind the narrow partition which protects the fireplace from the wind, dera'. 38. Al-ḥeğ'a' denotes the corner in the women's compartment where women in childbirth or with abnormal menstruation rest. 39. Fejhân viewed his beloved's beauty with his own eyes, but other people judged it differently. In Neğd almost every settlement has its own valley without an outlet. These valleys are mostly large basins where the rain water accumulates, there soaking into the sandy ground and keeping fresh for a considerable time. None of these basins are connected, so that the water cannot flow on the surface from one to another. 41. He who is careless will perish, be he the most powerful. A person on foot carrying a pouch with cool water will overcome a rider dying of thirst. 43. A Bedouin may not marry a šâne''s daughter.

'Obejd Eben Rašîd Lies in Wait in a Ravine to Fight the Âl 'Alî

1. Hejh jâ-lli lak ma' an-nâs widdâd
mâ tarḥamûn al-ḥâl jâ 'azwati lejḥ
2. mâ tarḥamûn allî rada dam'eh abdâd
ṭowl az-zemân w-ḥarraḥ ad-dam' ḥaddejh
3. min šowfeti lel-rarw mazbûr al-anhâd
mutmašleḥen jâṭa' 'ala-ždâm riğlejh
4. aš-šowk mâ leh 'an mwâtih raddâd
ejzan w-lâ sibten žiwijjen jewağğejh

5. eben raḥîṣ nâzelen ḥadd al-ağrâd
kâl ežeblow w-entom hal al-bejt jâ hejh
6. kilt al-ḥejzeri mâ jistwi kûd beblâd
w-lâ jistwi ʿoḵb al-taḥazzori tabdwejh
7. elja ʿâd mâ merren jizārreten bel-awlâd
taraʿ-l-mwaṣṣi jedhal alli juwaṣṣejh
8. elja ʿâd mâ nâṣal w-nazreb bel-aḥdâd
hibbît jâ sejfen ṭwâl hamm râʿejh
9. elja ʿâd mâ nirwi ḥdûdeh min al-azdâd
waddeh jamm al-ʿarfağijje trawwejh.

1. Hejh! O thou who makest friends!
Will ye not pity my lot, O my relatives?
2. Will ye not pity him whose eyes weep
Unceasingly and whose cheeks are burning with tears?
3. And all because I gaze at a maiden with a bosom full and firm,
With sleeves thrown over her back and tied, as on tiptoe she walks away.
4. My sweetheart cannot be held back
And no sole so thick but she will wear it through.
5. Eben Raḥîṣ, he who camps at al-Ağradi, Sent word: "Come to us and like one family ye shall be, O Hejh!"
6. My answer was: "A settler thrives nowhere but in a settlement
And cannot live like a Bedouin, being a settler indeed."
7. Oh, may they who now grieve over their sons rejoice!
See, he who makes his last will has no one to whom he may dictate it.
8. Oh, may we fight again and with the [saber's] edge strike!
For that is my burning desire, O saber! which I cherish through all my sorrow.
9. Oh! that we may again give to its edge the enemy's blood to drink
Or bring it to al-ʿArfağijje in order that she may give it blood.

The author was ʿObejd eben Rašîd; the reciters, Mḥamad al-Ḳaṣîb and Ḥmâr abu ʿAwwâd. ʿAbdallâh and his brother ʿObejd were driven out from Ḥâjel by the Âl ʿAli kin, supported by the Turks. Eben Raḥîṣ, the chief of the ʿAbde, offered them his protection. 'Abdallâh took refuge with him, but 'Obejd and his followers remained in a building erected in the nearly inaccessible ravine of al-'Okde, west of Ḥâjel, where he waited for an opportunity for another fight.

Verse 3. His wife brought him food through the almost impassable ravines which run down to al-'Okde. 4. Her feet were bruised, her soles worn through. 6. The name of Eben Rašîd's kin is az-Zijârme, and it hails from the 'Abde tribe. 7. The women exult, jizarreten, either when they call on the men to fight or when they welcome them on their return with booty. 9. Al-'Arfağijje was a woman who poisoned the slayer of her husband and thus revenged herself, while his kin only desired the blood price.

'Abdallâh Eben Rašîd Bewails His Expulsion from Ḥâjel

1. *Ar-rab' dannow zummaren taṭwi-l-amrâs
heğnen jifillen hêl râ' ar-radijje*
2. *taṣâzow al-me'bâr min 'enda dawwâs
w-ana 'ala-l-ḥâbûr mâ li matijje*
3. *killen tedakkar 'azwaten jamm al-aṭâs
w-ana-tḍakkar 'azwat aš-šammarijje*
4. low lâ sebilen hâs bekullet ar-râs ṛarbi čehaf ḥamme bhâk az-zwijje
5. mazzejt mâ jabbes ma'âlîzi ajbâs jibred lehîb al-ḡalb low leh ḥatijje
6. *low dakk bibâli temânîn howğâs
aš-šâwri bel-čîs w-an-nâr ḥajje*
7. *w-allâh lanša' neğd low lekaf ar-râs
w-abî' ana-l-ṛâlî w-aḍbaḥ ebnejje*
8. al-ḥokm mâ jâti beḥebren w-ḡurtâs alla bdarb as-sejḡ w-terk al-ḥatijje
9. min 'oḡob mâ-nî šejḡ wa-thâbni an-nâs al-jowm mâ-ḥajjeb râ' ar-ra'ijje
10. bičejt ana ḥâlî w-lâ beh 'alejje bâs ṭâ'at li al-bedwân hom w-ar-ra'ijje
11. *w-aḡatt 'ešr al-mâl w-ḡasabt al-rrâs
w-maḡsûbt al-ummâl elfên w-mijje*
12. mâ ḡall lijje mn'ḥi ma' ġimlet an-nâs al-bedw w-al-ḡazrân killhom swijje.

- The poet was ʿAbdallâh eben Rašîd; the narrators, ʿAbdallâh al-Matrûd, Mḥammad al-Kazîb, and Ḥimâr abu ʿAwwâd. ʿAbdallâh eben Rašîd was overcome by the former prince Âl ʿAli, assisted by the Turks, and driven out. The Wahhâbites supporting Âl ʿAli were commanded by Eben Bnejje of the Rwalâ tribe. ʿAbdallâh with his followers fled first to Eben Raḥîṣ and immediately after to the Fedʿân tribe, then encamped on the river al-Hâbûr. His followers hastened farther on to the Šammar âl Ġarbaʿ on the upper part of the river. ʿAbdallâh distrusted the chief of the Âl Ġarbaʿ because he was related to the house of Âl ʿAli, whom ʿAbdallâh wished to depose. The Fed'ân favored the Wahhâbites more than the Šammar, as the reigning family of the Wahhâbites originated like themselves from the 'Aneze group, and Eben Bnejje was well known to many of them. 'Abdallâh knew that from the Fed'ân tribe he could expect no active help and that they tolerated him as their guest only.

Verse 1. Amrâs is the word used by the settlers for reins. 3. Aṭâs or tu'ûs are isolated conical sand hills projecting above the Nefûd desert, where at the time of our poem the Rwala, Weld Slejmân, and also many 'Amârât clans were camping, all being supporters of Eben Bnejje. All these were relatives of the Fed'ân, who had their interests at heart. 4. Ḥamme is a hillocky region of volcanic origin between the right bank of al-Ḥâbûr and the left bank of the Euphrates. 5. The Wahhâbites forbade the smoking of tobacco as being sinful, but 'Abdallâh smoked nevertheless, seeking consolation in his pipe. 6. Šâwri is a superior sort of yellow tobacco. 7. Al-ṛâli signifies the soul, life.

Lament of a Father for Two Sons Killed in Battle

1. Hannejt ḵalben dâlehen mitl šanḵûr
mâ hammeh illa-ṭ-ṭâr w-alli šikâ beh
2. mâ hammeh allî ḥaṭṭow al-ʿašr beḵbûr
w-lâ bačeneh bîzen talâʿeġ ʿadâbeh
3. al-bâreḥa jowm al-ḥalâjež wara-d-dûr
ḥaṭîb jâʿezni w-ḵalbi jehdâ beh
4. bîcejt ana sâlem min al-ṛowš mastûr
ḥowz al-menâja wâredeh mâ jehâʿ beh
5. elfen fedaʿ sâlem w-elfen w-šanḵûr
w-lemhanna mâ jeʿadded ḥasâbeh
6. ʿabdalʿazîz elja laḥež hw w-šâbûr
sawwa ʿala dâr al-maʿâdi zebâbeh
7. jâ-llâh jâ ġâber ʿazm kill maksûr
mâ li swâk min jedûr aṭ-ṭlâbe
8. aḥed ekzâji min al-ʿeda mâ liġje šbûr
w-lâ-zenn anâm al-lejl w-ḥaḵḵi raḍâ beh
9. ʿalejḵ jâ-lli taʿlam al-rejb besrûr
aḫhart ḥaḵḵ jaʿkûb min ad-diġâbe.

1. A demented heart I bless like that of Šanḵûr;
Nothing he cares for but his drum and him who beats it.

2. Not for those he cares whom they laid in their graves at mid-afternoon,
And the white women who once led him to sorrow weep
not for him.
3. Yesterday when women were on the burying grounds behind the houses,
The ḥatīb reproved me, but in my heart I sneered at him.
4. I mourned for Sâlem by youths cut to pieces;
Yet he who will draw water from the fountain of death must not fear death.
5. A thousand others I demand in vengeance for Sâlem and a thousand more with Şankûr too,
And for Mhanna, their number cannot be stated.
6. As soon as ‘Abdal’azîz joined us with the camel riders
He covered the enemy’s camp in a cloud of dust.
7. O Allâh! thou who healest each broken bone,
None I have but Thee, who would seek for what I ask.
8. I lack patience to bring doom to the enemy And yet doubt whether I can sleep at night as long as my rights are withheld.
9. In Thee I trust, who knowest all the heart’s secrets,
Who hast settled publicly Jacob’s suit with the wolves.

The poet was Ḥmûd eben ʿObejd eben Rašîd; the reciters, Mḥammad al-Kaẓîb, Ġwâd al-ʿÂni, and Ḥmâr abu ʿAwwâd. Prince ʿAbdalʿazîz eben Metʿeb went on a raid to the territory of the Eben Saʿûd. He was accompanied by his uncle, Ḥmûd eben ʿObejd, with the latter's two sons, Sâlem and Mhanna. On reaching the camp of the enemy, Ḥmûd with ʿAbdalʿazîz remained with the reserve formed of camel riders, while the horse riders, Sâlem and Mhanna among them, made the attack. It was repulsed and both Sâlem and Mhanna killed. ʿAbdalʿazîz then came to the help with his reserve, pressed the enemy's cavalry back, surrounded the camp, and after plundering it returned with rich booty. Ḥmûd carried his two sons away to be buried in the cemetery behind Ḥâjel. The funeral procession was accompanied by the negro Şanḡûr, who, being deranged, walked the Ḥâjel streets by day and night beating a small drum. He invited all the boys he met to join him, to come and beat drums like him. Şanḡûr had been a handsome fellow in his youth, and even the daughter of a prominent citizen of Ḥâjel had fallen in love with his good looks. The enraged father seized the poor fellow and had his sexual organ crushed. Since that time Šankûr had been demented.

Verse 3. Ḥaṭīb is a man who teaches religion, sometimes leads the prayers, explains the Koran, etc., but is at the same time employed in some handicraft or engaged in trade. 4. Mâ jehâ' beh means "he fears or trembles before nobody." Howz, according to the Bedouins, is a deep leather trough standing on three legs and used for watering camels; the settlers use the word for a walled-in cistern for holding rain water. When water is needed, the howz is the place to seek it. Howz al-manâja, a place where death is drunk, is a battle field. He who dares to enter the battle field knows that death awaits him there. 5. To avenge Sâlem two thousand of the enemy should have been killed. 6. Zebâb is a dense cloud of dust, like 'ağâğ. In 7 the poet asks for vengeance. 9. The sons of Jacob asserted that Joseph had been torn in pieces by wolves. Jacob complained bitterly to Allâh of this crime. Allâh then lent these beasts the gift of speech, and, coming to Jacob, they proved their innocence by witnesses.

In Honor of Muḥammad Eben Rašid

1. Jâ hejh jâ-hal ḥâlijât al-mezâhîb
heğnen telâfa min ba'id al-marîbe
2. šejb al-rawâreb sâjiğât al-mahâžîb
elfên mašdûdât kill šien teğîbeh
3. alli 'alejhen muštâhîn al-ma'âzîb
šâmow lrâ'i musneden jirtači beh
4. le'akob hollen jefegğ al-'arâžîb
linâr 'abdallâh jewakked lehîbeh
5. šâmow limin fât al-awâdem 'ala-t-ṭîb
až-zejrami killen lefe'leh derî beh
6. horren šahar bî'âlijât al-marâžîb
fahhağ 'ala-l-fethân min zowd ṭîbeh
7. low jîstahi haṭṭ al-awâdem ḥawâṭîb
raşben bhadd as-sejf ralben ralîbeh
8. min al-bîz jahjen leh 'ajûn at-tešâbîb
w-al-miştebeh jinhağ 'ala šebhek jeğî beh
9. banât mâ dabbar 'alejhen betahsîb w-lâ ḥâjelen werd ad-debeš min 'azîbeh

10. banât ʿakob melarremîn al-marʾâlîb
zījârmen ʿakb al-ġdûd al-ʿarîbe
11. jâ mâ ʿaṭow min zâhijât ad-debâdîb
w-kubben tenassef bil-maʿâder sebîbeh
12. ḥamm al-ġenûb w-ḥamm šerken w-tarrib
w-kowneh ʿala-l-wudijân mâ jinḥaċî beh
13. adwa ʿalejhom ḥabl waḳt al-tarârib
wa-tzabben al-biṣri šarâjed dehîbe.

1. Glory to you, O riders! with your bags empty,
On female riding camels coming from far countries,
2. With shoulder blades gray and breast girths shifting;
Of saddled ones two thousand are bringing us goods
of all kinds.
3. Those who ride them are yearning for hosts,
They look for him who leans against a cushion,
4. For the son of their friend who keeps clear the hillside roads,
For ʿAbdallâh's fire and its ever-burning flame.
5. For him they look, who surpasses other men in honesty,
And for the Zejramit, whose deeds are known to all.
6. He is a noble falcon, who on the highest points is seen
Because of his great valor, standing proudly on his legs.
7. Should it occur to him to make men fuel pickers,
The vanquished he could compel with the edge of his saber.
8. The fair ones gaze after him with eyes like gazelles who guard their flocks,
For like follows like and desires to win him.
9. His daughters never are told of the budget
And need not longingly wait for the herds returning to water from far pastures.
10. They are daughters of the sons of ancestors who threw their fancy spears like lightning,
Of az-Zijârme, the descendents of Arabian forefathers.
11. Oh, how many fat camels have they given away
And horses whose manes are braided in the pasture!
12. The south he attacked, east, and west, too,
And of his raid to al-Wudijân much is related.
13. He rushed down on them before they departed for the settlers' land
And the far al-Biṣri gave shelter to their fleeing herds.

The poet was a negro accompanying a trade caravan from Irak to Prince Muḥammad eben Rašîd; the reciter, 'Abdallâh al-Maṭrûd.

Verse 1. Mezhebe or mezwede are bags in which food needed on the journey is carried by the camels. 2. Šejb al-rawâreb are camels with gray or white hair. From continuous sweating the hair covered by the cushion on which the rider rests his feet becomes white. Ḥaḳab is the breast girth, a rope of camel's hair which secures the saddle. When a long fatiguing journey causes the camel to lose its hump, the saddle shifts to and fro and the breast girth with it. 3. In the settlements the host sits on a rug and leans against a cushion. 4. Arḳûb is a slope, or a steep, rocky hillside. On roads leading across such slopes the merchants keep a sharp lookout for robbers who frequent such places. The camels often stumble, the loads on their backs lose their balance, and while the guides are picking up the fallen parcels, putting them back, and pushing the animals into the road again, robbers often take advantage of the disorder to make a successful attack on the caravan. Muḥammad eben Rašîd cleared the slopes from this pest, thus continuing the work begun by his father, 'Abdallâh, founder of the power wielded by the Eben Rašîd house. 5. The kin of Eben Rašîd hails from the Zijârme clan. 7. Gathering fuel on the plains and in the mountains for the camp or town of Eben Rašîd is a task left to the serfs, members of the despised clans. 8. Ješabbeḥ, he examines thoroughly, is used of a gazelle standing on some high point and keeping guard over the grazing flock. On sighting a suspicious object it looks at it with the same attention as the women look at Eben Rašîd and the members of his family. Mištebeh is a man who claims to be highborn and who is considered as such by many people, while in reality there is a blot of some kind on his descent. No honest Bedouin, even the poorest, would give him his daughter for a wife. He seeks a grandee of doubtful origin like himself and marries his daughter. 9. To the daughters of the house of Eben Rašîd nothing is too costly. They can pick out at the merchant's the best and most expensive dress goods. They never suffer from hunger or thirst, and to obtain a drink of milk need not wait longingly till the herdsmen drive in the camels for watering from a distant pasture. 'Azîb is a pasture from which the camels are not driven home every evening. This is why the camp is without milk. Not before the fifth or sixth day, when the she-camels must be watered, can the women and girls drink as much fresh milk as they like. 10. Maṣālīb are spears ornamented below the blades each with a little wreath of ostrich feathers called ṛalab. 11. It is a custom with Eben Rašîd to offer a she-camel and a mare to every guest of distinction. Debâdîb are thoroughbred she-camels, which have been grazing for some time and are well rested. Ma'âder are pastures reserved for horses exclusively, usually in valleys shut in by steep slopes, where they can be easily guarded and defended. 13. In the territory of al-Wudîjân, as the eastern half of northern Arabia south of the ridge of al-Bišri is called, are the camping grounds of the 'Amârât and Dahâmše, who remove in summer to the right and left banks of the middle Euphrates — that is to the east, although this march of theirs is called taṛrîb (a going to the west). Adwa signifies the sudden swoop of a bird of prey.

In Honor of Bender, Prince of the Šammar

The enthronement of Bender, oldest son of Prince Talâl, as prince of the Šammar in 1869 was announced to all divisions of that tribe by special messengers who sang the following verse, composed by Râšed al-Haġli:

*Jâ min jebaššer aš-šammar šâḥ bender
w-an-nâs ḳableh min ṛala abûh taṛlîh.*

Oh, who will tell the Šammar the glad news that Bender der has become their prince?
For he was already esteemed by men because of the fame his father had before him.

For this verse Prince Muḥammad eben Rašîd, who had overthrown Bender, sent Râšed to prison for three months.

Muḥammad Eben 'Arfeġ in al-Ġowf Contemplates a Journey to Hâjel

1. *Âh w-azâh min ġifnen ġufa'
ġarhadîj an-nowm min barden šerîm*
2. ġâl 'akli w-eltahatt w-ḳumt alûġ wa-tḳallab w-ežteled čanni ḳašîm

3. dakaren bard aš-šta 'aşran maza
laddat ad-dinja w-ğennât an-na'im
4. elja 'attna šbât w-ħarr semmah
'end ahalna čannah ajjâm al-ħamîm
5. low teħalbaş waķtena farrağt li bel-mnâdi w-al-waħj ħaza-l-kelîm
6. li ma' al-wejlân howġa' fâteren li min saţarha tistafež kowd al-ħamîm
7. aşl abûha min 'omân w-ummah
wasmaha al-merzel 'ala warč jetîm
8. mâ jenûş ma'dar râsah al-'aşa
şej'arijje mu'arrama na'am an-nedîm
9. al-merâfek w-al-'azûd w-zowraha
dâl da min wasî' da'an da žerîm
10. mâ ħala nowzat muzaġjer wirčaha
ler-radîf muħaşşara raşken ħaşîm
11. čenn 'ajnaha 'ajn šamsen jowm tabdi
jowm taklobha čema 'ajn al-'adîm
12. şabharow bah w-a'ğebathom jowm ġatna
w-'edtaha billâh min 'ajn ar-raġîm
13. ettečel billâh erkabha w-samm
w-e'tešem billâh jakâk al-čerîm
14. raķkedah lejlên w-at-tâlet 'ašâk
'enda-hal ġubba w-low 'okb al-atîm
15. w-aş-şubĥ at-tâlet w-fejden teltefet lah
min wara mambûz warčêha mežîm
16. w-al-'aşa ar-râbe' bdîret 'azwaten li mehkama libtût nekķâz al-barîm
17. hoşşahom li bis-salâm w-ķil lahom
ĥâġeren bel-ğowf w-al-mar' wahîm.

1. Ah, who can bear this! Snatched from my eyelid was My weakening slumber by the sharp cold.
2. My reason was going, I weakened, began to writhe, Turned from side to side, and bound myself round as if [my bone] were broken.
3. The women talked of the cold of rainy season in years past,
They said that it was a joy of this world and paradise.
4. When the şbât appeared, among our kinsfolk
Its poison was hot, as the days of hot baths.

5. When our time expires, he who calls will dissolve my sorrows,
And that sound will set at rest him who now speaks.
6. I have a fleet old she-camel grazing now with al-Wejlân's herd,
She gayly shakes her head but can be led like any thoroughbred.
7. Her father came from 'Omân, and her mother was marked
On the thigh with a spindle only.
8. To the cheek of her head the stick will not reach;
Hot-blooded and tame, as dear as a comrade, she is.
9. If thou observest her stretched knee, shoulder, and breastbone
The first is distant from the second, but this to the third
10. How prettily she lifts her fat, short hips, [is near.
On which a tiny space is left for one more rider, and how admirable is her whole shape.
11. Her hidden eye is like the eye of the rising sun,
But if thou strikest her, it is like the eye of a hero provoked.
12. With eager looks they all gazed at her and desired her as soon as she came to us.
And in Allâh's care I placed her against the evil eye of him who was stoned.
13. Put thyself in Allâh's care, mount her and call on Allâh's name;
Trust in Allâh and the Most Gracious will protect thee.
14. Grant her two nights' sleep, and on the third night thou wilt dine
With the people of the oasis of Ġubba, even if thou arrivest there at dark.
15. On the third morning Fejd will be on the lookout for her
And will lie behind her hump.
16. And the fourth supper will be in the land of my kinsfolk;
And may the court decide, if thy leather belt thou wilt
17. My greetings give them and say [not burst.
That one forgotten dwells in al-Ġowf on a poor pasture.

The poet was Muḥammad eben 'Arfeġ âl 'Ali; the reciters 'Abdallâh al-Maṭrûd, Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd, and Ġwâd al-'Âni. Muḥammad eben 'Arfeġ was the representative in the settlements of the oasis of al-Ġowf of Eben ʿAli, Prince of Ḥâjel. He was not comfortable there. Although al-Ġowf is protected against both the north and west winds, Muḥammad complained of the severe cold and wished to return to Ḥâjel. He meant to make the trip on his old but tried she-camel; in three days he would reach Ġubba, a settlement lying about 230 kilometers south-southeast on the road to Ḥâjel; he would leave Ġubba after midnight and on the fourth day reach Ḥâjel about supper time. Thus he meant to cover the distance of 320 kilometers in four days and half a night. It should be born in mind that this route extended for about 280 kilometers over sand drifts and that therefore he had to sleep out two nights.

Verse 1. Ġarhadij, destroyer, is said of sleep because it tends to weaken a man and to make him feel wretched. 4. Šbâṭ corresponds to our February. A north wind makes not only the inhabitants of al-Ġowf but also those of Ḥâjel shiver with cold, as I myself have experienced. Muḥammad exaggerates in order to give more than due praise to Ḥâjel. 5. Al-munâdi, the crier, the commander, was the prince of Ḥâjel, to whom the settlements of al-Ġowf belonged. The prince could summon his governor to Ḥâjel. 6. In the neighborhood of al-Ġowf there is no camel pasture. What grass and perennials grow there are cut by the settlers and dried for hay that they may have fodder for their own cattle and for the animals of their guests and also to sell to the trade caravans. It is necessary to drive the camels fifteen kilometers out before even a sparse pasturage is found. Any of the settlers who possesses a good she-camel places it under the care of a reliable Bedouin camping with his clan in the district of al-Ġowf and sends for it a few days before he desires to depart. Muḥammad's she-camel was grazing with the herd of the Âl Wejlân Bedouins. A spirited, well-rested she-camel often stretches her neck backwards, catches the rider's dress with her lips, and touches him with her head. 7. From ʿOmân thoroughbred camels are imported. Every tribe, every clan brands its camels with marks commonly called wasm. Each brand again has a name of its own. The brand of Muḥammad's camel is called merzel, owing to its resemblance to a spindle. 8 means that the camel's neck is very long. 9. When kneeling, the she-camel's front knees are extended far forward; her shoulders are drawn back and nearly reach the breastbone, which rests on the ground. Dâl stands for dâlek, that. 10. To get up on her legs a kneeling she-camel must go through three motions. First she lifts her breasts and kneels on her forelegs; this is called tanhaż. Then she lifts her back, nowza, supporting herself on the toes of the hindlegs; the verb used for this action is tanûz; finally she gets up on all fours, tatûr. A radîf is a person who sits behind the saddle, holding on to its rear knob. This rear part of the animal's back is very short, as the hips fall away sharply to the tail. 12. The she-camel was brought to Prince Âl 'Ali as a gift, and he again presented her to his governor, Muḥammad. Šabharow indicates that they examined her thoroughly for any possible defects. If a subordinate chief brings a gift to his prince and it is found on examination to have a defect of any kind, he injures himself more than if he had given nothing at all. Such a gift the slaves then keep for themselves, telling the prince that the chief has only brought what he could best spare, because nobody wanted to buy it. To prevent his she-camel from being bewitched, Muḥammad recommended her to Allâh's care. 13. Samm stands for sammi, name or call [Allâh's name]; they say: "Bismi-llâh, in Allâh's name," in order to place the camel under Allâh's care. 15. Ğaw Fejd lies on the road south of Ğubba; Fejd therefore at sunrise was already to the north. Mambûz warċêha is the fat hump of a she-camel. Mambûz is often used instead of senam, camel's hump. Hence the verse:

Jâ râċeben min fowķ mambûz aḡ-ḡahr
hw menwat alli nâheren žerâġibeh.

O thou who ridest a fat-humped camel
 Desired by one who goes to his kin!

The larger and fatter the hump, the longer will the camel endure. If the journey is difficult and no good pasture is found, its waning strength is replaced from the fat accumulated in the hump. After using this up the animal becomes so weak as to be unable to rise. Then it may be months before it fully recovers. 16. Barîm was used only for the sake of the rime instead of the correct ħakw, meaning a belt of from four to seven leather strips worn by men on their bare bodies. The barîm is worn by women. He will enjoy the supper given him by his relatives so much that those strips will burst.

A Chief, Imprisoned by the Turks at Ḥama^o, Anticipates His Liberation by the ʿAḳejl

1. Jekûl farhûd w-hw bel-ḥabes mačtûf wa^o wejli min zej̃m allî ġera^o li
2. jâ bedd mâ jîžfen bena-l-heġen bezlûf jebren hit kabl ʿašra lejâli
3. w-eḥdaʿaš denni lehen kill maškûf nikṭa^o bihen šaṭṭ al-frât az-zelâli
4. w-etnaʿaš ġirma bihen hezzet aš-šowf amma-l-mešâre^o w-amma sidren ʿawâli
5. jâ mâ hala en hafen aš-šeġḥ maʿrûf wa-zbejdet allî râs mabnâha ʿâlî
6. telfi ʿala-l-kušmân rabʿan bihom nowf awlâd ʿali murḥaša kill râli
7. slâḥahom ġowzen ʿala-l-warċ maʾšûf dakk al-franġi mitl neġm al-mahâli
8. malbûsahom mâhûd jišṛal ʿamal šûf wa-rġâlahom bajjenîn swât al-ġemâli
9. zebn al-ṛarîb elja nahâhom ʿala-š-šowf al-ġejš hâzer w-bel-faʿal jeʿtana li
10. *mâ kilt hâda illa-na biz-zîž mačtûf
ʿejâl jâtûna ħîn as-swâli*
11. maġhûdahom jeddûh w-lâ hom hal aḥsûf mâ jišîr mitl al-jowm kûdhom ḳubâli.

1. Thus speaks Farhûd in the prison fettered:
"Alas, woe is me for the bondage into which I have fallen!
2. Most surely the she-camels will leave with us on the day
In order to reach Hit before the tenth night. [appointed,
3. An air-filled skin have ready for each on the eleventh day,
For on the skin we shall cross the clear stream of the Euphrates.
4. On the twelfth with the first daybreak to them will appear
The caravansary either of al-Mešâre^o or of [ʿAlûb as-Sidr] High Sidr Tree.
5. Oh, how sweet if they may fly to aš-Šeġḥ Maʿrûf
And Zobejde whose monument rises on high,
6. And reach the men from al-Ḳašîm, among whom are famed ʿAli's descendants, who find cheap all that is costly.
7. Their arms are a double pistol secured to the hip,
Made in Europe, shining like stars;

8. Their dress fine cloth made of the best wool.
Their warriors are like pack camels;
9. They protect the stranger if only at first sight he has asked their help.
Their riders on camels are ready and by deeds they prove their noble minds.
10. I would not say this, if I were not fettered in a narrow cell:
The youths will come to us at the desired time.
11. Their hard task they will accomplish, for they are not fickle men;
It shall not be otherwise — in a month from this day
surely they will be with me.”

The poet, Farhûd, a chief of the ‘Amârât, was caught by the Pasha of Syria in the market place of Ḥama⁷ and was imprisoned. His friends, ‘Aḳejl of the ‘Ali kin, who at that period escorted commercial caravans from Bagdad to Syria, sent him word that on a certain day they would liberate him and bring him back to Bagdad. Overjoyed with hope, Farhûd describes in his poem the manner in which the ‘Aḳejl would carry out their plan. Mḥammad al-Ḳaḏîb recited it to me.

Verse 2. First they would ride from Ḥama⁷ east to the Euphrates and then along its right bank to Hît, covering about 70 kilometers a day. 3. From Hît during another day along the right bank they would make 55 kilometers; the next day they would ford the river opposite the station Rabb. Mašḥûf is a skin boat or small boat. 4. Hezzet aš-šowf or sâ‘at aš-šowf signifies the first break of the day, when objects can just be distinguished. Al-Mešâre⁸ and ‘Alûb as-Sidr were road taverns between al-Ambâr and Bagdad. 5. The monuments erected to aš-Šejḥ Ma‘rûf and as-Sitt Zobejde, the wife of Harun ar-Rashid, are on the right bank of the Tigris, where the ‘Aḳejl have always lived and still live. 6. Ḳuṣmân is the name given to those of the ‘Aḳejl who hail from al-Ḳaṣîm. This poem is known to every ‘Aḳejli.

A Chief Is Reproached for His Extortions

1. Dâren biha al-ḥakrân wuṣ meḳadi bah
elja ṣirt ġâren w-‘an hawa-n-nafs mardûd
2. jâ sfûḳ thammes ‘elleti w-ente dîbah
hazzejt kowmi hezz čaffen be‘arġûd

3. hâdi tšadderha w-hâdi teġibah
w-hâdi tšadderha 'an al-ḥakḥ bešhûd
 4. čam sâbežen jâ šejḥ ḥenna neġibah
neġibeha jâ sfûḥ w-ḥarb mašdûd.

1. O camp where conceit reigns! how can that be my resi-
 When I should be a neighbor without freedom? [dence,
2. O Sfûḥ, thou tearest my wound anew, thou art its wolf;
 Thou shakest my followers as the hand shakes a bunch of dates.
3. This claim thou settlest, again thou bringest another,
 And this plea thou rejectest in spite of law, though witnesses are here.
4. How many victorious runners, O chief, we must yet bring to thee,
 And bring them we will, O Sfûḥ, and the flame of the war still grows.

The poet was a chief of a smaller Šammar clan camping in Mesopotamia; the reciter, Prince an-Nûri. Sfûḥ âl Ġarba', a Šammar head chief in Mesopotamia, arbitrarily oppressed the tribes and clans subject to him, extorted payments of all kinds from them, and at the slightest sign of resistance raided them as if they were enemies. In consequence a number of the smaller chiefs with their followers, ḥowm or ġemâ'a, then moved away from his territory and encamped as neighbors with other tribes. Our poet had to move too, but fearing to lose, as a neighbor of a mean foreign chief, his personal liberty, hawa'-n-nafs, he reproached Sfûḥ in his poem with driving him to rebellion by his extortions and with compelling him to emigrate.

Verse 2. 'Arġûd is the strong stalk from which a bunch of dates hangs. When the stalk is struck with the palm of the hand the ripe dates fall to the ground. In a manner similar to this did Sfûḥ shake our poet's followers, extorting from them various payments and dues.

A Rebellious Leader Appealed to by the Poet to Make Peace with His Chief

1. Jâ smejr eben zejdân waš lak bel-ablâš
waš lak brab'en mâ lak w-allâh jaṭi'ûn
2. waš lak bnaḳl as-sejḥ tašrîh bidbâš
elja 'âd mâ bis-sejḥ rūsen teḳuṣṣûn

3. elja ʿād mâ bil-bejt tisʿîn ḥarrâs
tisʿîn maʿ tisʿîn w-elfen jeʿannûn
4. ʿabdalċerîm ad-dâbb lîs-sâk nakhâš
en hazz rabʿak jâ-ben zejdân jâtûn
5. w-allâh mâ tekʿod merîḥen ʿala frâš
w-lâ tehteni bin-nowm mitl all beh ġnûn
6. elja ʿād mâ lak min tenâjak nattâš
tara-l-laḥem mâ jinneteš rejr bisnûn
7. sejfen belejje rġâl mâ jeṭî hawwâš
mâr aš-sulḥ aḥsan mim mâ tkûlûn.

1. O Smejz eben Zejdân! what profitest thou from thy vain efforts?
What of thy suite, who, by Allâh! does not obey thee?
2. What hast thou of the sword-bearer, whom thou canst buy for cattle,
If with the sword thou cuttest off no heads?
3. If ninety guards are not in the tent,
Ninety with ninety and a thousand will rise against thee.
4. A poisonous snake is ʿAbdalċerîm, biting the calf;
If he beckons, thy suite, O Eben Zejdân! will instantly reach him.
5. By Allâh! thou wilt not sit on the rug in peace Nor sleep in health; thou wilt be as one possessed by a demon.
6. If thou hast no teeth that can bite,
See, meat cannot be eaten without teeth.
7. A rebel will not obey a saber without men;
Hence peace is the best of all ye now relate.

The poet was one of the Šammar subject to ʿAbdalċerîm, camping in Mesopotamia; the reciter, Mḥammad al-Ḳaẓîb. Against the chief ʿAbdalċerîm of the Ġarba' house his kinsman Smejz eben Zejdân rose in rebellion. At first he gained many followers by distributing his numerous herds, dbâš, among them, but soon one man after another left him, when they found that Smejz did not know how to command. For this reason he is appealed to by the poet to make peace.

Verse 1. Ablâš or balašât are vain efforts, enterprises, aspirations; leh teballeš ḥâlak means "why dost thou tire thyself uselessly?" 4. Dâbb is any kind of long snake. 5. W-lâ tehteni or w-lâ tehtenni means: "but thou wilt not feel easy; thou wilt sigh as one possessed by an evil spirit."

An Anxious Father Sends a Message to His Two Sons Absent in the Ḥawrân

1. *Jâ râčeben min fowk 'ašran 'ala-l-lown
šilen jehâwezen az-zelle ḥawâti*
2. *'ašran 'ala 'ašran ahalhen jetbârûn
mitl al-ğerîd rekâbahren ġâsijâti*
3. feğğ al-menâher tûlahen tekel mâzûn kubb az-zlû metûnhen nâbijâti
4. *jâ rowš cân entom leḥawrân tebrûn
jâ muwaffekîn al-ḥejr sullow wšâti*
5. ḥodow čalâmen beš-šanâdiž maknûn čalâm aḥla min ḥalîb al-fetâti
6. *ballâh 'alejkom rajjezû širb řaljûn
elja mâ naḥott al-ḥeber fowk ad-dwâti*
7. *w-ḥûfow 'alejhen elja nawejtu temeddûn
w-ḥottû karâmîš al-ḥala' al-wâlmâti*
8. *ḥottow al-ğedi jemînakom lâ tetîhûn
w-er'ow an-na'âjem saba'aten bajjenâti*
9. *sallem 'ala-lli maddadûni w-ḥallûn
sejf w-šwardi nûr 'ajni šefâti*
10. *ķil lahom abûkom ḥâlefen řejr tâtûn
w-en mâ lefejtu ḥâlefen řejr jâti*
11. en cân řejdak žillet al-mâl wa-ḥzûn mâ tṭawwel al-'omr al-kašîr al-řanâti
12. *dinjâk mâ dâmat lal-âjde w-sa'dûn
w-tiffen 'ala-d-dinja warâha-l-mamâti.*

1. O thou who ridest on one of ten [camels] of the same Light gray; which shy at their sisters' shadow; [color,
2. All alike are big with young, therefore their owners
Their necks are hard as bucklers, [follow them.
3. Their chests broad; of equal height they are, as if they had been weighed;
They have arched ribs and bulging shoulders.
4. O youths! if ye desire to go to the Ḥawrân,
O ye who will succeed! deliver my message.
5. Take my word, in boxes conceal it,
A word sweeter than young camel's milk.
6. By Allâh! I ask you to halt the time to smoke a pipe
Till we put ink into the inkpot.

7. Order all the burdens to be taken up when ye resolve to go on,
And load the camels with everything that in the desert is needed and that is ready.
8. Keep the North Star on your right, so ye may not lose the way,
And watch the seven stars of the Great Bear that are visible.
9. Greet also those who went away from me and deserted me,
Sejf and Šwardi, the light of my eye, my healing.
10. Thus to them speak: "Your father swears that ye must return,
And if ye come not to him, he swears that he must come to you.
11. If thou toilest because thou art poor or to gain treasures [Know that] wealth does not lengthen a short life;
12. The world thou livest in lasted forever neither for al-Âjde nor Sa'dûn,
So it is best to spit on a world beyond which there is death."

A certain Šammari had two sons, Sejf and Šwardi, who went to the Hawrân to earn money. This is done every year by many people from the settlements of inner Arabia. They generally join the Rwala in their march to Syria, which takes place in the latter part of June. In the Hawrân they help as shepherds, reapers, or threshers, receive grain or clothing for their work, and return home again with the Rwala. Some stay abroad only two months, others several years. As the sons of our Šammari had been a long time away, their anxious father composed this poem, which was recited to me by Trâd eben Saṭṭâm. When a chief sends out a mission he takes care that all ride camels of the same color. The prince of the Rwala sends out an embassy of this kind to the Hawrân every year, before he comes there himself. He sends letters and verbal messages to the elders of various settlements, to certain officials, and to his confidants, in order to assure himself of an undisturbed sojourn and of plenty of supplies. Our Šammari happened to see this party, consisting of ten youths on ten pale-gray she-camels, this color being the most favored in these animals. They resembled each other like sisters.

Verse 2. All were big with young, wherefore they were followed by their owners, who were unwilling to sell them abroad. The animals were to return to their herds so as to bring the owners further profit after bearing. Hom jētabârû means "they follow" or "they are coming after us." Tekel, instead of the correct tekûl, "thou mightest say." 3. A hard, therefore erect, neck, broad breast, arched ribs, and bulging fleshy shoulders are considered good qualities in a camel. 4. Mu-waffekîn al-ḥejr, has the same meaning as šâjefîn al-ḥejr, perceiving luck. Šullû for wašselû or šelû, "Make to reach" or "Bring!" Rowš, or ‘ejâl, indicates youths of eighteen to twenty years, also heroes gallant in war. 5. Šandûk is a small box, case, or chest, a rare thing among the Rwala. The prince alone has one 50 centimeters long, 30 wide, and 20 high, in which he keeps his papers and money. As the common Bedouin thinks that every box is filled with gold, the traveler must wrap his cases containing scientific instruments in sacks, lest they arouse a desire for booty. The youths are to guard our poet's message like a treasure box. Fetijje is a she-camel from six to ten years old; the milk of such fetât is said to taste the best. 6. Rajjezû, wažžefû, wažfû or ta'awwakû, mean "Halt!" "Stop!" or "Wait!" Raljûn is a tobacco pipe with a long stem; among the Rwala it is used only by women. Ḥeber is a dry powder made from gallnuts and green vitriol which is put into an inkpot and mixed with water. 7. "Ḥûfû ‘alejhen" shouts the caravan leader to his comrades when the saddled camels have risen with their loads; thus he orders them to look around the camping place to see if anything has been forgotten, to examine whether the burdens are placed on the camels so as not to overbalance or gall the animals and whether the straps are tight, the saddles do not lean to one side, etc. Karâmîš al-ḥala is the outfit needed in the desert, such as waterproof bags filled with water, flour, dry locusts, matches, and the like. Many a rider would take all kinds of supplies when going to the desert, but if he has to leave in a hurry, he has to be satisfied with what is just handy or ready, wâlmât. 8. The road from al-Ġowf to the Ḥawrân leads almost directly northwest; the North Star is therefore against the rider's right shoulder. An-na'âjem saba'a are the seven principal stars of the Great Bear. 12. Al-Âjde is a division of the Weld 'Ali, famous for its wealth, as are also the Âl Sa'dûn, the house of the head chief of the Muntifež tribe.

A Bedouin Yearns to Live in the Settled Country

1. Lejtani min al-ḥazrân w-askon bdîre
bdîreten nabtah basâtîn wa-nḥîl
2. bîren wasî' w-žammteh mustadîre
w-adni 'alejh ar-reğğâ' al-kunnas al-ḥîl
3. wa-dlijena mâ žîl bihen šarîre
w-sâ' al-frûr muğaddefât aš-šahâlîl
4. w-aḳûl ḥal' lowlâ jâ nḥîl al-četîre
mâ hw ṛala' bemkarkamât aš-šemâšîl
5. manâḥen mâ jîret 'alejna ma'îre
w-tinšâh min ba'ad ar-rağâl al-marâmîl
6. neğren w-mihmâs 'ala ġâl ċîre
w-adni dlâl aš-šâm hen w-al-fanâğîl
7. kalbi jwedd alli šahîfen zamîreh
aš-šâḥb alli waddar al-ḳalb tawdîr
8. jâ rošen mowz nâ'emēn bižebîre
râseh 'ala ṭall w-ğid'eh 'ala sîl
9. 'adrû bah mâr tawha šarîre
jâ mâl jâ rošen aš-šebâb at-temâhîl
10. nahdeh zbejdi lebbeten bemḥîre
jâ nazz miznen muğaddefât al-hamâlîl.

1. Oh, may I be of the settlers and live on lands cultivated,
In regions where gardens and palms thrive.
2. To a large well with a round footboard
I would bring tried, fat, sterile she-camels.
3. Our buckets no one would call small,
And when emptied they would pour forth water in floods.
4. Thus I say, how sweet it were if many palm trees
With yellow luxuriant twigs would sprout.
5. If we had a house hospitable, not to be ashamed of, Sighted from afar by men who have consumed their supplies,
6. And a mortar with pan for roasting coffee by a heap of red-hot coals,
And Damascus pots with cups at hand.
7. My soul would desire a slender-waisted
Mistress who would cut out my heart.
8. O twig of the gentle banana in the orchard With its head moistened by the dew and its roots by the creek.

A Şlubi Yearns to Be a Bedouin

1. O Allâh! pray, forgiveness and paradise grant me;
May my fate, as willed by my Lord, be made clear to me.
2. Greet for me the steed which our kin knows,
Whose forelegs imitate the swimmer's motion.
3. I long to stab, for the sake of the eyes of the large milking camels
And the camels big with young, returning when they hear the voice of the careful herdsmen.
4. I long to stab and strike with the spear cunningly,
When fear fills the heart of the hero of the women who are weary of their husbands.

The poet was an unknown Şlubi; the reciter, Nawwâf eben an-Nûri eben Şa'lân. A certain Şlubi, or member of the despised Şlejb tribe, hired himself out as a free servant, fedawî, to the chief Eben Ğandal of the Rwala, fondly hoping to become a rider and warrior like any Rwejli. This wish he expressed in this poem.

Verse 1. Mawlâji, my Lord, is Allâh, by whom the fate of every man is foreordained. 2. The Şlej̣b come in contact with the Bedouins when they camp in the inner desert, and thus the poet's relatives had the opportunity of seeing the horse which he, as a fedawi, was now to ride. 3. Ĥalfât are she-camels which are milked after giving birth to young. ʿAšâ-jer is the name given to the same she-camels, when, after ten or twelve months, they are led to the male camel and become pregnant again. Then they cease to give milk. When a she-camel becomes pregnant, she is called ʿaşra; if she remains barren, ĥâjel. On the return from the pasture a good herdsman constantly shouts a certain phrase in order to direct his camels, so that they will not wander astray with others. 4. Fenna are the various methods and feints used in throwing spears, which the Şlubi desires to learn. Aṭ-tamâmîh are married women dissatisfied with their husbands and longing for better and braver men. The favorite of such women surpasses all others in bravery, but our Şlubi means to stand fast even when the favorite becomes afraid and flees.

A Bedouin Warns the Şlubi Against Changing His Vocation

Our Şlubi spoke like a true Rwejli, but his comrade, a Rwejli serving with Eben Ġandal, answered in this manner:

1. *Jâ-bu-l-ĥala ĥaṭṭejt bel-ĥalb wenne
kubb al-ĥejâla jâ msawwi-z-zanânîh*
2. kâarak bwejten bel-ĥala lâ tzel ʿanneh wa-ċlâb ġiddak kâteran at-tanâbîh
3. jâ-lli ĥamîrak kill ressen waṭanneh tarfa hadâmeh bel-ĥaşab w-aṣ-şalâfîh.

1. O dweller in the barren desert! thou hast laid up sorrow in thy heart.
Do thou no longer ride a horse, O thou maker of leather patches for elbow and knees!
2. Thy work is in the small tent in the barren desert, so leave neither it
Nor the dogs inherited from thy grandfather, the dogs who always bark.

3. O thou, whose donkeys have trampled down every fountain where they have drunk,
What is destroyed thou must repair with timber and stone.

The Rwejli warns the Şlubi not to change his vocation and urges him to return to his people.

Verse 1. The Rwala call every Şlubi Abu-l-Hala, the father of the desert, i. e. the dweller in the barren desert. Al-hala is to the Bedouin any region where his camels cannot subsist in a particular year. But the Şlubi remains with his asses and a few goats even in such places. In the plural the Şlejb are not called Awlâd al-Hala, but Awlâd Rânem, owing to their belief that they all have the same progenitor, Rânem. The Şlubi has laid up sorrow in his heart because he will be disappointed. The word kubb is used of spilling dirty water or casting aside a useless occupation. Zanânîh are oval pieces of antelope skin which the Şlejb tie over their knees and elbows when crawling after game. They usually cover themselves with the twigs of perennials, giving themselves the appearance of long bushes, and then crawl carefully on their elbows and knees to the herds of gazelles, of antelopes, and even of ostriches. 2. The Şlejb keep many common dogs, which guard their flocks against the wolves and hyenas by day and night. 3. They never camp near the large watering places, where they might meet with the Bedouins, whom they avoid as much as possible. However, they know every shallow well in channels filled with coarse sand. In the rainy season the water flows down into the rocky channels, forming after long rains a stream which fills the scorched channel for several days, until the surface water evaporates in the hot sun and only the remainder flows under the coarse sand, filling all the hollows and pits of the rocky bottom. These hollows are known to the Şlejb, who shovel away the sand and gravel, wall in the hollow so that it may not sink in, cover it with branches and turf, and then pile on sand, to keep out the sun and hide the water from strangers. When in need of water, they open these hollows, water their donkeys, fill their water bags, and carry them to their tents. The thirsty donkeys frequently trample down the water hole which they have just emptied, compelling the Şlubi to repair it before the coming of new rains, if his family and his flock are not to suffer from thirst.

The Poet, Bitten by a Mad Dog and Abandoned by His Kin, Laments to a Friend

1. *Jâ wenneti wennet rarîb ad-darâwîš
ḵattî al-ḥâġġ allî ala-d-dâr ḥalli*
2. *jâ ḥmûd azzed li w-anî teḥet beršîš
w-lâ min ḥalî wledat ḥalâlen faṭan li*
3. ana aẓîz al-ṛalt low žîl mâ biš al-arbaʿîn muẓarreben ḥetnehen li
4. amši ala aʿjn al-arab čann mâ biš amši w-low mâ ḥâtri musfehel li
5. al-maʿana jâ ġâwîd aʿfin ḥalî lêš neššûn mitl al-kalb wa lâ čenn halen li
6. tamm al-waʿad jâ ġwâd w-bânat twârîš al-jowm w-al-jowmên mâ-ni-tmalli.

1. This is my lament, the lament of a strange dervish Parted from the pilgrim throng and left on the camping ground.
2. O Ḥmûd, take care of me who have been ensnared,
For among my kin is no honest man who would think of me.
3. I am bitten by a mad dog, though they say nothing ails me.
Near is the fortieth day appointed for me.
4. I could walk before the Arabs as if nothing ailed me,
Walk I could, though my entrails were filled with unrest.
5. What should it mean, O daring one! that my kin shun me?
Like a dog, driving me away; ah! they cannot be my kin.
6. My time is drawing to its end, O hero, and the symptoms
In a day or two I shall no more enjoy life. [appear;

The poet, a member of the Dahâmše tribe, had been bitten by a mad dog. His relatives dragged him to a water hole, gave him salt, flour, and dried dates to last him forty days, and threatened him with death should he leave the place and come near them before the forty days had expired. About that time the rabies is supposed to declare itself. The injured man had to stay in the desert all by himself. His faithful comrade, Ḥmûd, was on a raid at that time. Hearing on his return of the misfortune, šerr, which had befallen his friend, he rode to him despite his kinsfolk's warning of the contagion, thirty-eight days having passed since the accident. The sick man is supposed to have composed this poem for Ḥmûd. The reciter was Târeš eben Melfi ad-Dahmaši.

Verse 1. The wandering dervishes come from China, India, and Persia to Irak, where they join the moving clans or the pilgrims, so that they may reach al-Medîna or Mecca. The Bedouins look after them, passing them on from tribe to tribe, but the pilgrims pay no attention to them. If a dervish is stricken with disease, they leave him lying on the camping ground without any scruples as to his fate, which is usually death. 2. Walad al-ḥalâl is an honest, godly man. 4. Musfehel has the same meaning as mukajjef, in good spirits, happy. 6. Ṭwârîš or ʿalâjem are symptoms of disease.

RIDDLES

The Rwala love to solve riddles, ḥabâwa, clothing them always in poetical garb. The following were told me by Ġwâd al-ʿÂni, the third one having been known also to Ḥmâr abu ʿAwwâd.

Anšedk ʿan sabaʿ masmiġġât lâ jetîhen w-lâ jebîhen ʿatîżât ġedîdât kill men mišaʿ mišaʿ bihen alli ḥajj w-alli mât.

I ask thee for seven already named:
They err not, cannot be forgotten, are both old and new,
Whoever walks in them walks in life and in death.

Answer: Sbûʿ, the seven days of the week.

*Anšedk ʿan ḥamsen ġill lâ hen ḥejl w-lâ hen bil
etnên bišams w-talâten bẓill.*

About the important five I ask thee —
It is not horses, not camels;
Two are in the sun and three in the shade.

Answer: Ṣalawât, the five prescribed prayers.

*Anšedk ʿan šīʿen salla-l-ḥejl w-an-nûḵ
w-kill al-bwâdi bil-maḥabbe sallâha teẓḥak leh al-bîẓ al-ʿadâra sahaf rowk ĵarmi ḵarânîš al-ḵaṭaʿ min samâha.*

For a thing that rejoices mares and she-camels I ask thee —
That cheers the whole desert with love;

Fair women have smiles for it, While anxiety for it brings down even the wild foes of the kaṭa from heaven.

Answer: Zana, progeny, offspring.

Sahaf rowk is grief, sorrowing or anxiety for children. Ġwâd said "karânîs," Ĥmâr "karânîs." Karânîs means "birds already feathered," thus "adult." Karânîs al-kaṭa are the old kaṭa, sand grouse, who abandon their flights when anxiety for their young seizes them. They nest generally in low plains covered with luxuriant grasses and perennials, the seeds of which furnish the young with their first food. From these nesting places the kaṭa often flies as much as a hundred kilometers to watering places. According to Ĥmâr karânîs al-kaṭa are falcons hunting the kaṭa. They too abandon hunting when overcome by anxiety for their young.

A Šarâri who had never seen a goose asked a Rwejli what it looked like and said: "What has it in common with a gazelle?" The answer was: "Its unsteadiness and timidity." "And what with a white antelope?" "The smoothness of its hair and the eye." "What with an ostrich?" "Thin calves and its manner of moving." Then our Šarâri said with glee: "Allâh be praised! now I know what a goose looks like!"

CHAPTER XI

CAMELS

According to a Rwala tradition the Bedouins originally had no camels and the Jews no horses. The Jews camped in the almost inaccessible mountain rifts of the al-Haẓb district in the Ḥeġâz. No Bedouin would ever visit them, fearing to lose his way and fall into some of the rocky gorges there. But once the Bedouins made a raid on a tribe encamped alongside al-Haẓb. Their guide, a herdsman, claimed knowledge of every path in the whole district; yet even he lost his way among the rocks of the Ḥeġâz. This impressed on the Bedouins the inhospitality of this territory, and they begged Allâh not to send even their worst enemies there for punishment when they died. The raiders crawled from one ravine into another but could not disentangle themselves from the wild rocks. They ate up everything they had taken with them for the raid, killed some horses, and cooked their flesh, but still could not find their way out to the plain. At last they met a traveler, whom they asked for the nearest camp, and were told that there were some Jews close by. Then the traveler conducted them by a narrow path across isolated crags divided by ravines, till they saw in a large gully shut in by hillsides the black tents of the Jews and before and among them curious animals, such as they had never seen before. The traveler told them they were camels, bel. The Bedouins concealed themselves on the heights and after sunrise, leading their horses by the reins, descended into the gully, where they prepared to attack the Jews. These fled in fear on sighting the strangers mounted on animals unknown to them, but their white she-camels escaped even before them. Every pure white she-camel, wazḥa, in the camp broke the tent ropes barring its way and ran to the neighboring gullies, while the she-camels known as zerḳa, which are also white but with some black or almost blue hairs, looked at the Bedouins and their horses inquisitively and were captured with ease. Then it was that the Bedouin leader exclaimed: "May Allâh not bless thee! lâ jebâreč bič," and commanded his men to kill every zerka calf found in the camp. Again led by the traveler, the Bedouins now surrounded the place to which the Jews had fled and robbed them of the she-camels still in their possession. Since that time the Jews have kept no camels, satisfying their needs with sheep and goats but still hoping that the she-camels will return to them. They never tire of making leather buckets for drawing water as well as leather troughs; they fill them with water every Friday and, rapping on them, expect the camels to appear, but in vain, rağw al-jehûd min al-bel.

CAMELS OF DIFFERENT AGES AND KINDS

*Bel*⁹, a feminine noun, means camels in general. This word is never used in speaking of particular animals. "Al-bel wuhîdat, the camels were captured," is a common saying. Camels belonging to a certain clan or kin are designated by the words tarš or debeš. For "your camels were captured" the expression is "tarškom" or "debaškom wuhîd," for "an attack was made on them," "rîr alejh," "Debaškom wên wağah" means "whither are your camels gone?"

Ba'îr is the common name for a camel, regardless of sex. The sentence: "Your camel is lost, lekom ba'îren râdi," implies that one animal was lost, without stating whether a he- or she-camel is meant. Up to ten heads the plural is ba'îrât or ba'rîn; a larger, unspecified number is abâ'er.

Gemal is the word for a camel between its sixth and twentieth year. A plural of this word is never formed. "How many grown camels (males) have you?" is expressed by the

⁹ Of the names given by the Rwala to the various parts of a camel's body (Fig. 35) I noted down:

1. ajñ	19. derwa, rás as-sanám	37. sirr
2. arnúna	20. menčeb	38. obta
3. hašm	21. daffa ²	39. zôr
4. boršom	22. ğamb	40. kâc
5. jamm	23. ğalb	41. azda
incisors: tenáje ; eye-teeth: nîbán	24. čilwe	42. rukba
6. šizž	25. mardefa	43. drâc
7. hanačên	26. urûk	44. ħaff
8. lahje	27. fahad	45. rašas
9. heğâğ	28. dêl	46. manħar, madbaħ
10. heğr, ħasa ²	root of the tail: okrat ad-dêl	47. ğifšer
11. idn	29. šebîb	posteriors: arâra, teğz
12. fâ'ûs	30. tafne	sexual organ: hejğ
13. hâma	31. arkûb	testicles: ħoğjân
14. mosan	32. sâk	sexual organ of a she-camel: sabba
15. elba	33. berğûm	udder: dejđ
16. dkajječ ar-řkuba	34. mařraç az-zmûc	teats: šřur .
17. řareb, četf	35. zuřr
18. sanám	36. fersem

short sentence “čam ġemal ‘endakom,” the answer being: “We have four or nine grown camels, ‘endana arba’a la tis’a zwâmel.” Thus instead of the plural of ġemal a different word, zwâmel, is used. A herd of grown camels (males) is never called ra'ijjet al-ġemal, but always ra'ijjet az-zeml. Zemâjel are male or female camels that carry loads, if they do not number more than ten.

FIG. 35—Diagram of a camel.

Nâka (pl., nijâk) is used only in speaking of a grown she-camel—that is from her fifth year onwards. In the year in which the nâka bears a calf she is known as ħalfa, the next year when again led to the bull she is called ‘ašra (pl., ‘ašâjer). When seen to be big with young, she is referred to as lkaħa (pronounced ‘kaħħa). A sterile nâka is called ħâjel (pl., ħîl).

A ruhûl (pl., rahâjel) is a nâka which can be used for both riding and carrying lighter loads.

Delûl means solely a riding camel regardless of sex, although the idea of a she-camel predominates. No plural is made from this word, rċâb being used for ten or less, while a larger number is expressed by the word ġejš. This may refer, however, to the riding camels and their riders also.

Camels are divided into the thoroughbreds, ħorr, and the common kind, ‘aži. A camel is considered a thoroughbred only when, on the testimony of trustworthy witnesses, it springs from a thoroughbred sire and a thoroughbred dam. If the mother was covered in the absence of trustworthy witnesses, then her calf is not recognized as thoroughbred, as in such a case it is uncertain whether its sire was of pure blood, mâ jin‘aref abûh ašleh mâ hw mazbûť. If a well-shaped she-camel of the common sort is covered by a thoroughbred bull and the same is done with her female descendants, then a she-camel sprung from this line is recognized as a thoroughbred, ħorr, in the fifth, and the male camel in the ninth, generation, jarġa‘ ħorr ‘ala tis‘a. The best camel breeds are the ‘omâniġje, šarârġje, hteġmiġje, and tîhiġje, indicating the place of their origin: ‘Omân, and the territories of the Šarârât, Hteġm, and Tijâha respectively.

A stud camel is called hedûde. The rutting period is the coldest season of the year, from December 11 to January 21. A rutting camel, jehîž, hâž az-zeml, hadîr, jehadder or jehâder, is very restless, kicks, hits out with its head, bites, murmurs, and froths at the mouth, jezabbed or tatla‘ derîteh (sic). The question is frequently heard among the Bedouins: "When are you going to lead in your she-camels? mata theddûn babâ-‘erkom," the answer generally being: "We are waiting for a favorable sign on this or that day, natna al-waġbet al-flâniġje wa-nhedd." On Monday, Thursday, and Saturday they do not like to lead their she-camels to the bull, for these days are considered the most suitable for undertaking raids, and the Bedouins fear lest with the she-camels the enemy should capture also their young begotten on these days. Therefore they prefer Friday and Sunday, but only with such animals as are unmistakably ready. A she-camel in that condition, mujasser, kneels down every little while, is loath to rise, murmurs, tarri, and as soon as she hears the murmur of a rutting male even breaks her fetters, runs to the bull, kneels, spreads out her hind legs, tefaḥheġ, and urinates. No charge is made for leading in, ẓrâb, the animal. On the seventh day the she-camel is brought to the camel again. If she refuses to kneel, holds her neck arched, te'aġġed, neither lifts her tail, tešâwel, nor murmurs, it is certain that the seed, menn, has acted. Then she is called pregnant, ʿašarat; up to the forty-fifth day she is known as mešer, after that as lkaḥa.

She-camels big with young must be watched carefully lest they pasture on injurious plants. The most dangerous plant in this respect is the kurb. If a pregnant animal eats much of it a miscarriage, aš'adat, is sure to follow; she is then called ša'ûd. Such a camel can be milked only when a calf is standing close by. In the last month of her pregnancy the camel is called mûti (pl., mwâti). Then it is again necessary to watch her because of her natural impulse to run away to some deep gully or to hide, tenza' or naza'at, among crags or sand drifts, there to bear her young. If not found soon by her owner or herdsman, the calf generally perishes by falling a prey to wild beasts. The place where a camel should parturite is in front of the tent.

A she-camel carries her young at least twelve months, bears it in February or March, and nurses it a whole year. During the suckling time she is called ḥalfa. For the first ninety days the calf is fed on milk only, jemuṣṣ leben, which it can have whenever it wishes. During this period it is called ḥwâr (pl., ḥîrân). Beginning with the season of al-kêz (June-October), during which it is allowed to suck only three times a day and learns to graze, it is known as mahlûl (pl., mahlâlîl). At the first appearance of fresh grass the calf is weaned and is then called mafrûd or mefarrad (pl., mafârîd). Thus a camel is in its second year by the time it is called mafrûd.

In its third year the camel is called either hežž (fem., hežže; pl., hekâjež or hekeka), or hâši, or leži (fem., ležiġje; pl., ležjân), meaning "meeting," as it will meet its little brother or sister which its mother is going to bear in the beginning of the third year.

In the fourth year it is called ġed' (fem., ġed'a; pl., ġed'ân or ġill).

In the fifth year, when it is known as teni (fem., tenijje; pl., tenjân), meaning "changing [teeth]," it grows new incisors.

In her sixth year the she-camel is called rub' (pl., rub'ân) and can be covered by the bull for the first time. The next three years of the she-camel's life are called ġlûs, the different years being known as the first ġils, awwal ġils, the second and the third ġils. In her tenth year a she-camel is known as nuṣûf (without a plural), and this name she retains to her twentieth year; from then until her death she is a fâṭer (pl., fuṭṭar).

Young she-camels between their first and eighth year of age are commonly called bakra (pl., abkâr); between the sixth and tenth year, fetijje (pl., fetât).

Young male camels for the first six years, until their eye-teeth, nîbân, become fully developed, are called ka'ûd (pl., žā'dân).

From his sixth to his twentieth year the camel is called ġemal (pl., zaml, zwâmel or zemâjel) and from his twentieth year to his last day, herš (pl., hereša).

A good she-camel has small ears pointed like a spear blade, edânaha miṭl al-eḥrâb; eyes shining like red coals, ʿajânaha miṭl al-ḥalâša; a neck arched like the stalk of a date bunch, ruḳubatha miṭl al-ġerîda; the shoulders are muscular, ʿazûdaha mubramât; both the breastbone and hoofs small, zowraha w-ḥaffaha šarîr; the shoulder blades bulging, nâbijet al-menčeb; the axillae, obṭaha, the lower rib borders, ṭafḥ az-zlû, and the chest, ġifšer, are broad; the thighs finely shaped, zênat al-fhûd; she is narrow in the loins, zâmerat aṣ-ṣulb, and the hump is exactly above the abdomen, senâ-maha markûz fowḳ sirraha. A hard and therefore erect neck, broad breast, arched ribs, and a bulging hip covered with flesh are likewise signs of the good qualities which a she-camel should have.

The camels are variously colored, the Bedouins having a special name for each shade.

They dislike white animals with some black hairs, zerka. Calves of this color are generally killed. Those that are not killed are sold to the settlers but never used for breeding.

Pure white is the most favored of all. A white she-camel is called wazḥa. Up to ten heads the plural, wuḏuḥ, is used; for a larger, indefinite number, marâtîr. If the brows and the tail of a she-camel are also pure white, her name is wazḥa rḥama, but if she has black hairs there she is called wazḥa mukah-ḥala, and if she is creamy white all over, wazḥa ratra. A white she-camel with a shade of pink color is known as šakḥa (pl., šikh); if of rose tinge, šakḥa mrara.

A light-brown she-camel is known as hamra (pl., humr). If the forelegs are a shade lighter, she is a hamra haġla; with lighter spots on the breast, hamra zraġa. A bright brown she-camel without a shade of another color is called hamra damijje or damûn; if the hair around her jaw and nose is a little darker, hamra drama.

An animal of yellowish color is called şafra. If the color recalls dibs, or grape sugar, she is known as şafra dabsa. That colored like roasted coffee beans is şafra ħabbet al-ḥawa; when of a still darker shade, resembling coffee already made, she is called şafra abâdijje.

An ash-gray she-camel is known as ša'la (pl., ši'el).

Malḥa is a black she-camel; if glossy like a raven she is a malḥa řurâbijje. A malḥa ḥaṣṣa has hair of the same color but curly. No more than ten heads are designated by the words miḥ or meġehmât; for larger numbers, meġâhîm is used.

The Bedouins give each she-camel a name according to her real or alleged individual qualities, asâmi-l-bel bwuġihah. For example: Tâfḥa, Tajjâḥa, Šarḥa, ʿAġla, Ḥarûfa, ʿAwġa, Balḥa, Rîma, Bwêza, Šaʿêla, ʿAlja, Duḥejna, Mlêḥa, Saḥla, Rabša, Ṭamša, ʿEjda, Ġerîda, ʿAmra, Saʿfa, etc.

Each animal bears a mark, either branded or cut in, of the tribe and kin to which it belongs, wasam.

Pure white she-camels the Rwejli likes the best of all. Although he knows that he cannot use them on a dangerous trip because of their color, which makes them conspicuous to the enemy at a great distance at night as well as by day, and although he also knows that every robber or raider prefers the white animals to all others, nevertheless he continues to breed them. It is as if he enjoys playing with the danger threatening his favorite animals, and, the greater the risk, the more white she-camels he wishes to have. As long as he has less than ten he calls them wuzuḥ, but when his little herd has grown to eleven he uses the word marâtîr. A herd of white she-camels is generally owned by the whole clan under the control of the chief, and every animal of that color captured in a raid is added to it. As soon as the number of the marâtîr has reached a hundred, a second herd is formed. The marâtîr are the pride of both the clan and tribe, especially if the herd has not been captured by the enemy for the past fifty years. Then it is called al-ʿeli, it is talked of in the whole desert, and the bravery of the clan that owns it is praised by all, since it is universally known that the enemy always tries first to capture the pure white animals. The reputation and glory, ʿarf w-nowmâs, of a clan depends chiefly on its white herd, for which reason the marâtîr herdsmen are selected from the most prudent and brave youths, and at a time of particular danger this herd is usually driven to a safe hiding place. Furthermore, a pure white animal is killed only when too old or wounded. Its hair is carefully gathered by the women and girls for weaving the finest bags carried on the camel saddles.

PASTURING OF CAMELS

The camels pasture in either small or large herds. A herd up to ten heads is called hešle (pl., hšel); a larger one, raʿijje (pl., raʿâja) or kaṭîʿa (pl., kaṭʿân); if a herd numbers seventy to eighty animals it is known as zowd. A little herd owned by a small family is called dwejd.

Each herd has its own herdsman, râʿi al-bel, who is hired for ten months and, according to the size of the herd, is paid either two meġîdijjât, a suit of clothing, and shoes, or merely six meġîdijjât, besides receiving one young male camel, either a mahlûl, a mafrûd, or even a hežž. It is also his duty to help with the loading and unloading and to bring all the water needed. The herdsman addresses his employer as his host, muʿazzeb. Many herdsmen enjoy great esteem, and the hosts undertake nothing without asking their advice.

In the morning the herdsman gets a warm breakfast — usually warmed-over remains from the supper. While he is eating, the herd grazing near by is watched by the host himself, or by his son or daughter, jezahhâhen. Having breakfasted, the herdsman sticks a piece of bread or a handful of boiled wheat into his clothing, throws a pouch filled with water over his shoulder, takes a heavy staff, maḍrûb, mounts the leading she-camel, kaʿada, and begins to praise the pasture in short sentences, which he intones in a drawling manner, jeġdeb lehen. On hearing his voice, the animals cease grazing and follow his lead. His she-camel, the kaʿada, keeps always in the rear. Having thus all the animals of his herd before him, the herdsman drives them to the pasture, jesraḥ (or jefalli) bel-baʿrîn jamm al-maflaʿ. The animals of a herd going to the pasture, aṭ-ṭarš as-sâreḥ, usually form a single line, mğowdalât, keeping in the path trodden by camels for centuries past; it is very seldom, and then only in a level plain where the grass is fresh, that they move side by side, mufaršât. Once on the pasture grounds, the she-camels graze together, merta'ât ħwâlêhen. The herdsman sits down in some higher place the better to overlook his herd, sings, carves something, or seeks edible plants and bulbs. About noon when the heat is at its highest, ħakmat (or sanċarat or ħajjalat) al-žâ'ile, the she-camels leave off grazing, kneel down, jebarreken or mubarreċât, and chew their cuds till two or three o'clock. Then they rise again and graze till supper time, je'aššen, when the herdsman turns them in the direction of the camp and drives them back, reaching the tent at sunset. At that time all the youths and slaves ride out from the camp, on horseback and in small groups, zerfât, to protect the returning herds from a possible attack.

When satiated the she-camels move very slowly, stopping every little while. The herdsman mounts the leading animal, ħa'ada, and rides at the head of his herd, urging it to greater speed with a short drawling song, ješâje'. The ditty sung by the herdsman to keep the returning herd together is called mešjâ'. Every herdsman has a song of his own, which differs from those used by others in the words as well as in the cadences of the tone and the length of the syllables. Were it not for this singing, the camels of the same herd would never keep together, but would get lost among the thousands of animals returning home after sunset. On arriving at his tent the herdsman remains sitting on his she-camel, which he halts; he keeps on singing the mešjâ' while he waits for the whole herd to come in. Then, dismounting, he takes the cords handed to him by the host, makes each animal kneel down in the place allotted to it, jemarrehhen bel-mrâħ, fetters its left leg above the knee, je'ažželhen, eats his supper, and lies down among the herd, so as to watch it at night also. Next morning before sunrise he unties the cords again, jeŋalležhen, and, having counted them, gives them back to the host. The milking of the she-camels is done by the owner himself or by a slave or servant. After the milking the host, or anyone bidden by him, drives them a short distance from the tent, where they graze till the dew has evaporated.

The best camel pasture consists of plants called ħamz, among which the Rwala count the following perennials: arċa, orejnbe, henwa, roṛol, rimt, rûte, zrejže, ša'rân, šnân, ṭhama, zamrân, aḡram, 'arâd, raḡrâf, raḡa', firs, flêfla, kaṭaf, kaḡkâz, kalša, mḡarût, mwâṣal, nejṭûl, heḡîn.

WATERING OF CAMELS

As to the right time for watering the camels the pasturing ground and the season of the year are the deciding factors. When grazing on the salt hamṣ plants exclusively they can hold out no longer than four or five days without water. If their food consists of dry plants, tenn, like some dry grasses called hemri or the perennials known as naṣi and soboṭ, they can endure from six to fifteen days. In the time of rabî', when they eat nothing but fresh, juicy grasses, they will not touch water for even as long as thirty days. In the hot season, al-kêz, when the Bedouins encamp in the settled territories, the herds are driven to the watering places every day.

A thirsty she-camel murmurs pitiably, tahenn, refuses to graze, her eyes overflow with tears, tedâma' 'ajûnaha, every little while she makes an attempt to urinate, and her loins sink in more and more. On seeing the camel herds in this condition the traveler inquires of the herdsmen: "How long have the camels thirsted? ḡma' al-bel wuṣu," the answer being: "They have thirsted four, five, seven, eight, and even fifteen days; rib' hems semḡ temân laḡadd ḡamsta'aṣ."

The watering of camels is described by various words. Hadad is used when the camels leave the pasture, are watered, and return all in one day; ḡamîr, when they reach the watering place in one day, spend the night there, and return to their pasture on the following day; karab, when the camels going to be watered spend the first night far from their pasture, reach the water the following noon, stay there over night, approach the tents on the third day, and do not return till the fourth day from the time when they set out.

When the Bedouins move and encamp towards evening by some water they let their herds drink at night, calling this nazelna bel-hemle. If they camp far from the water, it is menda'; nazelna bel-menda'. If the camp is situated near a watering place, but with no pasture in the whole neighborhood, the herdsmen drive their animals a long distance from the camp, to which they return only when it is necessary to water them. They camp by the water, but the herds spend some nights far out alone; nazalow al-ğaw w-je'azzebûn jâhe-dûn hems aw semh. A traveler who does not see the herds in a camp where he has stopped for the night is told when asking about them: "The camels sleep out in the loneliness guarded by our warriors, al-bel 'azîb w-ğenabha ma'ah."

The watering of camels is done either at the wells or at rain ponds. If there is nobody at the well, it is called firže; if surrounded by a throng, the saying is: "Hal-želîb 'alejh 'ark, at this well there is a crowd (or noise)." A man called ğarrâf crawls into the well and fills the leather bucket, delw, which is let down to him. The full bucket is pulled up by another man, mattâh, who empties it into a leather trough, howz, and lets the emptied bucket down the well again, fajjazha bel-bîr. The larger the bucket and the deeper the well, the more men pull the rope, jesnûn or sannâjîn. Often also the rope is tied to the saddle of a camel which is then made to pull.

In case the Rwala want to draw water from a deep well for some time they put up a water hoist, na'ûr or mağâm (Fig. 36), over it.

This consists of two stout poles, 'amûdên, made fast in the ground in such a way that they lean over the well. In holes bored through these poles an iron rod, muğtar, is then fitted, with a wooden roller, mağâle, over which runs the rope, rša, holding the delw. "Put up the hoist" is expressed by a Rwejli with the words: "Erkeş an-na'ûr" or "raff an-na'ûr (or mağâm)."

Watering from an 'akla well causes the herdsmen much labor, as such wells are partially filled or even entirely caved in after each heavy rain and have to be cleaned or dug anew. Their depth varies from two to five meters; they are never walled around. The silt or earth dug out is usually just dumped about the mouth of the well, often forming a mound half a meter or a meter high. In this two or three passages are left to admit the water carriers, who pour out the water outside of the mound either into the leather troughs or into a large bowl, or finally into pits dug in the earth and covered with leather. The mound also prevents the camels from coming too near and falling into the well.

FIG. 36—A water hoist, mağâm.

When a leather trough, howz, is lacking, a shallow pit called ġâbija is dug and the water for the camels poured in.

The watering of the camels is carried out at the various rain pools and reservoirs in the same way as at the wells, and only at the large pools, habra^o (pl., habâri), can whole herds go right into the water and drink. But, as the camels generally drop their excrements while drinking, the habâri are soon defiled beyond measure. At their edges a layer of offal is formed; the water smells of urine and becomes dirty yellow and brackish, ġoba^c or matrûk.

When the camels have drunk their fill, the herdsman drives them away from the water, allowing them to kneel or graze for about half an hour, jenadden. Then he drives them back to the water again, urging them to drink more, jehatten. If they do drink again even a little, both the herdsman and the host are satisfied that the animals have drunk enough to last them until the next watering. If there is not enough water in the place, the herdsman drives the herd away after the first watering, complaining to the host: "Our camels did not get their second drink today, for there was not water enough; abâ'erna al-jowm mâ sâh leha ħatta al-ma' želil."

To make the camels drink the herdsman uses the words: "Terr terr terr!" In urging them to the morning pasture: "Di di di mzaħhow di!" In the evening: "M'aššow he' he' duh!" If he wants to calm his she-camel he calls: "Ethi hî hî ethi!" To halt the animal: "Kħa kħa!" To make her kneel: "Ethi ħ ħ ħ!" To make the resting she-camel rise quickly and flee from the enemy her rider shouts: "Jâ' jâ' jâ'!" shaking his sleeve or mantle at her, jenfoz 'alejha.

Ditties Sung When Camels are Watered

While watering, the herdsmen sing the short hedâwi ditties.

Jâ 'adâbi min 'aša	Alas, I have been kept from my supper
ħazben dël ar-raša'	By holding the end of the bucket rope.
lâ řabûk w-lâ 'aša.	Not a drop of milk nor bite of supper have I had.

He holds the rope end when it slides down from the roller of the water hoist and then again he waits till the full bucket comes up. Rabûk is the milk which serves the herdsman as a substitute for supper. If no supper has been left for him he milks a she-camel. During the watering he has no time to do any milking; furthermore, the owner has generally milked all the she-camels before they are driven to the watering place.

*Al-bel wurdât jâ bazbâz
w-ent trâhez lak 'ağûz.*

The camels have moved to the water, O thou thin skeleton!
While thou wert playing with an old hag.

Taw hom ġaw	They have but just come;
mûs w-zaw	Hither with knife and shears
lelhâhom	For the chins of those
lalli ġaw.	Who have arrived.

The helpers of the watering herdsman were late in returning; wherefore, to disgrace them, their chin beards are to be cut short. Zaww are the scissors with which the chin beard is trimmed, and mûs the knife with which the beard is shaved.

Bâcer rahîlen žible	Tomorrow we move south;
šuh al-raži w-eržib leh.	Beckon to thy sweetheart and then watch her.

Eržib leh means "look out," "have a care," "watch" when she leaves camp with the laden tent and in what direction she drives her camels; for on the march there is many a chance to speak to her unobserved.

*Dawdak mâ hen šarrâbât
jâ rafîž al-hattâbât rağol al-ĥâjel kâlow mâ
min šaharna dâk all-fât halleh jewalli led-dalfât.*

Thy little herd has not yet been watered,
O thou companion of women seeking fuel!
The husband of the childless is said to have died
The month before that which has just passed.
May he be sent to the darkness!

Dalfât is a region where neither moon nor stars shine and to which men who have sinned against their tribe are sent by Allâh.

Râ-i-l-bwejt ad-dûni bifrejješeh hottûni.

On the little bed of the owner
Of the next tent lay me.

Jâ. lâbs aš-šanâber

O thou wearing a variegated shawl!

jâ rîhtak 'anâber

Oh, thy scent is like amber.

jâ habber min hw hâber.

Let who will say what lies on his mind.

Šanâber, a pretty shawl in which the fair ones wrap themselves.

*Rummântên beûdah
bêz al-hamâm nehûdah.*

Two pomegranates on the stalk,
Or eggs of a pigeon, are her breasts.

Al-bel w-ummi

Thou who wouldst beat the camels and my mother

jâ zârebha lâ tâmenni.

Hadst better look out for me.

At-tawîl abu 'aba'

The tall one in a black mantle

w-at^carkašah w-arkah

I shall seize and climb up to her.

abri habbe tenâjah.

For her teeth I want to kiss.

Ta'arkaš is said of a man pulling himself up with his hands and planting his feet firmly against the ground with great exertion in order to climb a steep rock.

Kalbi iwedd ad-dî'a

My heart loves a lewd woman

‘ala-l-wa‘ad serî‘a

Who is wont to hasten to the meeting

jâ mtaḳḳat al-ʿaba

Dressed in nothing but her cloak —

râs al-kajje lâ telhah.

Her body she must not shave.

Di'a is a woman commonly known as granting her favors to any man. This applies to the divorced women who cannot marry again. Mtakk al-'aba' signifies a man whose shirt has been washed and hung up to dry, while he, clad in his cloak, sits or walks about waiting for it.

Halamt w-ana nâjem

In my slumber I dreamt

bim'ašrak al-wešâjem

Of those adorned with blue tattooing:

jâ lejt helmi dâjem.

Oh, may my dream last forever!

Hubbi bil-ğâl	Against the rocky wall beat
jâ delw ġbâl	Thou, O Ġbâl's bucket! [drawn by]
be'azûd rġâl	The strength of arms of men
mâ hom ġehâl.	Who are not heedless.

The bucket strikes against the rocky sides of a deep well, making the work of the men drawing it exceedingly difficult. When they feel that its edge has caught on some bulge of the wall, they must not jerk at the rope lest they injure the bucket or tip it and spill the water; they should, rather, merely rock the bucket slightly so as to bring it into the center of the well. Such deliberation, of course, is possessed by real men, reġâl, not by harebrained, hasty, inconsiderate lads, ġehâl, who think that all things can be accomplished by violence.

Jâ malġâna	Oh, the full bucket,
sallamha-llâh min	May Allâh save it from the sides
ġilânah.	of the well!

Mâ jarwi-l-bel	He shall not water his camels
rejr muserbel.	Who does not pull up [the rope] steadily.

Abjen abjen	More visible, more visible,
ċânha bil-bîn	If visibility be the question,
al-waẓḥa-bjen	A white she-camel is the more visible.

ċânha biz-zîn	If beauty be the question,
al-ḥamra-zjen	A brown one is more beautiful;
ċânha biš-šîl	But if a load be the question,
al-malḥa-šjel.	Then a black she-camel can stand more than all.

Tawwa' tfazza' bâli	Now my mind has cleared,
al-howz beh efzâli.	For in the water trough there is a surplus.

Aš-šowl jirîd	The camels need
jowm at-tawrîd	On the watering day
'abdên w-sîd	Two slaves and one master.
en ċell al-'abd	If one slave gets tired
mâ ċell as-sîd.	Not so the master.

Šowl has much the same meaning as bel, camels collectively, and forms no plural. Two slaves (negroes) and the master attend only to the watering, while the herdsman watches the camels.

Ḳum šubb (sic) w-esži-l-ḥâjel nâkt estâm al-âjel.

Rise, pour in, and water the sterile one,
 The she-camel of him who tames the violator.

Šubbû-âla-l-ašâjer Pour in water for the sweethearts, muğawwezât al-bâjer Wedded to a sluggard, al-bâjer eben al-bâjer. To a sluggard son of a sluggard.

Bâjer is the name for a squeamish fellow afraid alike of the sun's heat, the night's chills, or of much exertion, and therefore one who loves to loiter in the tent most of the time. No girl would marry such a man voluntarily, but, as by the law of kinship he can claim his nearest cousin, her parents must give her to him. Small wonder that, once married, his wife prefers other men; nor can he even rebuke her for this, as she would run away and he could never get another wife. Because of the Rwala belief that the son inherits his father's qualities, the father in this verse is no better than the son, and the wife, who has no wish to bear him a son, looks around for others; such a wife is called ṭamûḥ.

Jâ rabb jâ mawlâna O Lord! O thou Ruler of ours!
bedder lena bhwâna Help us quickly to what we desire, esži-l-edâd awdâna. Fill with water our vessels which have tired us out.

When forty to fifty camels of one herd must be watered from a well over thirty meters deep, or from a shallow well that has caved in and into which the water flows very slowly, even the hardest men become tired partly from the labor of drawing the water and partly from watching the crowding camels, who, if very thirsty, press around the well, into which they would fall if not driven away constantly by the herds-men. One man can hardly keep three thirsty animals from breaking away from him and running to the water trough, there to squeeze in among those already drinking. Often they knock over the watering vessel, tread on each other's feet, bite, and knock about the men who are raising the water, rousing their wrath to the highest pitch. If twenty camels are to be watered from a well in which the water accumulates but slowly, five men must work hard for full four hours. No wonder, then, that the waterers pray Allâh to help them do their task quickly and Himself to fill the necessary utensils, 'edâd, with water.

*Jâ rzajjelen bumm iden
jetli maṭabb al-mizen.*

Oh, that gazelle in Umm Iden!
She goes there where rain fell from the clouds.

The Bedouins carefully watch the rain clouds to judge their direction and where their sluices may open. They even send a watcher to follow them and, if he comes back with a favorable report (i. e. that the rain has been abundant) they move to the place with all their herds. Thus a little gazelle, a maiden drawing water from the rain pool by Umm Iden, had come there after having followed the rain cloud which had filled the pool.

Jâ mizen ar-ra'âdi	O thou cloud rumbling with thunder!
emter 'ala-l-hamâdi.	On al-Hamâd let down thy rain.

Al-Hamâd is the western half of north Arabian desert between Palmyra and the Nefûd.

Al-bîr tab'ri hâder Into the well should descend eben halâlen žâder. A son of honest parents, a strong one.

An eben ḥalâl is a man against whose father there is no reproach and on whose mother's name there is no stain. The water in the well is clear, for it flows from a clear spring; therefore it should be drawn only by a man whose face and origin are clean and pure.

Welli 'ağûzen šiba	Run from the gray-haired woman!
allâh jik̄ta' našîbah	May Allâh cut her fate, for
ted'i 'ala nasîbah.	She curses her son-in-law.

Allâh cuts someone's fate if he visits him with death. Ted'i 'ala, she calls upon or implores, is used in both a good and bad sense. Nasîb is the name that a mother gives not only to the man who has married her daughter but also to a man who as yet only calls on the daughter.

Jâ marhaba jâ belna O hail, O ye camels of ours!
jâ mab'adat manzelna Oh, how far is our camping ground!
w-elja barejna-helna. Faith! if we wanted to cheat you we could.

The owners of camels which are to be watered live in a distant camp and cannot watch their herdsmen, who could therefore water the animals only partly. By this they would save themselves much labor, but, of course, the insufficient watering would make the camels grow thin.

Jâ bîr low tšûfi O well! if thou couldst see sûd al-ajûn wukûfi The black-eyed ones bending over thee zemmar mîtl al-ḥsûfi. Slender, like young gazelles!

Girls very often help with the watering; when they come for water they must bend over the wide well, ʿakla, only two to five meters deep where the underground rain water accumulates, in order to fill their bucket or to hand it to the person standing in the well.

Dârana bel-knêne Our camp at al-Knêne sakâha-r-raʿad Was filled, after thunder peals, with water.
dâr majjâḥ al-ardân That is the camp for him who would draw water with sleeves,
w-ḡâfi al-ḡaʿad. And desires a warm place to abide in.

Al-Knêne is a watering place. The rocky bottom of the broad channel there is covered with gravel and sand to a depth of about a meter. After heavy rain the water remains on the rocky bottom for a long time, being protected by the gravel from evaporation. The Arabs dig little wells, ḥesjân, in the gravel, which are filled with water to the depth of half a meter, so that it can, as the Bedouins say, be drawn even with sleeves. Majjâḥ al-ardân, drawing with sleeves, is a lazy fellow who does not like the fatigue of drawing water from a deep well and praises the shallow sources from which he can water his camels without any effort. Ḥâfi al-ḡaʿad signifies camps protected against the wind, therefore pleasantly warm.

Mâ jimess al-rarab mess He will not firmly grasp the rope
 with the bucket,
rejralli mâkûleh dess Who does not eat hidden food, allâh min jiḥebb w-ḥess. Who, by Allâh, does not kiss and touch.

Jimess means, properly, a steady and equal pull on the rope. It is held in the left hand, caught below with the right, and is thus pulled up hand over hand. Ṙarab is the same as rša, the rope to which the leather bucket, delw, is tied. As some of the wells are as much as a hundred meters deep, the drawing of water is very fatiguing, especially on account of the bulges in the rocky sides which impede the bucket in coming up. The right hand must not only hold the rope firmly, but must shake it most of the time so as to keep it in the center. Alli mākūleh dess means "he who finds his food by feeling or searching for it." He eats more than the others, because his sweetheart has hidden something for him in a place he knows of, in order that he may eat it at night after returning from the pasture.

LOST CAMELS

Many camels get lost. Finding good grazing in some deep gully, they stay there, kneel down during the hottest part of the day, and, having rested, graze again. When there is a spot with good soft sand, the truant animal rolls about in it, grazes once more, and when the sun sinks in the west cannot find its herd, which, pasturing slowly, has in the meantime passed out of sight. Sometimes a she-camel may like only certain plants. She is rested, fat, and can satisfy her desires. Some days she will not touch anything except her favorite dainty, hunting for it on all sides, leaving the herd, and moving on. At noon, kneeling for a while to chew her cud, she catches sight of her plant at some distance, sets off for it, and, then, in the evening moans for the herd she can no longer find. The lost she-camels run around all night and kneel down before sunrise, but with the evaporating of the dew they get up and run in almost any direction. They seem entirely to lack the sense of smell or the natural instinct which might enable them to find their herd. Being accustomed to follow the leading she-camel, they are at their wit's ends when they do not see her, and they wander aimlessly even if only one kilometer from the camp. On the other hand, the herdsman cannot look for a lost animal for long. On returning to his tent towards evening he rides through the camp in all directions calling in his singing voice, mešâje, for the stray beast to come back to its place. Often the lost she-camel joins another herd, goes with it to the camp, moans when she does not hear the familiar voice of the herdsman, and moves towards him as soon as his ditty catches her ear. In case the stray animal is not in the camp, the owner and his friends mount their horses and ride out the same evening to hunt for it. If it is not found, they return the next day before noon, saddle their female riding camels, and the search begins anew. During their absence a member of the owner's kin rides up and down the camp every evening shouting: "Who has seen such and such a she-camel?" If someone happens to have seen her, the usual answer is: "O thou who hast lost a she-camel, know that she is at So-and-So's." No one would ever keep such knowledge to himself. A stray or lost she-camel is called dâheba, the man who has lost her, medheb.

Although sucking, young camels are constantly threatened with danger from many beasts of prey, mainly wolves, the herdsman cannot always watch them, especially in a rocky territory or sandy desert, full of drifts and pits. However, in order to preserve them he draws a circle around them with his staff or a sharp stone and says: "The circle of Solomon, son of David, is between us and thee [wild beast]! If thou breakest it, Allâh will break thee! hoṭṭa slejmân eben dâûd bēnana w-bēnak w-en ḵaṭa'taha ḵaṭa'ak allâh." This circle is also called leḡâm.

VALUE AND USES OF CAMELS

Without camels the Bedouins could not live in the desert. The she-camels give them milk all the year round; this forms the principal, and in many families the only, food for months. With the money received from the sale of camels they buy clothes, arms, and grain for both themselves and their horses. The camels they usually sell to the fellâhîn or to the merchants who import in caravans the various goods needed in the towns and settlements situated far from the sea or from railways; some camels are also sold for meat in Egypt and Irak. The fellâhîn use the camels in plowing, hauling, and threshing, for raising water, and for bringing their various products to the market. Fat she-camels more than twenty years old are bought for their flesh by the 'Aḡejl.

In 1909 the price of a

mahlûl	was	10	to	12	meğîdijjât	($ 9.00– 10.80)
mafrûd		15	„	20	„	($ 13.50– 18.00)
hežže		18	„	28	„	($ 16.20– 25.20)
ğed^c		30	„	40	„	($ 27.00– 36.00)
teni		40	„	60	„	($ 36.00– 54.00)
rub^c		60	„	80	„	($ 54.00– 72.00)
good riding camel		85	„	200	„	($ 76.50–180.00).

The prices fluctuate according to supply and demand; the price of fat old she-camels varies in accordance with the price of cotton in Egypt. If the fellâhîn in that country have had a profitable year, they do not stint themselves in camel meat.

For camel's hair the Bedouins get but little. The largest quantity of hair and the longest is given by male camels up to their seventh, and by she-camels to their ninth, year. The older the animal the thinner its hair, the old ones being almost entirely bald on the shanks, belly, and both sides of the neck. Toward the end of April and in May camel's hair is gathered by girls, al-bel țarr wabarha, who make it into saddle bags, blankets, and sacks.

The camel is ridden by the Bedouin on lengthy marches. Indeed, such marches are always made on camels, never on horses. The she-camel is more enduring than the male, persisting longer without abundant pasture or water and not weakening even in the rutting time, whereas the males in the month of February are exhausted to such a degree that they cannot rise from the ground.

The most highly valued are those riding she-camels which can eat their fill while on the march without stopping or deviating from their course. An animal of this kind is called hanîč.

Hedijje is the term applied to a she-camel which grazes only near her resting rider and will not go far enough to lose sight of him.

A female riding camel who is loath to part from her young or herd moans grievously, taħenn 'an welef, for several days and is called mîlâf. But often the murmuring becomes a habit lasting for months. Day after day, and often at night as well, the rolling murmur is heard at regular intervals. It will not cease unless the animal's mouth is tied with a cord, but even then a subdued sound is heard. No sooner is the cord untied than the murmuring starts again, tarri, in which case nothing remains but to kill the poor brute, or to sell it so that it may torment some one else. The Bedouin prays Allâh to free him from such a she-camel, which he calls rarrâja.

There are four habits sure to make even the strongest and most enduring she-camel fiercely hated, hubt at-ṭaba: ṣrûd, shying and starting to run away the moment the rider dismounts; atûk, refusing to be guided by either the heel, stick, or rein; aġla, when on the march running from plant to plant smelling but not eating any; and finally the habit of kneeling suddenly when on the march and throwing off her rider. A camel that does this is called hallâja. A she-camel with any of these bad habits is called dûmijje, guilty of death, because she may cause her rider's death. The purchaser of a female riding camel in which one of these habits is found within twenty days, can return her, and his money must be repaid in full.

CAMEL SADDLES

The supports of a camel saddle (Fig. 37) are four stout boards about 70 centimeters long and each fashioned in such a way as to form an obtuse angle on the outside about the middle. Above this point a hole 4 by 1 centimeters is cut through each board. The boards are placed together in pairs and fastened with strong nails. Wooden stakes, dhâš (sing., daḥaš), 30 centimeters long by 4 wide by 1 thick, are driven through the two openings and project 8 centimeters on each side. The upper portions of the united boards are turned into the shape of cones with knobs at the top. Each knob, râs (a), has a diameter of about 8 centimeters; the cone, razâle (b), below the knob measures 11 centimeters, and just above the obtuse angle 32 centimeters, in circumference. The lower parts of the boards are fashioned like shovels, zâf (e), about 27 centimeters long by 1 thick, 20 centimeters wide at the top and 22 at the bottom. The inner sides of each pair of "shovels" form a sharp angle.

These two pairs of united boards form the front and hind parts of the saddle and are connected by four crosspieces (d and h) called asjân, mešâlîb, or azâjed. Two of these are straight, 48 centimeters long by 1 thick and 8 wide at one end but only 4 wide at the other. The other two are bent, 52 centimeters long by 9 wide at one end and 6 wide at the other. Each straight crosspiece is tied with its broad end upwards to the dahaš stake of the front pair of boards and the narrow end to the middle of the “shovel” of the hind pair. The bent crosspieces are fastened in the same manner, with the broader end upwards to the dahaš stake of the rear pair, and with the narrower end to the “shovel” of the front pair. At about the middle of the bent crosspieces is a notch into which the straight pieces fit. In each “shovel” two little holes are bored. The fastenings consist of dry camel tendons, wsûr (j).

FIG. 37—A camel saddle.

The width of the frame thus constructed at the base (i. e. the distance between the lower edges of the two “shovels” of each pair) is about 42 centimeters; from the base to the sharp angles formed by the junction of the “shovels” is 36 centimeters. On the inside of the “shovels” two cushions filled with camel’s hair, kanâjef, are tied (Fig. 38). Between them a cushion, witr (Fig. 39), 22 centimeters high by 10 thick by 130 long, folded in the middle and stuffed with short straw or wool, is laid in such a way that the folded end is to the

FIG. 38

FIG. 39

FIG. 40

FIG. 41

FIG. 42

FIG. 43

FIGS. 38-43—Saddles and saddle cushions:

FIG. 38—A kanîfe cushion.

FIG. 39—A wiṭr cushion.

FIG. 40—A mîrake cushion.

FIG. 41—A mesâme saddle.

FIG. 42—A hedâge saddle.

FIG. 43—A wiṭr cushion for the pack saddle.

rear. This cushion is also called madfâna. To the upper half of the right-hand straight crosspiece a camel's hair rope or breast girth, ḥaḳab, is tied; a similar rope forming a belly girth, bṭâne, is fastened in a semicircular notch to the upper half of the right-hand bent crosspiece.

FIG. 44—An ornamented camel saddle with a zâ'ed blanket.

The saddle is placed on the camel in such a way that the hump enters between the cushions and the saddle can tip neither forwards nor backwards. The breast girth, ḥaḳab, is drawn under below the breast close behind the forelegs, then passed inside the upper half of the left-hand straight crosspiece, to which it is secured after being tightened slightly. The belly girth, bṭâne, is drawn under the belly between the navel and the udder, passed inside the upper half of the left-hand bent crosspiece, and is likewise made fast. To the forward, upper side of each bent crosspiece a ring, ḥalka (g), is fastened with strips of leather, natâješ, from which hangs a cushion, mîrake (Fig. 40), that rests on the camel's shoulder blades. This mîrake is ornamented with a fringe, ḥadab. Behind the rear cone, which is called rurâb or mîḥar, either two or four woolen or camel's hair ribbons, safâjef, about a meter and a half long by ten centimeters wide are tied; they flutter to right and left with each movement of the camel on the march. On the saddle a leather quilt stuffed with camel's hair, naṭa', is spread in such a way that both the cones can be stuck through it. More ornamental is the blanket called žâ'ed or žâ'ada, made of the skin of a black goat with long fine hair (Fig. 44). The knob of the front cone and the whole of the rear cone are usually ornamented with small metal nails, sometimes of silver or gilded, and variously shaped. A saddle with silver ornaments is called muḳammar; with gold, muṣaffar (k). The "shovels" and crosspieces of the finest saddles are often inlaid with little plates of engraved metal.

A mesâme (Fig. 41) is a saddle to which the water bags are tied. Its wooden skeleton resembles that of the riding saddle, except that both its cones are lower and flattened. The crosspieces are replaced by round sticks about eighty centimeters long. Inside a mesâme only the witr cushion is used. This saddle is also provided with breast girth, ḥaḳab. A mesâme with a thicker cushion and a stronger wooden structure, known as a rabîṭ, serves for carrying water bags made of camel skin.

A ḥedâḡe (Fig. 42) is a saddle used for carrying loads. Its wooden frame consists of four boards 42 centimeters long by 10 wide by 1 thick. These are fastened together in pairs, their broad sides being joined at the ends by metal plates to form almost right angles. About ten centimeters below the angle two holes are bored through each board and wooden stakes, dhâš (a), driven through; a stick, 'aṣa' (b), is tied below the stakes on each side. The witr cushion (Fig. 43) to which this frame is fastened is almost a meter long by 35 centimeters high in the front and 65 centimeters high behind. Its back ends in an ornament, 'ejz, resembling a red Turkish cap, with a tassel, širšib.

The camel halters, rasan, are usually made by women; the iron parts only are bought from traveling merchants (Fig. 45: a, muḥṭama; b, 'adâr; c, 'ažâreb; d, sinsile; e, šerâšib; f, ğedîla).

A rider about to mount sets his left foot on the left front knee of the kneeling camel, places his left hand on the front, his right on the rear saddle knob, and springs off the ground, throwing his right leg over to the saddle. At the same moment the camel gets up in three motions: first she lifts her breast and kneels on her front legs, this movement being called tenhaz; next she raises her back, nowza, and thrusts against the toes of her hind legs, tenûz; finally she stands up on both fore and hind legs, tetûr.

A good she-camel will utter no sound while being saddled or loaded at night. A spirited, well-rested animal will stretch her neck backwards, catch the rider's dress with her lips, and touch him with her head. She will shy when passing a dark shadow, houses, or palm trees.

CAMELS ON THE MARCH

The rider, râceb (Fig. 46), crosses his legs, jelwi riğlej, or lets them hang down on the left or right side, jedîr al-wirç. To make the camel go faster, he kicks her with his heel in the right or left shoulder blade, jelhasha be'ažbeh, and, waving his little stick, shouts: "Hej hej hej!" To guide her he taps the animal gently on the right or left side of the neck, jeşadderha bel-aşa. The rein must not be drawn too short by the rider nor left too loose. If he draws it tight, the animal cannot graze; if left loose it might be easily stepped over with the left foreleg while the camel is grazing.

If the saddle is not well secured it rocks to right and left, mâjel, or slides now forward, kâlaş or meķallet, now backward, twahhar, minfahed or minfesen. Then the rider dismounts and arranges the saddle anew. In case his slave is with him, he orders: "The saddle is rocking; fasten it on tighter! ažžedeh"; or: "It inclines forwards, push it a little back! wahhereh"; or again: "It slides backwards, push it forward! ķalleteh." In order to do this the slave must loosen, arha, both the breast girth, haķab, and the belly girth, bâtane, balance the saddle, and then tighten, karab, both girths.

Should the rider fall asleep and the animal change her course while grazing, his companion calls to him: "Set thy riding camel right! jammen delûlak." In the daytime the rider guides himself in the desert where there are no roads by some prominent landmark, at night by the North Star. The older man advises the younger: "Mind the North Star! oŧon al-ğedi"; "Lay the North Star on the face of thine animal," meaning a northerly course; "Lay it on thy left brow," meaning a north-northeast course; "Lay it on thy left shoulder," indicates "go northeast"; "Lay it on thy saddleback from the left," "go eastwards"; "Lay it on the back saddle knob," "go south," etc.

To stop his she-camel the rider clicks his tongue, ṭančar leha.

The pace of a female riding camel varies. The most pleasant is a light, regular, long step called ḥatwa zêna. An animal with a heavy step is called lehûh; if it rocks much, redûh.

FIG. 45—A camel halter, rasan.

As a rule the she-camel walks, maši. Only rarely does she trot, derhem. A long trot is called da'âk, a fast one demîl. A she-camel gallops only when on the attack for booty or when fleeing to escape death, amma 'ala ṭum' amma 'an mezelka.

A riding camel (Figs. 47, 48) runs best before and after sunset. The rider, when she is in full swing, must not hold her back or he will tire her. A good riding animal can make more than 200 kilometers in twelve hours. My companion, Nâzel eben Tnejjân, started before sunrise from Raḍîr al-Ḥejl and by sunset was in ad-Duḥejne, having covered 300 kilometers while being pursued. A courier of Prince Muḥammad eben Rašid left Ġaw Jâṭob shortly before sunrise and at sunset reached Brejda, 250 kilometers distant; leaving there the next morning, by sunset of the same day he was back in Jâṭob again.

After exhausting marches camels must rest at least three months. If no pasture is found on their route and all they can get is a little dry grass, they soon digest what was in their humps, their loins sink in, and their strength disappears. They are therefore entitled to a good rest after their riders have made them traverse by day and night countries where there is neither good pasture nor enough water. After three months the riders may take them out on a new trip. When a riding camel needs a rest, she kneels down, brakat, or her rider makes her do so, *jebarrekh*a or *jenawweh*ha. The place where a camel has rested is called mabrak or manâh. "Laḳejna mabrak arċâbhom or manâh arċâbhom, we have discovered the resting place of their riding camels," report the scouts on finding a place where the she-camels of a small raiding troop have rested. When speaking of a dog or donkey lying down, the words are: "Al-čalb rabaz" or "al-ḥmâr rabaz"; of a horse "al-faras rabazat."

FIG. 46—Camel riders.

Songs Relating to Camels

The Rwejli's delight in riding camels is expressed in many of his songs.

*Jâ 'amm kum denni li ḥamra'
w-min al-heġen 'amlijje
šiddû 'alejha šdâden zên ma' žirbeten ġild neġdijje ḥalli drejbak ma' šummân aržen želile beha rijje.*

Uncle, rise, and bring me the bay [mare]
And a tried riding camel.
With a saddle saddle her as is fitting
And put on a water bag from a Neġd goatskin.
I heed not thy advice to travel through Šummân land,
For it is a land of few watering places.

An uncle advises a youth preparing for a raid to go through the Šummân territory. The youth declines the advice and asks the uncle to get a bay mare ready for him and a she-camel known for her endurance. Neġdijje is a large goat or sheep of the Neġd breed. A water bag made of the skin of either of these animals holds as much as forty liters.

*Fuṭṭaren mâ sa'an bimkâm
w-ar-radi mâ jištahenna ṭâla'an dîret al-aġnâb
w-ašbaḥan bidjâr ahalhenna.*

The old camels were not content with a long and quiet
Nor cared for any pastures. [rest
Having examined the land of a strange tribe,
They came again to the land of their owners.

Old camels are very particular as to their food and soon become disgusted with even the best of pastures. They are used on raids to distant places, from which they return too exhausted to lead the other camels in the herd into disobedience.

*Al-bel eḥmû laha-l-bîr samnat w-ṭâlat derâha
 wa° korob ḥajjen tenaṣṣâh
 wa° ba°ad ḥajjen warâha.*

Go, seize the well for camels!
 Their humps have become fat and have grown high.
 Ah, how near the kin to which they hasten!
 Ah, how far the kin they have left behind!

Whenever the Bedouins intend to encamp at a large watering place consisting of many wells, their youths ride ahead of the moving tribe on horseback or on camels and each seizes some of the known wells to make sure of water for his herds. Having seized a well, he unsaddles his animal, sits down by the saddle, and waits for the arrival of the tribe. At its approach he beckons to his own people to pitch the tent where he is sitting. If the spot is not suitable, the tent is put up farther away, but the youth watches the well till all the Bedouins are encamped and everybody knows to whom each of the wells belongs. As the water is not equally divided among all the wells, the owners of smaller herds to whom no well has been allotted ask their happier fellow tribesmen for leave to water from theirs.

*Delûli jâ ša°êle O thou, my dark ashen-gray riding camel, delûl eben °îd Camel from the Eben °îd breed, žirbeti šowšelijje Know that my water pouch is but small
 w-al-mrawa ba°îd. And the watering place distant.*

The rider urges his camel to keep up her speed. Žirbe šowšelijje is a leather water pouch holding no more than six liters.

*Al-heġen jâ ḥaj jâ ramtân
 mâ jenlahež ġezâhenne ams az-zaḥa bidjâr al-ḵowmân
 w-al-jowm bidjâr ahalhenne.*

For the riding camels, O Ramtân, thou little brother of Naught can be found that would reward them. [mine,
 Yesterday when dew evaporated they were still in hostile
 And today they are in the land of their owners. [land

Mâ jenlahež ġezâhenne, no reward will be found for them.
 When a man does a kind act for another, the recipient acknowledges it with the words: "Mâ alḥaḵ ǧezâḵ, mâ eǧâzîḵ beǧmîl mitl ǧemîlak. I am unable to reward thee. I cannot do thee such a good turn as thou hast done me."

*Li fâṭeren mâ tʿadri
w-an-nadel mâ testwîlah jaḥram ʿalejha-t-thazzri
w-al-bâb wa-lǧat naḥîla tefraḥ elja ǧît aǧri
w-al-bišet jowmi šelîla.*

I have an old camel that needs not make excuses.
A coward cannot govern her.
Forbidden to her is the settlement,
The gate and the rustling of palms.
She rejoices when I gallop to her
And signal to her with the hem of my light mantle.

1. ʿAsa-l-ḥaja jesži mawârîd majḵûʿ
jesži-l-želîb at-târef maʿ maraddeh
2. ḥejta maḵarr lel-farâžîn w-an-nǧûʿ
w-killen jwallem leh maḵâm w-ʿedde
3. šifet al-râzi towbeh ʿan as-sâḵ marfûʿ
mutmašleḥen liršaʿ jabri jišiddeh
4. w-allâh jâ lôla-l-ḥabel matni w-marbûʿ
mâ ṭawaʿ al-laḵḵâj low ḵâl ruddeh
5. ḥassejt îdi min al-ʿazed lil-ḵûʿ
raddejtaha bil-jowm tisʿîn radde
6. waddak tebîḥ as-sedd ʿala mitl ǧedûʿ
karmen elja šâf al-ḥanaʿ mâ jeʿaddeh
7. zabn ad-deḵîl elja habaʿ kill manzûʿ
sejfen šatîr w-jikṭaʿ ar-râs ḥaddeh
8. ḵel en čân ams mitl al-jowm mâ massâni ǧûʿ
w-ašûf ḥâli bšaḥam mustareddeh
9. alli-skâni min tanâjâḥ ḵarṭûʿ
jâ šwejhbi waʿ-ḥlêl ḥebb al-mwadde
10. w-allâh laḥalli ben-nezel šâjeʿ w-mašjûʿ
w-allâh laḥalli kill bedd jetlaʿ lebeddeh.

1. May the rain fill the watering places at Majḵûʿ
And fill to the top the first well from which the rope returns with the bucket;

2. Where there is room for camps both small and large,
And where all prepare the water hoists and the needed gear.
3. I saw a conquering maiden there, with her dress tucked up above her calves
And sleeves tied behind the neck, stretching taut a rope
with the bucket.
4. By Allâh I swear! if the rope were twice or four times as long,
The pourer out would not be obeyed, even if he shouted:
"Come back with the rope!"
5. With my hand I felt her arm down to the elbow,
Drawing back my hand ninety times at least that day.
6. Mayst thou keep the secret like Ġedûc, That noble man who never told when he saw some game
of love.
7. He protects a scamp when every idler is afraid,
And he has a saber, the edge of which splits heads.
8. If I had fared yesterday as today, hunger would not have pained me,
For as I look at myself I see my fat is restored
9. By thee who didst allay my thirst when I kissed thy teeth.
O sweetheart, how sweet a permitted love kiss tastes!
10. By Allâh, I shall not suffer a violated or a violator to be in camp,
By Allâh, I shall not permit one tribe to come out against another.

The poet was Zejdân ar-Rwejli; the reciter, Mindîl al-Ķatî. The poet is drawing water at Majķûc, the last large watering place at the south end of the Sirĥân depression, the vicinity of which is always full of both small, farâżîn, and large, nġûc, camps. As some of the wells are as much as thirty meters deep, a hoist is set up in the stony ground by the mouth of the well. The free end of the rope is held by one or two persons who draw the water. A third person stationed close by the hoist takes care that the rope does not slide off the roller, bakra, and shakes it occasionally to submerge and fill the bucket; he tells the drawers to walk till the bucket comes in sight. Then he shouts to them to stop, catches hold of the bucket, empties it into the leather trough, howz, and then bids them return and let the bucket down again. When a woman has to pull the rope she tucks her gown, towb, up to the knees and throws the long, open sleeves over her shoulders, tying them behind, lest they hinder her when at work. If the rope is worked by two persons, they hold a short stick tied to the rope's end. The poet remembers how near he was to his beloved, praises Ġedû^c, the pourer of the water, for not gossiping about them, and promises, stimulated by love, that he will quell all troubles between individuals and tribes too.

Verse 1. Maradd is a firmly trodden footpath for the persons hauling up the water bucket. 2. Farâžîn are camps numbering less and nġû^c those numbering more than ten tents. Wallam, or jwallem, implies that he will prepare, put up for himself, a hoist, maġâm, with the necessary utensils, 'edde, such as the bucket, delw, the rope, rša^c or ħabl, and the trough, ħowz. 3. Mutmašlehen, or mitmašlehen, for mut-šallahen. 4. The deeper the well, the longer the rope must be and the more work for those who pull it and impatiently wait for the pourer's call: "Laḳḳâj ruddeh." The poet feels such satisfaction in the company of his sweetheart that he means to disregard the pourer's command. 9. Ķartû^c means a slight lick lasting only a moment. 10. Bedd for bedide means the same as 'ašîre or žabîle, clan or tribe.

1. Jâ 'amm wa^c waġdi 'ala wsaḳ ħorra
ba'idet al-merwâh low dirt ana-l-warč
2. tišrab ħatâfîl al-kalaš jowm afarrah
w-al-ġejš min fowḳ al-žwâ'ed lahen 'ark
3. tiġfel elja sama'at ma' al-ħazm farra
farrat ḳatât ħarrekat bêzaha ħark.

1. O uncle mine, ah, I long to saddle a thoroughbred camel
On which, crossing my legs, I would go far in a day;
2. When I bid her drink she will drink the last drop from a small bucket,
While all around riding camels crowd together rubbing
the leather covers of their saddles.
3. She shies on hearing a swift flight in the hills,
The flight of the ḳaṭa^c birds, who as they rise set their eggs moving.

The poet was an 'Atejbi; the reciters, Mindîl al-Ḳaṭ'i and Mḥammad al-Ḳažîb. A young 'Atejbi, whose father had died, paid a visit to his uncle camping with the Šammar. The childless uncle meant to make him his heir, but the youth yearned for his comrades and after a stay of six days prepared to leave again.

Verse 1. Wsaḵ means the same as šidd, "to saddle a camel." Dirt al-warč means "the rider crossing his legs above the knees." 2. Kalaṣ is a leather bucket holding about six liters, such as the raiders take with them. Some camels drink only when there is still plenty of water in the bucket and stop as soon as their lips touch the bottom. Afarrah (for atarrah) means "to be urged to drink with the sounds terr terr!" Žwâ'ed are saddle covers made of the skin of the black Neğd goat, which has long, fine, slightly curly hair. The skin is tanned without the hair being taken off; this is clipped short and holes for both the front and back saddle knobs are made; it is then hemmed and laid on the saddle with the hair uppermost. When watered the she-camels crowd so that their saddles touch. 3. The ḵaṭa' sand grouse nests on small patches of flat ground in hilly country, ḥazm. It sits quietly till the rider comes near, when it flies up suddenly, striking the eggs with its legs and thus disturbing them. Its flight is very noisy, somewhat resembling the sound of the word farr.

FIGS. 47, 48—Riding camels.

The uncle, angry with his nephew for leaving him, seized a rebâba, struck a few chords, and began to recite:

1. Abûk jâ-lli talbetak bass ħorra
bêni w-bênak sâmeč al-‘arš jeḵhark
2. mâ kilt bezowd čemma ħaşm ħarra
w-bejten čebîr w-żâmer al-baṭn jinḵark
3. ‘aslûġten tel‘ab b‘ûd al-meġarra
tenhab klûb ahl al-hawa’ w-ent tesḵark
4. en čân rabbak nâwi lak mesarra
aḵdar lak aḵbâl al-asbâb w-aḵhark
5. w-en čân rabbak nâwi lak mużarra
low ent brûs aš-šwâhiż aḵdark
6. ‘am‘ûm lâ tâḥod ‘ala-l-‘azm ḵarra
ajjâk tumm ajjâk lat-titen jeġraḵk
7. jâ šên an nâṣeḵk w-bârrek mubarra
wâġed ‘ejâl an-nâs w-lâ wuddi âṭark.

1. Cursed be thy father! O thou who askest for a thoroughbred camel only.
Between me and thee is He who sits on a high throne
and who will tame thee.
2. Did I not tell thee of a great herd of camels black as the spur of lava,
Of a large tent, and a slender maid that will come to thee?
3. A tender one who, playing with a stick on the dancing ground,
Steals the hearts of gallants and will charm thee?
4. If thy Lord intends to grant thee luck,
He will show and throw down to thee the ropes of chance;
5. And if He means to visit thee with trials,
If thou wert on high mountain summits He would cast thee down.
6. The pipe of bone, O ‘Am‘ûm! be not thy consolation, Beware and again beware of tobacco, for it will harm
thee.
7. O little fool! seest thou not I advise well and feel for thee?
Some sons of good families will be found, but I hate to vex thee.

Verse 2. A zowd is a herd numbering seventy to eighty camels. The ‘Atejbe are famous for raising black camels. 3. ‘Ûd al-meġarra is a long staff or saber brandished by a girl while dancing to keep away the youths who press on her. 4. Aḥbâl al-asbâb are opportunities for achieving success. 5. Šwâhîž are high, steep, impassable mountains. Here they mean the greatest glory, affluence. 6. Al-ʿaẓm is a piece of bone used by the Bedouins in mending a broken short pipe. 7. ʿEjâl an-nâs, eben an-nâs, are sons of respected families, whom the uncle could adopt.

1. Li fâterēn mašiha tûmi
kaṭʿ al-fejâfi mẓarrîha
2. bčetfaha laḥḥ bergûmi
min kutr mâ-ni malâhîha
3. al-ḥorr elja šâr mazḥûmi
ješbeh bnâbi ʿawâlîha
4. čam lejleten mâ beha nowmi
ʿalejje min abrak lejâlîha
5. jâ mâ ḥala ḥazz umm ḥarṭûmi
w-aṣ-ṣubḥ jaʿġibk taḥallîha.

1. I have an old camel with a rocking gait,
Which I train to ride over level plains.
2. A bald spot has been worn by my heel on her shoulder
By my constant rubbing. [blade]
3. [She is like] a falcon of gentle blood, by hunger frightened, Resting on the peak of the highest mountains.
4. Oh, how many sleepless nights
Have been to me the nights most blessed of all!
5. How sweet the urging of a long-lipped camel,
And in the morning thou shalt wonder how strong she looks.

The poet is unknown; the reciter was Mindîl al-Ḳaṭi.

Verse 2. A camel used for long journeys generally has on her right shoulder blade a bald spot, the size of the palm of a hand. The constant friction against the shoulder blade causes the skin to become bruised and bloodshot, especially if the rider's footgear is made of hard leather and he must urge the animal to greater speed with kicks. 3. If a pure-blooded falcon fails to catch its prey for a long time and is hungry, it settles on the highest summit, whence it has a wide view and can sooner sight the desired prey. 4. When the Bedouin is asked a large price for the girl he loves, he takes part in predatory expeditions and raids to far and dangerous countries, in order to gain the required number of camels. The night marches through the enemy's country bring him the greatest profit, as the booty is obtained and brought away more easily. 5. At night the speed of a good camel is fastest and also she tires least at that time. Umm ḥarṭûm is the name given to camels with the underlip hanging down, so that it looks larger than the upper one.

1. Bakrati ḥelwen demîlah bel-ḥalâwi
mubramâ wuddi btašji' ṭibe
2. ummaha min ġejš ḥammâd al-ḥâwi
bakraten min ra'ijje ġatna rašîbe
3. mâ temanha kaṭânen w-mzâwi
binten labu rîmân wa' waj neġîbe
4. šarbet min bežže w-zâ'at lel-eġrâwi
wa-mraḥat 'end al-mḥejzer bel-ġedîbe
5. jowm tefka' čennaha al-ḥorr an-nedâwi aw zelîmen zâ' min dawwen ramî beh
6. naḥḥarah ahl al-karam w-ahl al-kaḥâwi
je'abberûnak kaḥl ta'kel an-neġîbe.

1. In the desert my young camel has a pleasant gait;
She is muscular, and I desire that only good be said
of her.
2. Her mother hails from the Ḥammâd al-Ḥâwi's riding
camels;
My young camel came to us with a herd against her will.
3. With gold she was not paid for, nor with black cloaks,
She is a daughter of Abu Rîmân — ah, glory, the noble one!
4. She drank at al-Bežže, ran as far as al-Ġerâwi, Having spent the night by al-Mḥejzer.
5. When excited by a gallop she is like the best hunting
falcon,
Or the ostrich running from a plain when a shot has been directed at it.
6. People both generous and fond of good coffee flock to see her,
Offering money for her before thou couldst fetter the left foreleg of the noble beast.

The poet was Raṭîṭ, a servant of Prince an-Nûri; the reciter, Raṭîṭ himself. He praises his camel which he had captured during a raid in the Šarârât territory. Verse 2. Hammâd al-Hâwi, chief of the Šarârât. These Arabs devote themselves to the breeding of thoroughbred camels, producing famous males whose name is known everywhere. 4. Al-Bežže is a watering place near al-Mzêrib in Syria. The well of al-Ġerâwi lies in the Sirhân depression, thus 370 kilometers southeast of al-Mzêrib. Al-Mhejzer is the name of wells 105 kilometers northwest of al-Ġerâwi. 6. Whenever he stops with his camel before a tent in a strange camp, men come running from all sides offering to buy her from him. After making a camel kneel, the rider ties, jaḳel, her left foreleg with a short rope above the knee. The camel is neġibe, pure-blooded, noble, because both her sire and dam were recognized as thoroughbreds.

1. Madden min al-ârez erkejbēn terîfi
jetlen eben ʿarûġ meždem beni lâm
2. zahâbahom kamḥ al-ķerâja-n-naẓîfi
wa-slâhahom muḥḥ al-franġi w-ar-rwâm
3. waʾ mâ kaṭaʿ besâkteh min ʿasîfi
waʾ min fâṭeren tâḥod ʿan al-ġejš židdâm
4. ʿoḳb aš-šaḥem wa-mlâfaḥeč lar-radîfi
adarreġč čenneč ḳašîmt al-aždâm.

1. A small troop on riding camels left al-ʿÂrez at a quick pace,
Following Eben ʿArûġ, the commander of the Beni Lâm.
2. Their supplies consist of clean wheat bought in villages
And their arms are the best the Franks and Greeks produce.
3. Ah, how many camels barely trained he has already tired with his haste!
And old ones too, while [his she-camel] always keeps ahead of [other] riders.
4. Gone is thy fat, gone is thy gay teasing of thy second rider,
Nevertheless, I force thee to walk as if thy forelegs were broken.

The poet is unknown; the reciter, Mindîl al-Ḳaṭi.

Verse 1. Terîf is the term applied to a she-camel walking at a long, fast pace, grazing all the time. This saves time for the rider. 3. By constant urging, besâkteh, he has left behind enḳaṭaʿ, not only many a young camel that had not been ridden long, ʿasîfe, but also old camels. 4. Owing to this treatment his own camel has lost all the fat of her hump, šaham, as well as her spirits, which made her touch with head and lips the second rider, mlâfaḥ lar-radîf, who was sitting bareback and had tickled her slightly.

To save his animal's strength the rider lets her rest a little before sunrise and after sunset; this is called sofratên.

A tired camel is known as mutlajješe. If so exhausted that she cannot rise with the rider any more, she is called tâwije; she has, they say, used up all the marrow of her bones, mâ bâži beha muḥḥ. Then she needs a rest of at least three months and a good pasture in order to recover completely.

DRINKING FROM A CAMEL'S PAUNCH

There is hardly an adult Rwejli who has not on some occasion drunk water from the camel's paunch. If the raiders are tormented with thirst, they kill a few camels, cut out their paunches, čarš, which are full of water, let the water settle, and then drink it. Mežhem eben Ćandal attacked the Šarârât in the al-Ḥunfa territory and captured large herds of camels just returning from pasture. Being short of water himself and fearing lest the pursuing Šarârât would occupy the nearest wells, he had about fifty camels with the biggest bellies killed and the water bags refilled with the water from their stomachs; then he steered clear of the wells and returned to his people, who were encamped in an-Nuḳra south of Damascus and about 1000 kilometers from al-Ḥunfa, without suffering any loss (see above, pp. 94f.).

DISEASES OF CAMELS

The camels suffer from many diseases, the majority of which are due to inflammation of the bowels and joints. As it is impossible for me to define the various ailments with any sort of precision I quote them exactly as they were explained to me.

Hmâr: inflammation of the bowels of young camels; incurable.

Ṛadda: inflammation of the brain of young camels; incurable.

Lowa: inflammation of the bowels of grown camels; treated by burning three times with a red-hot iron around the abdomen.

Šowka: inflammation of the bowels and constipation; treated by burning three times around the kidneys.

Rošš: inflammation of the bowels causing diarrhea; treated by burning seven times on the abdomen.

Čalba: stomach ulcers; treated by burning on the back.

Tejr: muscular paralysis; incurable.

Zal: inflammation of the joints, as follows:

Sabba: general inflammation of the joints; treated by burning around the particular joints;

Mowah: inflamed and swollen legs; treated by piercing the swollen places with a small sharp peg, hlâl.

Tifen: inflammation of the lower thigh accompanied by swelling; treated like mowah.

Rašâs: inflammation of the hoof; treated by piercing the fore part of the hoof.

Arčâb: inflammation of the whole of the hind leg; incurable.

Ĝerad: inflammation of the shin bone of the foreleg; treated by a light singeing with burning naši plants or dry hemri grass.

Nisam: inflammation of the knee; incurable.

Mal: inflammation of the fore shoulder; incurable.

Fatk: inflammation of the armpit; treated by burning.

Bhûz: inflammation of both forelegs above the knees; treated by burning.

Ničab: inflammation of the whole foreleg; treated by burning all round.

Farş: swelling of the râreb, withers; treated by burning three times.

Rekab: swelling of the knee; treated by piercing.

Hajja: ulcer above the stomach; treated by burning three times.

Aĉla: ulcer on the shoulder blade; treated by burning three times.

Hâfra: ulcer inside the head which then breaks through into the jaw; incurable.

Nâsûb: ulcer on the back; incurable.

Tâlû: ulcer on the breast; incurable.

Sarar: ulcer on the breastbone; treated by burning with sulphur.

Ḳaṣar: contraction of the back; treated by burning.

If a riding or pack saddle does not fit well on the hump or sides of the back, there appear on the galled spots blisters called lhûd, which disappear if the galled animal is not used for several days for either riding or carrying loads; otherwise putrefaction sets in. This condition is called dabar.

When a camel accustomed to walking only on sand or small gravel must walk for some time through a volcanic area, the skin under her hoofs becomes bruised and bleeds, ḥafa.

Rhaṣa is a camel in whose hoof either a thorn or sharp stone has stuck.

CHAPTER XII

HORSES

The Bedouins assert that no horses were created by Allāh in Arabia. According to their tradition they brought their first horses from the land of the settlers whom they raided. In the inner desert the horses have no place and would perish, did not the Bedouins look after them better than they look after their own children. A runaway horse cannot live long in the desert, while a camel will persist even without a man. Horses are of no economic value but serve merely as weapons for the getting of booty and influence. For this reason they are called al-murrijāt, the enriching. It is said that the mares' bellies contain treasures and their backs help to win power, al-ḥejl buṭūnāhen kanz wa-ḡhūrahēn ʿazz; for they give their owner colts which can be turned into money at any time, and it is much easier to make or repel an attack on horseback than when mounted on camels. The more horses a tribe has, the more feared it is by its neighbors and the greater its power. But successes gained on horseback are not lasting. The defeated neighbors unite for revenge, and soon both the riders and horses are annihilated. Hence the saying: "The horse reins are snakes, and death dwells on their backs; al-ḥejl ersānāhen ḡajāja wa-ḡhūrahēn manāja."

HORSES OF DIFFERENT KINDS

The Rwala classify horses¹⁰ as common ones, kdīš (pl., kudš), and thoroughbreds, ašīl (pl., ašājel). The common horses are not kept in the desert. Of the thoroughbreds they raise for the ¹⁰ The different parts of the horse (Fig. 49) are called:

- | | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------|------------------------------|
| 1. ʿarnūna | 12. ḡḡrat al-ʿajn | 24. sebīb |
| 2. minḡar | 13. idēn | 25. faḡad |
| 3. borṭom | 14. ḡarḡūr al-idēn | 26. ṭafne |
| 4. ʿeleme | 15. fāʿūs | 27. ʿarkūb |
| 5. mšakkam | 16. maʿāref | 28. krāʿ |
| 6. ḡanak | 17. ruḡūba | 29. dejd, udder; šṭār, teats |
| 7. warīde | 18. ḡāreč | 30. surra, sirr |
| 8. ḡebha; in the middle, | 19. abāher | 31. baṭn |
| sāʿed | 20. zahr | 32. ḡamb |
| 9. ḡuṣṣa | 21. mšammaṭ | 33. šāčele |
| 10. medāmeʿ al-ʿajn | 22. ḡaṭaʿ | 34. kūr |
| 11. ʿajn | 23. ʿokrat ad-dēl | 35. mabṭen |

most part mares of the following breeds: 1. khejle, 2. ṣaklâ-wijje žudrâniyje, 3. dhama, 4. ma'nakijje, and 5. ġilfe. However, the following are also recognized as thoroughbreds: 6. ham-dâniyje, 7. ʿobejjet ummu ġrejs, 8. ṣwêtijje, and 9. amm ʿarkûb. The khejlet al-ʿaġûz breed is supposed to be the oldest, from which all others have descended. The stallions of any of the above-named breeds can be admitted to cover, but the colt always bears the name of its dam's breed.

A thoroughbred mare is called faras, the plural being expressed by the word hejl, and as, with but few exceptions, only mares are bred, the word faras has come to mean horses regardless of sex, the rider being known as a fâres; the plural, fursân, is rarely heard, ṣanam or hejl being used instead.

Each horse and mare bears certain marks indicating its value. These marks are called siġâse, and whoever understands them, jesûs siġâsetha, decides whether a mare is good or not. A good mare has long ears, legs, and neck; the croup, the root of the tail, and the coronet, žên, are short. The nostrils and eyes are large and the distance between the foreknees, fahġâ bân riġlejha, broad and spacious. The forehead should bulge forward, ġebhatha nâttaʿ, the breast should be arched, and the forelock, mane, and hair of the tail should be thick, ʿelematha w-ʿačwaha.

Curling hair from the navel to the udder is called dumejtîr. Two curls one above the other, between the eyes are saʿdên; hejčelên are curls on the right and left side of the neck, and zibdet as-sakf are curls on either side of the sexual organ. All these curly spots of hair, fatâjel, are signs of good qualities in the mare.

On the dhama, ma'nakijje, and ġilfe breeds the Rwala love to see white spots called nîšân (pl., nijâšîn) either on the forehead or legs. A small round spot on the forehead is a naġme; a long one a ṛurra; if it extends to the upper lip it is a žedah. A white spot on the leg is a haġela. A mare with short white spots on both hind legs and on the left foreleg is known as meġaġġelat at-talâte muṭlekat al-ġemîn. If there is such a short white spot on the mare's right foreleg, the leg is called jad al-kâteb; if only on the left hind leg, al-mer-čebe; spots on both hind legs only are known as sirwâl.

36. *ʿofejne*37. *rukba*38. *drâʿ*39. *mġaddade*40. *žên*41. *hâfer*42. *ṣadr*43. *warč*44. *sičime, rašme*45. rasanmerwat, posteriors.zabwa, sexual organ of the mare*sakf*, labia of the sexual organ of the mare*hoġġân*, testicles*ṭejs* } sexual organ of*zebb* } the stallion*a, ʿademab, nkejrac, mġaddaded, žêne, maġatṭ aš-šaʿrf, hâferġ, ʿofejnt al-hâfer*, the inner fleshy part*g, ḥdaʿ*, horseshoe.

Kâzât are mares which bite the bridle tightly when running. They must, therefore, breathe carefully and can run much longer than mares with open jaws.

Signs of bad qualities are: a curly spot above the nostrils, kaḅr; one at about the middle of the neck in front, šaḅḅ al-ğejb; such spots (known as trabijjât) on the lower part of the thighs, tafne; and similar spots above the heart. Other unfavorable signs are: a white spot on the lower lip, ʿazz an-nâ-ğed; a white spot on the left foreleg only, nakkâlt al-čefan; a white spot on the left fore- and right hind leg, ğebrâş; and finally such spots on both forelegs only, žejd.

To destroy or at least to moderate the unfavorable significance of these marks, sijâsât an-nijâşîn, the owner of the mare lays a black goat on her shoulder blades, kills it, and lets the blood run down over the mare. This is called nattâḅ aš-šaʿûr.

The Rwala prefer a pure white mare without any other color or shade. Such a mare is called şafra. The chiefs appear on mares of this color at all the local festivities, aş-şifr markûb al-amâra len-nažâra, but never use them on their raids, as pure white objects are visible both by day and night at a great distance.

A zerka (Fig. 50) is a white mare with many fine black hairs. If the dark shade predominates, it is a zerka nîlijje; if it is reddish in places, zerka rabša.

A dark brown mare is called hamra (Fig. 51); if without any white spots, hamra talsa; if there is a white spot on one of the legs, hamra mḥağğela, and hamra mḥammaşa if the color reminds one of roasted coffee.

A light yellow mare is called şakra. If she shines like gold, şakra dhûb; one with all her legs white up to the knees is şakra mḥawwaza.

A dark colored or black mare is known as dhama and as dhama řurâbijje if she has the bluish luster characteristic of a raven.

The Rwala imagine that the speed of a horse can be guessed from its color; they also say that the şakra mare will not be overtaken by one of any other color, if the gallop be not of long duration. The şakra is the fastest but not the most enduring of the mares. The palm for this quality belongs to the *hamra*², which can gallop or trot all day without sinking from exhaustion.

BREEDING OF HORSES

The large clans have, as a rule, only one stud horse; this they never keep in the camp together with other horses but intrust it to the care of a specially selected slave, who pitches his tent in some gully beyond the camp, from where the stud horse can see no mares. To prevent the horse from catching sight of some runaway mare the slave hangs a full nose bag over its head early in the morning, leaving it on until evening and only taking it off while the animal is being watered. No more than two mares a day are covered, šabbûh or ‘allûh, by the stud horse, one in the morning, naṭṭ, and the other in the evening, ḥaṣm. When a mare is in heat, muṭi, she must be led in as soon as possible; otherwise her heat might pass, eḳtafat. The owner of the stallion asks the owner of the mare whether he wants a morning or evening cover, naṭṭ wallaḥ ḥaṣm, or both. If he decides for both, no other mare will be led in that day. For one cover the charge is one or two meğîdijjât ($0.90—1.80) and is called mohr al-ḥşân.

The period of twenty-five days after the mare's covering is called *‘edijet aš-šba*². After that time she is led to the stud horse again, je‘arrezha. If she kicks out against or repulses him, it is judged that she has conceived, aḳzabat; she is then known as lkaha and has to be well nursed and fed so as to avoid a miscarriage, ṭaraḥat or ramat. In the last month before foaling the mare is called muhres. When she has foaled, afradat or waledat, she is known as rarûs. If a male colt is born, it is simply buried in sand or thrown into a gully so that the mother may not be weakened needlessly. The birth of a filly is the cause of rejoicing to all the owner's family and of congratulations from both his kin and acquaintances, just as if a boy had been born. Such a rarûs mare is then wrapped up in blankets, taken to the tent on cold nights, and gets better food than the owner himself; for a whole year thereafter no one would think of saddling and riding her, in order that the quantity of her milk may not be reduced and that the filly may be well nourished. The filly also gets camel's milk both in the evening and morning, and often the owner and his family go to bed without supper so that the mare and her young may have sufficient food and milk. The ears of the new-born filly are tied together with a silk thread to make them grow close together and symmetrically; they also shorten the root of its tail to make the mare when grown-up carry it upright in a gallop; they blow into its nostrils to widen them; shout the name it has received into its ears, and even smear the filly with tar to protect it from the effect of noisome smells.

FIG. 49—Diagram of a horse.

In its first	year	the filly is called	felw
„ „	second	„ „ „ „	howli
„ „	third	„ „ „ „	ġeda
„ „	fourth	„ „ „ „	tenijje
„ „	fifth	„ „ „ „	rbâ'ijje
„ „	sixth	„ „ „ „	žâreh or awwal (first) karḥ
„ „	seventh	„ „ „ „	tâni (second) karḥ , etc.

After the fifteenth karḥ, i. e. beginning with her twenty-first year, a mare is called awda; between her first and tenth years she is a mohra (pl., mohâr).

The word rumaka is applied both to a mare and to a woman who is neither too young nor too old. One may ask: "Hi bint, is she a virgin still?" and receive the answer: "Lâ w-allâh hi rumaka zêne, no, she is a pretty woman in her best age." "Has-surba ma'aha hoşon, are there stallions with this troop?" "Lillâh killehen rumak mâ beha ḥṣân; no, only grown mares; not a stallion among them."

FIG. 50—A zerka' mare.

Ḥṣân (pl., hoşn) is a stallion between its fifth and twentieth years; after that time it is called awd.

There is hardly a mare that is owned by one man only. As a rule she belongs to two men or even more, şerîče bel-faras, who share anything she may give, tetahâşer al-behût bejn aš-şerîčên. If a mare is bought by two Bedouins on the understanding that her colts also will be their common property, the deal is called bî' heğra. If the agreement is that the mare will belong to one but the first and second colt to the other, it is a bî' me-tâni deal. When a man buys a mare for himself alone without any other agreement, a bî' mekalfa is spoken of, though only a city man or a European buys in that manner—never a son of the desert.

The mare owned by two men is called marbat; the part owner who takes care of her is râ'i-l-marbat. He is responsible for her health and must give compensation should the animal die or miscarry owing to his negligence. If the partners want to annul, jetakâşarûn, their agreement, they go to the chief's tent and declare it before witnesses, so that they cannot blame each other afterwards, whatever may happen. A partner can also be compelled to give up his rights, muḳâşara, if the other or others desire it or have to sell the mare. For instance, the chief may be satisfied that the man who insists on breaking the agreement is unable in any way either to provide himself with new camels, to procure the amount needed to buy a bride for his son, or to buy weapons demanded by the avenger for blood that has been shed. Possibly the chief may be convinced that the part owner would not get as much for the mare from his own people as a stranger or a European offers him. Under such circumstances the chief might well decide to sell the animal in question himself and to give the unwilling part owner one half of the proceeds. The latter also is privileged himself to buy out the other's share in the mare at the figure offered by the stranger. The price paid for a mare is called sijâk.

FIG. 51—A hamra' mare.

EQUIPMENT, USE, AND VALUE OF HORSES

The word for a horse saddle (Figs. 52, 53, 54) is meršeḥa; "Saddle the horses! meršeḥû-l-ḥejl." The saddle consists of a leather or quilted, woolen cushion, žerijje (Fig. 52a), sewn to a cloth cover, libbâde (d), and firmly fastened to the saddle. The saddle is also supplied with girth and stirrups; b, râs al-bedd; c, karbûz; e, ḥrûğ al-meršeḥa; f, ḥelâk; g, ḥzâm; h, bṭâne; j, zamḥa; k, bẓim; l, rukḥ.

The rein is very simple; the bridle proper, ʿanân (Figs. 55, 57, pp. 392-393) with an iron ring, ʿazeda (a), is but rarely used.

The forelegs of a mare are nearly always fettered with an iron chain called ḥadîd (Fig. 56, p. 392). "Šakk al-ḥadîd ʿala-l-faras," means "he fettered his mare's legs"; "Ḥaddedû-l-ḥejl, put fetters on the horses!" The single parts of the shackles are as follows: a, ʿarejza; b, kṣuba; c, sinsile. They are closed or opened by a key which is usually in the care of the owner's wife, daughter, or sister. It is also the duty of these women to harness the mare, especially when an alarm cry is given. Then the rein is thrown over her head and the bridle put in the mouth, saffafatha (or šaʿaṭatha) al-ʿanân, or alğamatha. "Saklab aw zabb beẓahr al-mohra w-dafaʿaha" means: "the rider throws himself into the saddle of the mare and rides off."

The Bedouin never undertakes a long trip on a mare but always on a camel. Only when he pays a visit to a neighboring camp, or rides out to meet a dear guest, or repulses an attack, or assails the enemy's herds will he use a horse.

With a rider on her back the mare will walk with a light, long pace, teḥudd ḥadda. When defiling before their prince or commander, arza, on a festive occasion or in time of danger, the Bedouins hold their mares up short so that they leap forward, rise on their hind legs, back slightly, and then leap forward again. This performance is called hedeba or teḥaddob. In a mock battle, leʿeb al-ḥejl, or during a man-to-man fight, trâd, the mares will spring in the same manner. Mares gallop only when racing or in the attack, râra. To stop his animal the rider cries: "Hamš ħāj;" to start it: "Ġhara ġharab."

If I call a person, I say of myself: aṣīh.

" " a mare " " " at'i.

" " camels " " " ešâje.

" " a donkey " " " eḡarreš.

" " a dog " " " ešli.

" " sheep " " " ethi.

" " a falcon " " " ad'i.

As mares are hardly ever sold, they have no fixed price. If a man wishes to buy a certain mare, he must pay whatever the owner asks, and the latter generally wants more than the buyer offers. It is said in the desert that the price of a thing is fixed by him who wants it, as-sil'a tetba' ar-râreb. The Bedouins pay each other as much as ten camels for a yearling mare; for a three-, four- or five-year-old mare they offer from fifteen to thirty thoroughbred riding camels. An adult stud horse is usually cheaper than a yearling mare.

LOSS OF HORSES

When a Rwejli's mare has been captured by the enemy and then recaptured by another Rwejli, the latter is obliged to return it to his fellow tribesman but must be paid a she-camel as compensation. A colt of the same mare captured by a Rwejli must also be given back to the owner, six camels being the reward in this case. Such a colt is known as ṛî. The question then asked is: "Didst thou get thy [captured] mare or her colt? ġâtak farask wallâ-l-ṛî."

On learning who has recovered the colt of his captured mare, her owner goes to him, saying: "The daughter of my mare is with thee, I demand her from thee, ana ġâri'ha 'alejk."

"That is not true, this is not the daughter of thy mare. I myself paid so-and-so many she-camels for her;" to which the owner replies:

"Good, now keep to the figure thou sayest thou hast paid, oḡod li bimâ siḡt, till I bring my witnesses."

"I will do so," agrees the other, and those present declare:

"We are thy witnesses that he will keep to such and such a figure and that he will neither sell nor take away the colt."

Then the owner goes to seek the captor. The owner in search of his animal is called kaṣṣās; he is free to go even to the enemy, who in this case must help. On arriving at the latter's tents, he inquires after his stolen mare and her colt.

FIG. 52—A horse saddle, meršeḥa.

On finding what he seeks, he asks one of the enemy to come with him as a witness that the captured filly is actually the daughter of his stolen mare. Testimony of this kind being indisputable, his tribesman says: "Give me the proper compensation and take her! hât li sowḩaha w-ḩodha." He then gets five camels, the witness helping in the search, jaḩoṣṣ 'anha, gets one, and the animal is returned to the original owner.

The owner of the captured mare tries first to ascertain who has captured her and where she is kept. For the earliest reliable report of her whereabouts a reward of five meḩidijjât ($4.50) is paid. Often the new owner, although an enemy, sends a report every year of the mare's condition and of the colts born to her.

FIG. 53

FIG. 54

FIGS. 53, 54—Saddled mares.

CARE, DISEASES, AND NAMES OF HORSES

Nothing causes the Bedouin so much labor and trouble as a mare. It is easier to raise and bring up five children than a single filly, as the children require especial care only in their first two years but the care of a mare has no end. It is necessary to provide her with food and drink, to protect her against heat and cold, to guard her from disease and robbers, also to quarrel with the other part owners, etc. It is the business of the women and slaves to feed the mare and care for her—all the Bedouin man will do is to give orders. As soon as he rises in the morning he shouts: "Wake up the mare! ruddow nafs al-faras," and his wife or his daughter hastens to fill the food bag with barley and hang it over the mare's head. Towards evening, before the sun touches the horizon, he again calls out: "Hang it on the mare! 'alležow 'ala-l-faras," and it is his wife once more who has to fill the bag and put it on the animal. At noon the master commands: "Water the mare!" and the wife pours water from the large leather bag—which she must often carry on her back home from the well—into a bowl and holds it before the resting mare. The animal is led to the well only if this is in the middle of the camp and there are no signs of danger. No mare can be without water for longer than twenty-four hours. The whole camp may suffer from thirst, râs az-żma', and the children cry for a drop of water, but the master, unmoved, will pour the last remnants of water into a dish and set it before the pampered mare. Frequently some spirited mare shies, šâšat, causing the others also to shy, šawwašat al-ħejl, and all to run out from the camp, but the Bedouin sits undisturbed, leaving the women to hurry after the animals, calm them, and bring them back home.

The shoes worn by the horses are flat and thin and have a small hole in the center, ħda'. Without a shoe, ħafjâne, it is impossible for a mare to walk on gravel for any length of time, as its sharpness injures the hoof.

The most frequent diseases to which a horse is subject are:

Misma: inflammation of the muscles of the back; cured by a mixture of beleħt al-ħejl and felîti drugs (sold by the Ku-bejsi) and of coffee or melted butter, which mixture is poured into the nostrils, ješa'etûnah.

Mwalli: inflammation of the bowels accompanied by diarrhea; this is cured by burning around the navel with a red-hot iron.

Zerd: ulcers under the chin; cured by burning the nape of the neck.

Kâreş: a swelling of the belly; cured by smearing the shaved belly with a mixture of grape syrup, alum, and pepper.

Sakwa: glanders; cured by inhaling the smoke of şih.

Şûhâr, mşowhar: festering wounds on the back; cured by burning the root of the tail.

Ġerab: mange; cured by burning the diseased spot and rubbing in oil.

Lwêref: ulcers in the vagina; cured by smearing with sulphur and butter.

Hamra': inflammation of the ankle. This arises generally when the exhausted mare has fed heavily and been watered immediately afterwards; it is cured by burning around the breast and by piercing the skin on the shaved ankle.

Zufr: cataract of the eye; cured by dropping a mixture of rust, soot, and milk into the eye as well as by burning around the eye.

Every mare is given a name expressing her real or imagined qualities or those which her master would like her to possess. A favorite mare of Prince an-Nûri was called Dîba, She Wolf; of his son Nawwâf, Sadha, Lioness; other mares of the prince were named: Farha, Joy; Frejha, Little Joy; Sa'da, Good Luck; Nowma, Sleepy; Falha, Bringing Good Luck; Ġarra, White Fronted; Smejha, The Little Gentle; Şiha, Cautious; 'Awna, Helper; Mřiza, Provoking; and 'Ejda, Snappy. It happens often that a youth names the young mare which he has received from his father after the girl he loves, to remind himself of his sweetheart every time he calls his mare.

SONGS RELATING TO MARES

The Bedouin also thinks of his mare in his songs and poems.

Jâ šowķ jâ bajjeż al-ġarra
w-al-jowm wên ente jâ mâli nahaġt w-ażef ma' al-ġarra
w-lâ min şiddîżen w-lâ wâli.

O sweetheart! O thou with a white spot on thy forehead!
 And today, where art thou, treasure of mine?
 I followed thy footprints, every little while halting,
 And yet I found neither the mistress true nor my dear mare.

The youth's mare was captured by the enemy before he had returned from a raid, and his beloved had married another in the meantime.

1. Ḥajjeltaha-lja mâ lakejt al-bdûni
w-ana-ḥmed allî ġâb li bint 'îda
2. elja ṣâḥ ṣajjâḥ az-ṣaḥa' w-aḥ'adûni
am'arekah w-aḥûj jaftaḥ ḥadîdah
3. ġibbe w-dibbe wa-nsefaḥ bimtûni
w-al-aṣel mâ jadreb ḥaṭât al-walîdah
4. jâ tâjehîn ar-ra'j lâ tanṣedûni
šibrên waḳm ḥnûkaha 'an warîdah
5. w-elja rkazat kâmat tethâmel 'ajûni
min riġlaha al-jimna' ḥatran 'ala îdah.

1. I left her sterile till I found al-Bdûni,
And him I praise who brought me 'Îda's daughter.
2. When roused by the cry of alarm after the dew has gone
I put a light saddle on her while my brother unlocks her fetter.
3. A short coat of cloth and a supple spear, adorned with ostrich feathers, hang at my back — Thus a well-bred man will not speak ill of any of the gallant youths.
4. O ye who err in your thoughts, inquire not of me!
Two spans are her jaws from her white spot.
5. When she gallops, haze covers my eyes,
While her right hind leg threatens the foreleg with danger.

The poet was aš-Šarrâbi of the Singâra tribe; the reciters, Prince an-Nûri and Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd. Aš-Šarrâbi refused to admit the camp stud horse to his mare 'Îda. He heard of the stud horse Bdûni, owned by the Mtejri tribe which camped beyond the valley of ar-Rma; yet the road thither was dangerous. Now it so happened that, while participating in a raid, he found himself near the camp where Bdûni was kept. Leaving his comrades he took his mare to Bdûni, and in due time a filly was born. When it grew up, his friends came to see it but instead of praising it they only offered criticism for some blemishes in the young animal's beauty. Especially the white spot on its forehead seemed to them to be too close to the jaws. Aš-Šarrâbi, who had repelled many attacks of the enemy on his young mare, roused by the taunts of his friends, answered them with this poem.

Verse 1. The young mare is called daughter of ʿÎda, not of Bdûni, because a colt is always reckoned as of the family of its mother. 2. The enemy generally attacks when the dew has evaporated, as the camel herds are driven to pasture at that time. Şajjâh is either the herdsman or watchman who first sees the enemy and gives the alarm cry. The men amuse themselves till past midnight and stay in bed until dinner is ready for them, as breakfast is not known among the Bedouins. Maʿreka or meršeḥa is a soft, light horse saddle. 3. Ġibbe is a short coat of good cloth with long, narrow sleeves tucked up at the wrists. Dibbe is a spear with a supple shaft. Nafes is an ornament of ostrich feathers fastened near the spear blade. When about to attack, the spear shaft is held at the right of the hip. Aš-Šarrâbi is a gallant youth, one of the ḥaṭât al-walîda, undaunted young warriors, and therefore not to be taunted by men descended from old families. Walîd as well as raġġâl is more than walad or raġol. Walîd, meaning a real hero, is a stronger word than walad, youth, just as raġġâl, a man to be depended upon, is stronger than raġol, an ordinary man. Not every raġol is necessarily raġġâl, or every walad a walîd.

1. Kâl al-ḥzejri w-allati tadanna leh
bint ar-raʿejl min aṣlaha maġdûba
2. w-lâ jakdar ar-raġġâl al-kaṣîr juʿenniha
illa fajarċîha ʿala šenhûba
3. jâ čenn ʿajânîha bimefrež râsaha
nîrân ḥarb biḡennaten mašbûba
4. ḥamraʿ tawaṭṭaʿ bi ʿala miṭl al-ʿamed
kejtâtaha biṣaḥraha mazbûba
5. jabri-š-šerîf jahott serġeh fowḵha
hâdi ʿelûm w-ḥeġġaten maklûba.

1. Al-Ḥzejri said of her whom he drew to himself, holding "By descent she is Raʿejl's daughter, [her firmly:]
2. Whom a small man cannot bridle
Except he stand on a big rock.
3. Oh, the depth of her eyes, there where the forelock ends!
They emit rays like beacons lighted on a high cone.
4. Behold, a bay steps under me like a pliant branch;
Her back in the middle is unbending.
5. The Sherif would like to place his saddle on her."
This is my answer and the bargain [for him] is lost.

The poet was al-Ḥzejri from the southern territory, min dīrt al-ġenûb; the reciters, ʿAwde al-Kwêčbi and Prince an-Nûri. Al-Ḥzejri had a bay mare called ar-Raʿejl. The chiefs of several tribes and the rulers of many settlements made him large offers for her, but in vain. The poor Ḥzejri would not part with her. The Grand Sherif of Mecca also heard of her and sent his son to al-Ḥzejri with large gifts. After examining the mare the Sherif's son fettered her forelegs and, grasping her by the forelock, said: "Ask what thou wilt, thou wilt get it, but I shall get the mare." Thereupon al-Ḥzejri drew the mare to himself and improvised this poem.

Verse 1. Raʿejl is the name for a horse, whether stallion or mare. 2. Šenhûba is any projecting object — a boulder, a pile of stones, a low wall, etc. A man of low stature climbs a šenhûba by which his horse is standing and puts a bridle in its mouth. 3. Mefrež rāsaha is the spot reached by the forelock, which partly covers the horse's eyes. Kenna is an isolated conical hill on which alarm fires are lit when the enemy is about to attack a herd spending the night far from the camp. 4. Kejtâtaha is the flesh covering the upper part of the thigh, mainly to the right and left of the root of the tail. The tougher and the less yielding to pressure this flesh is, the more fatigue will the mare stand. It is said of a fat but muscular mare: "She is so tough that an almond could be cracked on her back, kejtâtaha."

When he had finished his poem, al-Ḥzejri bestrode his mare bareback; at a sign from him the spirited animal broke the Sherif's fetter by a mighty straddle of her forelegs and flew like a bird towards the vast desert. The Sherif's son with his whole retinue went in pursuit but returned without catching her.

1. Kâl az-zujûdi bečalâmen jizûdi
ʿafje kuʿûdi jowm ġâbni w-dân
2. ešrû-l-ašâjel lâ thâbû-l-ħašâjel lowhen ħazâjel lâ trâlûn al-atmân
3. kbâr ar-rumâjem čennehen al-bahâjem
jowm al-hezâjem wakkefen tekil ħemrân
4. beš-šaff zerka w-râčebha tekil jerka
sâkha muʿarka bel-wara teġeħm az-zân
5. šafra wazâħ w-čennaha-z-zabi nezâħ
rakezha ġemâħ w-terkezha wašt al-metnân

6. šaḡra dēhûb w-čennaha-d-dîb maslûb
nafsah tedûb elja-râden ʿoḡob mukmân
7. beš-šaff ḥamra w-awwal al-ʿomr ḡamraʿ
w-ar-rdûf samra bēn ḡibbe w-ḡuftân
8. ḥamra tefûḥ w-fowḡaha teḡil jâ bûḥ
w-al-lîbes ḡûḥ w-šâheren jowm al-ekwân.

1. Thus spoke az-Zujûdi in words somewhat lengthy:
"Hail to my camel, that has brought me here and will take me away!
2. Buy well-bred mares, fear no bad qualities,
Even if they are lean — but pay no high prices.
3. [Buy] those with broad heads as if of monsters,
For on the day of hostile attack they will stand firm like lone hills.
4. Thus one may fancy a white (mare) with bluish hair so tall that, methinks, the rider must climb on her,
One on whose shin the veins stand out, one who during the fight will warily watch the spear shafts.
5. A mare yellowish white, resembling a shy gazelle;
Whilst galloping she gains speed and her tail covers the rider's back.
6. A gold-colored bay, like a wolf broad in front, narrow,
in the back,
When taking cover her soul flames up when she hears the stamping [of the enemy attacking].
7. Thus one may fancy a sorrel and youth, a moonlight night,
And dark harness between my coat and caftan.
8. A sorrel dashes with long bounds; and her rider, like a castle Dressed in a cloth jacket, appears everywhere on the day of the fight.

Az-Zujûdi hailed from the Beni Ḥasan tribe in al-Belḡa'. His poem was recited to me by Ġwâd al-ʿÂni.

Verse 1. Ġâb w-dân means "he brought and carried away" or "he rode with me hither and back again." 2. Hazal is equivalent to zaʿîf, poor or lean. 3. Rumma is the horse's head viewed from the front. Ḥemrân are isolated hillocks. Horses with broad heads will support even the fiercest attack. 4. Beš-šaff means "as one may like or fancy"; bšaffi, "it looks good to me." Teḡeḡm az-zân means "she watches the spear shafts," that is to say, not only those of the attackers, thereby avoiding the lunge, but also that of her master, in order to spring forward when he is about to stab. Zân is the same as ‘ûd ar-rumh, spear shaft. 5. The sight of a shy white gazelle reminds one of a fast white mare. Rakeẓha ġemâh means "she gallops with steps of gradually increasing speed." While galloping the hair of the steed's tail covers the rider's hips. 6. Maslûb means "pressed together, wide in the front, narrow at the back." The wolf's breast is broader than its hind part. If the bay is hidden under cover, mukmân, together with the camel riders, ṣâbûr, and hears the stamping and rattling, ra'aden, of the riders from the attacked camp, she becomes excited and loses her wits, nafsah tedûb. 7. The owner of the sorrel wishes that his youth, awwal al-‘omr, would return and stay for ever; that the moon would shine for ever; and that he could wear dark armor, rdûf samra, between his caftan and woolen coat. Ar-rdûf, i. e. râdef (or murâdef) hdûm, a man clad in double garment, implies that he also wears under his clothes or over his clothes something dark, samra, i. e. a short shirt made of metal rings. 8. Tefûh is used of a mare with a long stride and spring but hard to manage. She overtakes all, allows none to pass her, but obeys her rider only when so minded. "Jâ bûh!" shouts the surprised Bedouin on sighting a tall object at a distance, being unable to say whether it be a pile of stones, a rider, or a camel. This happens particularly on sultry days when the air is not clear but quivering with heat at noon.

CHAPTER XIII

OMENS

NATURAL PHENOMENA AS OMENS

The Bedouin does not think deeply on religious matters and follows no rules in his religious observances. Nevertheless, he guides himself in all his social and private undertakings by certain fixed customs, observes the various natural phenomena, and pays heed to internal impulses and dreams which he holds to be signs or warnings sent to him by spiritual beings who wish him either good or ill. He is a firm believer in the existence of spirits and thinks it absolutely necessary to do all that is agreeable and avoid what is disagreeable to them. Woe to him, if he should anger them! To do so would frustrate all his undertakings. And anger them he would, should he not be careful in his words and actions nor give due regard to days of portent and certain signs both visible and invisible.

When a Rwejli despatches a man on an affair of importance, he must not use the word "Ruḥ," "Go!" or "Run!" He must not say: "Ride in the direction of the settlement of Baḳ'a" or "of the al-Lmât wells." All these words invite death. For the verb râḥ, ruḥ, is used in connection with death or departure from this world. Baḳ'a signifies a violent death, and al-lmât also reminds one of destruction, or death. Therefore they are likely to say "Eršed" for "Go!" or "Run," instead of ruḥ and to substitute for the topographical names Baḳ'a or al-Lmât the term Ṭajjebt Ism, which, referring to a settlement or a well, means "the name is a good omen."

More important matters the Rwejli prefers to leave either till noon or at least till the dew has fully departed or to despatch them before the fresh dew has fallen. These times of the day he considers the most favorable, because the spirits are then resting. But there is no day without some meaning attached to it — it is either suitable for an undertaking or not. These significations are called wağba or wağh; the favorable ones being zên, the unfavorable šên. The best days on which to begin a task are Mondays and Thursdays. Their wağba is not only favorable, zêna, but their countenance, too, is sweet, helw, so that they insure good results. Wednesday, Saturday, and the forenoon of Friday are not suitable. There is no spirit which would assist a Bedouin who begins an undertaking on any of these days, and he would be left to his fate, naşîbeh. The other days of the week are of no significance whatever.

The Bedouin observes the moon very carefully, counting his days in accordance with its waxing or waning. For both of these also have their good or bad countenance, wağh. The most suitable or lucky day is the first day of the month, if it falls on Monday or Thursday. Then the success of an undertaking is assured. Unlucky are such nights and days of the month as contain the numbers six or seven. The sixth, sixteenth, and twenty-sixth days of the month, called al-farad, are considered unlucky, as they break up or disintegrate any undertaking precisely as one can divide the figure six into two and two and two. The nights of the sixth, sixteenth and twenty-sixth of the month are called lejâli-l-ṛarak, the nights of flood, destruction. He who undertakes a work of importance on those days will drown his efforts in failure. Every being that comes into the world on any of these nights will surely perish and is on that account called ṛarkân. A baby boy born on such a night will not learn to walk, lâ jaskom.

The seventh, seventeenth, and twenty-seventh days of the month are likewise unlucky. The number seven, sabʿ, is wholly under the domination of the spirits; anyone pronouncing it irritates the evil spirits and repels the good. Colloquially samḥ is used instead of sabʿ, which is employed only in conjuring or swearing, and also in cursing to perdition — that is, when calling on the spirits with some object in view.

The ninth, nineteenth, and twenty-ninth days remind one of the waning of the month, nefâz aš-šahr; for this reason it is better not to begin anything important on these days. A raid made on any of them will certainly fail, especially if led by several chiefs. On no other days of the month are there so many disputes and quarrels as on the ninth, nineteenth, and twenty-ninth — it seems as if every human being was then unconsciously subject to irritation, matʿûs.

The twenty-first day brings much evil into the world. The traveler loses his way most easily on that day. A child born on the twenty-first is called maḵrûd, pursued by trouble;

it will not die but will be sick most of its days and will leave no descendants, and its herds will not multiply.

Just as every man and especially his pregnant wife wish that no child be born to them on the twenty-first day of the month, they still more ardently desire that it be born in the night of the fourteenth or twentieth, or on the day of the eighteenth. The night of the fourteenth is called lejlet al-kadr. A boy who sees the light of this world on that night will bring glory to his whole kin and clan — even to the whole tribe — and is therefore called bahîṭ. The night of the twentieth is known as al-ḥatma and is lucky, zêna, to any undertaking. He who begins a task on the eighteenth is sure of success, for that date is favorable, wağḡeh zên.

But it is not enough for the Rwejli to observe time and day; he must also watch his surroundings, as there are favorable and unfavorable qualities both in human beings and in animals. Many a kin, many a clan, bears a good omen, fâlhom zên, others again a bad one, fâlhom šên. When meeting any of them on an important journey the Bedouin knows at once whether he can proceed farther or must return. A good omen is inherent in the Ḳaʿâẓʿa of the Rwala tribe; in the Malḥûd kin of the Mğelli clan of the Fedʿân tribe; in the Eben Fnejd kin of the Rassâlîn clan of the Ḳmuṣa division of the Sbaʿa tribe, as well as in every pretty woman, ḥurma min al-bwêheğ. If raiders approach a camp of some friendly Bedouins known to be possessed of a good omen, the chief or some prominent man from the camp rides out or runs to meet them with the greeting: "Hasten after your luck! efleḡow." The commander, then, making his camel kneel, jenawweḡ, answers: "May it be a good omen to me, which I accept; fâli w-žebilteh."

Unlucky is the sign of the Bdûr of the Ešâğʿa and Freğe of the Rwala; of the Hwejsân kin of the Rassâlîn clan; of the Mwêneʿ kin of the ʿEbede division, but especially that of the Nʿejm and Ğimlân, who breed goats and sheep in the al-Ḥaṣṣ hills. The Rwala never rest with the members of these kins or clans when going out on a raid but prefer to suffer hunger themselves and let their mares also suffer rather than to eat a mouthful with them. For each bite of food accepted from them brings failure, ʿalḡathom ḡašra; yet on their return they have no objection to refreshing themselves at any camp of these people.

Failure is always attached to the Şlejḡ, and their tents are avoided by the warriors when on a raid; their hospitality is accepted only when some of the warriors are ill or wounded. The Šlejb tend the sick carefully and carry them home when they have recovered or bury them when they die. When the raiders are tormented by hunger or pursued by the enemy they do not hesitate to seek help from the Šlejb, who are despised by them at any other time.

Animals also have their bad and good signs. The fox, al-ḥoṣejni, especially is an object of the most careful observation by the Bedouin. If it halts on catching sight of the raiders and looks at the troop from both the right and left side, they know that they need expect no mishap but will return with rich booty, fowd w-salâme. A similar omen they see in a pure white mare when she breaks loose and, holding her head high, prances in front of the raiders as if leading

FIG. 55

FIG. 56

FIG. 55—A horse bridle, ‘anân.

FIG. 56—Horse fetters, ḥadîd.

(See p. 378.)

them. When a hyena jumps out suddenly from its den and starts to hop at the head of the troop as if showing them the way, ḥatam ‘ala-l-razw, they begin to urge on their camels joyfully, believing the beast's appearance to be a sure sign of booty. Two ravens flying above raiders from one side to the other cause the whole troop to shout joyfully: "Two ravens and a good omen! ṛurâbên w-fâlen [pronounced fânen] zên." A rich booty is to be theirs without doubt. Other good signs are a sorrel with a white spot on its right foreleg; a white camel; a white ass with a dark bluish stripe on its shoulders, ḥmâr ḥazar or ršejdi; and a greyhound bitch, sleka. A long poisonous snake, called dâbb, when found during some serious undertaking is killed and thrown into the air. If it falls on its back in such a way that its white belly can be seen, the omen is favorable. All animals which are considered good omens are called at-tlejžijjât.

A Bedouin who has led in his mare to the stud horse, mounts her afterwards and rides around the camp until he meets a girl, to whom he says: "O daughter, just now I have led in my mare." If the girl answers: "Be comforted with the glad tidings that she will bring thee a filly, ebšer be-mohra," both the owner of the mare and his whole kin rejoice, for this is a favorable sign, and they all expect confidently that the girl's prophecy will come true.

FIG. 57—A harnessed mare.

It is a common belief among the Rwala that a one-eyed person is the bearer of misfortune. If a man meets one so afflicted, in order to destroy his unhappy influence he turns over a large stone, thus burying the bad omen. Hence the proverb: "If thou meetest a one-eyed person, turn over a large stone; elja šuft al-awar oklob hağar." Nobody embarking on a journey of importance will have for his guide a man with his right and left upper eyeteeth missing, afraḵ as-sinnên, or one with blue eyes, azrar (sic) al-ʿajnên, for then nothing would succeed. Woe to those having intercourse with a woman whose breast is covered with down, or with a man without any beard or without down on any part of his body, ağnas al-

ğenûs al-ḥurmat al-halba w-ar-rağol al-melûs, as both are the cause of various mishaps! A Bedouin who marries a person that is quarrelsome and censorious, al-ḥurmat ad-da^câja w-an-na^câja, is never prosperous but will always be unhappy, both he and his children. A scolding woman wishes ill to her opponent in the following sentences:

"Sab^c hal-wağh. May [a wild beast, demon] tear this face!"

"Sa^can jasba^c haš-šâreb. May [the demon] utterly tear up this mustache!" Šâreb, mustache, means man in general.

"Kow beh. Tekwû (or tekû) bak. Burn him! May they burn thee! [Mayest thou become so ill that] red-hot iron must be applied to thee!"

"Hamdet ar-rîh. May the breeze of thy good fortune cease to blow towards thee!"

"Râjbt as-sa^cad. May success be far from thee!"

"Hejb as-sedd. Mayest thou be disappointed in thy most secret wishes!"

"Mowt an-nâr. Mayest thou go to hell after thy death!"

"Allâh jil'an zên hal-hdûm alli mâ hi 'al-âdmî mâr 'ala 'ûd aš-šğara. May Allâh curse this fine dress so that it will not garb a man but the stalk of a perennial!" This means that the person dressed in that suit is, for lack of success, to dry up as the stalk of a perennial dries up when there has been no rain for several years.

In making agreements the Rwejlî must be very careful. If he agrees with his comrade that they will help each other faithfully in both good and bad days, 'ala-z-zên w-aš-šên, he must not change the order of the words and say "'ala-š-šên w-az-zên," if he would not bring bad luck upon himself.

If a sorrel horse escapes from a raider and, dragging its rein, runs about in terror in front of the troop, the other riders try to drive it aside with their spears, shouting: "May Allâh forgive thee! Semheč (or Sebheč)." They know that it brings bad luck to them, yet they will not kill it as it deserves and therefore cry "Semheč," instead of "Seb^cēč, May He destroy thee!" A sorrel with a white spot on both the right and left hind leg is called mšaželbe because it throws its rider frequently. A mare who scratches with her forehoofs continually will ruin her rider as surely as a wife who cannot keep order, al-faras al-harrâta w-al-marat aš-ša^câta (or šar-râta). A camel with a curly spot on the root of her tail, aķer- bân, must not be taken on a raid or war expedition, for her rider would come back without booty.

Should the raiders on their march against the enemy meet a flock of goats or sheep, they halt until the animals pass. If they rode through the flock, they would cause their own defeat, for the enemy would scatter them in the same manner as they had scattered the goats or sheep. Whoever sights a solitary white gazelle, zebi, must not mount his mare for some time, for she would stumble under him, taḵanṭar or taḵanṭa, and he might hurt himself and thus meet with failure. A black dog, mballam, should be killed at sight, as the fiend is hidden in him and thus brings the Rwejlî bad luck. The flesh of the wild swine which roam especially in the Sirḥân depression or, according to the Rwala, in al-Wâdi, is enjoyed by the Bedouins, who know nothing of permitted or forbidden food; pork fat they use in healing both wounded men and animals, but they hate to meet a wild swine when starting on a raid or on any other undertaking, because it brings bad luck. When a solitary raven or a rhama vulture is seen flying above the raiders, they shoot at it, crying: "May Allâh destroy thee! Sab'ek (or Sab'eč)." They fear that if they did not kill the birds they would feast on the bodies of the fallen. If a raider's rein breaks, he should return at once. The commander of an expedition must also turn back if he seats himself on a saddle wet by rain. A broken rein means that the mare will run about freely after her rider has been thrown from the saddle, while a wet saddle reminds one of the commander's blood flowing down it. When a camel or a mare returns home stained with the blood of her slaughtered rider, she is generally sold to another clan or to the settlers, as the kin of the fallen man abhor riding an animal over which the blood of their kinsman has been spilled.

DREAMS AS OMENS

Much importance is attached by the Rwala to dreams. During sleep a man's soul moves among spiritual beings from whom it can learn all things hidden from men, whether of the past, of the present, or of the future. In most cases Allâh is appealed to by the Bedouins to send them dreams concerning their return from an important undertaking, ḥelm m'âwdî. Such dreams Allâh grants especially to the commanders of raiding troops. If the commander sees in his dream girls with loosened hair, banâten mufarra'ât, or fresh clear water, green grass, cooked meals, etc., he knows that they will return home with booty and in good health, where all that he has seen in his dream will await them. If the commander in his dream pitches a tent or is holding a panther, he thanks Allâh for allowing him to capture the enemy's tent or make captive a brave foe. If he dreams of having rested with his troop under a green tree and of plucking figs and raisins from it, his comrades shout joyfully: "Success, success!" A green tree signifies booty without danger; the figs, she-camels; and raisins are symbolical of sheep and goats.

The commander of a Ķa'âž'a raiding troop prayed for a dream concerning his return, helm m'âwdi. When lying down at night, he looked at the North Star, ġedi, fixedly, talakka'-l-ġedi, and then fell asleep. Whereupon Allâh's spokesman, al-munâbi, appeared, asking him: "Dost thou sleep or art thou awake, ent nâjem walla' žâ'ed." "Awake," answered the commander, springing up in fear, fazz. After a while he again fell asleep. Once more the spokesman appeared to him, putting the same question as before. When the commander answered in the same words, the spokesman said: "O booty! Thy booty is to be a cushion of a litter fastened with a ġedi rope, jâ bedd beddak min beddi w-min mehmelen beh ġedi." Then he disappeared. Waking up and unable to sleep any more, the commander now pondered over the meaning of this strange dream. When he told it to his comrades in the morning, they exclaimed: "Success, success! May Allâh will it! But we do not yet understand it! Hejr hejr in šâ-llâh mâ na'ref hâda." The commander was so terrified by his dream that he wanted to return, enčaf. Staying behind under some pretext, he turned into a deep gully and then started for home. However, after a while his camel suddenly turned around and galloped after the raiding troop, despite her rider's frantic efforts to stop her. Thus nothing was left to the commander but to go on with the raid. Before long he attacked the Mešâlih, drove out their defenders, and, entering the camp by force, found himself before the chief's tent where the 'Atfa litter was standing, in which in times of danger the prettiest girl used to be seated in order to encourage the defenders to fight bravely and hold their ground. A cushion, bedd, such as is laid under the litter when fastened on the camel's back, was lying beside it, and also a long rope, ġedi, made of palm pith hung down from it. Then at last did the commander understand the meaning of his dream. Laying the cushion, bedd, on the saddle of a strong she-camel, with the help of his comrades he placed the litter there, fastening it with some straps, making it tight with the ġedi rope, and rejoicing that he had taken from the Meşâliḥ clan their most precious possession, for once the 'Atfa litter is lost it must not be used again.

At one time the Rwala were camping near ar-Remte in al-Ḥamâd. Rains had been abundant, the pasture was good everywhere, truffles and mushrooms grew in plenty, the camels gave more milk than ever before, and the Bedouins, therefore, were living in affluence, or, as it is called, were having an exceptionally good rabi'. Then it was that their head chief, Hazzâ°, had a peculiar dream. He saw countless swarms of locusts coming from the inner desert, min šerž or min mšarrež, to his camp, crawling into the tents, upon the beds, and into the food supplies, all over the camels, and—a strange thing to relate—the locusts carried away all these things—tents, beds, supplies, and even the camels. Suddenly there was a flash of lightning among the camels, all the herds rose to their feet and galloped in the direction of the settled territory, w-al-bel kâmat tehâbat w-hağğat mṛarrab. Hazzâ° told the people of his dream, but nobody could explain it. At last, on the seventh day after the occurrence of the dream and when the herds had already grazed their fill on fresh grass in the morning, jowm šab'at at-ṭarš šubeḥ min al-ʿešeb, there appeared in the south Prince Eben Rašîd's raiding troops from the inner desert; these drove back the defenders of Hazzâ°'s camp, entered the camp, and began to load the tents with all that was in them on their own and on the captured camels. The herds together with their herds-men were surrounded. The herdsman of the white camels, marâtîr, who longed to save his herd, the pride of the whole tribe, finally thought of this stratagem. He saw that some pack camels were still carrying their pack saddles which had been left on them to conceal their galled backs from the sharp beaks of ravens and crows. These saddles, which are stuffed with straw and dry grass, he set on fire; this caused the terrified animals to shy, then to run away in mad fright, others following their example, and in a little while all the herds were rolling in a confused mass out of the desert towards the settled territory. The raiders, after losing a number of their own riding camels, ǧejš, had to retreat. Then at last did Hazzâc comprehend the meaning of the dream sent to him by Allâh.

One of the Rwala chiefs during a raid had a mâwdi dream. A bowl filled with rice was before him. Kneading a good-sized mouthful he put it in his mouth but had to spit it out quickly as it suddenly became intensely hot. He related his dream, hazzâh, to his companions, who said: "Success, success! We shall get booty, but it will be taken from us again; nâhod lena fowd w-jinfekk minna." And so it really happened. Attacking the herds of the Âl Zebeu, a division of the Şhûr tribe, they captured four and a half herds, kaṭî. Greatly pleased with their exploit, they rode toward home with them but met on the road a stronger raiding troop of the Hwêtât, allies of the Şhûr, by whom they were surrounded, sardowhom, in a deep gully and defeated, losing not only all their booty but a good half of their own camels besides.

A Bedouin who dreams that he has his head or beard shaved mourns, for this means that he will lose his dearest son or, at least, his mare and best camel.

While asleep the Rwejli is threatened with many dangers from the spirit world, although it is Allâh only who makes sound sleep possible; for a man will not fall asleep until his heart is willing, which means when he has banished thoughts of his various cares; mâ tnâm kowd kalbak nâjem. When a Rwejli falls asleep, his soul, nesem or rûh, leaves his body through the nostrils, visits his relatives and the old camping grounds, goes out on raids, plays all sorts of incredible pranks, aǧâjeb, eats and drinks, and the man will not awaken until his soul returns through the nostrils once more.

Yet the evil spirit also knows that the sleeper's soul roams about the world and so may make use of this opportunity to settle in the sleeping body. The Bedouin then wakes up as one possessed, maǧnûn.

A sleeping person, having no soul, according to the Rwala belief, is as good as dead and must therefore not be killed by an avenger; for spilt blood cannot be washed away by killing a sleeper, any more than it would be if one were to cut off the head of a dead murderer.

When yawning the Rwejli must also be very cautious, as the throat opens wide during this process and the demon then may let a drop of its urine, jebûleh, fall into the man's throat; the urine enters the stomach and causes various diseases.

The Bedouins should also watch the stars most carefully, because they have more properties unfavorable to man than favorable. Wounds will not heal when pierced by the rays of either the stars or the sun. Therefore the wounded person is laid, wrapped in all sorts of covers, in some corner of the tent so as to keep the rays away from him. Whenever people came to me with one of their wounded relatives, they first pitched a small tent behind the one occupied by me, closed it tightly, and then — not before — proceeded to uncover the wound. If a Rwejli loses his way at night, the stars are to blame, for he took his course from a certain star which changed its position imperceptibly, making the man take a wrong direction. Therefore he will not say "Tiht, I lost my way," but "Enğemt, I was led astray by the stars." When the stars begin to play with a Rwejli in this manner, even the North Star cannot be depended upon. The best thing to do in that case is to lie down and wait for sunrise. Then the Rwejli can take his bearings himself according to the landmarks and continue his journey.

CHAPTER XIV

SUPERNATURAL GIFTS

SEERS OR SORCERERS

Among the Bedouins there are persons, both male and female, who know and see hidden things and are able to heal the sick. The Rwala call them collectively ahl as-sirr or as-serriġje, and individually râ^c as-sirr, a lord (or owner) of secrets, seer, whereas they are known among themselves as aṣ-ḥâb al-islâm, owners of islâm, possessing the protection of God. They maintain that they inherit their supernatural qualities, their islâm, from their forefathers and that, therefore, the ability to heal the sick, discover what is hidden, foretell the future, etc., is confined to certain families. This the Rwala refuse to believe and often deride the seers openly. If, however, both the seer's father and grandfather were also known as seers or sorcerers, then the Bedouins may admit the claim to be justified; but they scoff the more at the men and women who, having joined the seer, begin after some time to claim that they too have been endowed by Allâh with the gifts of islâm.

The seer maintains that he communicates with an angel, malak, who announces to him the will of Allâh. Such an angel, an intermediary between Allâh and the sorcerer, is called munâbi or mnâbi, spokesman. As a rule the munâbi appears in the shape of a rider seated on a white mare. He tells the seer what to proclaim in Allâh's name, and woe to him should he say something different from what the angel told him, mâ jehċi kowd ḥaċi al-malak, for the angel would kill him on the spot. The munâbi simply says: "O So-and-So, this or that is going to happen; this or that thou wilt proclaim; this or that do!" Besides the angel the seer's ancestors also appear to him in the night between Thursday and Friday, instructing him how to behave. Yet neither the angel nor the ancestors ever appear without a thorough preparation on the part of the seer.

Every seer has his disciples, ṭallâbt as-sirr, who are taught all the external performances necessary to display if the munâbi is to appear. They come to the seer on Thursday night, accompany him on his visits to the sick and on raids, and join him whenever he commands them. One part of their duty is to carry little drums and other musical instruments, dfûf w-šiš or dirbâš. If the sorcerer wants to call the spokesman-angel to him, he beckons to the disciples to play, while he himself squats with his head bent down. After a while he begins to move, stands up, stretches out his hands, jumps about, contorts his body, and puts his hands, feet, and even his head close to the fire, clapping his hands. The Bedouins say of this that he is just playing, jel'ab, but his disciples call it yielding to the influence of the islâm, ecstasy. When his enthusiasm reaches its climax, either Allâh's spokesman or some of the seer's ancestors appear on the scene. After the climax has subsided, the seer, greatly exhausted, complains that he can do nothing. The Bedouins, however, who cannot be made to believe that this ecstasy is a mere preparation for the angel's appearance, deride the sorcerer, imitate his gestures, and call him one possessed and a juggler. Especially those of the new sorcerers whose ancestors were not known as seers are the target of their ridicule when trying to establish themselves. In this the Rwala are assisted by the acknowledged seers themselves, even by the new seer's temporary master. The new sorcerer is called mařši, a fool; masdûf, bereft of reason; habel, feeble-minded; wâše'eh kej-farân, full of unbelief; mařfûh, drunk; ma'rûz, one possessed, etc. Should he declare something as the will of Allâh, all will laugh at him, for he could not learn anything from his ancestors who were not seers themselves, and the speaking angel does not know him. Yet even if, after all, he achieves something extraordinary, they say he was helped by some spirit, ğânn, and with such the sorcerers never associate. However, by perseverance, patience, and courage a sorcerer-to-be in a few years will gain recognition not only from the Bedouins but from the hereditary sorcerers as well. The advance of such a sorcerer's son in his father's calling is, as a matter of course, much easier and speedier.

In defense of their honor the seers sometimes resort to curses. They are unable by their own strength to ruin the scoffers, but their ancestors and the spokesman-angel with whom they communicate will ask Allâh to punish those who dare to persecute them. These will die prematurely, their sons will be slain, their herds perish. The chief, Şaḡr eben Meşreb, a famous leader of countless raids, was greatly incensed against both the sorcerers and their disciples because of their incessant greed and was once heard to say: "Oh, may Allâh rid me of you all! If you have enough, you disturb everybody's rest by your music and your foolery; if you are hungry, there is no being rid of you, you beggars; low šeba'tu aw-dejtu w-low ġi'tu arzejtu." On hearing this the insulted sorcerers called a meeting and one of them, Mnâḥi eben Dabbâr, cursed Şaḡr in the name of all present. A few days later the chief was dead.

Of the sorcerer's curse the Bedouins stand in much fear. If anybody hears that a seer has cursed him, he makes haste to find the seer and, falling on his face before the powerful man, crosses his hands behind his back as if fettered and says: "I ask the protection of thine ancestor and am willing to bring a lawful sacrifice as a gift to him, ana dâḥel 'ala ġeddekom w-ana ḥaṭṭ debîḥat ġeddekom mowhebeha mowhebe šara'ijje." The sorcerer answers: "Agreed, it has arrived; tâmma w-jâmma." The animal selected for the sacrifice is killed by the sorcerer at the edge of the tent, with its head turned south, while the sorcerer says: "O Allâh, this sacrifice is destined for my ancestor." Then he besmears with the blood of the sacrificed animal the center pole of the tent and the strip which strengthens its roof, ṭariżet al-bejt; the meat he and his disciples eat, and the accursed is relieved.

At the time when this was written (1909) the following persons were recognized as true seers: men: Mnâḥi eben Dabbâr, Rannâm eben Ġel'ûd, Şajjâḥ eben Ġlejdân, Za'al eben 'Awwâd; women: 'Eşba bint Hmezi, Baṭṭa bint 'Awwâd, and Dlejjil bint Mâzi.

A sorcerer can give information whether and for how long it is going to rain; whether a wife will bear a boy or a girl; whether the young produced by the mare or camel will be a male or a female; whether a raid will succeed, etc.

War expeditions on a large scale are always accompanied by a sorcerer who instructs the commander in anything he may undertake. The latter asks the sorcerer's advice only on occasions when he is at a loss what to do. Then the seer stimulates himself with music and works himself into an ecstasy, which helps him hear the angel speak and proclaim the will of Allâh.

Very often a sorcerer is summoned to the bedside of a person who is seriously ill. He comes either with all or a few of his disciples and settles down in the tent as a regular guest. During the day, but especially in the evening, he orders his disciples to play, while he squats by the fire with his head wrapped up and his face in his hands, listening to the music. After a while he begins to contort the upper part of his body, jumps up, seizes a small drum, beats it wildly, circles around the fire, and, dancing around the patient, raps him with the drum on the head and legs; then, throwing the drum aside, he lies above the patient, supporting himself by the feet and hands, breathes into his mouth and nostrils, kneels down, rubs the patient on the breast, stomach, and back, jumps up, dances around, and, then, lying on him again, mumbles unintelligible words. Sometimes he cures the sick person by this process; sometimes the patient dies.

Şulhân's little son, Feğ̃er, six years old, fell ill. Greatly troubled, the father entreated a sorcerer to cure his child. The seer soon appeared with his wife, and the first thing they did was to lay the boy's head south and his feet north. The woman began to play, while the sorcerer bent down to the fire, waiting for the islâm to take hold of him. Then he jumped up, danced, lay on the boy, covering him with his body, breathed on his cheeks, and made curious grimaces, la'ab 'alejh, the woman beating a little drum all this time and dancing around them. The boy recovered.

A certain woman was paralyzed for many years and unable to stand on her feet. Finally Mnâhi eben Dabbâr was brought to her and played over her, la'ab, for three evenings. On the third evening the sick woman suddenly jumped up and began to dance with him, and was well ever after.

Feğ̃er eben Tajjeb of the Mwâhîb clan suffered from gout and was unable to walk, mharwal. On being sent for, the sorcerer stayed with him seven days, played over him every evening, daubed him with his spittle, spat on him — and Feğ̃er became well.

The sorcerers are accustomed to sing:

Hala b'ali az-zêni	Welcome, 'Ali, thou benefactor,
jâ šejh al-ğeddêni	Chief of my ancestors both;
w-'ali jâ-bu hsêni.	'Ali, thou father of Hsên.

Jâ bâz jâ ġeddi O 'Falcon! O ancestor mine!
hala' b'ezzaddîn Welcome to us, O 'Ezzaddîn!
jâ šejh al-jemîn. Thou chief powerful.

Hala' bzên an-nijje Welcome to us, thou who well meanest
jâ ra' at-tawijje And knowest what is hidden.

It is even said of the sorceresses that they can disappear from the tent unobserved.

SOOTHSAYERS

There are people living among the Bedouins, both men and women, who in some inexplicable way are able to tell of hidden things, whether of the past, present, or future. One of their ways is to prophesy from the position of twenty-three objects cast about promiscuously. These objects are: seven round white pebbles, marwât; one small piece of ambergris; one fragment of broken glass, razâra; one small piece of a burned brick, huzrime; one fragment of a broken glass arm-let, kuşmat ma'zad; five small white sea shells, hams wad'ât; one small piece of sea shell, misarra; four date stones, fşu-mât; one small piece of a glass ring such as is worn by mares on their necks, kuşmat harşat faras; and one smooth silver ring, halakat hâtem fuzza. The soothsayer, who keeps all these twenty-three objects in a leather pouch, shakes them out on the palm of his hand, throws them down on the carpet, and then begins to prophesy from their relative positions.

Blejhân related to me: "My little brother, Ġi'ân, went on a raid and did not return for a long time. My heart was sick with longing for him, w-ḡalbi waġ'ân 'alejh. So I went to a Hâzmijje (woman of the Hawâzem tribe) soothsayer, nahart al-ḡattâta alli 'endana min al-ḡawâzem, and gave her a little tobacco, 'atajtah šwajje titen. She said:

'What brings thee here, O youth? wêš ġâjebk jâ walad. Dost thou need something? lak raraz.'

'I seek a lost camel and want thee to give me the sign, ana medheb w-abîč tezrobi li bel-fâl.' Taking out from a bag, mezwe, the pouch with those twenty-three things, she shook them out on her right palm, which she first lifted and then lowered again, threw them, taššatha, broadcast on the carpet, glanced over them, and then exclaimed:

'O youth, thou seekest not a she-camel, ent mâ mẓâje'en mġâhba. Thou art troubled about a raider; it is for him thy heart is aching. But be it known to thee that today his heart is calmer than thine, kalbeh al-jowm afẓa' min kalbk. He will return to thee merry and unwounded, jeġi farġân mâ hw karġân.'

'If he returns thus thou shalt get a dress or silk kerchief, en ċân ġâ' farġânen leċ towb willa' makrûne,' said I and left, somewhat relieved. And, true enough, five days after this Ġirân came back well and bringing four captured she-camels. Then I gave the soothsayer that silk kerchief."

Ġowfân eben Sûdân of the Kmuṣa lost a camel, ẓajja'. He looked for her in the whole neighborhood without result, and, although half of his neighbors knew of his trouble, ruma-l-ḥabar benuṣṣ an-nâs, no one came to him with news of the lost animal. After ten days he finally went to a soothsayer, ẓarrâbt al-fâl, Boṣra bint 'Orejċ by name, of the Ḥa-wâzem tribe, and said to her:

"I wish to go on a raid. What sign wilt thou give me?" The woman raised her hand with the twenty-three objects, lowered it again, threw them broadcast, and after observing them said:

"Why art thou talking of a raid? Thou hast lost a camel; that is what thou desirest to know — nothing of a raid. Be cheered with glad tidings. I see thy camel lying behind a stranger in the west." This gave Ġowfân a clue. He began to inquire what sort of a stranger camped in the western part of the large camp, and found that on that very day a tent had been pitched at the western end by an unknown Rwejli. Going there he began to search about the tent and at last saw in a neighboring gully his camel, fettered. The soothsayer received a meġġidijje (90 cents) for the welcome news, bšâra.

A herdsman drove a flock of sheep to water. He drove them back again at sunset, râbat 'alejha-š-šams, and then let them graze as they pleased. Sitting down not far off, he soon fell asleep from exhaustion, nâm 'anha. When he woke up in the morning, his flock was gone. He looked all around, shouted for them, but all in vain. Hastening, then, to the owner of the flock, ġâ' haleh, he reported what had happened. The owner called all his kin, haleh, together and rode with them on horseback through the whole neighborhood, searching for the animals all day, but without avail, ‘aǧaz. Returning and saddling their camels in the evening, they began a new search, from which they did not return for fifteen days, hanṣṭa’aš waǧbe (sic), again without finding a single trace of the flock. Then the owner decided to visit a soothsayer. Scattering her twenty-three objects on the ground before him, she said: "Hurry after thy flock with the wind, with the wind! Thou wilt find one half, thou wilt find the other half. Thou wilt find one after another." When the owner asked what was meant by these words, the woman put him off with the remark that she did not know. Returning to his tent, he related to his people what the soothsayer had told him. The air was perfectly quiet at that time, but suddenly a strong wind began to blow from the south-southwest, which gave one of the relatives an idea. "Allāh sends us a leader," said he, "let us follow him." And exactly at noon they set off north-northeast. About the middle of the afternoon, ‘aṣejr, they found a piece of the skin of the first sheep, which by a mark on its head the owner recognized as belonging to his flock. Before sunset they found the skin of a second and then of a third sheep with the same mark. All three sheep had been torn to pieces by wolves. Greatly fatigued with their long ride, they lay down to sleep. Continuing their search next morning, they found one dead sheep after another until they reached the pasturing ground of the Rfede kin, where they learned that, a few days before, one of their members named Ḥsejni had found seventy-five sheep wandering aimlessly in the vicinity. This was exactly the half of the lost flock, the other half having perished in the meantime.

SUPERNATURAL POWERS OF ŠLEJB WOMEN

The Rwala also believe that many women of the Šlejb tribe can exercise a good or bad influence. They are said to be able not only to awaken love, but also to smother it; to strengthen and also to destroy the faculty of begetting; to increase as well as to hinder the growth of children; to lengthen and shorten life, etc. No one knows if they have direct connections with evil spirits, but the people are inclined to believe so. Such women are called witches, saḥḥâra, although none of them may be directly so called. Should that be proved of any Šlubijje, the Rwala would certainly kill her.

About four years before my stay with the Rwala, a young Rwala chief fell in love with a beautiful young girl. The chief was already married and father of two boys, whom his healthy young wife had borne to him. Driven by jealousy, she went to a witch, sahhâra, complained of her husband, and begged the witch to prevent his taking a second wife but not to harm him. The witch asked her to bring a piece of the wool of a sheep killed on the day of her husband's new wedding and dip it into the blood of the sheep. At that time the Rwala were camping east of Damascus, where they could buy a sheep for their supper. The young wife promised to do as she was asked. When the sheep was killed before the chief's tent a little after noon, she tore out a bit of wool as if by accident, dipped it into the blood, and gave it to the Şlubijje. The witch pressed the wool with both her hands, mumbled strange words, and then returned it to the wife with instructions to take good care of it, to press it thoroughly, temûsah, every Friday night, and to continue doing so until the new wife was divorced by her husband. Cheered by this advice, the young wife gave a suitable reward to the Şlubijje, who was camping with some families of her kin on the outskirts of the Rwala encampment, and returned to her tent. At the side of this a small tent was already being put up, shut in from all sides, into which the young chief meant to bring his new bride after the wedding ceremony. This took place in the evening, the young couple entering the tent immediately afterwards. After midnight the chief returned to the big tent. All the next week his mien was dark, and the new wife did not show herself at all. After two weeks he gave her a severe beating and before the month was out divorced her because she scoffed at him in public and said that he was incapable of having intercourse with a woman; and as matter of fact she returned to her parents a virgin. The witch had caused the man to become impotent at the very moment when he approached the second woman, but reinvigorated him on his return to his first wife.

THE EVIL EYE

The evil eye is universally feared among the Rwala. Every Rwejli knows that there are persons of either sex who can cast a spell over him, yet he is never able to say who it was that has thus harmed him. A person having the evil eye is called madri, and the person he bewitches ma'jûn. A man who lacks both upper eyeteeth or one who has blue eyes is undoubtedly able to bewitch and is therefore carefully avoided by all his acquaintances. If a traveler is seen approaching his tent, he hears from all the neighboring tents: "Avoid the bewitcher's tent! Go to the right, to the right! Lâ temarr 'ala bejt al-madri jemînak jemînak."

A bewitched person feels at once great weakness, his eyes become dim, and he is subject to fainting fits. Above the heart of a bewitched child a blue spot soon appears, as if caused by a hard blow. A bewitched animal gets a tumor on the heart the size of a fist, and clotted blood is found under it when killed. Fumigation is the usual cure in such cases. If the bewitcher is known, two or three threads are torn from the hem of his garment and laid on red-hot coals, and the stricken person is fumigated with the smoke from them. The head of a bewitched animal is held over a dish of red-hot coals and smoldering šîh plants in such a way that the smoke must enter its nostrils. Frequently the bewitched has much difficulty in urinating. To help him, the Bedouins shoot a porcupine, from which they extract the gall bladder and, pressing out its contents into a little water, jemûşûn mrejreh bel-moje, they drip it into the nostrils of the sick person. Bewitched people and even animals are the most easily bitten by poisonous snakes.

Whoever is possessed of the evil eye also has the power to restore the bewitched to his former health. In the Ras-sâlin clan there lived at the time when these studies were made a fellow named Na'ûs eben 'Ajde to whose evil eye much misfortune was attributed. Once he bewitched, zarab, a young girl pretty both in face and figure, hsejjene min židdâmah w-min warâha. It happened while she was fetching water; when she returned to her tent, she began to stagger and finally fainted. On recovering she was unable to stand on her feet. When asked by her frightened mother the cause of her condition, the girl only said: "Na'ûs looked at me fixedly; he bewitched me," and fainted again, ertamat min ġedîd. With much lamentation the mother then reported to the father what the daughter had just told her, and he, calling his sons and relatives to his aid, ran to Na'ûs' tent, threatening him with death if he did not take back instantly the look which had injured his daughter. Na'ûs swore by all the powers that he had not bewitched any one on that day, but was seized by the enraged brothers of the girl and dragged to her bed where she was still lying unconscious. Na^us took his spittle, rîžeh, in his three fingers, besmeared the girl's throat and neck with it, and then walked round her seven times, after which the girl awoke as healthy as before. This sudden recovery confirmed all the women there in the belief that Na^us' eye could bewitch, and they took counsel together as to how they could destroy this injurious power of their neighbor. Knowing or taking for granted that the eating of human excrement was the best remedy in this particular case, they appointed a woman whose tent adjoined that of Na^us to apply it to him. So she watched him till he went to fulfill the needs of nature, jetahalla' bel-hala', took up some of his excrement, neğaseh, on a stalk, mixed it with flour, from which she then baked a thin loaf of bread, dipped it into melted butter, and inviting Na^us to dinner gave it to him to eat. Na^us, who was a frequent guest in his neighbor's tent, ate the bread and butter, praising its taste. From that time on no one complained of having been bewitched by him. His uncanny faculty had left him forever.

With some people the power of the evil eye is so strong that it can even bring down a bird from the air. Thus a troop of the Rwala were once riding through the desert. In one place they scared two birds called habâri, which flew up, then alighted, and rising again flew some distance in the direction followed by the riders. Finally Šabr âl Murabbat exclaimed: "Faith, we shall roast one of the birds; wa' halôla jâ hada hal-habâri naštwiha." At the same moment one bird fell down to the ground as if struck by a bullet.

For protection against the evil eye small sea shells with red, white, and green spots, called harazt an-nafs, are recommended, also two marbles, nekžên. Both the shells and marbles can be bought from wandering merchants. If there are none in the neighborhood, the Bedouin selects seven pebbles, samḥ heşwât, pares off a splinter from the left (north) side pole of the tent, takes a grain of salt, towr melḥ, and a small piece of alum, and sews all in a piece of new black cloth, hebbe. Still more effective is a fragment of a turtle shell, 'azm al-leğa', fastened to a peg made of almond wood. Of the nekžên balls or marbles there must be always two, a black and a white one. The latter gives protection in the daytime, the former at night. Both are wrapped in pieces of soft skin, ṣiḥtjâne. Any of these preventives are tied to the head cord, to the kerchief lappet, or to the belt. Little children carry them fastened to their hair on the forehead, to their caps, or hang them from their necks. The mares, which also must be protected against the evil eye, have them twisted into their forelocks or manes, or hung about their necks, while the camels wear the charms in the tuft of hair growing on their humps.

CHAPTER XV

SPIRITS AND VOWS

The Rwala believe that besides this visible world there is also an invisible, or spiritual, world. The spiritual world is again divided into a celestial and an earthly world. The inhabitants of the celestial world are called malak (pl., malâjika), those of the spiritual earthly world ġânn (pl., ġinn). Both the celestial and earthly spirits were created by Allâh. They possess bodies similar to human bodies but invisible; they can pass through any wall and can cover in a short while a distance which even a good rider would travel in barely a month. The spirits hear, speak, eat, drink, and ride like any Bedouin but feel no pain, are never sick, and cannot die.

The celestial spirits do not leave heaven except when sent by Allâh to men. A malak announcing Allâh's will to the Bedouin is called munâbi, spokesman. He does so only during a dream, whether natural or artificial, the latter occurring when a waking person falls into ecstasy, islâm, under the influence of music or dancing.

THE ĠINN

To the earthly spirits, ġinn, harâfîl, or ġenûn, heaven is not accessible. They are of both sexes and have big eyes extending to the corners of their mouths. The food they prefer is raw meat, nej, and fresh blood is their favorite drink. The raw meat they get from fallen animals, the blood is left for them by the Bedouins every time an animal is killed. The ġinn are divided into tribes, clans, and families like the Bedouins, but in reality are settlers, ḥazar. They live in high mountains, inaccessible ravines, and old ruins. They never have tents. Their dens are situated underground in rock crevices, caverns, and vaults of deserted buildings. The farther such a ravine or ruin is from the water, the better it is liked by the spirits, who know that they will not be disturbed there. They occupy themselves in raising goats and sheep, which their herdsmen pasture in regions so rocky and stony that the goats and sheep belonging to human beings would die of hunger there. Camels and horses are not raised by them.

Woe to the Bedouin who falls asleep in a region inhabited by the spirits! For if a ġânnijje observes him, she crawls into his body either through his nostrils, forefinger, or big toe, and, as soon as she gets hold of him, she makes him jump up and run into the desert, whence he can be brought back to his tent only by force. A man so possessed is known as maḥšûš or muharfal. To cure him, a seer, râ' as-sirr, is called in, who, after working himself into an ecstasy, commands the female spirit to come out: "Crawl out, crawl out! eṭla'î eṭla'î," her answer being: "I will not, I will not crawl out, mâ-ṭla'." Then the sorcerer orders his disciples to play louder and faster, he himself circling and dancing round the possessed with increasing vigor, finally lies down upon him and again shouts: "Crawl out and away with thee to the place whence thou camest! eṭla'î ma' makâneč min alli ġîti minneh." It takes some time for a female spirit to be driven out, because a woman is headstrong and will not obey.

A Ķmâši spent a night in some ruins west of the al-'Azîb valley and perceived a ġânnijje there, who instantly entered his body. He then ran into the neighboring hills and would not return home when found by his relatives, but threw himself on the ground, struck out at them, and frothed at the mouth. This showed him to be possessed, maḥšûš. A sorcerer was sent for. He played over him, la'ab, for several days, but the ġânnijje tormented him still more. Then they began to beat him so that blood began to trickle from almost every limb of his body. The beating of a man possessed is permitted, for the blows are not meant for him but for the female spirit, and it is she who feels the pain, not the man. It is observed that the ġânnijje shakes her victim less violently after the beating, and they then beat him only at intervals. On the twenty-fourth day the ġânnijje finally left the bruised body for good, the prolonged beating having proved too much for her. The man, of course, recovered immediately afterwards.

The Bedouin does not like to sleep long, as many dangers lurk about him during sleep, not only from men but also from the earthly spirits, and, moreover, sleep reminds him of death. A Bedouin saying is: "He that sleeps one third of the night has done as well as he that sleeps all night, and he that sleeps the whole night will wake up an idiot; min nâm tîlt al-lejl

nâmha killaha w-min nâm kill al-lejl hadâk habîl." Sleep during the hot midday, kaĵĵalna, or at sunrise, şaffarna, is preferred to the night sleep. This is also the time when the animals are allowed to rest.

Women and girls are in constant danger from the male spirits. If a girl, especially a pretty one, falls asleep in a locality inhabited by the spirits, she is approached by a male spirit, who has sexual intercourse with her yet without violating her virginity. Should he succeed in that only once, the girl cannot resist him ever afterwards. He compels her to leave her tent at night and to come to a place selected by him. Such a woman or girl must not marry; should she do so voluntarily the spirit would torment her still more, and if she is compelled to marry the spirit would attack her husband.

Me'zel eben 'Eĵla' of the Mwâhib married a pretty widow, a relative of his, who was dominated by a ġânn and was therefore unwilling. When on the wedding night he approached her, the ġânn seized him by the throat, throttled him, and then threw him out of the tent, threatening him with death should he dare to approach her again. Such a husband expelled by a spirit is called menĥi. But a spirit can never beget children by a woman, as spirits never have any children at all.

The wells of the watering place of Lîne are very deep, hewn in the rock spirally, and have smooth walls. According to a Bedouin tale, a chief's pretty daughter was often molested at night by a ġânn. When she complained to her father he lay in wait for the spirit and finally caught him on the night of as-sarra, or of the dark of the moon. The chief tied the ġânn both hands and feet, seated him on the rocky plain of Lîne, and commanded him to keep on circling around until his posteriors should dig a well with spring water in the rock. The ġânn began to do as he was bidden, his back grinding out the rock and his head pressing up the sand, which was changed by his sweat into a thin dough. Yet no sooner had he deepened one well that the chief made him dig a second, a third, and so on, urging him on with the words: "Soften the rock, soften the rock, and change it into dough! lîni lîneh w-eṛdih 'aġîne."

Not long ago some travelers, rab' at-trûš, rode by the impassable crags of al-'Afâĵef in the deep depression of al-Ķa'ara. Below a hillside there a hedgehog, kunfud, of extraordinary size was warming himself in the rays of the sun.

Dismounting, one of the travelers caught the animal and put it into his empty saddle bag, intending to kill and roast it at their next halting place, as the hedgehog's flesh is regarded as having a very savory taste. But before long they heard a female voice crying: "O Maṣṣûr, O Maṣṣûr, where art thou?" Turning around they saw an elderly woman running after them, repeating the call. Finally the hedgehog's voice was heard out of the bag: "Maṣṣûr lies curled up in a small bag, al-maṣṣûr bwast al-ḥurġ maṣrûr." This frightened the riders so much that the man with the bag threw the hedgehog on the ground, and the animal, instantly changing into a man, ran towards the woman.

One Ġirân walad Dhejjel found near al-'Afâjef a solitary sheep. Thinking that it had gone astray from some flock in the neighborhood, he tried to catch and bring it to its owner. A lost animal of this kind is called ḥwâr, and its finder receives a reward for returning it. But our sheep was not a ḥwâr at all but a sheep from a ġânn flock, for it ran into a steep crag where there was not the smallest opening and disappeared in a second.

Old ruins also are favorite hiding places of the ġinn. There they either live in the shape of long snakes or else they enter snakes' bodies, maskûn, and dwell there permanently. Therefore whoever kills a snake among old ruins makes the spirits his enemies. But should he roast and eat such a snake, he would bring the spirit into his own body and become possessed. On the other hand, in the wide, level desert where the spirits never live, any long snake can be killed and eaten with impunity.

In the great church in the ruins of ar-Reṣâfa there lives — according to the Rwala — a long, black snake, dâbb, with the head of a goat and a white spot on its forehead. The oldest Bedouins say that it is very old and relate that the same serpent had been known to their forefathers. It fears nobody, probably knowing with what fear it is regarded by the Bedouin population of the whole neighborhood.

Near the well of Wâkṣa, south of the oasis of Tejma, a treasure is said to be guarded by a ġânn in the shape of a dâbb snake.

In the castle of al-Hafâġi, formerly owned by the Âl Ahejzer or Eben Ahejzer kin, the Rwala claim once to have seen a long snake or dragon with a human head, bird's feet, and lion's back, which did not stir even when they came close to

it. This calmness so terrified the curious Bedouins that they instantly took to their heels.

In the še'ib of al-Ča'či which opens into the valley of al-Člâbât stands a large boulder facing eastwards and entirely covered with curious marks. This boulder is a place of pilgrimage for the ġinn, who gather there in the end of May to kill their sacrificial animals. They were seen performing these rites by the Škûr clan subject to the chief Eben Haddâl.

At aš-Šubejče there are a few large black boulders said to be inhabited by ġinn. Close to them yawns the opening of an ancient well from which they water their herds.

In the neighborhood of Ġâwa and Ġennâwa lie many boulders shaped like cows. A long time ago the ġinn kept a herd of cows there, which pastured on grass grown on firm soil as well as on the rimt and raza thriving only in sand. Allâh, however, forbade them to raise cows and transformed the cows into boulders. Ġâwa w-ġennâwa behen haġarât lown al-baġarât bân ad-dimt w-ar-rimt w-al-raza.

Near the ridge of Lâha the ġinn have an underground village; also near Bâjer and al-Mwejsen.

In the wide level desert delightful music may often be heard and pretty girls seen coaxing the traveler to join them. But woe to him who succumbs! The girls will tickle him to death, suck out his blood, and devour his flesh. As my companion, Blejhân, related: "Once I went with three of my comrades on a marauding trip, our goal being the pastures of the Sirhân tribe at the southern foot of the Hawrân. When already near our destination we were surprised in a deep gully by a strong troop of our enemies of the Šhûr tribe and were scattered in several directions. I luckily got out of the volcanic rocks into the level Ĥamâd desert, where I rested at night, squatting by my camel and filling my short pipe, sebîl. Some days before, it had broken in the middle and I had repaired it by replacing the stem with a piece of bone and tying it to the bowl with a strip of leather. A pipe thus mended is called bûz or bazbûzt as-sebîl. Having filled it with tobacco, I wrapped my head and the pipe in my cloak, so that the sparks flying from it and the smoke could not be seen from a distance; tarâmaṭṭ bel-aba 'an bazbûzt as-sebîl lâ tenšâf. Suddenly I heard a sound as if somebody were running in front of me. Raising the cloak a little, I looked round but saw nothing and thought it might have been a wild beast, a wolf perhaps. Some time after this, ʿoḵob mišwâr, I heard singing and the beating of a drum. This time I looked up with more attention — and there, right before me, shadows of dancing girls were flitting. And yet there was no camp near. The girls went within a stone's throw of me, beckoned to me, smiled, and tried in various ways to draw me towards them. But I pressed my face close to the ground and hugged it as tight as I could with my whole body so as to see and hear nothing. Then I fell asleep."

A Rwejli was riding at night through the al-Ḥadîṭa ruins in the Sirhân depression. Suddenly he heard the voices of women rejoicing, zarârît, and calling: "Welcome to thee! welcome to thee! jâ hala bak jâ hala." A little while afterwards he was surrounded by pretty girls who asked him to dance with them, but when our Rwejli pronounced, samma, the word Allâh, the girls suddenly vanished.

At another time a small troop of migrating Rwala arrived late in the evening at al-Ḥadîṭa. As there was good pasture in the neighborhood they pitched their tents and, being very fatigued by their long march, lay down to sleep, from which they did not awake till the sun was up. But their surprise may be imagined when on rising they found their tents struck, rolled together, and ready to be loaded on the camels. They loaded them with all the speed possible and at once rode from a place evidently inhabited by malevolent ġinn.

In every tree and bush of the sidr and ʿawseġ variety there lives a spirit, and for this reason the wood of these thorny trees and bushes must not be used for fuel. Where the sidr trees grow in a cluster, the ġinn have their gardens, as for instance at al-Obejjeż, Sejdarân, and al-ʿÂmeż.

Some of the earthly spirits are given to harming men and take on various shapes for that purpose. They have various names. Of these most dreaded by the Bedouins is a female spirit called sarʿat aš-šîbe. In appearance she is a tall thin woman wearing a dress made of leather. This spirit wanders about the desert from camp to camp, looking for children. If she hears a child crying, she crawls near, gropes about for it with her hands till she finds it, then catches it, and runs with it to her own kin. There the child is torn partly open, its blood sucked by all the spirits present, and its flesh devoured raw. Therefore mothers try to frighten their crying child with the warning: "Keep quiet or as-sarʿa will come for thee!" To protect a child from the spirits the Rwala women hang the cradle, rûğâha, which is made of a quilted cover and has a rope tied to its four corners, high up to the tent poles. If, then, as-sar'a comes into the tent, she looks for the child on the beds made on the floor and takes no notice of the cradle hanging from above.

Another evil spirit appears in the shape of a big greyhound bitch, seleka, with an enormous jaw and a breastbone, zowr, reaching to the ground. This spirit, known as sa'aluwwa, is the only spirit which appears in the wide level desert and lives in dens such as are used by the hyenas. A traveler, turki, a member of the Mseke kin which belongs to the 'Ebede division, once met what he thought to be a seleka in the desert. He made it come to him, believing that it might lead him to the camp it had left. But instead of being a seleka, it proved to be a sa'aluwwa who jumped at him, tore flesh from his breast and face, sucked his blood, and did not leave him till he was half dead. When finally found by other travelers, all he could do was to tell what had happened to him before departing this life, râh.

A kurta or kârûz is a spirit who destroys newly born boys but does his work unobserved. If a Rwejli is married to a woman who has borne him several boys all of whom have died after a short time, and if the same thing happens also with the second wife, then he knows for certain that it is a kurta who has done him this wrong. To appease the spirit he procures a cock with green feathers on its neck and waits until his wife comes to childbed again. When her time is near, with the live cock he draws in his tent seven circles, one within the other, kills the cock in the seventh in the center, buries it there, and lays his wife over that spot. She will then bear without any pain, and her son will not die, because the kurta has been given what belonged to it, hak al-kârûz.

REVERENCE FOR GRAVES RARE AMONG BEDOUINS

The Bedouins know of no communion with the saints. In the whole inner desert there is not a single holy grave or shrine erected in honor of a saint. In fact they have no saints whatever. When they make their short sojourns in the settled territory, where by every village the dome of a shrine rises above the real or imaginary grave of some man or woman whom public opinion considers to be a saint, they never pay attention to these domes. In their opinion the latter commemorate the saints of the settlers and breeders of goats and sheep, rîc or šwâja, not of the Bedouins. They say: "They are not of our kin, ahl, not of us, ġemâ'atna, therefore we do not honor them or go on pilgrimage to them, henna alli mâ hw minna mâ nezûreh."

Worship of the saints has never been known among the Rwala and presumably never will be. The hereafter does not trouble the Bedouins much, and their idea of it is only hazy; nor have they any permanent burying places, meġenne, but bury their dead wherever death overtakes them. They therefore do not know and never visit individual graves. This is often due to the great distance between their pastures; to some of their camping grounds they return only after many years — so why should they care for a grave? They do not know even where the graves of their older princes or head chiefs are. I have heard from many Rwala, even from members of the reigning kin, that Nâjef eben Ša'lân, one of their ancestors, lies buried between the rain pools of Haġm and al-Bark in al-Ĥamâd and that a camel is sacrificed by his descendants whenever they come there, as they do once in many years. Yet while we camped in that place in 1914 and took our drinking water from both the pools, not a single member of the reigning house thought for a moment of sacrificing the camel on Nâjef's grave. Hazzâc, Prince an-Nûri's father, died at al-Ġubejlilje in the Ĥawrân and was buried there, but his grave has never been visited by an-Nûri, although he often marches past the place.

Slejmân eben Meršed, one of the ancestors of the reigning family of the Sba'a tribe, died and was buried at Dejr az-Zôr on the right bank of the Euphrates. The merchants of that town, with whom he was always on friendly terms, had a small dome erected over his grave. It is said that whenever the members of his kin come there they sacrifice a camel by the dome, saying: "We think of thee, Slejmân; Oh, mayst thou have pity on us and our parents!" after which they besmear the tombstone with the blood of the sacrificed animal, jeħaṭ-ṭetûn našîbeh. But Blejhân, a subject of Eben Meršed, stated that the camels are killed there by merchants from Dejr az-Zôr and not by any Bedouins. Btejjen eben Midbaṛ eben Meršed was buried at the mouth of the valley of al-Arkaṭ. His grave is marked with a few tall, flat stones placed upright, naṣâjeb.

All the raiders and robbers of the northern 'Aneze honor the grave of Turki eben Mhejd, head chief of the Fed'ân tribe. Turki undertook countless raids and returned from them all unhurt and with much booty. Once in the al-kêz season (mid-summer) he rode against the Šammar, the subjects of Eben Rašîd, who were camping on the southeast border of the Nefûd. The water supply of the raiders being exhausted, they wished to fill their bags and also to water their camels from the al-Ḥazra' wells. Their scouts, 'ujûn, however, sent out in advance to examine the country and to find the best and safest watering places and pastures, came back with the news that the neighborhood of al-Ḥazra was full of Šammar camps in such numbers that Turki's troop would be unable to cope with them. Turki wished, then, to circumvent al-Ḥazra and attack one of the smaller camps south of it, but the thirst tormenting both the men and animals was already becoming insufferable. It was in vain that Turki asked his comrades to be patient, in vain that he promised that they would find water very soon; the tortures of thirst increased with every mention of water, and they all well knew that there was no well anywhere near. When the distress was at its height Turki prayed to Allâh to send them rain. His wish was granted. Allâh sent from the northwest a dark cloud which he caused to halt above their heads and pour forth all its water. The rain that now fell on Turki and his troop was so abundant that they could fill their water bags from several rain pools, quench their thirst, and water their camels. Thus strengthened in their belief that Allâh was on their side, they fell upon the Šammar herds and returned home with rich booty. From that time Turki was called The Little Son of his Lord, wlejd rabbeh, because Allâh, moved by the supplication of such a little son, had brought the rain cloud to their rescue in the season of al-kêz, during which it never rains in the desert.

In the time of abundance, rabî, of 1837 Turki had his camp at the junction of the š'îb of al-Herî with the aṣ-Šwâb valley. There he was attacked by the Rwala, defeated, killed, and buried beside his tent. The Fed'ân raised a tall stone above his grave and carved it with the emblems of all their clans and kins. All raiders, when passing by, stop at the grave and form a circle round it, whereupon the commander speaks as follows: "O thou who hast protected our herds called 'Alja! By the success which Allâh and thou grant! If Allâh will lead us to glory and liberate us, thou wilt receive a fat she-camel. Jâ râ'i-l-'alja bsa'ûd allâh wa-s'ûdak en allâh nowmasna w-fakkna lak ġezûren." On their return with booty they make a fat camel kneel down, cut her throat so that the blood sprinkles the tombstone, and shout: "This is thy supper, O protector of the 'Alja herds!"

My companion, Blejhân, related: "I rode out for plunder with only one comrade. Not far from Turki's grave we made our camels kneel and went to the grave. Laying our right hands on the tombstone, naşîba, we said: 'O thou protector of the 'Alja! If we return with booty, thou wilt receive a fat she-camel.' Soon afterwards we noticed a caravan, żâfla, on the road Darb as-Sâ'i which leads from Damascus to Hit and Bagdad. Crawling near to it at night we captured six she-camels, one of which we sacrificed to Turki. The entrails we ate at the grave, the flesh and the hide we carried home. Our camp was then in the upper part of the al-Mijâh valley.

"Not long after this a certain Mzaĥlak of the Weld Slimân [sic] rode in command of a raiding troop past Turki's grave. Stopping his camel, he exclaimed: 'O thou protector of the 'Alja! If by thy help we return with booty, thou wilt receive a fat camel; jâ râ'i-l-'alja en afadna bsa'ûdak lak ġezûren.' They captured a large herd, killed a camel on his grave, roasted and ate its flesh, and brought the hide home."

Whenever the Fed'ân encamp near Turki's grave they kill a camel in his honor but not until they wish to move to the settled territory, elja rarrabow. To the feast not only the Fed'ân but also the Sba'a and 'Amârât are invited, because Turki was related by blood to all the tribes acknowledging Bişr as their common ancestor, zana bişr.

VOWS

All Rwala believe that they can win Allâh's favor by a vow. Not that Allâh would desire or need the promised object, but it rejoices him to see that the Bedouins remember in time that without his help they cannot attain what they desire, and also that they show willingness to give up something of value in order to assure themselves of his help. Such vows are made by all, men as well as women, old as well as young, in regard to their various needs and in all sorts of ways. When in fear, šaḥna, for a person dear to them or when anxious, minšaḥenîn, for a relative captured by the enemy and threatened with death, šaḥḥanûh, they turn to Allâh. Should a man not return from a raid at the expected time, vows are made by his father, mother, brother, or sister: "If Allâh returns the distant one to us, behold! I will give to Allâh's face one old camel and that without delay; en ġâb allâh hal-râjeb tara lwaġh allâh fâṭeren mâ beha mhala." If an avenger refuses the blood price, insisting on killing the guilty person, he vows: "O Allâh! as soon as I have avenged my brother, thou wilt receive an old camel and a sheep; ġâ-llâh en ċân tetârajt lahûj ennaha fâṭer w-menḥarha naġe." Or: "Be my wife forbidden to me until I have avenged my brother." Vows to the effect that they either will sacrifice a she-camel to Allâh or that they will fast and give the food thus saved to the poor are also made by his relatives for the benefit of one seriously ill. However, a vow is not sufficient to bring children to married couples or to cause boys to be born instead of girls.

Every vow must be uttered aloud and in the presence of witnesses, so that they may remind the man should he ever forget it and thus save him from Allâh's anger. Yet even one who has vowed something to Allâh in his heart while riding alone through the desert is bound to fulfill the pledge, because Allâh can read hearts and will not be deceived. "Who compels a man to make a vow? If he made a vow, he did so voluntarily and must fulfill it to the best of his ability." If a father vows an animal which does not belong to him but to his son, the latter can defend it against his father. On the other hand, the son cannot do the same in the case of his mother, because, according to Allâh's will, nobody cares as much for the son as his mother, mâjene 'ala waladha. The vow made by a daughter or sister must be fulfilled by the father or brother, who is responsible for her, as Allâh would not be angry with the women but with the men. A married woman is not allowed to vow an animal to Allâh without her husband's permission. Yet should she do so, either her kin are obliged to replace it or she must pay its price. Nor can a woman kill the promised animal herself; this is always done by some man in her place, who lays it on the ground with its head towards the south, saying: "This belongs to the face of Allâh." Then the one for whose benefit the vow was made, alli mandûren ʿalejh, dips his forefinger, kâlteh, in the blood and touches with it the point of his nose, both of his cheeks, and his forehead between the eyebrows. These four blood marks, nûr ad-damm, must not be washed off.

Şrajjer eben ʿEmrân of the Mwâhîb clan of the Sbaʿa tribe once commanded a troop of raiders marching against Eben Rašîd, who was also out on a raid against the Sbaʿa at the same time. The troops met; Eben Rašîd, being the stronger, soon pressed, wâfek, Şrajjer's troop so hard that it scattered in all directions. Those who were overtaken were killed, those who escaped perished from thirst. Only a small part of the troop returned home. Şrajjer's mother inquired of those who came back, alli tabbow, about her son, but in vain, as every man had had to look out for himself. Then she made the following vow, nadarat leha nedr: "Allâh, if my little son returns, I will give thee a fat camel." After a few days a certain Şlubi arrived with Şrajjer on his camel, and the mother did as she had vowed.

The husband of Hulfa, a daughter of Hlejf âl Hðereš of the Sbaʿa, having borrowed some money from his relatives and acquaintances, left the neighborhood of Tudmor (Palmyra), where he was camping, for the inner desert, šarrak, in order to buy camels from the Šammar subject to Eben Rašîd. He intended to sell them to the contractor who was repairing the highroad from Ĥomş to Damascus. Yet Allâh decided otherwise. While he was resting at night with his comrades, they were set upon by raiders, bajjatowhom. Robbed of everything, dispersed with derisive laughter in all directions, they were unable to meet again. In the evening one of the party happened to meet a Şlubi who took him home, where he related what had happened. Thereupon Hulfa began to weep, and repeated her vow made on the day when her husband started for the inner desert, jowm ʿalli hw šarrak min ʿendaha: "If, O Allâh! thou returnest my husband safe to me, I will give thee a fat camel." After three months her husband returned. Then she told him: "Behold, for thy sake I vowed a fat camel and wish thee to kill it, tarâni nadart ʿalejk nedr ġezûren w-abejk tedbahaha." But he objected: "I have no fat camel, nor anything to buy one with." Loving him greatly, Hulfa feared lest Allâh might punish him for not fulfilling her vow, and therefore she went to her kin, lahalha, and begged from her brother a camel, which an acquaintance killed before her husband's tent, she herself marking the latter's face with the animal's blood.

Ṛatjân walad ʿAwwâz, a member of the Eben Mehîr kin of the Sbaʿa tribe, lost his brother. He had been killed by a Bedouin, who offered to pay the blood price. But Ṛatjân refused this, desiring to avenge blood with blood, and vowed to Allâh a camel if he would help him exact vengeance. When the guilty man sought refuge, ʿannaz hâleh, in another territory, Ṛatjân was unable to find him for some time. He had given up hope of seeing him again, when suddenly while on a raid he met a strange troop, among which was his fugitive, riding a mare. Dismounting, he seized his revolver, ridnijje, and with two shots killed both the guilty man and his mare. On returning home he sacrificed a camel.

A brother of Eben Faẓîl of the ʿEbede division of the Sbaʿa tribe was killed by a member of a powerful kin, who at once took the part of the slayer. The latter was so universally known and esteemed for his generosity and readiness to serve, that everybody in the clan helped to save both him and his kin from the avengers. They conducted him to a place of refuge, ʿannazow al-kâtel, returned to the camp, and tried to persuade Eben Faẓîl to be satisfied with the blood price. They continued to press him more and more, until he replied: "You are mistaken. It is not the slayer, but myself whom you should have brought to a place of refuge, for I am threatened with danger, not he. The blood price you can keep. I swear by Allâh that I will not touch my wife until my brother is avenged." Afterwards he removed with his whole kin to Eben Hdejb, told him why he had left his clan, and made him the guardian of his family, should he not return. Then he went at once in search of his brother's slayer. Three months later he found and attacked him, but he was himself seriously wounded and only escaped with his life through the assistance of some Bedouins. With them he lay nearly two months before he recovered sufficiently to be taken on a camel to Eben Hdejb. But, as the use of his right hand was gone, he was unable to avenge his brother. Yet there still remained a twelve-year-old son of the brother, who, on hearing of what had happened to his uncle, instantly declared: "Uncle, I myself will go after my father's blood." It was in vain that they tried to hold him back. Mounting a camel, he rode to the Arabs among whom the slayer was hiding, stopped his animal before the chief's tent, and, entering, sat down among the guests and visitors. They conversed on all possible topics, an-nâs tesowlef min 'arẓ al-ḥači, as is usually the case, the boy listening eagerly. Suddenly he heard one of the visitors say: "Our blood-stained one, dammawi, mentioned that he had found at such and such a place a hole filled with rain water; but look, he has just come back with his water bag full." Great was the joy of the young avenger on finding the culprit so soon, and he took good notice of the tent into which the guilty man carried the water. Crawling in at night, he found him sunk in deep slumber. Shaking him with all the force at his command the boy said:

"Art thou asleep or awake? ent nâjem walla' žâ'ed."

"I am awake, ana žâ'ed."

"How canst thou sleep with my father in thy belly? čejf tnâm w-abûj bebaṭnak."

"Not thy father alone but thou too wilt be in my belly," replied the culprit, jumping up and grasping his weapon. But at the same moment the boy fired a shot at him from his revolver, tawwar beh ar-ridnijje šamâm, killing him instantly.

On his return he simply said: "Uncle, I have avenged my father; jâ 'ammi aḥadt târ abûj." But the uncle was not to be comforted, thinking that he had not fulfilled his vow. "I vowed not to sleep with my wife before bringing back the blood of my brother. Thou hast now brought it. What am I to do?" Then the more experienced men advised him to dismiss his present wife and to marry anew. This he did.

In 1898, when cholera was ravaging the country, the Bedouins fled to the desert to escape the contagion, wahmen čebîr, which threatened them. Ever since they have called that year sanat abu faḡsa, cholera year. At that time Blejhân eben Meşreb became seriously ill, and his relatives were convinced that he could not recover, mâ beh rabeḡ. When his brother, who was pasturing camels at some place far from the water, heard the news, he left his herd and hastened home, rawwah min al-azîb. The sight of Blejhân filled him with terror, for he looked more wretched than any one would have wished to see even his worst enemy appear, w-allâh aš-šowfat al-kašra tamannâha l'aduwwak. Weeping bitterly, the brother lifted his eyes to heaven and exclaimed:

"O God, a camel I vow to thee at once, if my brother shall again walk full of health and vigor, adîden w-šedîden."

Then he went back to his herd. When he came five days later with his camels to the watering place, the Arabs there said:

"Hear the glad tidings! Thy brother is getting better, no danger threatens him any more, lâ beh hlâf." So, after watering his camels, he made all haste to visit Blejhân and embraced him with the words:

"May thine illness depart for the inner desert, šarraḵ." Blejhân answered:

"May it never reach thee!" After a short talk, the brother led in a young white camel, ka'ûden awzah, exchanged it for an old camel, fâter, fettered her left foreleg, akḵalḥa, outside the tent, and sacrificed her with the words:

"God, this is the camel I vowed for my brother; my vow is fulfilled." At that moment four men seized Blejhân, placed him in the streaming blood, and also dropped some of it on the end of his nose, on both cheeks, and between his eyebrows. He recovered completely.

Both the father and brother of Ḥamṣijja, an unmarried daughter of one Fâre' of the Sba'a tribe, were murdered. The brother left two boys, whose mother married again. Ḥamṣijja took charge of the boys, became their foster mother, wâlijathom, and made the following vow: "O God, as soon as these two boys are able to care for themselves and make their first raid, behold! I vow to thee a fâter camel, and I also vow that I will fast for three days in seven times seven weeks." When the boys grew up and returned from their first raid in good health, Ḥamṣijja had a camel sacrificed and for a whole lunar year touched food only every other day.

CHAPTER XVI

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

SETTLEMENT OF MINOR DISPUTES; JUDGES

Slight disputes and quarrels between members of the same tribe are settled by friendly intercession. A respected Bedouin comes with one or two companions to the tent of the more powerful opponent and says to him:

"O So-and-So, stay! Thou knowest well that we all honor thee, and we also know that So-and-So has, in fact, harmed thee and that therefore thou hast every reason to be angry with him; but if thou lovest me, if thou lovest us, do not persecute him any more! lâ teğîh." The man thus addressed, recognizing that he will gain more in public esteem if he abandons his claims, answers:

"For the love I bear thee and all of you, but for this reason only, I give up all my claims."

"We know that thou speakest the truth, but still we beg of thee to swear by Allâh."

"I call Allâh to witness that I will persecute him no more."

"May thy love for us increase and give us power to appoint a guardian who is to see that thou persecutest thy opponent no more!"

"I give you full power, ana mheddikom, to appoint any guardians you desire."

"We shall go to So-and-So."

"Go at once! kowterû." Then they go to a powerful Bedouin and say: "Behold, X has promised that he will not quarrel with Y any more. Behold, we place the latter before thy countenance. Have a care that X actually ceases to persecute him."

Answering "I guarantee that," he sends word to the stronger opponent: "Beware of persecuting Y any longer. For, beware, he has put himself under my protection, tarâh dahal 'alejje."

More serious differences are settled among the Rwala by the hereditary native judge, 'ârefa (pl., 'awâref). Judicial dignity is hereditary in certain kins and passes as a rule from father to son. If the latter lacks the necessary intelligence, boṣr, the litigants turn to his uncle, jinḥarûn ʿammeh, or to some other member of his kin. Furthermore, every chief may pass sentence but may not interfere in any way with the jurisdiction of the hereditary judges; he must submit when the contending parties appeal from his verdict to the hereditary judge. When acting as a judge, a chief is never called ʿârefa, not being recognized as such. When a chief adjudicates disputes he does so because he wields power which it is not always possible to resist and because he can support his judgment or his will by force.

Eben Ğandal is the greatest judge of the Âl Ğlâs group; Âl ẖajjâr holds the same position with the Beni Wahab.

In all matters pertaining to blood vengeance the decision lies with the ʿawâref ad-damm, namely: Âl Kwêceb in the Âl Ğlâs group and Eben Smej, otherwise known as Eben Baṭṭâh, in the Beni Wahab group.

Other disputes are decided by Eben Ğandal, al-Ḳaʿâḳa, and Eben Durmi of the Âl Ğlâs group.

On questions of war and peace Eben Šaʿlân is called upon to decide.

Special rights are to be considered when either the plaintiff or the defendant happens to be a neighbor, al-ḳaṣîr; a guest, az-zejf; or a traveling companion, al-ḥawi.

In the Kmuṣa division of the as-Sbaʿa tribe the recognized judges are the chiefs of the ar-Rḥama clan (Barṣaš, Mḥammad, Metḳâl, and ʿAwejnân of the Saʿîd kin) as well as the chiefs of the Bṭejnât clan (ʿAzîz and Fallâġ of the Štêwi kin). Among the ʿEbede division it is the al-Mwâjġe clan from which the judges are selected from the kins: Eben ʿAllûš, Eben Ğazzâ, Eben Rabîṭ, Âl Aġda, and Âl Rġêl.

LAWSUITS

A lawsuit is called sâlfa or ṭlâba and may be decided either by witnesses or by black oaths, as-sâlfa ʿalejha umma šhûd walla dijânen sûd. An oath is black because it disgraces a man, blackens his countenance or his honor, implying that his mere word is not believed. Besides, the swearer is always in danger of God's anger, as he can never explain things as they really happened.

Settlement with Witnesses

Generally two witnesses are required in court, kowd tnên šhūd. Only a man of good repute, rağğâlen mazbût, who is no babbler, ħaċĥ želîl, and never contradicts his story, ħarğeh şahîh, will be admitted as a witness, šâhed jired. An eyewitness, šawwâf al-ʿajn, should be honest, walad al-ħalâl, must not hate him whose case depends on him, must not yearn for a reward for his testimony, and must be known for his veracity; alli lâ řallen šâfîh w-lâ tmaʿen râğîh w-ħabîb allâh ħâċîh. Every witness is entitled to compensation for coming to testify, ħakķ al-lisân. As a rule an eyewitness will not ask for it; but if he says: "I want the price of my tongue, ana-bri ħakķ lisâni," then two of his kin have to declare him to be a trustworthy witness, marzi aš-šehâde, which means that he is not a hired witness. If the dispute is about a mare, the eyewitness usually gets its first colt (a filly) or a camel; if about a camel, his reward is a gold pound. Before a witness's deposition is taken, efforts are made by one of the contending parties to undermine his trustworthiness, while the other lauds it to the skies. Both disputants spread their garments on the ground before the judge. Each grâsps with both hands either the long lappet of his shirt sleeve, reden, or the hem of his cloak or upper garment, šâje, spreads it on the ground in the tent, smoothes it with his right hand, holding it tight with the left; then they both raise their right hands towards the judge and exclaim:

"This is my garment for the unchangeable truth, ħâda šelîli beş-şahîh, O veracious one! jâ şudķân."

His opponent calls out: "This is my garment for the unchangeable truth, O liar! jâ ċudbân."

"Leave it spread out, roll it not up as long as the unchangeable truth does not appear, lâ tekofeh eķed beş-şahîh." The spreading out of the garment takes the place of spreading a rug for the witness to sit on. This is also frequently seen in other disputes; a Bedouin spreads out his šelîl to demonstrate that he can bring enough trustworthy witnesses to substantiate his words.

The judge asks the witness: "O witness, wilt thou give testimony? tabri tešhad."

"I will."

"Come, then, and give testimony, ṭobb ešhad!" The witness now sits down before the judge and says:

"I declare that there is no hatred in me against him whose welfare is in question, that I do not yearn for a reward from him who has asked me to be his witness, and that I will speak the truth only as pleases the Lord, that it happened so and so..." A witness against whom the giving of false testimony has been proved will never again be admitted as a trustworthy witness, maḵmû' aš-šahâde.

Should a single eyewitness relate to two men in the desert what he has seen and heard but afterwards depart to other distant tribes so that he cannot be brought before the judge, his place may not be taken by those to whom he has related the story.

One who knows a fact only from hearsay cannot give valid testimony, for he has seen nothing himself but has only heard it from others, and mouths will always chatter. Knowledge of this kind, called fôh famm, has no validity even when supported by five men. Should a man hear two men fighting at night and hear one of them, who is afterwards found killed, shout: "Woe to me, So-and-So means to kill me," he cannot even then be admitted as a witness against one whose name he has only heard, for this is a fôh famm; he himself had not seen and recognized the slayer. A true eyewitness never contradicts himself, his statements being always the same. The report of a [true] man [about some occurrence] must be like the gait of a pack camel, always the same; ḥaṭw ar-rağğâl zej mamša-l-ğemal beş-şahîh.

Settlement by Oaths

In the absence of trustworthy eyewitnesses the judge calls on the party which has entered a denial to swear. As in the opinion of the Bedouins every court process defiles and every oath disgraces, ad-dîn ċetîn w-al-jemîn mehîn, the oath is universally avoided, and a man is angry with one who urges him to swear. The simplest words of an oath are:

"I swear by Allâh and eight camels laden with grain that I did not say ..., en w-allâh w-ṭamâni ġmâl muḥammalâten ṛalâl enni mâ ḵult..." Thus he calls on Allâh to punish him and to do him an injury equal to the loss of eight loads of grain which he has bought in the settled territory; he would then die of hunger in the desert.

Another oath runs: "I swear by Allâh, whose power is eminent, whose weights are just, and whose tongue is truthful, that it is thus and so; w-allâh alli 'azîzen šâneh w-ʿadlen mîzâneh w-ṭalžen lisâneh enni..."

In serious disputes the judge requires the msabbaʿ oath, so called from seven lines drawn with a saber on the ground. The judge first draws a circle with a saber, then its diameter; this he intersects with five vertical lines, inviting the witness to step inside and facing south to swear:

"A false oath is the ruin of the descendants, for he who [swears falsely] is insatiable in his desire [of gain] and does not fear his Lord; thus and so happened...; ad-dîn al-lûwijje kaṭṭâʿat ad-derrijje enneh hâjef w-lâ leh min rabbeh hâjef."

Scarcely is the oath finished when the witness jumps out of the circle and, full of rage, runs at his opponent, who has made him swear. The people present at the trial have to surround and hold him till he calms down.

The third kind of oath, called al-ğehîra, is used at meetings where a man must be compelled to speak the truth. Then the chief springs suddenly at the man who is to swear, lays his right hand on his belly under the belt so as to touch his sexual organ, and exclaims: "I adjure thee by thy belt, by thy sexual organ, and by that which lies down to sleep before thee in the evening to give me a report such as will please God; ana-nšidk beḥzâmak wa-lzâmak w-mâ rawwah w-amsa židdâmak innak teʿallemni bḥabîb allâh." The belt signifies the wife, for it is laid aside when the man desires to have intercourse with her; the sexual organ means children; and that which lies down to sleep before the tent at night signifies herds.

ʿAwde al-Kwêčbi ran into the tent of Prince Saṭṭâm, grasped one of the poles of the merkab litter, and shouted: "I stand under the protection of this pole, and nothing shall part me from it. By Allâh's light and by Allâh's right in this camp I put myself under thy protection, O Saṭṭâm, with all that my conscience conceals but that is clear to thee. I put myself under the protection of thy wife, of thy children, of thy mare, of thy herd going to the pasture, and of the son employed with them. Ana dahîl hal-‘amûd mâ ‘anni sdûd bnûr allâh wa-bħakķ allâh bhal-menzel w-ana dâhel ‘alejk balli ħafijen ‘alejje w-bajjenen ‘alejk w-ana dâhel ‘ala ħzâmak w-mâ kafâk w-żiddâmak w-al-ħalâl as-sâreh w-al-walad al-fâleh.” Sattâm was sitting by the wall dividing the men’s compartment from the women’s; behind him — hence behind the wall — were his wife and his children; before him — hence in front of the tent — stood his mare and his she-camels about to start for pasture under the care of a young relative of his.

Judicial Decisions

After hearing the witnesses or administering the oath the judge issues his decision or verdict, ma‘rûz. If one of the parties is not satisfied he says to the judge:

“Here, take the wages for thy tongue and let me depart to another judge; hâk ħakķ lisânak w-asnedni ‘ala-l-‘ârefat at-tâni.”

“I will let thee go to So-and-So.” Both parties now go to the judge mentioned and relate what has happened thus far. But, whatever the verdict of the second judge may be, the party dissatisfied with the first cannot reject it, for then the judge would say:

“Thou art an old liar. Sit still and accept my judgment. This dispute is decided irrevocably. Ent ċedûb eķed w-eķbel ma‘rûzi has-sâlfa mabtûra.” An appeal is out of the question, but sometimes the judge says to the dissatisfied party:

“Go wherever thou wilt; find a case like thine and prove to me by witnesses how it was decided.” The dissatisfied man then mounts his camel and rides from one judge to another and from chief to chief inquiring for a case similar to his and for the court’s finding in it. If he happens to find such a case, waradha, and proves by witnesses that it had been decided long before and is therefore an old dispute, sâlfaten mâzje or ma‘rûzen mâzi, then the judge adapts his verdict to the old one. But if the judgment discovered is not at least five years old, its validity is not yet recognized — as it is still a so-called blind case, has-sâlfa ħâdi ‘amja. The opposing side at once declares: “This case must not be used against me, mâ tfattah ‘alejje,” and the finding of the second judge remains in force.

Typical Lawsuits

My companion, Blejhân, related: "My comrade Zâher and I went for plunder to the Rwala territory, ‘ajjarna ‘ala-r-rwala. We had only one riding camel, which belonged to Zâher. He sat in the saddle, I sat behind the saddle, zâher beš-šdâd w-ana bel-wrûk. One day we saw a rider, a Rwejli, judging by his apparel. My comrade said: 'Look, if we capture that riding camel, delûl, she shall be thine even if a little bell is ringing on her neckband, tara had-delûl en šarat lena tarâha lak lâ jidenn biršemha.' A bell of that kind is hung only on the neck of young mares. By these words Zâher indicated that he would leave the first booty to me alone, even if it were a mare; and therefore he would certainly have left the camel to me. I answered that I accepted his offer, ana žâbel. Now when the Rwejli met us, I slid off our camel and seized his delûl by the rein, while Zâher leveled his rifle at the man threatening him with the words:

'Dismount! If thou dost not, by my faith! I will shoot thee dead; hawwel en mâ hawwalt lan adbaḥak bel-barûde.'

"Having no gun himself the Rwejli obeyed, while I made the delûl kneel and then mounted it. In this manner she became my property, šarat lije. Then we searched two more days and a night for booty but without avail. Finally we started for home again, reaching it on the tenth day early in the morning, aš-šubḥijjât ġina-halna. On the same day my comrade, ḥawi, came to me and said:

'I want thee to give me a half of that camel, because we agreed to divide our booty, ana wijjâk ḥișer.'

'Thou art right, thou art not right; lak lôn, mâ lak lôn.' We quarreled a long time and at last on the advice of our relatives went to Mešhen eben 'Allûš of the al-Mwâjġe clan of the 'Ebede division to seek justice, tawâradna al-ḥakḥ 'endeh. We came to that judge each on his own camel, made the animals kneel before the tent, and saluted him:

'Peace be with thee!'

'Peace to you also!' After tasting some coffee I, that is Blejhân, sat beside the judge, Mešhen, and said to him:

'O Eben 'Allûš, I want to ask my right of thee!'

'Relate, disclose, eḥteḥ eḥteḥ.'

'Certainly, I swear to God that I shall disclose it' — and I told him how it all happened, adding: 'I desire, God grant it! from thee, from all judges, and from every man who does not disregard my right, that this camel, which my comrade declared to be mine even if a bell was ringing on her neckband, should belong to me undisputedly; abi-n-šâ-llâh 'endak w-enda-l-ḳza w-end allî ḥaḳki mâ hafa' enna-d-delûl fawwat ha lije ḥawijji lâ jidenn biršemha lak ennaha lije bârde.

"The judge said: 'Blejhân has spoken and ended well, ḥačja w-afleḥ. Now give thy account, Zâher.'

'I will explain what took place, O Eben 'Allûš, to thee and to everyone whose hand refuses bribes. It is known, balî, that my comrade Blejhân sat on my camel behind the saddle. It is infallible truth, ṣaḥîḥ, that I adjudged that camel to him, yet behold, mâr, today my hand is empty, while the hand of my comrade is full. Therefore I demand of thee and of all who mean well a half of that she-camel.'

"Then we were silent. Eben 'Allûš asked:

'Did ye agree at the moment ye saw the rider on this she-camel that ye would divide, or did ye not? jôm ennakom ṭâla'tu râḥ had-delûl entom taḥâšartu walla' mâ taḥâšartu.

'We did not!'

"Here the judge took both my and my comrade's saber and said: 'I shall deliver judgment, abi a'roz 'alejkom ma'rûz. Thou, Zâher, wilt get from this she-camel a gold pound, nêra, and the greed of both of you must be smothered by your sense of honor, w-arz killen jîġfi 'ala ḥazzeḥ.

'I, that is Blejhân, replied: 'O Eben 'Allûš, I shall not accept this; help me to my right, ana mâ-rza aṭni ḥaḳki.

'So thou wilt not accept?'

'I will not.'

'Well, then, let Zâher stand up and swear by God and eight camels laden with corn that he did not adjudge the camel to thee even if it had been a mare with a bell on her neck.'

'I urged my comrade: 'No, rise, rise, fear not God, because of thy greed! kum kûm [sic] lâ thâf allâh 'ala ḥazzak.

'I will not swear,' replied Zâher, 'for I seek my refuge in God before thee and thy she-camel; mâni ḥâlef w-u'ajjed allâh min̄k ent wijje delûlk.

'Take two meġdiġġât ($1.80), Eben 'Allûš, as a reward for thy work and give me my saber.'

"Taking then my saber and my camel, I rode away, reaching home in the evening, I, that is Blejhân."

The same Blejhân related: "Our auxiliary troop met a fighting troop of the Eben Mâzi and Ahl al-Ğebel and captured the horses whose riders were thrown from their saddles, kalâje. I too succeeded in capturing a mare, which I gave to the care of my kin. On the following morning one Ehdejân came to claim her, stating it was he who had thrown the rider to the ground, kal' râ'iha min zaharha. Now the usual quarrel began: 'It is mine,' 'It is not thine.' Urged by our relatives, who said: 'Go to the judge to have your right cleared,' we rode to Farhân eben Hdejb.

'What have ye there? Disclose it!'

"My opponent, žebîli, said: 'We shall disclose all, O Farhân eben Hdejb! before thee and before a judge who knows customs and has wit, and before everyone who despises (untruth) with his every thought; belli hajje w-dajje w-killi min jenšâha min kill nijje. The cavalry of our enemy was defeated, hejl batîha. I overtook a rider. There was nobody near him who would either attack or defend him, laħažt al-ħajjâl mâ 'endeh lâ min ješhâh w-lâ min jenhâh. I said to him: "Yield her to me for thy neck, reddha 'ala rķabak, or I will shoot thee dead." He would not yield, 'ajja jerudd. Then I shot and threw him to the ground. Now I desire of thee, if God grant it, to return to me that which a blow delivered by my hand, dazz îdi, gained for me and of which my cousin, eben 'ammi, now wishes to deprive me.'

"Having heard this, the judge said: 'Ehdejân has finished; now do thou speak, Eben Zeri; disclose!'

'And, by Allâh! I shall disclose, Farhân eben Hdejb. At first I rode with the attacking cavalry, awwal ma'i hejlen mîre. We overtook the enemy and defeated him. Many a mare lost her rider. I overtook this mare. She was running, riderless, to and fro, al-faras al-mâreğ. There was nobody near who would defend her or take her away from me again, mâ 'endaha min jenhâha w-jenhâha. I would — God grant it! — that she belonged to me, lije, not to my cousin.' Then we were silent. Farhân eben Hdejb — God have mercy on him! — spoke:

'Ye quarrel over a mare, entom muttâlbîn [sic] 'ala faras. Lead thy camel before me, Eben Zeri, ķallet li delûlk.

'Here is my she-camel! Ĥê ĥê!' I made her kneel. Farhân then said:

'I shall decide between you, ana-ħçi 'alejkom.'

'Speak! Was it not in deference to thy word that we came? kowd rādīnak.'

'For thee, Eben Zeri, I have unpleasant news: I shall do violence to thee; abi-hzemk w-aḳwak. Thou shalt get the first colt should it be a filly, and, besides, a five- or six-year-old she-camel; lak awwaltha w-biċer walla' tenw.'

'I accept this as my right, hakki žebilt.' And I took a five-year-old she-camel, which Eḥdejĵân gave me, and waited for the filly. The captured mare went to him."

MURDER CASES, APPEALS, PATERNITY CASES, JUDGMENTS IN BLOOD FEUDS

If a Bedouin meets an unknown man and shortly afterwards finds another man murdered, he describes the living stranger to the next chief. The news spreads and the avengers of the dead man accuse the man who answers to the description of being the murderer. He can only seek refuge with the nearest judge, ârefa, whom he tries to convince that the avengers are mistaken. The judge then visits the camp of him who had met the unknown man and found the dead body, and says to him as follows: "Describe to me exactly the appearance of the stranger thou didst meet." This is done. If the description agrees, the judge says: "It is true; thy description has neither taken away nor added anything; šidž waṣfk lâ zâr w-lâ râp." This was explained by the sentence: "His discernment was not dull, nor did his intelligence turn aside; lâ zâr dihneh w-lâ râp baṣareh."

When a litigant thinks that justice has not been done to him, he appeals to a board of judges, experts in law, je-arreḡ al-ḥakḳ ala 'awâref maġmû'in. In this session other people can also take part. The appellant adjures those present, jenšedhom nišdan bid-dîn, in the following manner:

"I adjure you by your wives and all that they bear; I adjure you by the long-maned mares; I adjure you by the milk-giving she-camels! ana nâšedkom bel-mara w-mâ tġīb w-bel-ḥejl nâterât as-sabīb w-bel-bel zejnât al-ḥalīb. To him who will clear up this matter it will bring success, but to him who refuses to testify it will bring ruin, alli ježherha tesorreh w-alli jeċmâha tezorreh."

Then the legal experts examine the case again, sift the evidence, and after this announce their judgment.

There are many very difficult cases in adjudging pater-nity.

‘Awwâd eben Tâhûs of the Milhâk kin of the Swâlme clan took to wife, ĉân metaġawwezen leh, a daughter of his father’s brother. When he divorced her after some time, she married a man of the name of Aġu Bnejje al-Jemîni, to whom she bore a son, ġâbat waladen. The first husband claimed the baby boy, saying to the second:

“The boy that has come to thee belongs to me, al-walad alli ġâk hâda lije ana.”

They had a long dispute about it, temâtalow bēnhom, and finally went to the chief Mġât eben Ġandal to judge between them, tewâradow al-ħakġ endeh. The first husband, ‘Awwâd eben Tâhûs, said:

“What thinkest thou, our adept at law, and what think the judges? He who knows the law of God cannot possibly allow it to fail. Wšw’ endak jâ ârefatna w-enda-l-ġza’ w-min šâf ħakġ allâh mâ haffâh. Verily this boy is mine. I divorced her when she was already carrying him. Bali waladi hâda ħallejtaha w-ħi nâžel beh.” Then spoke al-Jemîni:

“Good will to all! that is not the truth. When I married her she had nothing as yet in her womb. Not until eleven months afterwards, so help me Allâh, did she bear a boy. Hejr mâ hw šaġġħ enni aħadtah w-ħi mâ bebaṭnah šaj’en w-oġob eħda’ašš šahr jâ-llâh waledat.”

The judge, ‘ârefa, declared: “I shall pass no judgment until the wife is brought here.”

When she came, he remained alone with her and said:

“This boy is thine, regardless of the man who begot him, but if thou wilt tell the truth to me, I will get for thee from the one to whom I adjudge the boy one of his best she-camels; ‘allemîni beš-šaġġħ w-ana aħott leġ min alli jeṭla’ waladeh ba’ir min ħijâr al-ba’arîn.”

Afterwards he called in both men and said: “Bring hither your two best she-camels, one each;” which they did, making them kneel before the tent. Now the adept at law took the woman outside to the camels and said impressively:

“Speak, O woman! the truth, eħĉi jâ ħurma aš-šaġġħ, and thou shalt receive a she-camel.”

The woman, seizing the she-camel owned by her first husband, replied: "My first husband 'Awwâd is the father of my boy."

This moved the second husband to say: "Be it so, but then I claim a reward for helping the boy out of that hole to the light and for his upkeep, arẓi ḥaḳḳ eẓhâri leh min hal-ḥufra wa-rdâje leh."

"Thou art right; 'Awwâd must give thee a camel for the upkeep," decided Mḳâṭ. And so it happened: the first husband gave the second a camel and took the boy home with him.

In judgments of blood feuds the winner of the case has to give the court ten she-camels; in disputes concerning a woman, one camel is paid; a mare, one camel; a she-camel, two meġḍijjât ($1.80); weapons, one gold pound.

CHAPTER XVII

PROTECTION OF THE OPPRESSED

COUNTENANCE OR WAĞH

Protection granted by a man against his tribesmen or allies to a person regardless whether present or not is called a countenance, wağh. Before the countenance of some Rwejli it is possible to travel through the whole Rwala territory without fear of an attack or of violence. Before the countenance of Prince an-Nûri one may cross not only the Rwala territory but also that of all other tribes which acknowledge his sovereignty. It is said of the prince that he resembles a long branch to which smaller twigs are attached.

Whoever wishes to travel through the territory of a powerful chief goes first to him with the following request:

"I desire to ride through the pastures of thy tribe, so grant me the protection of thy countenance." If the chief answers:

"Undertake thy journey in peace! Behold, I give thee my countenance, midd ma' as-salâme tarâni e'tik wağhi," he may start as tranquilly as if accompanied by the chief himself.

If a man wishes to visit the territory of a strange tribe and has no comrade, hawî, of that tribe to go with him, he declares in the presence of some respected men of the neighboring tribe: "Behold, I go on a lengthy journey before the countenance, under the protection, of Chief So-and-So whose territory I shall soon enter." Then he continues his journey. When he meets the first members of the tribe in question, he shouts at them from afar:

"Behold! I travel under the protection of your chief." Should they disbelieve and rob him, he still tries to reach their chief, to whom he complains:

"I undertook this journey before thy face! maddejt bwağhak."

The chief, disliking complications, replies: "That is a lie, čideb." But the plundered man continues:

"I undertook this journey before thy face, as So-and-So from the Such-and-Such tribe, whose word is believed, rağâlen ma'hûden čalâmahom, will testify."

Then the chief must send some one to the persons named to find out whether such is the case. If the messenger comes back with a report that the traveler has spoken the truth, the chief is obliged to return to him everything of which he has been robbed. Should he fail to do so he would dishonor his countenance, and his disgrace would spread all over the desert, with the result that his tribe, ashamed of the affair, would depose him.

To refuse his countenance or protection to any one is a disgrace, as it is, likewise, to ask for a reward when granting it; for the face must remain clean, must not be stained with any dirt, al-wağh naẓîf mâ jaršâh ad-danas.

The famous Rwejli warrior Fhejd eben Ma'abhel had his camp in the Damascus territory, and yet he successfully protected a Šammar woman who appealed to the protection of his face. She camped with her husband in Neğd by the valley of ar-Rma'. Her husband, becoming angry with her for some reason, began to beat her. Then she started to cry:

"Jâ fhejd jâ ba'ad ħajjî." Thus young women call for protection, the meaning of the words being that the woman will submit to her protector in everything. Her husband was not a little surprised at that:

"Tell me, my comrades, how can my wife call on Fhejd when he camps a month's journey from us? tenħa 'alejje fhejd w-hw msâfet šahr zamânen 'anna."

Yet some 'Aqejl camel buyers just then in camp heard the Šammar woman's cries and spoke about it in the various camps to which their business brought them, the report of the incident finally reaching Fhejd himself. Ordering his slaves and fellow tribesmen to assemble for a raid, he rode around the Nefûd on the east and in about twenty-five days reached the camp where the woman was living. There Fhejd declared that he would harm no one if they showed him the husband's tent. When they showed him both the tent and the man, Fhejd set his she-camel running, stabbed the man with his spear in the thigh, and said to him:

"Thou filthy beast, didst doubt that thy wife has my protection? If thou harmest her again, I will kill thee." After this Fhejd returned to his people, meeting them in the Sirħan depression.

If it is a matter of common knowledge that the head chief has lent a traveler his face or if the latter is accompanied by a ḥawi (or ḥâwi) and, nevertheless, some member of the chief's tribe or a fellow tribesman of the ḥawi attacks and robs him, the culprit is punished with far greater severity than if he had committed murder, taḳṭî' al-waġh aṣ'ab min ḍabḥat az-zelema (sic). For in a case of murder the blood price is fixed by ancient custom, whereas a chief or a ḥawi and their kin may ask any compensation they wish for the corruption of the face. Of such unlimited demands every robber is very much afraid, and therefore, although he often beats the ḥawi soundly and curses him, he always returns to the traveler all that he has robbed him of and begs him to swear in the ḥawi's presence that none of his property is missing and to forgive him.

THE ḤAWI OR COMPANION WHO PROTECTS TRAVELERS

If the traveler distrusts some tribe, he tries to hire as comrade either a member or an ally of the tribe, that he may then ride before his face. A companion protecting the traveler from both his fellow tribesmen and allies is called a ḥawi. To travel with a ḥawi is always easier than to travel before a chief's countenance, because a ḥawi can be seen and heard, whereas the protection of a chief, often living at a great distance, must be first proved, which not only takes some time but in most cases is difficult. For this reason the chief usually gives the traveler in addition to his protection one of his slaves or servants to act as companion.

In the selection of a ḥawi much caution is necessary. The more powerful and better known his kin, the more can his protection be depended upon. A common Rwejli is unable to protect against all the 'Aneze but only against the division of this group of tribes called Zana Muslim. These people have an old, established custom that whenever any of them eats a meal with a traveler he also lends him his face, ḥawijet sufra. In this case it is not necessary at all for the traveler to ask him to be his ḥawi, as any man of the Zana Muslim is bound to deliver him from danger without a special request, min rejr nab' jefekkeh. Only a culprit fleeing before an avenger cannot become a ḥawi.

One single face protects against all members of the Zana Muslim; the same applies to the Zana Bišr and also to all the 'Amârât, the other two great divisions of the 'Aneze. As a result, three hawî suffice for protection against all the 'Aneze from Aleppo to the Nefûd and from the Sirhân depression to the river Tigris, lehom wağh wâhed.

With the Šammar it is altogether different. There the most reliable face is furnished by a man either of the Sinğâra or the 'Abde. As the Aslam and Tûmân quarrel continually, to traverse their territories with only one hawî is out of the question. If a traveler meets a Šammari and eats with him, he must nevertheless ask: "Wilt thou give me thy face against the Šammar if I give thee mine against Such-and-Such?" And, if the Šammari agrees, another question is necessary: "Against which Šammar canst thou be my hawî?" This must be repeated every evening, as a Šammari usually promises for one day only.

The members of the Šarârât tribe, which has no head chief who can dictate to all the clans, mâ jekûl 'alejhom wa-ğad, are not secure even against their own fellow tribesmen. Then it pays to be very exact in inquiring whether the hawî can protect against the whole of his clan or merely against a few kins. A Šarârî hawî, too, keeps his engagement for one day only. Should the traveler fail to renew the agreement with him, his hawî may himself rob him on the next day or make common cause with the robbers.

PROTECTION BY REQUEST

Protection granted by request, dahğâla, is the basis of all security both of person and property. Whoever is threatened by death or loss of property or whoever thinks that he is being wronged asks protection from him who has the power to give it. At the same time it is everyone's duty to give protection when requested to do so. A refusal would imply weakness, would blacken one's honor, and the man who refuses would be derided at all camp fires for his lack of manly courage. It is, of course, true that no one likes to be asked for protection because of the cruel work full of difficulties and trouble that is involved in it.

One who is oppressed personally has to ask protection of someone more powerful or of a member of an important kin; it is sufficient, however, for him to enter the tent of the one whose protection he desires or even its sacred precincts, muğârem. The precincts begin either at the limits of hearing distance or at a full spear's length from the farthest tent pegs. When a pursued person cries from afar to the tent owner that he is putting himself under his protection and is heard, the latter is bound to protect him. The term for such an occurrence is ḥaḳḳ aṣ-ṣowt. On reaching the sacred precincts the pursued man finds himself under the protection of the tent. If he is unable from exhaustion to proceed any farther and remains lying on the ground inside the precincts, no harm may be done to him, as that would be a violation of the tent, ʿatab al-bejt. The owner of the tent, his wife, or child shouts:

"Why dost thou violate my protégé? thine eyesight is sharp enough, is it not? lēh ta'teb ʿala dahīli ent ʿajnak žwijje. With us the precincts of a tent are recognized as sacred by an old custom; no one would dare to violate it; al-muḥārem ʿendana ʿādaten sânijjaten mâ ḥad jakta'ha."

The persecuted man always tries to reach the tent. When he succeeds, he takes hold of the occupant's wife, or a girl there, or holds a baby towards his pursuers, saying:

"The protégé has arrived and saved himself, dahāl ad-dahīl w-silem." The people in the tent, whether men or women, cry: "Our protégé! Stop, respect the tent; stand still! dahīlana jammakom al-bejt al-bejt jammakom." Anyone who injures or kills the protégé inside the tent must compensate the owner for disgracing his tent, ḥaḳḳ bowžt al-bejt. Disgracing of a tent is punished with greater severity than injury to the face, ekṭâ al-wağh. The distance from the protecting tent to the tent of the culprit is measured by steps, and the latter must give one ḥežž camel for every step as compensation for disgracing the tent. If, however, the persecuted man has killed one of the tent owner's near kinsmen, no protection will be given him and he may be killed in the tent itself, even if the woman present at the time were to grant him protection, dahḥâla. This proceeding is explained and excused by the rousing of the blood, fowžt ad-damm, of the kinsmen when they see or hear that one of their number has just been killed.

Protection obtained in person is followed by the granting of the protection of the countenance. The protégé moves constantly before the countenance of him whose protection he enjoys, alli dahāl ʿalejh. Such protection cannot be limited but must be given a wide interpretation, ad-dahḥâla mamdûde mâ hi maḥdûde; therefore there is never any dispute as to its validity. To deny having been asked for protection or to try to rid oneself of the obligation would be considered a disgrace. For one of the chief marks of gentility, mruwwa, of a Bedouin is the granting of protection when it is asked for. The man who grants protection, dahhâla, must forthwith announce it in the whole camp and even in all the camps around: "Let none dare to come near So-and-So! Know ye that he has put himself under our protection! Whoever harms him will pay us the price of our countenance!"

It is also possible to obtain protection for animals in dispute. In this case the oppressed party leads the animal into the sacred precincts of the tent, or at least brings a handful of hair cut from its tail, halab leh helbe. In the latter case the protector, taking the hair, then goes to the herd in which the animal in dispute is kept and, having recognized it by its clipped tail, leads it before his tent. Nobody dares to touch it there until the dispute is settled.

Typical Cases of the Granting of Protection and its Consequences

Blejhân eben Zeri told the following story: "We, the Kmuşa men, were camping in the al-Mijâh valley. There was not much water in the wells. Medbar eben 'Abdallâh watered his sheep and goats, ranameh, from a well. Belhân eben Mnazzel brought his flock to the same well and tried to drive Medbar away. Enraged, the latter attacked Belhân, saṭa' beh, fell upon him, adlah beh, with a saber, and cut off his nose, so that it hung only by a bit of skin and later had to be sewn on with the hair of a virgin. Medbar, leaving his flock, then ran into our tent, that is of the Eben Zeri, and shouted:

'Behold, I call on Allâh and all of you to protect me from the face of my cousin, so that he will not attack me!'

"We ran out of the tent and warned them, nadahna 'alej-hom: 'Let nobody come near Medbar and his kin. He has asked for our protection and is our protégé.' Then we mounted our camels, surrounded all the tents belonging to Medbar's kin, helped them strike them, and conducted them to the settled territory, rarrabna, on the Euphrates, where we crossed the river, 'abarna, and encamped in al-Ġezîre. Some time later the wounded man, alli mostîjen beh, watered his flock in the Euphrates and saw a relative of the assailant, as-sâti, who, as it was the time of the greatest heat of the day, was just resting with his flock, mžajjel bṛanameh. Suddenly Belhân seized his heavy club, ma-drûb, jumped at this relative of Medbar, and beat him till he fell down insensible. When it was reported to us, we at once rode to the river and took Belhân to task:

‘Thou knowest that he is under our protection. Why dost thou insult our face? Why dost thou beat thy cousin?’

‘He replied: ‘O brothers, his fate has overtaken him, amreh şâr.’ But we went straight to his kin, naḥarna haleh, compelled them to come with us, and took all their tents and flocks just as if they were enemies as compensation for our lost face, w-aḥadnâhom aḥd al-kowmâni ḥakḥ waḡhana ḥelâl-hom w-bujûthom. Then, lodging them, in our tents for the time being, we gave them this advice, w-aşarna ‘alejhom şowren:

‘If you make up the quarrel, behold! we shall give you these flocks; if not, we shall keep all as the price of our face and shall return nothing to you, mâ nantîh.’ We had them all assembled, lajjemnâhom, in our chief’s tent. Medbar and Belhân also appeared, each with his surety:

‘Medbar, wilt thou be reconciled with thy cousin?’

‘I will, žâbleh.’

‘Turn to, anhed, thy surety!’

‘I turn to ‘Abtân.’

‘Wilt thou be reconciled, ‘Abtân?’

‘I will.’

‘Dost thou vouch for the reconciliation?’

‘I do.’

‘Next we asked Belhân: ‘Wilt thou be reconciled with thy cousin?’

‘I will.’

‘Who is thy surety?’

‘Râzi.’

‘Will Râzi guarantee that Belhân will keep peace?’

‘I do.’

‘Lay aside your arms, then embrace and kiss!’ This they did and became reconciled, and we now could give back to Belhân’s kin all that we had taken from them as the price of our face.”

Za‘al eben Râzi of the Kmuşa subdivision of the Sba‘a tribe had a son; Nejtûl eben Ġdejjân was the father of a daughter. Za‘al and Nejtûl were the sons of two different fathers but of the same mother. Za‘al reserved Nejtûl’s daughter for his son, claiming the cousin's right to his cousin. Nejtûl denied that the cousin's right was involved in this case, and his daughter declared that she would never marry Za'al's son. Za'al then began to persecute Nejtûl in such a hostile manner that the latter had to seek refuge in Raṭwân eben Meršed's tent and to ask his protection. Raṭwân, sending for Za'al, said to him:

"Count thine ancestors till thou findest one who is both thine and Nejtûl's. Then ask for his daughter, and I myself will bring her to thee, if necessary, with a saber in my hand, atakaffaha jammak bes-sejf raṣban."

Za'al began to count: "Râzi, the son of Šabr, the son of Šâjer, the son of Farağ, the son of Murabbet — and Murabbet is the fifth ancestor of Nejtûl." After this Za'al brought five pack camels: a five-year-old, rubâc, a four-year-old, teni, a three-year-old, ğedc, a two-year-old, hežž, and a yearling, mafrûd, and, making them kneel before Raṭwân's tent, spoke thus:

"O Kmuša, here ye see five ancestors connecting me with Nejtûl. I call you as witnesses. Jâ kmuša tarâkom šâhedîn 'ala 'adad al-ğdûd tarâhen nâjeḥât." Here Nejtûl, turning to Raṭwân, interposed:

"Za'al's son does not belong to my kin; he is not a cousin of my daughter and therefore cannot have her for five camels. Behold, I, thy protégé, demand such gifts as, according to ancient custom, are given in such cases, al-muḳalledât. Make Za'al bring also earrings valued at eight pounds, tarâci bta-mân nêrât, a necklace, ṭowk, the pendants to the necklace, ma'ânež, and also enough silk and cotton stuffs, so that I could walk on them from thy tent to mine."

When Raṭwân repeated Nejtûl's demands to Za'al, he refused them indignantly, saying that al-muḳalledât gifts had long been out of fashion.

"I let thee know my protégé's demands and ask thee to comply with them. If thou thinkest that the al-muḳalledât gifts are no longer given, bring me thine opinion confirmed by the judge Eben Rubejn and I shall believe thee. But if Eben Rubejn decides that thou must give what Nejtûl demands, then bring a surety that thou wilt do it; otherwise Nejtûl will marry his daughter to whomsoever he sees fit."

"Well, then, let Eben Rubejn decide according to the law. Snejdân is my surety. Come, Snejdân, grasp my moustache with both hands and declare in my name that I will give all that Nejtûl asks, if Eben Rubejn decides that the al-mukalledât gifts must be given."

Snejdân then held both ends of his moustache in his fingers and Za'al promised to give Nejtûl all he demanded, if Eben Rubejn should decide by affixing his seal that al-mukalledât were lawful. Going to Eben Rubejn, he soon returned with a decision in the affirmative. But, as neither Nejtûl nor Râtwân would abate anything of their demands, Za'al gave up his claim to Nejtûl's daughter, and she afterwards married another man.

A certain Rwejli was given to quarreling. Once he quarreled over a camel with a man more powerful than himself. Unable to obtain his right, he cut off a handful of hair from her tail, brought it to Sa'dûn eben Me'ğel, and said:

"Behold, this hair asks God's and thy protection in a matter of right!"

"Be it so, thou owner of the camel! The right should be helped to grow freely, for a just dispute must go on its well trodden road."

Then Sa'dûn mounted his mare, took the hair with him, and, accompanied by his slaves, rode to the herd of the disturber of the right, ḡattâ' al-ḡakk. The slaves soon found the camel with the clipped tail and began to drive her away. Alarmed by his herdsman's cries, the disturber of the right galloped up on his mare; but Sa'dûn shouted at him:

"Wilt thou let thy cousin have his right?"

"No."

"Know, then, that I shall help him to obtain it."

Having said this, he gave the she-camel to his protégé and dismissed him with the words: "In future protect thy camels thyself. May God protect me from all the evil thou causest by thine incessant quarreling!"

The parents of a married woman who had no other heirs died leaving a large herd of camels. The daughter wished to get at least two she-camels out of the estate, but the relatives of the dead couple refused to permit it, and she had to return to her tent in disgrace, rawwaḡat ḡaḡlâna 'ala bejtha. Not long afterwards the camp was moved to another place, and while she was pitching a tent she saw her parents' camels passing by. Running towards the herd, she selected two young she-camels, drove them to Křejtân eben al-Hûm's tent, and, making them kneel there, shouted to Ḳrejṭân: "Behold, of God and of thee I ask protection for these she-camels, as they are the property of my ahl, kin, by right." No sooner had she said this than one of her relatives came running to her and, rolling his eyes in a frenzy, ṭâjerât 'ajûneh, tried to drive the animals away. But the protector spoke sternly:

"Stand still, fellow! Art thou blind? I was asked to protect them. Not until thou allowest right to take its course and they are adjudged to thee, canst thou have them. Jammak jâ zelema ent 'amjân hadôlen mdaḥḥalât 'alejji bel-ḥaḥḥ elja-mšejt al-ḥaḥḥ w-ṣârat lak ḥodhen." The woman then chose a security, who took her opponent to the 'ârefa judge, 'Awejnân eben Sa'îd:

"Tell your story, eḥtečû," ordered the judge. The woman's representative began:

"What dost thou think, O 'Awejnân, of a woman crushed by the will of God? wêš 'endak bel-ḥurma maḳtû'at aṣ-sejḥa. We wish, if it be God's will, that thou shouldst not deprive her of her share of her parents' estate."

The opponent argued thus: "What dost thou think, 'Awejnân eben Sa'îd, of a wedded woman, alli birkubet ar-rağğâl, who wants to divide with me the herd of my relatives? tabi thâšerni beḥalâl hali. And yet she is no desolate orphan, having a noble husband living and two sons; w-hâdi mâ hi jetîme alhîn hi birkubet ar-rağğâl w-laha waladejn. I desire of God and of thee that thou deprivest her of the share of the herd of my ahl."

'Awejnân declared: "A case like this has been already decided. That decision is more than five years old and is therefore valid for this woman too. Both she-camels are hers."

In the spring of 1899 the Ḥwêtât, sanat al-ḥwêtât, attacked the Ḳmuṣa in their camp at al-Ḳrejṭât. The latter resisted bravely, but it was long before the enemy was finally beaten off. Many warriors were killed and many wounded. One of the Ḥwêtât, while fleeing, shot dead the grandson of Eben Ḳardûš. Then, realizing that it was impossible to escape, he drove his horse right into the Ḳmuṣa camp, leapt into Ršejd eben Mešreb's tent, and asked for protection, ṭâḥ bel-bejt w-daḥal ad-daḥîl w-silem. Ršejd's daughter shouted instantly to the pursuers:

"Stand still! There is a tent before you. He is our protégé," and sent a female slave for her father. Ršejd, though he was wounded in the left hand and bespattered with blood, posted himself in front of his tent and liberated the Ḥwêti, fakkeh, from the enraged crowd. But no sooner did Eben Ḳardûš learn that the enemy who had slain his grandson was in Ršejd's tent, than he came there galloping on his mare and offered Ršejd twenty camels if he would deliver the Ḥwêti to him. Ršejd declined with these words:

"Wouldst thou tarnish my tent, mâ tebûž bejti, so that I should become an object of contempt? atašajje° beh."

Protection of Enemy Who Voluntarily Surrenders

The Bedouins hate to shed blood and therefore spare the lives of their enemies as much as possible. Thus, when repulsing an attack and pursuing an enemy, they urge him to surrender, kâmow jamna°ûn, with the words:

"Yield it (thy mare, camel, or arms) for thy neck as long as I can help thee, ruddha °ala rkubtak metûli anfa°ak."

The enemy answers: "Lay God on me! hoṭṭ °alejji allâh."

"God on thee! °alejk allâh."

"I yield."

An enemy who has surrendered voluntarily is called manî°, pardoned or saved, because his adversary has pardoned him and saved his life, mana°eh °an rukubteh °an ad-dabeh. All the possessions of such a manî°, such as his horse, camel, clothes, arms, etc., become the property of his captor. The latter, however, lets him keep them for a while, merely taking the precaution of giving the manî° his headband, kerchief, or jacket as a sign and a warning, amûrijje, that nobody must harm him. The pardoner, mâne°, then throws himself into the fight anew, and not until the victory is complete will he look for his manî° in order to take him and the booty to his tent. There he despoils the captive of anything he desires and then dismisses him with a gift of some kind. Yet sometimes the manî° chooses to break his word and tries to escape. If his animal is unwounded and the fighters draw away to some distance, he creeps out of the enemy's troop and flees into the desert, jehoṭṭ al-ḳowm šanaḳ w-jenîr al-ḥala°. On his return home, elja° ṭabb °ala haleh, he will send, at the next opportunity, the part of the dress received from the mâne° back to him. A pardoned manî° of this kind is called bâjež, faithless. This will not injure him much with his fellow tribesmen, but among the enemy he must, if recaptured, expect death, as no one will pardon him again.

Bâjež, faithless, is also said of one who attacks a friend. Such a stain fell on the name of the Rwala when, in the spring of 1898, they attacked the 'Ebede in al-Ka'ra. The 'Ebede, under the chief Barğas eben Hdejb, asked Eben Ša'lân for peace. This was granted, and the messengers returned home in the evening; but on the following morning Eben Ša'lân's, Eben Meğel's, and Eben Mğejd's warriors attacked Barğas' camp again and completely looted it. To excuse himself Eben Ša'lân asserted that this particular troop had left twenty days before on a raid against the 'Amârât in the vicinity of Ker-bela but, when repulsed, attacked the 'Ebede on their way home, in ignorance of the fact that peace had just been concluded. The 'Ebede, however, do not believe this subterfuge but still maintain that they were attacked treacherously, bâ-kowhom bowka, and, whenever they sight a Rwejli in the desert, they utter their battle cry, jentaḥûn: "I am a rider protecting the 'Arfa herds, I a Sbê'i. O those faithless ones! O those blackened faces! Have you forgotten the peace dinner? Hajjâl al-'arfa sbê'i al-bowkân sowdân al-wğîh wên mṛaddâ-kom." A breach of faith is always condemned, for it is punished by God. Hence the saying: "A faithless one will never rise above the dogs, râ' al-bowk mâ jarķa' fowķ al-člâb."

PROTECTION IN CASES OF THIEVERY

To despoil a stranger belonging to a tribe not related to one's own is a proof of cunning and strength. But no chief will stoop to stealing. It is usually the sons of poorer families who go out in twos or threes to steal or to rob. A thief on foot is called ḥâjef or ḥanšûli; if mounted on horse or camel he is known as mu'ajjer. When the ma'âjîr arrive near the enemy's camp they hide and try to acquaint themselves with the whole terrain. After sunset they leave their horses or she-camels in a safe place and crawl near to the tents. One of them remains at a certain spot about five hundred paces from the tents; the other advances cautiously till he finds a good horse or a she-camel which he thinks worth stealing. If he succeeds, he hurries back with the capture to his comrade and then to the place where their own animals are hidden. Tying the stolen animals to their own, he then leads them all a few hundred meters farther but away from the place where his comrade is stationed. The latter keeps his place at least one hour longer, waiting to see if by chance the theft has been discovered in the camp. Should an alarm be given and search made for the stolen animals, he tries to attract attention to himself and then leads the pursuers in a different direction from that taken by his comrade, until, after eluding them altogether, he makes haste to join him. Then, mounting the captured animal, he makes his escape while the pursuers are following the wrong scent.

If a thief is seen crawling near, he may be shot at sight. If he is caught, his captors beat him, jaktolûneh, revile him, jaṣahmûneh, and, if he is unknown to them, tie him fast to prevent him from running away and stealing something after all. After sunrise breakfast is given him and he is free to go wherever he wishes. In case the thief with the stolen mare escapes and his watching comrade is caught, kaẓîb, the latter may be killed on the spot but must not be held in fetters to compel his comrade to return the stolen animal. Fettering is not an established custom, mâ hi 'âdaten sâni-jaten, among friends. A member of a hostile tribe, when caught in camp at night, is generally put in the irons used for fettering a mare's forelegs in the evening, and he is then called rabîṭ. In order to save his life he must offer some animals of his herd as a ransom. In this case it is said that "the captive sent his movable property instead of his neck, ar-rabîṭ kallaṭ ḥalâleh židdâm rukubteh."

To steal from a fellow tribesman or even from a neighbor is considered a disgrace. A thief of this type is called bawwâk, neṭûl, or nedû. No one will suffer him to come to his tent. Should he enter a tent in another camp, any one knowing him will instantly call the owner's attention to him: "This man is a bawwâk. Let him not sleep in your place! Hâda bawwâk lâ thallûh jamrah 'endakom." However, if his sons are known to be honest, they are not made to suffer for their father's shame.

If anyone can show indisputable proofs that a fellow tribesman has stolen, for instance, a firearm from him and if the other denies it, the robbed man takes two or three of the offender's camels, drives them before the tent of a more powerful neighbor, and, after obtaining his protection for them, adḥalhen 'alejh, brings his witnesses. The protector must then aid him in obtaining his rights, jimašši-l-ḥaḳḳ. First he goes to the accused and asks him to return the stolen weapon or to declare on ḡehîra oath (see above, p. 430) that he has stolen nothing. Should he refuse to do either, the protector will declare: "Behold! So-and-So resists, although the weapon belonging to X is in his belly. The she-camels for whom the latter has asked my protection from this day are his own. Beware everyone who would take them away from him. Behold! they stand before my face."

His honor, his good name are the principal motives of a Rwejlî's charity. There is nothing he fears as much as dishonor to his good name and a reflection on his character, or, as he says, the blackening of his face. Should he fail to guard his protégé effectually, to get compensation for him who walks before his countenance, should he disregard his guest: in all these cases he is threatened with the blackening of his face. The wronged man then ties a black rag to a long stick or to a spear and cries:

"This is the black flag of So-and-So. I put myself under his protection and he has not freed me; I suffered loss before his face; I was his guest and he has not fed me. May Allâh blacken his face! Hâdi râje sowda' flân eben flân dahâlt 'alejh w-lâ fakni râḥ rizḳi bwaḡheh mâ 'aššâni sawwad allâh waḡheh." Naturally the people are eager to learn the details and on hearing them run to the accused to mete out justice.

PROTECTION FROM OPPRESSORS; RECOGNITION OF BENEFACTORS

If a man of power oppresses a weaker one and the latter is unable to defend his honor himself, he ties a piece of black tent cloth to a stick or spear, rides around the camp of his kin, and shouts:

"My friends, O ye people who give protection! know ye that my face has been insulted by the powerful So-and-So; rabî jâ hla-l-ḥamijje ḳaṭṭa' waḡhi flân al-belijje."

This is a sign to his kinsmen to mount their horses or camels and to parade before him shouting their battle cry, jē'arzûn 'endeh w-jentahûn: "X, behold, here I stand before thee, O X! jâ flân 'ajnêk [sic] jâ flân."

When all are assembled, they tear up and throw away the black flag, surround the tent of their powerful neighbor, and compel him both to right the wrong done and to give compensation.

When he has complied with every demand, the powerful man now asks his weaker opponent to declare this publicly. When that is done, he ties a white cloth, šowra, to a stick or spear, just as was done with the black material before, and makes a circuit of all the camps in the vicinity, waving his flag and crying:

"We have done our duty, kazejna lâzemna."

This he does in order to inform all the wronged one's relatives that a reconciliation has been effected, for otherwise he might be attacked by some of them. Moreover, he wants all his fellow tribesmen to know that no further reproach may be brought against him.

A white flag is also flown by a grateful enemy in honor of his benefactor. Whoever on a raid or in a fierce fight or when being pursued has been saved from certain death, on his return flies a white flag in front of his chief's tent and says:

"So-and-So — may Allâh whiten his face! — on a day when life was nearing its end and death was stepping forward, saved the neck which moves here before you. Oh, may Allâh whiten his face! Flân bajjaz allâh wağheh jowm akfat al-ħajja w-akbalat al-menijje fakk ar-rukubat al-mâlijje."

Then two of the assembly stand up, inquiring: "Whose is the white flag flying here? lemin hal-bêza al-mabnijje."

"It belongs to So-and-So, may Allâh whiten his face!"

"We testify that he is deserving of a white flag. He is a brave youth who acted, as he did, with deliberation. Hail to him, by Allâh himself! Jistâhel al-bêza rlaşen ana-lha w-hejh hejh jā lallâh."

From the chief's tent the news of the honored man's deeds spreads through the whole camp, the guests present, of course, bring the news to other camps, and before a month is out the main topic of conversation at all the camp fires for hundreds of kilometers around is the story of how X has saved Y from certain death.

BEGGARS; LOST ARTICLES

There are no beggars among the Rwala. An impoverished man is helped by his kin, his clan, and the chief. And yet sometimes beggars are to be seen walking through the camps.

They are of the Šlejb and Šarârât tribes. Such a pauper, za'îf, comes to the women's compartment in the tent and whimpers:

"O mistress of this tent! behold, I am, by Allâh himself, naked and my family hungers. Therefore I come to Allâh and to this tent; w-ana ġâj ĵamm allâh w-ĵamm hal-bejt."

If there is want in the tent, too, or if they are not willing to give anything, they simply say:

"Run along, we have nothing to give! ķawṭer mâ 'endana šien."

A chief could not, of course, let a beggar go away in that manner, and other Rwala also try to do as much as they can for him. They do it, partly from love of Allâh, ilâhijje, partly because they like to hear the beggar's thanks and hope that their charity may be extolled elsewhere, ješkor w-jedkor.

To conceal a lost article is not considered dishonest as long as nobody calls for it. The finder is not required to search for its owner; he must search for his own property.

Many things get lost during the migrations. The camels laden with tents, furniture, rugs, garments, etc., rub against each other or against bushes, roll in the sand, start trotting suddenly, and lose one parcel after another of their load all along the route. Many of these lost things can be easily hidden and appropriated for the finder's own use, as the dress and personal effects of the Rwala and the furnishings of their tents are almost without exception similar in their appearance. It is hard to prove that this or that article does not belong to the person in possession. A dishonest person or one who has no fear of Allâh will not return what he has found even when asked to do so by the owner himself. The latter usually either hires a public crier or, mounting a horse or camel, himself rides slowly through the camp in the evening when all the people are in their tents, shouting: "Oh, thou who hast seen such and such a thing and esteemest Allâh more than that which thou hast concealed! O thou who wilt keep quiet about a thing of no value, be careful that thou takest it not for that which is dear to thee, that the place where thy camels rest at night will not be left empty; and that thou mayest not call for help with no man willing to hear thee! Jâ min 'ajjan aš-ši al-flâni w-hw jedkor allâh 'an al-ṛaba' jâ čâmen al-bâli ta'awwazteh bel-ṛâli jašbaḥ mrâḥak ḥâli tsîḥ w-lâ lak wâli."

"Whoever has seen such and such a thing or heard or received news of it, or knows anything of it, let him remember God and not hide it; jâ min 'ajjan al-ṛaraz al-flâni aw hebbet aw 'allem w-hw jedkor allâh 'an al-raba'."

When a man happens to know something of the lost article and hears the shouting, he says: "Come hither and take thy thing!"

If anything belonging to a traveling merchant, Kubejsi, is lost, he too rides through the camp shouting at the top of his voice:

"O ye who hear this voice, praise the Prophet! He is for you the first, 'Ali is the second, and Fâtma, the prophet's daughter, is the third. Who has seen this and that?"

The finder of the lost article, if willing to return it, shouts back to the crier: "O thou owner of that thing, come hither! jâ râ'i-l-ṛaraz elhâk elhâk."

But if a lost article which has been proclaimed publicly and which has evidently been concealed with the intention of keeping it, is found, the culprit is reviled by the whole camp and soundly thrashed by his kinsfolk, jenakkelûneh tenkîl, because he has disgraced them.

CHAPTER XVIII

HOSPITALITY

SALUTATIONS

A salutation, if returned, is a guarantee of safety in the desert, as-salâm salâme. If a stranger travels unaccompanied by a ḥawî through the territory of a tribe unknown to him and salutes someone—be it only a little girl—and is saluted in return, he may be reasonably certain that he will be neither attacked nor robbed, for even a little girl with all her kin will protect him. Should the fellow tribesmen of the girl attack and rob him, mâḥûd, he has only to ask the help of her kinsfolk, who must take his part. The girl is the best witness: “A traveler saluted me at such and such a place, of about such and such an age, dressed thus and so, riding on a she-camel,” of which she also gives a description. Frequently even an enemy saves himself in this manner when hotly pursued. Realizing that he cannot escape, he suddenly changes his course, returns by a roundabout way to the camp of his pursuers, salutes a child, and, taking its hand, allows himself to be led to the tent of the parents. The adult Bedouins, being more cautious, do not answer at once when saluted by a man they do not know. Especially if two or three are riding together and approach a camp at night, the guard replies to their salute thus:

“Ye are outlawed; I shall not return your salutation; tarâkom mwassedîn w-lâ ‘alejkom radd as-salâm.” For an outlawed one, mwassed, is treated like an enemy to whom a salutation is of no use whatever.

The salutation of the traveling Bedouins consists of many sayings, questions, and answers.

The shortest one is: “Be strong [So-and-So]! kaww [flân].”

The saluted person replies to this: “Welcome to us! jâ hala.”

The traveler then asks: “How art thou? čejf ent,” and is answered: “May Allâh salute thee! allâh jesallimk.”

“I wish success to thee, al-‘awâfi.”

"May Allâh grant success to thee! allâh je'âfik."

"How is thy health? čejf hâlak."

"May Allâh preserve thy health! allâh jesallem hâlak."

"How are thy little sons? čejf 'ejâlak."

"They are well. May Allâh grant success to thee and preserve all that thou lovest! bel-âfi allâh je'âfik w-jesallem râlik."

The ordinary part of a salutation being exhausted by the foregoing, more particular questions, which are of great importance in the desert, may be asked:

"Whither bound? wên ent." "Where dost thou come from? min ên ġît." "From where dost thou bless us? min ên hajjît." "Tell us some news of the territory thou hast crossed, 'allemna b'ulûmaha." "Give us the reports! hât al-'ulûm."

It takes some time to tell of the raids undertaken and the booty obtained, of pastures, watering places, etc., as these accounts, 'ulûm, in the desert take the place of newspapers and the welfare of the traveler or even of the whole clan often depends on them. If both the saluting men are riding on camels, they halt and, letting their animals graze at will, press their crossed hands against the front saddle knob, sink their heads, converse, and listen. If on foot, they squat on their heels, support themselves by their staves, and talk. At last one of them puts the question:

"Thou didst not mention to us thy last hosts, mâ dakart lena al-ma'âzîb."

"They camp at such and such a place. Ye may be there before evening, terawwehûnahom." "They camp not far from your face," or "on your right (or left) hand."

If the travelers ride close by a camp, there is always someone there who goes out to stop them and learn what they know, so that he can relate it in the chief's tent to the others. A traveling Bedouin will hardly ever conceal the position of his late hosts' camp, but women gathering dry fuel or hay almost always keep the whereabouts of their own camp secret and try to direct the traveler to some other camp. They fear lest the unknown man be a spy of the enemy or a robber, and, even if he is not, they do not care for a guest, who naturally adds to their work. At the same time the inquisitiveness of their sex and the desire to bring news home with them, impels them to call the traveler back on the pretext of pointing out the road better. The rider sits in his saddle, the woman stands sideways to him, covering her nose with her left hand, and explains but soon begins to put questions, the answering of which keeps the rider busy.

If a traveler rides close by the herds, the herdsmen run to him from all sides, salute, ask questions, and finally beg: "Would you not give a drink to a thirsty one? mâ tesžûn al-atšân."

As a rule, the travelers say they have no water at all. "We have no water, mâ 'endana mâ," which means that they will not be delayed. As the water is laden on a camel, it would be necessary first to stop her, to open the bag, pour the water into a pannikin, tie the bag up again, start the camel going, and make sure that the water is not dripping from the bag. Many a thirsty man hardly waits for an answer, but springs to the camel carrying the water, partly opens the bag, drinks, and keeps leaping after the moving animal, with water running down his chin. Having drunk his fill, he holds the bag with his left hand and with his right tries to stop the animal, so that he can tie the bag as it was. The camel, murmuring, resists, the water flows out, and the traveler becomes angry at the loss of water which was to last him for several days. For this reason water is generally refused to the herdsmen unless they bring along fresh camel milk; in this case they are given water in exchange. More pity is shown by the mounted traveler to one on foot. To such he always gives a drink if the next watering place or camp is more than half a day distant.

TRAVELERS' DITTIES

Travelers amuse themselves with the singing of ditties, taṭwîh, a word which means literally to fill with passion, to cry at the top of one's voice. They are sung in a high voice, ṛana' b'âli ḥesseh. One of the riders begins to sing, and as soon as he finishes the first half of the verse it is repeated by the second rider or the whole troop, the first continuing in the meantime to sing the second half of the verse. When he has finished, he intones the first half of the second verse, his comrades keeping silent the while and joining in only when it is complete. In this manner a single double verse is often repeated for a half an hour or even longer.

My she-camel I shall not yield
Even if they offer my sweetheart for it.
We are resolved to die from exhaustion,
Should our heroes not do as was agreed.

The singer will not yield his she-camel to the enemy even if offered in exchange his sweetheart, who has been refused to him by her kinsfolk. Without booty he will not return. Should he and his fellow travelers not be met at the appointed place by their companions bringing food and water, they will not ask these of their enemies but will try to return home with the captured camels across the desert.

Hasabt al-koşrat [sic] tetawwel w-bejti tanîb lebejtah lejteni čefijjet leşowki kill mâ-ltatam habbejtah.

I thought the friendship would last longer and my tent be pitched beside hers.
O that I were my beloved's kerchief, for whenever she covered her chin with it I should kiss her.

RECEPTION OF THE TRAVELER

When the traveler wants to enter a tent as a guest, as a rule he approaches from the rear, stopping his camel by the side of the men's quarters. The inhabitants of the tents he is passing examine him at leisure, well knowing that he is not coming to them, as then he would not ride along the fronts of their tents. At the same time the people in the tents whose backs are turned to the rider take stock of him through every gap, women as well as men. They all are interested to learn who he is and where he will dismount. But when he is near the end of the camp, men come out running from many tents, seize his animal by the rein, and try to lead it to their tents, quarreling among themselves.

One shouts: "May I lose my right hand if thou wilt not dismount at my tent! 'alejje talâk min jimnâi."

A second: "May I lose my head! 'alejje talâk min râsi."

A third: "May I lose the faculty of begetting! 'alejje talâk min mahzemi.'"

Another: "May I lose my wife!" or "May I lose my gentility!" alejje talâk min al-mruwwa."

Should the traveler still hesitate, someone will say: "Ġira on thee! Thou art a maġġûr. Thou must come to me. Thou shalt not violate my ġira, thou shalt not make a perjurer of me, lâ tekṭa' ġirati." To adjure anybody by the word ġira is a proof of the greatest earnestness and determination. A maġġûr is one so adjured. To persist in refusal after this word has been used would be a direct insult to the person giving the invitation.

A traveler well supplied with food and wishing a night's rest usually declares that he does not desire to be a guest, but merely a neighbor, and encamps by the side of one of the last tents. The owner of that tent then becomes both neighbor and protector of the traveler, helping him to unload, bringing him fuel and curdled milk, supping and sleeping with him, and in the morning helping him to load again.

However, when the stranger desires hospitality, he will turn to the side of the tent he has chosen and stop at the men's compartment. Nobody will leave the tent, for everybody inside is watching the arrival through the gaps between the tent walls. Common decency requires that the stranger should have time to put his dress in order and to exchange a few words with his companions and guide. He also keeps his arms with him. At last a slave or servant comes out of the tent, seizes the newcomer's baggage, fetters his camel's left foreleg, and loosens her girth. It is not considered correct for the guest to enter the tent at once; he should stay a while with his animal, so that the slaves or servants can make room for him. The women pick out the best rugs, quilted bedcovers, and pillows and hand them to the slaves, who in the meantime have swept out the men's compartment and arranged a seat for the guest.

A prominent guest will be met before the tent by the host accompanied by all his sons and by all present at that particular time. The host and the guest will then lay their hands on each other's shoulders and kiss each other on both cheeks, ġetaḥâbebûn. Nobody remains seated, jekûmûn bwaġ-heh. If it is said of a man that everybody will rise when he comes, kill al-ġelîse tekûm bwaġ-heh, it means that he is a man universally esteemed. The guest greets all those present with the words: "As-salâm 'alejkom," to which they return: "W-'alejkom as-salâm."

The newcomer must salute first, as-salâm ‘ala-l-ğâj. Then he removes his shoes and takes the seat reserved for him by the host. While he sits supporting himself with his left hand on the pillow or camel saddle and holding his guiding stick in the right, all present, with the host at their head, salute him. If he happens to know somebody there, he salutes him as follows:

“Be strong, O So-and-So! ḵaww flân,” the answer of the man thus honored being:

“Welcome to us! jâ hala.”

If he does not know anybody or wishes to shorten the ceremony, the guest himself exclaims:

“I wish strength to all present, whatsoever be their names; ḵaww killen bismeh.”

A common Bedouin will fetter his camel and loosen the saddle himself, then take his saddlebag, enter the tent, salute, and sit down where he pleases or where there is room. If of modest disposition he pushes his way to the back. The host, on the other hand, either when the guest is known to him or when he wishes to talk with him, calls out:

“Come nearer! fut ġâj,” to which the guest replies:

“[My place] is pleasant, I like it, zên ġâjezen lije.”

If an acquaintance approaches the tent, its owner shouts to him from afar: “May Allâh preserve this man! ḥajj allâh har-rağğâl.”

The guest, still in the saddle, answers: “May Allâh preserve thy family and thyself, too, for wishing me a long life! allâh jehajji nabâk w-al-muḥajji.”

When in the tent the host inquires of his guest: “How fare those that are behind thee [thy family]? čejf min warâk.”

The guest repays this civility with: “There is success with them, O thou with whom success is a possession! beḥejr jâ mâl al-ḥejr.” Or else he says merely: “I wish thee success.”

Then the host repeats his wish: “May Allâh give them health! asâḥom ṭajjiöîn,” the guest replying: “They ask for nothing but thy health, mâ jenšedûn illa ‘an ṭibak.”

If the newcomer is known to no one present the host inquires: “O guest of Allâh the Most Gracious, whence dost thou hail? Of what Arabs? We do not know thee. Jâ zejġ ar-rahmân min ên ent min ajġ ‘arab mâ ḥenna ‘ârefînak.”

Should the host notice that the guest’s answers are evasive or that he contradicts himself, he declares: "By Allâh! we do not trust thee. Say who knows thee! W-allâh mâ ħenna meṣaddežīnak hât alli 'ârefk."

If nobody is found in the camp to vouch for the new-comer, he must leave at once, either on foot or on his animal. The host fears that he may be a robber who will steal from him or his guests at night and then disappear. This caution is due to the fact that the host is responsible for any deed his guest may commit while on his grounds.

A common guest addresses the chief with the title: "O thou long living! O thou who art protected from evil! jâ ṭwîl al-omr jâ mĥafûz."

Sometimes a guest arrives just when there is no flour, wheat, or tummen (a kind of rice) in the tent. The owner with his whole family may have been living for weeks on milk alone, but the guest must receive something better. In such a case the wife goes from tent to tent, begging: "We have received a guest and we are out of food. O friends, we have nothing to set before him; lend us something so that we can do our duty. Ĥenna mežâfîr w-enṣefna jâ rab w-ħenna-kfarna min aṭ-ṭa'âm ekreżowna šien [sic] nesteter beh." The neighbors help her to the best of their ability — one lending a little flour, another some tummen or some butter, and there are also tents where she is told: "Come to us to-day and thou wilt get the supper thou needest for thy guest."

If the guest arrives in the forenoon, he gets both dinner and supper, ṛada w-ʿaša. The meals are brought either by the host himself or his son or are served by a slave, with the host urging: "Hasten to thy luck, O guest of the Most Gracious! Eat! May Allâh preserve thee!" A prominent guest either eats alone or invites the host or some chief who is present to eat with him.

A common guest eats with the others, the host, however, deciding the order of those who are to sit together. When the dish is already surrounded by six or eight persons and the host notices one more he wishes to invite, he asks: "If you can find a gap between you, invite also So-and-So! en ĉân 'endakom tenijje 'azzemow flân."

"The place is large! Come hither, O So-and-So! al-maṭraħ wasî kum ġâj jâ flân."

Coughing or sneezing during the meal is to be avoided. He who has finished eating licks his fingers clean, drops his hand on his knees, and waits for the others to finish. The host urges him to eat and also bids the others to remain at the dish and keep on eating, but they answer:

"Thou hast not restricted us. May Allâh increase thy welfare! Mâ kaṣṣart allâh ječatter hejrak," to which the host replies: "I wish you good digestion and much success! hana' w-awâfi."

The guests: "May Allâh preserve thee for more success! meḥajjik allâh ala-l-mejsûr."

The host: "[And may he preserve you] to success and booty! mejsûren rânemen." Or: "May Allâh preserve you from the moment you leave us to the moment you reach your homes! allâh meḥajjikom min jowm mašejtom elja mâ lafejtom."

The guests: "And may Allâh expand thy heart with joy! w-bak rahḥab allâh."

If any one rides past the tent where the guests happen to be eating, the host calls to him: "O youth, direct thy steps hither! The food lies before thee! jâ walad enṭaḥ ġâj az-zâd bwağhak."

An invitation of this kind is considered by the rider as a favorable sign that he will succeed in what he has set out to accomplish. Therefore he does not stop but merely answers: "I am not inclined to eat!"

The host: "But think of thy welfare!"

He answers: "May Allâh increase thy welfare" and rides on joyfully.

A host who has killed an animal for his guest draws with its blood a long mark on both sides of the neck of the guest's camel.

When a guest of importance arrives at a Rwala camp, he takes lodgings with his closest acquaintance, where he also sups the first night and accepts invitations from others for the days following. This custom is called dawrijje. It is not done to spare the host but to honor the guest — for the host could be compensated for his outlay in some other way, if necessary.

A guest should not change his host without good reason. Should he think that he is a burden to his host or that he is neglected, killet hefle, and make a complaint to the host, he might be told: "Then be off and look for another host!" This, however, happens very seldom, even if the guest should stay in the tent five or six days at a stretch.

DURATION OF HOSPITALITY AND DEPARTURE OF GUESTS

The usual or proper hospitality extends to three days and a third of the fourth day. The first day should be devoted to salutations, salâm, the second to entertainment, ta'âm, and the third to discussion, kalâm. The third of the fourth day is counted as lasting from sunset to the appearance of the morning star. Between this time and sunrise is the correct time for the guest to depart. But he who prepares to leave only after the dew has evaporated on the fourth day, causes his host a good deal of annoyance, for the latter probably wants to begin the day's march to a new camp site or has to watch his camels while their herdsman is eating his breakfast; hence the proverb: "A spotted snake and a guest who either comes or leaves when the dew has gone are esteemed alike! al-ḥajje ar-raḳṭa° walla-ḡ-zejf al-meẓḥi."

If the guest, on the third day of his stay, inquires which way to take, the host describes it in detail as if he had to ride at night time: "If ye start at midnight when it is completely dark, go through that defile yonder, elja ġāhamtom edrebow ma° hadāk ar-rî." With the Ḥarb tribe alone can the guest leave the tent at any time he likes. Hence the saying: "Whether we leave early in the morning, or when the dew passes, or at noon, in the Ḥarb territory we shall find a road anywhere! elja ṣbaḥna wa-ṣtebaḥna w-elja° ẓaḥḥejna w-taṛad-dejna dijār ḥrûb killha drûb."

For three and a third days the host will protect his guest and vouch for him while in his tent. Should he steal anything, the host must give compensation. After his departure the guest remains three and a third days more under the protection or before the countenance of his late host, who will protect him against his fellow tribesmen even to the distance of 150 kilometers. In case the guest is robbed in that time, he returns to his recent host, explains what has happened to him, and the latter, summoning his whole kin, says to them:

"So-and-So was our guest. Our salt and our food are still in his belly, and yet he was wronged by our fellow tribesmen. Flân ẓâfana w-melḥana w-zâdana bebaṭneh w-natal min ġemâ'atna." For it is the duty of the host's kin to assist him in recovering all that his guest has been robbed of.

When, before the expiration of the three and a third days allotted to the guest's protection, he finds hospitality in one or even two other tents, the first host's duty to protect him, 'eddet al-wağh, is by no means ended. Should any wrong be done to him, he first goes to the one of his hosts whom he believes to have the least power. If the latter knows that the accused man holds a stronger position than he with all his kin he says:

"I could do nothing against them. Hasten to thine other host; his saber will reach them all. Hadowla-na mâ akwa' alejhom enhağ ila' mu'zebk rejri sejfeh tâjel 'ala-l-ğamî'."

But if the guest has only one host, who is not very powerful, whilst his violator is a member of a powerful kin, the host with all his kin will conduct the guest to a prominent chief, put himself under his protection, and in this manner fulfill his obligation. No chief would think of refusing to protect a man so situated, since it is the duty of the strong to protect the weak, or, as is said in the desert: "The big horses protect the small ones, twâl al-hejl tehmi kşâraha," or again: "The weak seeks the protection of the strong, and no one that is weak must be injured, as long as there is a strong man among men; az-za'îf jelûd bel-kwi w-lâ jezâm za'îf w-ben-nâs kawî."

When a guest is found killed, the person finding him reports it to the host with whom he stayed in the last three and a third days, who is then bound to make a search for the murderer. If it is proved that the deed was committed by a fellow tribesman of the host, the latter will compel him to pay the blood price. If the murderer was a stranger, the host will simply send word to his relatives: "Your brother was killed by So-and-So."

After sunrise of the fourth day the host's duty of protection terminates, and he himself may then attack and rob his departed guest.

POEMS RELATING TO GUESTS AND HOSPITALITY

A Rwejli of generous disposition likes to receive guests. They will tell him all kinds of news, praise his generosity in other camps, and furnish him with the opportunity of showing his power should anything befall them. There are poems giving evidence of this.

1. *Tara-l-ḥawi w-aṣ-zejf w-at-tâlet al-ğâr
mitl aṣ-sala' mâ bên farzen w-sunna*
2. 'ajben 'alejna zejfena talḥakeh an-nâr wa-jmânana lesjûfen janḥazenna
3. elja 'atejna-ṣ-zejf mâ ṣall beha kâr naḳ'od 'an zên al-mebâni b'enna.

1. Behold, a companion on the road, a guest, and thirdly a neighbor
Like a prayer are protected by Allâh's law and tradition.
2. Ours the shame if a shot should hit our guest
As long as our right arms can lift our swords.
3. If we yield our guest, no work is left in our land for us,
We shall then sit behind a heap of branches instead of in a fine tent.

The poet is unknown. Judging from the first verse, where theological rules and traditions are mentioned, he was either a settler or semi-fellâh. The reciters were Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd and Mindîl al-Ḳaṭ'i.

Verse 3. He who yields his guest to the enemy loses his honor and must as an outcast leave both his tent and his kin. No tribe will adopt him. If he will not leave the desert for the settled territory he must wander about as a hunter or robber. Lacking a tent he must shelter himself in bad weather behind tree branches heaped up in a semicircle. There he lights a fire by which he sleeps. A camp made in this manner is called 'enna.

1. *Low ṣâḳ ṣadri kilt ḥottû ġedâmîr
w-awṣed nâri mitl nâr al-ḥarâbe*
2. *tumm aḥtaref w-ağîb 'owğ al-menâżîr
w-aḥottthen 'ala ġamren 'akâb eltihâbeh*
3. edlâl tarka 'ala ḥâmi al-čîr tidlež čema silk al-ḥarîr en ṣabâ beh
4. elja ġann ma' al-ḥall aš-šemâli da'âtîr malzûm bel-ġimna ṇanni ar-reḳâbe
5. *w-en ṣâna'at naḥott čabšen ma' al-mîr
w-en 'âṣabat jesidd ḳowlen halâ beh.*

1. When in my breast I feel a burden I say: "Throw on logs
And light a fire big as a war beacon." [of wood]
2. Then I go out to fetch pots
And place them on red-hot coals.

3. From pots standing in the fireplace
A thin stream of coffee flows like a silk thread winding on a reel.
4. If travelers come to us by the northern path
We must daub the necks of their riding camels with blood.
5. And if [this world] allows, we shall offer a wether with boiled wheat;
If not, then the word 'welcome' will take its place.

The poet was Eben 'Abejče, mayor of the settlement K̄na', lying on the road leading through the Nefūd from Syria to Neġd. The reciters were M̄hammad al-Ḳaẓīb, Ġwād al-Āni, and Ḥmār abu 'Awwād.

Verse 1. Zâḳ ṣadri signifies a gloomy mood, depression, worry. Ġedâmîr are thick logs of wood cut from palm stems, etel or raza. Ḥmār pronounced this consistently zetâmîr. 2. 'Owġ al-menâẓîr are coffeepots with long, crooked spouts. 3. Ġîr is a blacksmith's red-hot forge, a heap of red-hot coal. The word jidlež is used when speaking of a boy whose urine flows in a long, thin stream. 4. Ḥall is a path or trail over sandy ground. 5. Mîr is the same as the Rwejlî 'ejš, boiled crushed wheat covered with meat. In the Neġd settlements, as with the Bedouins in general, wheat is quite a rarity, as it has to be brought all the way from Syria or Irak. If there is no grain, there is neither 'ejš nor bread, and the guest must be content with dates, meat, milk, and kind words.

1. Jâ klejb šubb an-nâr jâ klejb šubbah
'alejk šabbah w-al-ḥaṭab jîġâbi
2. 'alejj-ani taklîṭ hejlah w-ḥabbah
w-'alejk taklîṭ ad-dlâl al-'edâbi
3. w-ḳalleṭ leha min ġazel rimten behabba
w-eḥmes elja' nâmat 'ajûn al-ehdâbi
4. bniġren jenabbi tâli-l-lejl nabba'
w-en endakḳ târa tekel dîben jenâbi
5. 'asa-lja šabbejtha wa-šlahab bah
teġdeb lena jâ klejb sirâten riġâbi
6. w-en žâza' al-masbû' ḥaṭwa-l-ġlebbâ
w-ḥelw taḳḳ 'ašijehom biržâbi
7. al-wâlme jâ klejb lirab' šubbah
w-ar-rizeḳ 'end-alli jenašši-s-saḥâbi
8. bnišriġjeten jâ klejb ṣalfen mahabbah
muċatfin w-sowḳehom bel-'ažâbi

9. bsažwijjeten jâ klejb saľfen mahabba
w-en habb nisnâsen tekel samm dâbi
10. ehreğ lehom jâ klejb herğ al-mahabba
w-low ġannab at-tîne mutîn al-‘alâbi
11. sawâľfen aħla min šahâlîl ġubba
w-aşfa min as-semn al-ğedîd al-‘arâbi
12. w-čam čabš muşlâhen lirâseh nedubbah
w-min mazrab as-sičîn nuħanni-r-ržâbi
13. w-ħalben nuşûħ mâ maša’ bel-musabba
w-low hâk al-ağwâd aħtû-l-halâ bi 14. w-aš-šejħ w-ar-râ‘i bdarb al-muħabba
w-al-ħalk ‘end allâh killehom biħsâbi
15. až-zejf zejf allâh w-lâ bhom musabba
w-al-ħâzer nîmeddeh ‘an al-‘adâbi.

1. O Klejb, light the fire, O Klejb, light it!
To light it is thy duty; the fuel will be brought.
2. To prepare cardamom and coffee beans is my duty,
Thine to have the tarnished pots ready.
3. Lay upon the fire more fuel, rimt with bark, [asleep.
And do the roasting as soon as my long-lashed eyes fall
4. The mortar's voice will be heard at the night's end,
And a rap on its brim will sound like the howl of a wolf.
5. Mayest thou, when thou lightest the fire and its flame flares up,
Mayest thou, O Klejb, bring us night pilgrims from far away,
6. While a coward presses under him a disobedient wife.
Oh, how pleasant is their sticks' tap, tap, on the she-camel's neck!
7. What is left from yesterday, O Klejb, serve to the common visitors,
For our gain is in them only who do chase the clouds
8. In a dry, icy wind, O Klejb, that blows piercingly.
With hands folded they sit and urge only with heels
9. In a pouring rain with a sharp gale,
Or again in a light, moist breeze like snake poison.
10. To them, O Klejb, speak the language of love, Even if into my mud hut a proud, stiff-necked man has come.
11. Tell them what is sweeter than dates on twigs from Ġubba
And purer than melted butter bought of Arabs.

12. Oh, how many fat wethers' heads have we thrown away
And besmeared the necks of she-camels from the wound made by the knife.
13. A pure heart seeks no gossip,
And should those heroes refuse to salute me (I shall salute them).
14. For both the chief and the herdsman should walk the path of love,
As Allâh keeps the account of each being.
15. A guest is Allâh's guest and must not be insulted,
And this one we shall protect against wrong.

The composer of this poem, Drejjem az-Zulmâwi, lived in the settlement of Kna' and was famous for his hospitality. Whoever traveled from Hâjel to Damascus or from Syria to the Šammar or ẖuṣmân territory stopped with him. Once, in a cold and rainy night, a band returning from a raid reached his abode and knocked on the door of his mud hut. He instantly awakened his servant and ordered him to prepare supper for the guests, many of whom had not before even saluted him. The reciter was Fhejd, a camel herdsman, native of Kna'.

Verse 4. When pounding coffee, the pestle is first beaten against the center of the mortar on the coffee beans, then on its brim, and is tapped two or three times to shake off the coffee sticking to the pestle and the brim; this sound is much like the deep howl of the wolf. 6. Masbû' is a man afraid to go out on a raid, preferring to stay at home near his wife. Ġlebba is a woman who has not married for love but has been bought by her husband. She cannot run away from him because her kinsfolk would have to return what they got for her, and the husband will not divorce her, hating to lose what she has cost him. She shows dissatisfaction by everlasting opposition and quarreling, especially when she finds her husband to be a coward. Ṭaḳḳ 'aṣijehom is the tapping with sticks on the she-camels' necks to make them kneel on the ground before a tent or house, where the riders are to be guests. 7. It is for the guests that fresh coffee is made, whereas the other visitors who were attracted by the beating of the pestle in the mortar must be content with yesterday's warmed-up coffee. A saḥâba is a dark low cloud, through which the rider has to pass, inhaling its moist smell the while. The sahâba is always followed by rain. 8. Nisriĵje is a dry, icy wind of high velocity, a gale. When caught in it, the rider places his right hand in his left and his left hand in his right sleeve, pressing them to his breast to keep his cloak from being opened by the wind and urging his animal on with heels only. 9. He sits in the same posture when a heavy rain, accompanied by a piercing wind, beats against his face. Nisnâs is a light, moist wind which cuts the face and penetrates the clothes to the bones. 10. Mutîn al-‘alâbi is one who, disliking to bend his neck or to salute, is full of conceit. Aṭ-ṭîne or beĵt aṭ-ṭîne is a hut built of large unbaked bricks. 11. Šahâlîl are the single date-covered twigs of the date bunch, called ġenw. The settlement of Ġubba lies north-northwest of Kna^o in the Nefûd. 12. The host paints on both sides of the necks of the she-camels belonging to his guests a thick line with the blood of the animal which he has killed for them. Men seeing these marks ask the host's name, and thus his praise extends to all parts. The head of an animal is never set before the guests but given to the poor.

CHAPTER XIX

PERSONAL QUALITIES

A chief who is commonly spoken of as a ṣâḥeb al-marḡala stands in high esteem among the Rwala. Such a one has a brave, strong heart, ḵalbeh ḵawi; knows how to wrestle with the greatest danger, ma'eh fetel; has a broad outlook, ma'eh erf; thinks of the future, šôfteh ba'ide; and never acts hastily, leh ṣabr. He who is merely a daring fighter, ṣâḥeb al-farse, is not fit to be either a chief or a leader in time of war. He, too, has a strong heart but lacks calm consideration, mâ leh ṣabr, therefore he throws himself into danger recklessly, unmindful of victory or death; jirmi ḥâleh jâ jiktel žebûleh jâ jinkatel.

But the most popular among the chiefs is the ṣâḥeb al-mruwwa. He is kind, kerîm; truthful, ḥabîb allâh; disregards trifles, saḥi; and knows no distinction between great and small. Of such the proverb says: "A wolf does not suffer hunger with him, neither do his sheep perish; lâ jîḡû' ad-dîb w-lâ tifna-l-ṛanam." As examples of such a ṣâḥeb al-mruwwa Ḳuṭṭân eben Ḥâmed of the Beni Ṣaḥr and Haḡer eben Meḡwel of the Rwala were named to me.

A generous man is universally esteemed, as he is often visited by guests who then carry his fame far and wide. They say that it is easy for a wealthy man to be generous, because the word generosity is derived from what a man possesses, al-ḡûd min al-mawḡûd. According to others generosity must be inborn. He that does not inherit generosity from his parents will always be a miser, even if he has more wealth than he knows what to do with, al-ḡûd min al-ḡdûd.

Aš-šîme is among the most prominent qualities of a famous man. It is but rarely found, and the man possessing it excels all others in the same way as the head projects above the body. He who has aš-šîme will not always insist on his rights, gladly yielding to one weaker than himself and sometimes giving up his claim to a thing which clearly belongs to him. Jetašajjam 'an aš-ši means "he gave up a thing," or "he did not take a thing although evidently his." Without aš-šîme no râ' al-mruwwa is perfect.

Seemly behavior is esteemed by the Rwala. The proverb: "Ar-rağol ja'ref metabbek, a true man knows how to behave," is frequently heard. The meaning of the word rağol is very similar to that of the word âdemi, which either signifies all men as the sons of Adam or well mannered men of pleasant behavior. The word rağğâl is used in connection with a man who excels by prudence and bravery, thus: "Met'eb rağğâl, Met'eb, that is a man!" A rağğâl jeswa 'orbân is a man as good as many Arab clans put together: "W-allâh hw rağğâlen mlîh, by Allâh, he is a hero!" It is also said: "Ar-reğâl mâ hi killeha rağğâl biha rağol w-rağğâl wa-rğêğîl w-reğğareğğa; not all men are heroes; there are among them true men, heroes, helpers of women, and chatterers." Here rğêğîl, or reğêğîl, implies that, although having a moustache, şwâreb, he occupies himself rather with things that belong to women. Reğğareğğa or reğreğğa is a coward who babbles like a woman. Reğâl often signifies brave men. A woman attacked by robbers shouts: "Îdekom îdekom warâji reğâl; your hands, your hands [they must not take anything from me], there are brave men behind me!" The men of some families have the reputation: "W-allâh hom reğâlen zênîn mazbûtin, by Allâh, they are true men!" Rağâğîl means men regardless of their qualities. Up to ten the plural reğâl or rağâğîl is used; for a larger number zelm. "Jammakom jâ zelm, stand still, ye men!" Zlema is an unknown man. Azlâm is another expression for a number of men not exceeding ten, but usually the words zelm or zilm are used as the plural.

Noble qualities are inherited; therefore every Rwejli aims at winning a wife from an old and honorable family. It is often said of a noble but otherwise unknown man: "Hw min âlen 'atîž mâ hw min hajallah nâs; he comes of an old family, then surely not of riffraff."

*'Arreb wulejdak 'arrebek
w-an-nâr min mižbâseha
w-al-'ezz be'urûk an-nisa'
alli 'arîben asâseha.*

By every means try to beget a thoroughbred son,
For as the fire depends on its foundation
So nobility is in the veins of women
Who are of pure blood descended.

‘Arîb signifies the same as aşîl, pure-blooded, well-born, noble. Whoever desires a thoroughbred son must beget him by a woman descended of a good family. The man resembles a fire, the woman a foundation. When a fire is lighted by a woman in a tent, the women from other tents send their daughters or servant girls to fetch fire from her. Each of these girl twists a wisp of dry şîh, raza, or rîta, grasps the red-hot coal in her hand, puts it into the wisp, and swings this in the air till it ignites. If the foundation, in this case the wisp, miżbâs, be not dry, no amount of swinging will make the red coal burst into flame. ‘Ezz means good qualities, bravery in particular. ‘Ezz proceeds from the veins of a woman. Asâs or nasab expresses the woman’s origin. The daughter of a worthless, pusillanimous father will not have ‘ezz, nobility, in her veins; therefore it cannot be expected in her son, even if begotten by the bravest of men.

Criminal intercourse with animals is almost unknown among the Rwala, as is that of one man with another, the penalty in this case being the death of the violator or of both. In the Kmuşa division a negro, who came there from Eben Raşîd’s army, violated a small boy far from the tents. On the boy’s complaint, his kin ran to catch the slave who made his escape. They would certainly have killed him.

POEMS DEPICTING QUALITIES AND DEEDS OF MEN

Vigilance and Energy

1. Jâ-llâh ţalabtak jâ serî al-matâbe
teftaḥ lena bâb al-faraġ bel-mefâtîḥ
2. ţalbet ‘obejden ‘enda rabbeh w-ţâbeh
jâ ḥâležen rizk al-‘arab w-al-falâlîḥ
3. an-nowm sâs al-lowm bân ar-reda beh
w-‘ajnen tebi-ţ-ţowlât nowmeh şelâfîḥ
4. alli jirîd al-medeh jîtab reċâbeh
w-ar-rizk beţûl al-ḥaṭa jâ-hla-l-fîḥ
5. jîdûk ‘ajrât an-neza be‘akâbeh
w-ad-daww jîkta‘enneh ‘asêren beterwîḥ
6. mâ fowḵha illa žîrbeten ma zahâbeh
w-sefâjefen tabrah lown al-malâwîḥ

7. tarârow al-merkâb mitl ad-dijâbe
wa-tkâbalow mitl al-ḥarâr al-mefâlîḥ
8. w-kâmat ġenûb al-bel tsallel ḥarâbeh
w-kâlow ġanabha ʿâšežîn aṭ-ṭamâmîḥ
9. čam wâheden bel-kown jeʿser šuwâbeh
min čaff kowḥân al-ʿajûn ad-duwâbîḥ.

1. O Allâh! I beg of thee, who art quick of hearing,
To open for us with thy keys the gate of freedom;
2. It is the prayer of a servant to his master who will hear him,
O thou creator of wealth for those who live in tents
as well as in houses!
3. Sleep is the cause of reproof, for it reflects evil, While the sleep of an eye that longs for power is but short.
4. He that would have praise must tire his riding camels,
For the booty depends on the long pace, O ye owners of fine camels!
5. With his heels he tears the skin of the riding animals,
Which must run over the wide plain, if they would arrive in the evening.
6. All he carries is a water bag, food for the journey,
And long fancy ribbons, streaming after him like the cloth with which the falcon is coaxed.
7. In full gallop with his comrades he rode up a high hill like a pack of wolves,
And they threw themselves upon the foe like well-born warriors meeting success.
8. But the camel guards resisted, brandishing their spears,
So that they said: "They are protected by the gallants of women displeased with their husband."
9. How many are pressing their hands to their wounds Dealt by the hand of him who (when aiming) half closes his death-dealing eyes!

The author of this poem was an unknown Šarâri; it was recited to me by Trâd eben Saṭṭâm.

Verse 1. Bâb al-farağ is a gate leading to spacious regions where the Bedouin is not threatened with danger. 2. Al-ʿarab live in tents, al-falâlîḥ in houses. Whenever the fellâḥîn, or townsmen of some of the border settlements, leave for their herds and settle in tents, they are at once spoken of as ʿarab. 3. An-

nowm sâs al-lowm, sleep is the cause of reproofs, because at night, when the guards are fast asleep, the activities of the Bedouin's enemies, whether men or beasts, are most successful. He that keeps awake can prevent evil. Šelâfîh implies the lack of a certain thing; thus, "Waredna hal-mokr sakweh šelâfîh" means "We wanted to water in this rock cistern, but there is little water there." 4. Ar-rizk beṭûl al-ḥaṭa; he whose pace is longer will win more, can go farther. Fîh (sing., fejḥa) are good-tempered, enduring she-camels. The rider of such will reach distant places where he can get booty more easily. 5. Jidûk signifies the continual motion of the rider's two heels, which tear the animal's hide by constantly rubbing against it. ʿAjrât an-neza are she-camels used for raids to distant places. A raiding troop cannot spend the night in a large plain surrounded by mountains, ad-daww, for it is impossible to build a fire there; it would be seen far around. The she-camels must, therefore, exert their whole strength to cross such a plain as quickly as possible in order to reach a region with deep, hidden gullies before sunset. 6. Behind the camel saddle the Bedouins fasten one or two pairs of many-colored ribbons, sefâjef, which, fluttering with every step the she-camel makes, are seen now far behind the animal, now high above or below it. The waving of the ends of these ribbons reminds the onlooker of the motions the falconer makes with a piece of cloth when he wants to coax a falcon to return to him. These cloth pieces, malâwîh, also float out, to vanish the next moment, according to the motions made by the falconer. 8. The guard watching the camels is called ġanab. For this duty the bravest youths, as a rule, are selected, objects of warm desire on the part of many a married woman dissatisfied with her easy-going, often cowardly husband. A woman of this sort is known as ṭamûḥ. She would not bear sons resembling their father. 9. Akwah al-ʿajn, means "[a good marksman] half closed his eye." Such eyes send out sure death, for they are duwâbîh, killers.

Seize Opportunity When It Offers

*Eljaḥ habbat riġâḥak hebb maḥa
w-lâ budd ulla-r-riġâḥ min as-sukûn
w-en darrat niġâkâk w-eḥtelebha
w-lam ġidra-l-ḥwâr limin ġekûn.*

When thy good luck arrives, follow it,
 As, of necessity, it soon will end.
 When thy camels drip, milk them,
 For the young knows not whose the milk will be.

Make full use of your opportunity! A camel will give milk only when her young catches hold of her teats with its lips and knocks its head against her loins. The young camel thus compels its mother to let her milk flow but does not itself know whether it will drink, because the man may push it away and milk for himself. He often milks three camels without the young having had a drink. It frequently happens that a man creates an opportunity for himself but is unable to utilize it. Push him aside and see what you can do!

Modesty and Self Reliance

1. Kâl rumejzân at-tamîmi matâjel
al-ajjâm rums w-lâ bihen hejâl
2. al-lejâlî mâ hallen hada mâ čwaneh
w-lâ jeslam min low âtihen reğğâl
3. fattelt lid-dinja hebâlen aġerraha
w-ġerratni-d-dinja birejr hebâl
4. jâ žâ'ed bez-zell čann zâh zellak
w-jâ žâ'ed beš-šams ġâk zelâl
5. min kâl ana hejr al-mela' fâleh al-'ana'
w-min kâl ana zejmen tuzejmeh reğâl
6. lâ tsir marhâš low nešet towleh
w-lâ tkun heġ'en low bada lak al-hâl
7. w-lâ ĵimtelî ġibben min aţ-tell w-an-neda'
w-lâ ĵistuwi herġen birejr fa'âl
8. w-lâ jenkol' al-ĵankûš raġolen hajjer
w-lâ tâkol zibdet al-mďâb reğâl
9. w-čam wâheden žâ'ed 'ala mâl abûh w-ġeddeh
w-en zawwaleh rabb al-'âlemîn hw zâl.

1. Rumejzân at-Tamîmi told these parables:
 Secret are the days and yet not screened with curtains.
2. The nights do not omit anybody while burning with an iron red-hot,
 And nobody will save himself, however much he may try to surpass them.

3. I for myself twisted a rope to pull this world with,
But, instead, the world pulled me without a rope.
4. O thou who sittest in the shade! it is as if thy shade were gone,
And over thee who sittest in the sun has fallen a shade.
5. He that says "I am better than others" is destined for torments,
And he that says "I am violence" will be violated by men.
6. Become not a long spear, even if thou reachest its length,
But be not downcast, even if the present has treated thee mercilessly.
7. A well cannot be filled with dew or moist fog,
And a revolt will not be calmed without an effort.
8. The informer shall not whisper in a noble man's ear,
And true men shall not eat lies.
9. How many are there who rest on the goods of their father and grandfather,
But, if the Lord of this world shall destroy those goods,
they will perish.

The poet was Rumejzân at-Tamîmi of the Beni Tamîm tribe, who live in various settlements of Neğd; the reciters, Prince an-Nûri, Ĥmâr abu 'Awwâd, and Ġwâd al-Âni.

Verse 1. Jowm signifies a day from sunset to sunset, hence the night too. The days are secret, because nobody knows how many people were begotten in them, ad-dinja telkah w-teled. 2. Grief caused by various troubles does not torment so much in the daytime as at night, when the troubled man cannot sleep. Ġwaneh means that the nights lay on the red-hot iron used in curing various diseases. Âtihen means putting oneself above or being offensive to others. 3. Sooner will the surroundings spoil a man than a man reform his surroundings. 4. A despised person ought to be conscious of his condition and should not press into the foreground, while he who is famous ought not to forget that the time may come when his fame will end. 6. Marhâš is the term applied to an unusually long spear. No matter how many good qualities a man may have, he should not put himself above others and wound them with his sarcasms. Heġ'en is one low in spirit, downcast, crushed. 7. Ġibb is a deep well. Neda' means the dripping moisture which settles on clothing, tents, animals, and plants on cool days. 8. Janḵûš is said of one who 'delights in quarrels and in setting people against each other by carrying gossip and distorting their words. Zibdet al-mdâb, melted butter, signifies invented, false stories, or calumnies. Melted butter is liked by everybody but cannot be the exclusive food, as it would cause death from dysentery; thus it is also with false stories. Pleasant to listen to, should the hearers make them a foundation for their acts, they would not meet with success. 9. He that cannot work, but lives and thrives on the sweat and toil of others, must perish as soon as they cease to support him.

Prudence

1. Al-hâjet bâlak tebni
illa-s-sâs heġâreh kbâr
2. w-al-bâjeh ḥadrak težnih
damhât al-bawwâh ktâr
3. w-al-mar^{ci} ḥadrak ter^{ci}ih
elja³ ra^{ci}ejt er^a-n-nwâr.

1. Beware of building a wall,
Except when the foundation is of big stones.
2. Beware of taking an ingrate for thy companion,
For much trouble he will cause thee.
3. Of land that has been grazed upon beware;
If thou desirest to pasture, on blossoms pasture.

The poet was a settler from the oasis of al-Ġowf; the reciter, Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 1. As the houses in al-Ġowf (as in all the settlements of inner Arabia) are built comparatively high, their walls must have solid foundations. During the fights in which the settlers frequently engage among themselves a weak foundation could be easily broken through by the enemy, and the wall would collapse. For this reason only big boulders are used in foundations. 2. Al-bâjeh is a man without a heart, mâ beh ḵalb, devoid of sympathy, gratitude, and even of morals. Whoever takes such a man for his companion, hawî, on a long trip will suffer more troubles than could be found even in hell. 3. Al-mar^{ci} is either a woman divorced by her husband or a widow. Do not marry such a one; rather take a blossom, a virgin.

Genuine Bliss Dwells with All True Believers

1. Aṭ-ṭīb mā hw bass mā az-zaʿânina
muḡassem ʿala rūṣ al-ʿejāl al-mefâlîḥ
2. bejt aš-šaʿar w-alli kaʿad leh bṭîna
al-ḥazar w-al-bedwân min habb leh rîḥ.

1. Not with those only is bliss found who load tents and their fixtures on camels,
But it is distributed also on the heads of those poor sons
2. Who live in tents of goat's hair or in the mud-brick huts, On settlers, on Bedouins, and on all on whom the wind blows.

The poet was an unknown orthodox Moslem; the reciter, Ġwâd al-Âni. It is a firm belief of the Rwala that honesty and, hence, both physical and spiritual welfare are to be found with them only. All the settlers from the ruler down to the slave are, in their opinion, nothing but hypocrites and full of low cunning, who misuse for their own benefit the religion as well as the power with which they are entrusted and who are a torment alike to the stranger and to themselves. For the Bedouins cannot understand why the settlers should be so eager to acquire both property and honors. A Bedouin's heart never longs for such vanities, for he knows that he may lose his life, the most treasured possession he has. Why, then, should he depend on riches and worldly dignities? The passionate hunt for wealth is, in the opinion of a Bedouin, the root of all the troubles and want of integrity among the settlers. Moreover, because the settlers are true Moslems while among the Bedouins Islam does not carry conviction, the latter consider Islam weak, as it cannot free the settlers from their miseries. In the two verses cited above the correctness of such Bedouin views is denied by an orthodox Moslem, who maintains that genuine bliss dwells with all true believers, mefâlîḥ — that is, with people who live and act in accordance with their inner religious convictions. 2. Habb leh rîḥ would mean with a Bedouin: "success or luck is blowing towards him"; to the settled Moslem it means anyone on whom a wind blows or who breathes, hence all men without distinction.

Complaint Against a Knavish Neighbor

1. Kâl al-mhâdi w-al-mhâdi muhammal
jâ 'alleten biş-şadr mâ-ḥaden darâ bah
2. en aḡhartaha bânat al-kummejde al-eda
w-en aḡfejtaha zâd al-ḥaşa' beltehâbah
3. temen snîn w-ġârna mġarren bina
narfah čema tarfa-l-adâra tejâbah
4. jâ mâ-ṭamna ġârna min berîra w-ḥenna-lja barejna-čelha mâ darâ bah
5. w-jâ mâ 'atejna ġârna min selâle
w-aḡlafna 'ala kawwâdha mâ jintenâ bah
6. al-aġwâd low 'aşartahom mâ temellahom
w-al-andâl low 'aşartahom 'efet mâ bah
7. al-aġwâd 'edd w-min wardeh esteķa'
w-al-andâl lâ jeska' w-lâ jenseķâ bah
8. al-aġwâd kamra' blejlet ad-duġġa
w-al-andâl zalma' w-tâh min sarâ bah
9. al-aġwâd şandûken misčen w-'ambar
lija futtiḥen bibânha fâh mâ bah
10. al-aġwâd mitl ar-rabi' al-muḥtalef nabteh
w-al-andâl zejza' te'âwa dijâbah.

1. Thus spoke al-Mhâdi and al-Mhâdi was shedding tears:
Alas! the pain in my breast, of which no one knows.
2. If I should show it, my enemies would know of it from the grief on my face;
If I conceal it, inflamed the torment will grow.
3. It is eight years now that our neighbor has despoiled us,
And we patch up our wound as the women patch their dresses.
4. How often have we fed our neighbor with dainties!
But when we ourselves would enjoy a dainty he cared nothing.
5. How many a thoroughbred mare have we given our neighbor,
And yet we had to make him who led it away swear
not to slander us.
6. If thou livest with noble men, thou never wouldst be surfeited with them,
But the knaves thou hast met will fill thee with disgust.

7. Noble men are a spring from which he who comes may drink,
But knaves give no drink, nor can one drink with them.
8. Noble men are like moonlight in a dark night;
But knaves, they are a dark night in which he goes astray who starts on a journey.
9. Noble men are two chests filled with amber and musk,
When their lids are opened a pleasant fragrance streams out.
10. Noble men are like the time of abundance with its various plants,
But the knaves — a scorched, stony desert where wolves howl at one another.

The poet was al-Mhâdi, a Rwejlî of the Freġe clan; the reciters, Mindîl al-Ķaṭ'i and Ġwâd al-ʿĀni. The poet complains of his neighbor, a member of a strange clan who was camping with him and under his protection for eight years and proved a constant trouble to him.

Verse 3. Mġarren means literally "he ground us like a millstone." Al-Mhâdi, desirous of maintaining good relations, repaired what his neighbor spoiled. 4. Berîra is a dainty possessed by nobody else in the camp. Barrejtak biha means "I let thee taste dainties." 5. Selâle is a thoroughbred mare about one year old.

Moral Precepts

1. Elfen w-wallef w-ħala mâ laħli
bujûten biha lil-fâhemîn arbâħi
2. banejt bkâfhen w-aġgebenni
w-enbâħ mâ biş-şadr tumm enbâħi
3. tara kuṭr ċelâmak ĵimleħak aş-şumt ʿazz lâ tkun šenâħi
4. tabât al-ʿelem mîzân al-feta
tara-l-feta low zall ʿelmeh râħi
5. ġamm aš-šerr bânât al-mela
lâ tġurrû bēnahom melwâħi
6. elja ħull al-kza min ʿâzel
eşel w-otrok kâlaten bişlâħi
7. ħijâr an-nâs raġolen fâhem
boşr al-maʿâni menhaġ al-menşâħi

8. dell an-nafs 'an wahmâtaha
tara-l-wahmât tekatter al-ašnâhi
9. tadlîl al-'adw ma'azze lâ theff ma' al-'adw jinsâhi
10. rijâse hije hijâr al-merġele
w-al-lejt mâ jintah birejr slâhi
11. zemânak low 'aşa tâwa' ma'a
eşber w-şabrak lil-faraġ miftâhi 12. saddak lâ tbiheh lan-nisa'
teşbeh čema maksûmt al-ġenâhi 13. şowrak lâ jifâhet râsak
tara hw ašwa lak min an-naşâhi 14. şâheb aşhâb abûk w-ġeddak
w-bâzi-l-mela' jarzîk minhom şfâhi
15. zeddak low zahak ezhak ma'eh
w-kalbak jişâdi laş-şafa' sammâhi
16. ţalbet ħaġten maġhûle
haşşa-lja şârat ma' al-aşhâhi
17. zuġufak elja-lfaw rahheb behom
aţleţ heġâġak hejr zâdak râhi 18. al-'ajn 'edd aš-şidţ lâ trâwi beh
low hw 'ala-şdak şiddiţ enşâhi
19. řannem limin lafa' lak 'âni
tara' jihka' bak haġwat al-felâhi 20. fâl al-ħalk tâlîhom fena'
maktûb 'alejha bhâfez al-alwâhi
21. ķâtel al-'ada' lâ thâbahom
şajûr mâ jâ lâk w-bjadeh slâhi 22. kuff aš-şerr 'an ba'aż al-mela'
tara-l-mesâjer jireţ al-aşlâhi 23. lumm al-ħazz lâ t'ani-l-feta'
tara-l-feta' low mâl ħazzeħ tâhi
24. mâ wannejt kabl mâ trarak
ķis al-meġâza w-e'ref al-misbâhi
25. nijjatk alladi bşadrak
tesri w-hi tekzob lak al-meşbâhi 26. wa' waġdi 'ala kill min sala'
târ al-'adw w-enraţar w-hw şâhi
28. low haddejt bâlak tenteni
w-as-sejf maġni lil-'adw miftâhi.

1. As a friend I compose — and how fairly they are by me embellished! —
Verses from which those can profit who understand.
2. Much labor I took with rhyming them before they pleased me,
But then all my inner self was clearly revealed.
3. Behold! The multitude of thy words makes thee un-Silence is a power, yet be not morose. [popular!]
4. The strengthening of a reputation is the scale on which the youth is weighed.
Behold, if a youth falls, his good name is gone.
5. Much evil has spread among the people,
Thus use no bait for it among them.
6. If a decision of the court has been refused by a wise man, Then better wouldst thou go away and cease uttering words of moderation.
7. The best of men is he of understanding,
For to penetrate the meaning of a thing leads to good
8. Free thy soul from needless worry; [counsel.
Behold, trifling cares increase misunderstanding.
9. To humble thine enemy is a proof of strength;
To the enemy be not lenient, else his insolence grows.
10. To command well in war is the best bravery,
For even a lion stabs not if without weapons.
11. If thy time has failed to give thee all thou desiredst,
Be patient, for patience is the key of success.
12. Thy secret plan disclose not to women
Or thou soon wilt be like a bird with broken wings.
13. Let not thy good advice leave thy head needlessly —
This will be better for thee than to disclose thine honest view.
14. Keep up the friendship with the friends of thy father and grandfather,
And from other people content thyself with a salute.
15. If thine opponent laughs, laugh with him,
But in yielding let thy heart be like a bare rock.
16. The result of a request for what thou needest is uncertain, Especially when thou hast to deal with misers.
17. When guests arrive, welcome them kindly
And let thy brows smile even if thy best supplies are gone.

18. The eye is a spring, but to a friend it will not give drink,
Though he be the best of friends to thee.
19. Share thy booty with the captive who comes to thee,
For, behold, what he will say of thee will benefit thee.
20. All creatures are doomed in the end to die,
For thus it is written with the keeper of the records of
21. The slayer of the enemies will not run from them [fate.
And will never relent as long as his hand holds a weapon.
22. Some men thou shouldst compel to abstain from evil!
Behold, an aggressor often inherits peace.
23. Guide the desire—hold not back the youth,
For, behold, a youth whose desires slacken will be de-
24. Thou didst not lament before drowning; [stroyed.
Survey the ford and learn to swim.
25. The desire hidden in thy breast
Will come out on a night's march and hold a lamp to thee.
26. Ah, how I grieve for him who has forgotten
To avenge a wrong and, in affluence resting, remains calm!
28. When thou hast pacified a man, beware of doing so second time,
For a saber pointed downwards is a key to violence.

This poem is anonymous. Ġwâd al-ĠĠni's statement that it was written by aš-Šerîf Barakât was opposed by ʿAwde al-Kwêċbi and Ĥmâr. Prince an-Nûri, however, thought its author was a Bedouin of one of the tribes encamped on both banks of the Euphrates, as the ford mentioned is called mahâza, a common word for ford in southern Mesopotamia. An-Nûri's opinion seems to be correct, because the consonant ġ, which a sherif from either al-Medîna or Mecca would never have omitted, is lacking in the poem, and also because the whole moral tone is nearer the views of the free Bedouins than the exaggerated sanctity of the sherifs. I took it down according to the recitation of an-Nûri, Ĥmâr, ʿAwde, and Ġwâd, each of whom knew a few verses of the poem but none the whole of it. None of them could remember the verse beginning with the consonant jâ (27).—The whole poem has 28 verses rhyming on âhi, and each verse begins with a consonant in the order of the Arabic alphabet, excepting the sixth, ninth, eighteenth, and twenty-eighth verses, in which the second or third syllable begins with the appropriate consonant. The first two verses excepted, each of the others conveys some moral precept for life.

Verse 1. Bejt means the whole verse, kâf its second half and then, specifically, the rhyme of this second half. 3. Šenâh is a man of morose disposition, who will neither talk nor smile. 4. Elem signifies a report circulating in regard to a man. If such a report is consistent it is considered unshakable. A good report must be that, otherwise a man would fall in the public esteem. 5. Melwâh is the decoy swung by a falconer when trying to lure a falcon towards him, lawwah ‘ala-ṭ-ṭejr. When a man breaks off a twig of the luxuriant rûte and shows it to a riding camel, he coaxes her to come near, lawwah ‘ala-d-delûl. There are people whose actions lure evil into the tribe, regardless of the fact that their fellow tribesmen are already suffering. 7. Menhağ is a path or trail. 12. The women will reveal your secret plan, and you will then be unable to realize it. Sadd means, in particular, the planning of a great raid against a certain enemy. The men taking part in it do not themselves know accurately either the time of their departure or the enemy they are to attack. Should the commander's wife learn of it she would undoubtedly tell it to some of her friends, and the enemy would receive warning even before the raiders started. 18. When you have a good friend, share your last drop of water with him. Do not confound words with deeds. Al-‘ajn means both a spring and an eye. Edd is the name of a well with spring water which never dries up. 22. Violence, force, often leads to peace sooner than mildness. 23. Hazz signifies a passionate desire for something. Out of a youth filled with such a strenuous desire an exemplary being can be formed by a man of good sense. 25. Nijje is a plan, intention, desire, which robs a man of sleep, drives him to undertake night marches, and lights him on his way. 26. Enṛatar is said of a man who likes to eat well and to amuse himself with women. 28. The appeased man has not laid aside his saber; he has only dropped its point and could, if angered again, strike at him who had just appeased him.

1. Endi fetâwi lil-fahîm al-fâhem
jarmi bkalb al-râfelîn aḥċa
2. al-‘afen low taṭîh mâl ḥešet killeh
mâ jaškor faḏlak w-lâ jarodd tana
3. ḥelw elja ġâk maṭâz ḥâġa
w-‘afen elja lakka-l-‘amîl kaḥa

4. aš-šejh sammât želîl harġa mležži hâjerât al-‘elûm kafa’
5. elja ‘âd mâ jezħak w-jarħi bâleh želîl alli min al-mahlûk tela’
6. *aš-šejh mâ jahkom min dûn ġemâ’a
w-as-sejf mâ jinhaz be’aşa’*
7. *w-al-ġibb mâ jemlah tall an-neda’
w-al-‘ešb mâ dċer nâbet beşafa’*
8. *jâ nâzel aš-ša’nûn teşbah râhel
w-lâ jinkaten ġaw brejr fela’*
9. al-ħanzala mâ teret illa mitlah mitl aħâd al-‘aġûz bzellat żana’
10. *mâ hw âhedha ‘ala ħalâlah
w-lâ hw terbil riġleteh beħaşa’h.*

1. I know rules of life which he will understand who comprehends quickly
And which will guide the hearts of the careless.
2. An egoist, even if thou givest him all thou hast stored up,
Will not thank thee for thy benevolence and repay thee
in kind.
3. He is full of sweetness when he comes to thee in need,
But an egoist he will remain, for when he meets his benefactor he will turn his back.
4. A chief should think more and chatter less,
And be prepared for news which is the reverse of
5. If he does not smile and is not forbearing, [favorable.
Few creatures there will be who will follow him.
6. A chief without an assembly cannot rule,
And a saber cannot be parried with a stick.
7. A drop of dew will not fill a well;
And no one remembers grasses growing on a bare rock.
8. O thou who by a dry well art camping! thou must move,
And not long will camels tarry at a rich watering place
if no pasture is near.
9. A colocynth inherits nothing except from its equal,
Nor does he who has married an old hag unable to bear;
10. As to him, he married her only for her property,
For he is not impotent and he has the power of begetting in his loins.

The poet was al-‘Âten, a rich Šarâri, who in buying splendid weapons, beautiful saddles, and the best riding camels squandered all his property in a short time, as he did not take care of the things he purchased. In his old age he sat in a corner of Prince Saṭṭām's tent and had to be satisfied with eating what was left from the meals there. The reciter was 'Awde al-Kwêḇbi.

Verse 2. 'Afen is an egoist devoid of all virtue. Hešet, for hešedt or hešett, thou hast gathered or saved. 5. Elja 'ād has the same meaning as en ċân enneh, should it happen that he. 6. Mîn dūn is equivalent to min rej̄r, without. Without the consent of the assembly the chief can do nothing. 7. Ġibb is a deep well. Ṭall is the dew or a drop of it. 8. Ṣa'nûn is a deep well without water; these are found when there has been no rain for three or four years. Jinḵaṭen or jinketûn means: "they stay long on the same camping ground." 10. Ṭerbûl is a man with a crushed sexual organ.

Advice to a Friend

1. Jâ dmejm efham wâredi bâri-waṣṣîk
ċân ent mîn alli lil-waṣâja-jḥafzûn
 2. elja' ġâk wâḥeden 'âjelen mîn dwânîk
ešċih lalli mîn al-ġemâ'a j'arfûn
 3. en entaha' hw wudd 'ajnak wa-mrâżîk
w-en mâ-ntaha' ma'ak ṭabb alli-j'ilûn
 4. až-zejf lâ tleżżih menċeb 'alâbîk
w-as-somt jowmen en al-meġâles jehîzûn.
1. O Dmej! understand my speech, for I wish to give thee the last warning,
If, of course, thou art one of those who pay attention to the last warning.
 2. Shouldst thou meet one of thy fellow tribesmen who wrongs thee,
Complain of him to those who judge the comrades.
 3. If he ceases harming thee, let him be a favorite of thine eye and thy friend.
If he does not cease harming thee, thou carriest with thee a cure against those who commit wrong.
 4. To the guest show not thy shoulder blades or nape of thy neck,
And take care not to be rash when the visitors slander
each other.

The poet was Mâne^c eben Durmi, one of the Rwala chiefs; the reciter, ^cAwde al-Kwêčbi.

Verse 2. Dwânîk means the same as beni al-^camm, fellow tribesmen. 3. Ṭabb are weapons generally.

Men are divided according to their qualities and their temperament into four categories, taḵṣîm ar-reġâl arba^c ḥo-ṣaṣ, as follows:

Ḥaṭṭ ar-riġel ^cala-l-ḵalb	He who puts his foot on his heart;
w-al-jad ^cala-l-lisân	His hand on his tongue;
w-al-^cajn ^cala-l-iden	His eye on his ear;
w-az-zebb ^cala-l-baṭen.	Or, his sexual organ on the belly.

Many are those who hasten to obtain what their heart desires; here the foot obeys the heart. Another will not brook an insult; as soon as he hears someone slander him, he seizes his arms to punish him. Yet another is unusually cautious; at the least rustle he looks sharply at everything around him and cannot be deceived or surprised. There are also those who care for nothing but to satisfy their carnal desires.

CHAPTER XX

VENGEANCE

The report of a death or murder causes a stir not only in the camp but throughout the clan and even the whole tribe. The nearest female relatives of the dead person tear away the buckles holding their shirts under the neck, scratch their faces with their fingernails, besmear them with ashes and sand, cut off their braids above the temples, wind a narrow white kerchief, kzâza bêza, around their heads, and run out of the camp either south or north into the desert, where they cry three times: "Ah, woe is me! O thou father of mine! wa' wejla jâ-bujjâ." Or: "Ah, woe is me! O thou little brother of mine! wa' wejla jâ-hujjâ." The white kerchief they wear on their heads for at least a month. This is called kaffâl.

The men of the whole camp run out to the dead body, examine the wounds, and discuss the manner of death. Those who are not his kin on the father's side, aġnebânijje, return to the camp, watch their tents, send out the news to the pasturing grounds and the nearest camps, and take care that neither they nor their herds come between the avengers and the culprits.

The guilt rests on the whole kin, ahl, of the murderer; vengeance also becomes the duty of the whole kin of the dead man.¹¹

AVENGERS AND PROTECTORS

The whole kin is bound to mutual protection, both aggressive and defensive, jeṭred w-jeṭared. The more distant relatives, i. e. those who are in the fourth and later generations from the ancestor common to themselves and the culprit, generally offer the avengers a two-year-old camel, hežž, and are left in peace.

The avengers are called violators, ahl as-saṭwa, or those who carry on blood feud in defense of the culprits, ṭallâbt ad-damm, while the culprits are spoken of as the blood-stained, damwijje, dûmijje. The avenger proper is generally the nearest healthy adult relative of the murdered man; the first culprit is the murderer himself; should he die a natural death in the meantime, his next of kin is considered the culprit. However, for the first three days after the murder nobody pays the least attention either to the avenger or to the perpetrator. These three days are called the seething of the blood, fowrt ad-damm, or the anger, za'al, fury, rejz, or madness, kar'a. The avengers ride out on horseback and camels to seek the guilty ones and their herds. If they meet a little boy, an adult, or even an old man of the culprit's kin, they kill him; if they meet their mares or herds, they cut their arteries below the knees of the forelegs, je'ažžerûnaha, but must not drive them away captive.

¹¹ See above, pp. 47—50.

No one of the perpetrators must defend himself, for then he would be deserted by his whole clan and even by the whole tribe. The defense is to be left to others. Therefore the culprits proceed with all haste possible to one of the more powerful chiefs to ask his protection. The first one to reach him cries:

"Behold, we ask Allâh and thee to protect the hair of our heads from So-and-So, as well as the herds on our borders; ta-râna blawbak [bellâh w-bak] 'an al-flân behâfâfna w-aṭrâfna."

The chief answers: "Welcome to us! May Allâh save your lives! Ye are saved. Your pursuer has already halted. Ahlan w-sahlan hajjâkom allâh w-selimtu w-hâb ṭalebkom."

The protector then calls his slaves, servants, and his whole kin, hastens to the tents and herds of the guilty kin, loads the tents with everything that is in them on camels, carries them away, and drives the herds between his own tents. To the avenger he calls out:

"Behold, your blood shedder has put himself, according to ancient custom, under our protection; so beware! tara' dûmî-kom dahal 'alejna ala-s-swâni al-atîža ḥassekom nafsekom."

The avengers then inquire: "Wilt thou let them stay with thee a short while only or for several days?"

"Beware, I tell you, and guard your hands from committing violence!"

"We know well, tribesman, that thy protection is powerful, yet thou art not a protector of little girls, 'anejsi, therefore wilt not protect culprits forever, mâ tezebbenhom ḥa."

"How many days truce will you grant me?"

"We will grant thee four [twelve, at the most] days."

During the truce the chief loads the guilty men's tents and accompanies them and their herds to another chief. Should the avengers refuse to allow the culprits to go with their protector to another tribe, their fellow-tribesmen will intercede in his behalf and compel them to abandon their vengeance altogether. For they have blackened the face of the protector and exposed themselves in turn to his vengeance.

In the desert there are chiefs, the descendants of famous kins, whose protection is universally known and respected, or, as the saying goes, whose face insures a safe journey, wağ-hahom mâši. Such are especially Eben Rubejn of the Fed'ân tribe, Eben Ġandal of the Rwala, and Eben Ṭajjâr of the Weld 'Ali. These send only a slave or servant with their protégé, whereas others accompany their protégés in person. The protector leads the culprits to some chief who is camping in the direction in which they are fleeing and hands them over to him with the words:

"Behold, these are shedders of blood. I protected them from So-and-So, and now, hear me, I put them under thy protection. My duty will now be thy duty."

The new protector answers: "May Allâh keep both thee and them alive! They are saved, and their pursuer will return without achieving his object!"

From here they are conducted by the chief himself to another protector and emerge at length from the desert either among the Lhejb, who dwell north of the al-Ḥaṣṣ and Šbêḥ mountains, or among the Šammar âl Ġarba, who camp between the middle Euphrates and the Tigris, or, finally, among the Sirḥân and Beni Šahr on the southwestern borders of the Ḥawrân. The camps of the tribes here named are universally recognized as places of refuge, where the culprits are tolerably safe. Now known as ğelwijje or ğallâje, they pitch their tents there and pasture their herds like everybody else. In case the members of a camp harboring the ğelwijje catch sight of a strange Bedouin prowling around, they bring him before the refugees to see whether they happen to know him. Should he be recognized as belonging to the avengers, the natives tie his hands behind his back or fetter his legs with horse chains and at last kill him, if there is nobody to intercede for him.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PAYMENT OF THE BLOOD PRICE

After some time the chief of the camp where the culprits have found refuge sends to the chief of the avengers this message:

"Your fellow tribesmen, beni 'ammekom, dwell among us. Accept the blood price, medde!"

If the blood price is refused by the avengers, the guilty parties can only remain abroad, jeğâwerûn dâjem al-awkât. But if the avengers say: "We will accept the blood price," the chief asks them to name their sureties of peace, or arbitrators, čefîl ad-dafa, while the culprits name their sureties for the payment, čefîl al-wafa. Then both parties agree on the chief before whom they will meet to settle the matter. When the culprits with their tents and herds, accompanied by their sureties for payment, arrive there, they send word to the avengers, jedfa'ûn lehom:

"Here we are with our surety. Make haste to come here too; we wish to pay you the blood price. Ha' ħenna mâ' čefîlna elĥakow ġâj nabri neddi 'alejkom."

The avenger proper then sets forth with his surety of peace to the chief with whom the guilty party is camping, and in his tent the chief asks the avenger in the presence of all:

"What dost thou ask from thy fellow tribesman?"

"I want this or that mare!"

The surety rises, brings the mare, and, handing her over to the avenger, says: "Thy fellow tribesman gives thee this mare."

The next question is: "What else dost thou ask of thy fellow tribesman?"

"I ask fifty she-camels; a complete armament of a rider — that is, a rifle, a saber, a dagger, a camel saddlebag, a hunting falcon, and a greyhound bitch, sluķe [sic]." If the culprits object, pleading their inability to pay so much, the chief threatens to have them escorted to the camp where they sought refuge; en čân mâ entom žâbelîn nerağģe'kom 'ala meğlâkom. This makes the guilty party declare their willingness in these words:

"We came here to agree to pay the blood price and will fetch every animal demanded, ħenna mâ ġîna kowd žâbelîn bel-medda alli jabrîh eben 'ammena nesûķeh."

One third of the blood price is paid by them at once, the rest as soon as possible, the avengers not being permitted to trouble them on that account, w-al-'asr mâ je'asserûnahom. Should they find out later that they cannot pay all that was demanded, they visit one of the prominent, ĥâdemîn, chiefs, with the entreaty:

"Go to So-and-So and get an abatement of the blood price for us!"

To this the chiefs generally agree readily. They call on the avenger proper, who according to custom prepares a meal for them and invites them to eat, with the words: "Say the name of Allâh over your meal, sammow 'ala zâdkom"; they answer:

"We shall not do so before thou givest us what we have come for, ḥenna mâ nesammi kowd alli ḥawwalna leh tan-ṭejnah."

"May Allâh preserve your life! Whatever ye may wish stands before you. Ḥajjâkom allâh alli tabrûn 'enda waḡ-hakom."

Here the first chief interjects: "How many she-camels wilt thou give to me?"

"I will give thee five!"

"O Allâh, dost thou esteem me so low?"

The host obligingly raises his offer. The other chiefs, too, ask for something and then declare that they will present all the animals they receive to the culprits.

No chief or surety must ask or accept compensation for aiding those who carry on the blood feud in defense of the culprit, for that would stain his honor. His sole reward is the public acknowledgment that he has been instrumental in doing good, msajjer ḥsane, and preventing fresh shedding of blood. The guilty party show their gratitude to their protectors in various ways. They like best of all to raise a white flag over the tent of the culprit proper, where they leave it for several days and ride around the camp shouting:

"May Allâh whiten So-and-So's face! may he exalt his name both in this world and hereafter!"

The returning culprits are welcomed by their fellow tribesmen with equestrian mock battles, merry feasting, and cries of joy, zarârît. For do not they return who might have been lost forever?

The blood price of a man, medda rḳaba, from a related tribe is one mare, fifty she-camels, and a complete rider's equipment. For the blood of a woman no more than twenty-five she-camels is paid, because a woman is never valued as highly as a man, mâ ḥi miṭl az-zelema nâḳeṣa 'an az-zelema. The compensation for a man from an alien tribe is only seven camels.

SPECIAL CONDITIONS OF VENGEANCE

The wife, daughter, or sister of the culprit is never persecuted by the avenger. If his sister or daughter is married to a man not a member of the culprit's kin, he also will be spared.

Should a woman commit murder, her husband is not subject to vengeance if he is not of her kin. He paid for her what her relatives asked, they have kept the payment and thus become liable for her misdeeds. The responsibility for the moral offenses of a woman is borne by her husband, but her material good or evil is the concern of her kin, ḥaṭājāha w-atāmīha berḥubt ar-rağol ḥejrah w-šarrha lahalha. The person whom the married woman can most inconvenience is her own brother; hence the proverb: "The brother of a married woman is far removed from any good done by her, but very close to any evil she may be guilty of; aḥu sirre ba'id 'an al-ḥejr žerīb 'an al-mežarra." If, therefore, the married woman commits murder, her brother is considered to be her chief accomplice. Her kin will flee, while she will remain calmly with her husband, unless he divorces her. The blood price is paid by her kin out of their own means. If she has received a few she-camels from her husband out of his surplus, damā'anteḥ, she cannot use them for paying the blood price without his consent, because he gave her the animals for her own benefit and for the good of the children she has borne him, not for the benefit of her kin.

Again, should anyone kill a married woman, it is the duty of her brother to avenge her, but the husband demands compensation. He who strikes a pregnant woman so that she miscarries, ramat, before the seventh month of her pregnancy, while it is impossible to recognize whether the unripe fruit of her womb was of the male or female sex, must pay twenty-five she-camels. If she miscarries in her seventh or eighth month or, as they say, hurries on the birth, ista'ğelat, and the prematurely born child dies, the compensation for a boy amounts to fifty, for a girl to twenty-five she-camels. Should the mother also die, twenty-five she-camels more must be paid. These are taken by the woman's kin, the husband receiving what was paid for the child.

The husband who has paid for his wife in full, may kill her without making himself liable to pay the blood price to her kin, who may not demand it. Since he has bought her, she becomes his property, and he may punish her even by death, siḳṭha wa-štarajṭha šra. However, her kinsfolk investigate the reason for her death and take vengeance on him if they think the motives insufficient.

The father who kills his son or daughter is responsible to nobody, as his children are his property, mulk.

If a son kills his father or mother, no avenger will rise against him, but he must leave his clan or tribe forever. The same is true of a daughter who murders one of her parents.

There is no blood price if a chief, or any Bedouin, kills a member of some other tribe who, happening to be in camp at the time a raid was being planned against an alien tribe, gave warning to the latter for payment. A hired traitor, naḍîr or haddâm, may be killed without fear of vengeance.

When a camp guard observes a man at night creeping close to the tents or herds and calls to him: "Who art thou, fellow, before I do something terrible? waš ent jā zelema žabl al-wahama," and the unknown man instead of answering starts to flee, the guard may shoot him without being liable to vengeance. He that sights a thief in his tent at night and shoots or kills him is, likewise, immune from vengeance.

He who rides through the desert on a dark night and wounds or shoots dead a robber who has assaulted him, will not fall under the ban of vengeance but has to prove that he acted in self-defense.

For violating a virgin the offender may be killed with impunity by any one of her kin. Should any one attack the virgin's avenger, he would be destroyed by his own kin. The honor of the virgin demands it, mašja-l-arz.

A husband who sees a strange man with his wife pretends to see nothing but steals after him and, if nobody is near, kills him. The kin of the murdered man, although they pretend to seek out the slayer, are very careful not to attack the husband of the woman with whom the murdered man had illicit relations. Their kinsman was killed as a thief or robber, and they do not wish to blacken his face by forcing the husband to disclose what he has witnessed. Hence, pretending to seek out the slayer, they actually divert attention from him, while ostensibly showing their willingness to avenge their kinsman.

A culprit while asleep must not be killed by an avenger, since this would bring vengeance on the latter's own head and his vengeance would not be accomplished. For a sleeping Bedouin has no soul and is as good as dead. A dead person cannot replace a living one, and he that injures a corpse involves the whole clan in his guilt. Therefore the avenger first awakens the culprit with the words: "O So-and-So! dost thou remember that So-and-So dwells in thy belly?"

On finding the culprit, the avenger kills him, slits the corners of his mouth up to the ears, cuts off his ears, and sticks them into his mouth. Then everybody knows it for the deed of an avenger, and no search is made for the perpetrator. With the death of the real culprit the vengeance comes to an end, istaddow tārhom, and his whole kin may return home in peace.

He who unintentionally kills a man or a woman is not liable to vengeance but has to give compensation, often after prolonged negotiations.

If a person is killed by either a horse or a camel, its owner places the dead person's clothes on the animal, brings it to his nearest relative, and leaves it there with the words: "This is thy blood shedder; take him!"

For the intentional killing of a horse or camel four times the animal's value is to be paid; if the animal was killed accidentally, its actual market price only.

TYPICAL INSTANCES OF THE APPLICATION OF THE LAWS OF VENGEANCE

In the rainy season of 1905 the Ḳmuṣa were camping together with the ʿEbede between al-Rurāb and at-Tinf, their watering place there being the Ḥabra at-Tnejf. The stud camel owned by Mnezzel eben Nims of the Ḳmuṣa attached himself, ʿajjar ʿala, to the she-camels belonging to one Ḥarrās of the ʿEbede, who let him cover one of his she-camels, ṣarab beh lenâkteh. When this came to the ears of Mnezzel's son Ḥsejjân he reproached Ḥarrās angrily: "Thou hast used our stud camel without telling my father of it." Ḥarrās retorted, and an altercation followed, tehâwašow, in the course of which Ḥarrās struck Ḥsejjân with his cudgel, madrûb; whereupon the youth stabbed him with his dagger, killing him instantly. As soon as he realized what he had done he drove his herd to the tent of Eben Msejjeb of the Msike, ran inside, and begged:

"People, behold, here I am, guiltless. I ask Allâh's and your protection for the hair of our heads and for our herds. Jâ rab' ana balâš w-dâhel 'ala-llâh w-'alejkom 'ala hafâfna w-atrâfna."

Eben Msejjeb replied: "He that has asked for protection is saved, dahâl ad-dahîl w-silem."

Then he assembled all his relatives both on his father's and mother's side and rode with sixty men to the tents of Mnezzel eben Nims' kin, loaded and carried them away, driving also his herds to the tents of his kinsfolk in order to be there before Harrâs' kin could learn of the latter's death. The Arabs with whom Mnezzel and his relatives were camping ran about, râğow, wondering why he had left them so suddenly, but received no positive information until all the relatives of the imperiled man were in safety with Eben Msejjeb, who immediately marched off with them to Eben Kârdûš of the 'Ebede. Arriving there, he stopped his camels in front of the tent, stepped inside, saluted, and quietly sat down. When fresh coffee was made for him, he refused it. To Eben Kârdûš's question why he would not drink coffee with him he replied:

"Because I desire, Eben Kârdûš, something else of thee first!"

"Well, and what is it?"

"We demand the old custom of you, eḥna nabi minkom as-swâni al-'atîža."

"Tell us! sowlef."

Here Eben Msejjeb told what had happened, Eben Kârdûš, who was related to Harrâs, listening with the greatest attention. When Eben Msejjeb had finished, Eben Kârdûš said:

"The matter about which thou hast come to me will receive our attention. Drink thy coffee. Wuşu ent ġâjen leh rarazak tekza hod al-kaḥwe."

"Grant us a truce of some time!"

"I will grant you a truce of ten days."

Eben Msejjeb drank his coffee, left the tent, and at once rode on with Mnezzel's relatives to Raṭwân eben Meršed and from him to Eben Štêwi. The latter then took the culprits to the Mwasserîn kin of the Rwala, who had camped for the last few years with the Sirḥân, and handed them over to their chief with the words:

"These men are seeking a place of refuge, so I pass them from my countenance on to thine; har-rab' hadowla ġallâje min wağhi ana bwağhak."

The chief of the Mwasserîn replied obligingly: "Whatever comes to us, comes to its goal; mâ waṣalna wâṣel."

Mnezzel's kin stayed with the Mwasserîn a whole year. After that time the Mwasserîn herdsmen sighted a strange Bedouin. They pursued, caught, and brought him before Mnezzel, who recognized him at once as the avenger of Ḥarrâs. The Rwala therefore fettered his feet with a chain as they fether a mare. On the fourth day they said to Mnezzel:

"Mnezzel, we do not wish to kill the avenger, but, if he refuses to accept the blood price, we will take thee to the Beni Ṣahr; there thou wilt be safer than with us; jâ mnezzel dabḥ mâ eḥna dâbehîneh cân inneḥ mâ hw žâbel al-medda newaṣṣelak ʿala ahl aš-šemâl ʿala miḡlâk."

Their next step was to visit the avenger and ask him whether he would accept the blood price. The man said:

"I am willing, but there are besides me other brothers and relatives whom I must consult first. Allow me to return, and I will send you a report."

So they let him go and soon received news that the avengers were willing to accept the blood price and had named at the same time Eben Ḳardûš as their arbitrator. The Rwala therefore conducted Mnezzel with all his kin to Raṭwân eben Meršed, who sent the avengers the following message, dafaʿ alejhom:

"Mnezzel eben Nims is staying with me. If you want the blood price, come. I guarantee its payment."

Finally Eben Ḳardûš arrived. Raṭwân brought Mnezzel's mare and asked Eben Ḳardûš:

"Will ye accept Mnezzel eben Nims?"

The answer being in the affirmative, Raṭwân delivered to him one mare, four she-camels, and a rider's equipment. The rest of the she-camels were to be given to Ḥarrâs' kin in the next few years. And when the rainy season began Mnezzel once again migrated and camped with the ʿEbede — they were reconciled.

A Bedouin of the Eben Mhejd kin of the Fedʿân struck his wife with a pestle, mihwaʿ, from a big mortar, breaking her head so that she died shortly afterward. He was sued by her kin, but all the judges, ʿawâref, declared that he had struck her in anger with no intention of killing and, as he had paid for her what her kin asked, he was not obliged to give them anything now.

Me'ġel eben 'Amša of the Drejb kin of the Kmuša on returning home found his young wife sobbing.

"What ails thee?" he asked.

"Thine only brother Sammiṭ has raped me!"

Taking his revolver, Me'ġel sought out his brother and, with the words "Thus I punish a brother who has raped my wife," shot him dead.

The neighbors heard his words and saw Sammiṭ fall dead, but no one dared to act against Me'ġel.

As soon as the head chief Raṭwân eben Meršed heard of it, he rode to the slayer, entered his tent, and said:

"By Allâh, thou shalt die this moment; w-allâh kowd ent temût 'enda has-sâ'a."

But Me'ġel's and Sammiṭ's mother, who was a widow, embraced her only son, crying:

"O Raṭwân, leave me at least this child, the only boy I have now! ħalli wlejdi ħalli wahîdi."

Raṭwân turned on his heel and rode away without hurting Me'ġel.

A K mâši, 'Awênân eben Sa'îd, watered his herd at al-Ġubb, south-southwest of al-Mijâdîn. The well was about two meters deep but wider at its coping stone than at the bottom, making the drawing of the water very difficult. His comrade therefore crept down, filled the leather bucket with water, and handed it to 'Awênân, who was standing above, [to empty into the water trough. The thirsty camels pressing close, 'Awênân alone could not keep them away, and one slid down the well. 'Awênân caught the animal quickly by the head and jerked it to the ground, so that her front legs were outside, her belly on the coping stone, and her hind legs kicking wildly inside the well. One kick struck the man standing below, splitting his head. 'Awênân's shouts for help brought other herdsmen to the scene, who pulled out both the camel and the injured man; the animal was unhurt, but the man soon died. When his father then seized the whole of 'Awênân's herd, the latter tied the dead man's clothes to the camel by which he had been killed, swore that nobody but that animal had killed him, and offered compensation. The judges declared that the guilty camel, but nothing else, belonged to the dead man's father.

In the camp of Meğwel eben Meşreb, who was married to a French woman, there lived with the Bedouin ʿÂfet a youth named Metkâl, a native of Irak, working for hire. Suddenly he disappeared. ʿÂfet made a search for him but without success. At last he was found by a strange wayfarer with his head shot through, the corners of the mouth slit, and his ears stuck into his mouth. This showed it to be the deed of an avenger who was in the camp as a guest at the time and soon made himself known. Having proved that it was his duty to kill Metkâl, he was allowed to go back to Irak in peace.

Ğrejð eben Mowzân tracked, tehajjer, a guilty man with his relatives for a whole year. He knew that by doing so he exposed himself to great dangers and might even lose his life, should the Arabs sheltering the culprits catch him; but this did not deter him from his purpose. Learning finally that the guilty men were living with the Sirhân, he entered the service as fedâwi, free servant, of a member of this tribe in order to discover the tent occupied by the culprit proper. At last he succeeded. One morning creeping to the tent he saw the culprit milking a camel. Foaming with rage he leaped at him, ʿadlah ʿalejh, and with a dagger stabbed him to the heart. Having thus done his duty, he sought protection in a tent, zeben ʿala bejten, and found it, because the murdered culprit's relatives were able to testify that he was the avenger proper, mettâri, who had avenged his relative, tetâreh.

Song of a Culprit Longing to Return to His Fellow Tribesmen

1. Ḳum jâ nedîmi w-e'teli fowḵ ma'fa'
taşda rafîf aṭ-tejr bel-ağrumijje
2. maftûlt ad-der'ân killah mwazza'
elja-teztah taḳṭa' ba'îd ad-dwijje
3. telfi ʿala hâk ar-rbâ' al-mebenna'
bimdâhel al-wudjân barzen ʿadijje
4. telfi ʿala ġezzâ' w-aş-šejh melfâh
elja' ḥazar bel-kown dîb as-serijje

5. jâ šejhana jetreb al-kalb membâh wa-šhûnakom dubb al-lejâli melijje
6. al-‘ağrafi min az-zejm al-jowm jenħa’ min šân ħamlen težilen ‘alijje
7. *‘ala-r-refâka kilt ana-l-jowm wağdah
‘id as-salâm w-ħabbereh lil-ħazijje*
8. *mašjen ma’ al-ağnâb lel-‘adv temanna
w-alli ma’ al-ağnâb mâ beh ħamijje*
9. *abu fahad ħabîb alli jet‘annah
jefozž al-mešâcel w-ad-da‘âwi-l-ħawijje*
10. aš-šejħ eben turki w-lâ beh mrâwa’ zejzûm ħarb w-lâ jeķatțe’ niwijje
11. sallem ‘ala zâri zebûn al-mu‘anna rejŕ az-zafer baŕ-ŕîb w-al-marħabijje
12. šejħen ‘adîm w-tet‘an al-ħejl ĵimna’h hom mâķa‘en laŕ-ŕîb w-ahl al-ħamijje
13. sallem ‘ala maš‘ân ajjâk tensa’ hadâk aħw ġaħla zebûn ar-radijje
14. jâ lâbeti lâ jâ zebûn al-mğella’ jeħallûn zejžât al-medâheb fazijje
15. aŕrâfahom jedleh bihen kill men ġâ’ swâlfen dubb al-lejâli ‘adijje
16. anħa’-r-refâka kill abûhom ‘ala-fla’ alli wara-l-ğeddejn bed-dahmašijje.

1. Rise, comrade, and mount a rested she-camel Resembling a heron in the ‘Ağrumijje swamps,
2. With forelegs muscular, symmetrically built,
Who, when thou needest her, will cross vast plains.
3. She will reach yon tent for men only, pitched
On the borders of al-Wudijân, that wholesome land;
4. Will reach also Chief Ġezzâ’, for whom this poem was written
And who, when in battle engaging, is like a wolf among the riders.
5. O chief of ours, at whose message the heart rejoices!
Your platters remain full all the night through.
6. From bondage al-‘Ağrafi today utters his battle cry
For bitter distress has come upon him.
7. Against my traveling companions today I cried: “O woe!”
Repeat [O messenger] the salute and tell what has happened.

8. Thou mayst wish that thine enemy should walk with strangers,
 For he that dwells with strangers lacks protection.
9. Fahad's father is dear to each suppliant;
 He solves problems and disputes, be they ever so dif-
10. The chief, Eben Turki, has no defect, [ficult.
 In war he is a shield never changing his views.
11. Greet for me Zâri, the protector of the violated,
 Who is jealous of the victor in contest and hospitality,
12. He is a chief all-destroying, for his right hand pierces both rider and horse.
 These are supporters and sure protectors in battle.
13. Greet Maš'ân! Woe to thee shouldst thou forget!
 He is a brother of Ġahla, a shield even of a common mare.
14. O relatives of mine, let not the protectors of him who seeks refuge desert me,
 And let the anger in their breasts dissolve.
15. For he who once reaches their lines can untroubled Amuse himself by telling stories the whole healthful nights through.
16. I ask help of my traveling comrades, who have with me a common ancestor Removed by two generations; I call on them with the war cry of the Dahâmše tribe.

Al-'Ağrafi, a member of the tribe of ad-Dahâmše, subject, min kowm, to Chief Hâjes eben Meğlâd, killed his relative during a quarrel while journeying with him and some comrades to as-Samâwa and then sought protection from the blood vengeance, ğala', with Prince an-Nûri. The avenger refused the blood price, and al-'Ağrafi was pining away. Having killed his own kinsman and being without brothers — the father had fallen in war —, he fled alone and, friendless as he was, felt utterly abandoned and powerless. After two years he composed this poem and sent it to the most respected men of his kin. The reciter was my traveling comrade Târeš eben Melfi, another Dahmaši, although he was not intelligent enough to explain every detail in the poem.

Verse 1. Nedîmi, a poetical expression for aħi, rafîži, or ħawi, meaning comrade. E'teli, instead of the colloquial er'cab, ascend or mount. Ma'fa' is a she-camel whom the owner reserves for special journeys. 3. Rbâ' is a tent for men only. Nothing but coffee is made there. Other dishes are prepared by the women in another tent, where they also live. Among the 'Amârât and Dahâmše tribes every chief has two tents put up, one for men, the other for women. Bimdâhel is pronounced bimdâhel. The Dahâmše often replace the h with h. 4. Ğezzâ' eben Meġlâd, a relative of Hâjes, was the war leader, šejh aš-šdâd, of the Dahâmše. 5. Membâh is something which we learn through others. 6. Naḥwa is the war cry of a kin; a warrior jentaḥi, when he shouts his war cry before the chief or his comrades to prove that he will not desert them; an oppressed man jenḥa', when he shouts the war cries of some prominent men, calling them to his aid. Whoever hears his own war cry uttered by an oppressed man feels ashamed and has to give help or else lose his reputation. 7. The traveling companions were his relatives, with whom he was riding to buy corn in as-Samâwa on the right bank of the lower Euphrates. 8. The poet associates with strangers, the Rwala. Even if they were fellow tribesmen, beni al-amm, yet they would not protect him as would his ahl, his kin. 9. Fahad's father was Hâjes eben Meġlâd, universally recognized as the best judge, 'ârefa. 10. Mḥammad eben Turki, the chief of a powerful kin. 11. Zâri eben Zbejân, an influential chief of the Dahâmše. Zebûn, instead of zeben, shelter or protector. Aṭ-ṭîb means a struggle, a contest or duel, with the stoutest hero of the enemy. 13. Maš'ân eben Bakr calls the camel herds belonging to his kin Ġaḥla, hence his war cry: "Ana-ḥu ġaḥla eben bakr, I am the brother of Ġaḥla, I am Eben Bakr!" Radijje is a common mare, kdîše. 14. Flân medḥabeh (pl., medâheb) zajjež, or šid-reh zajjež, is a narrow-breasted person, or one easily offended, who remains so for a long time; one who cannot exhale the anger from his breast. 16. Second cousins separated by two generations from their common ancestor, their great-grandfather, are included in the ahl proper or the kin bound to afford one another mutual protection.

CHAPTER XXI

WAR AND PEACE

The Rwala are ever at war with one tribe or another. Without war a Rwejli could not live. War gives him an opportunity of displaying his cunning, endurance, and courage. He neither loves the shedding of blood, nor craves booty, but is allured by danger and delights in the predatory art. The booty itself he will give away without thinking much about it — even to the wife of the very man he has just robbed. Some tribes, not always entire strangers, hate each other cordially. Between them peace is never of long duration. Despite the greatest efforts of the chiefs to prevent war, their people continue to attack and destroy one another. With the tribes settled along the desert borders and fully subject to the Government, peace is never concluded. If the Government, which is supposed to protect them, is weak, the Rwala despoil them whenever they are so inclined. The more distant the pastures of two tribes are, the longer will the war between them last.

DECLARATIONS OF WAR

The causes of war are, as a rule, petty thefts and the capturing of stray animals. The individual tribesmen begin to accuse each other of harboring stolen she-camels, nakâjes. Then they call on their chiefs for help. Couriers ride from tribe to tribe with verbal and written messages. Evidently both tribes desire war. Finally the chief of one tribe sends to the chief of the other a letter worded somewhat as follows:

"To the well-born, highly honored brother, Chief So-and-So! May Allâh preserve his good name! Amen. Extending our greetings and entreating Allâh's mercy and blessing for you, we announce to you that your Arabs are harassing our people and robbing them of their property continually without any effort on your part to put a stop to it. From this we judge that it happens with your assent. We now demand that you return without delay the stolen camels. If you refuse, you are, behold! hereby deprived of your fair name, mağrûd an-neḩa'

‘alejkom, and our face shall remain blank to you. You must not accuse us and blacken our face. This much for you to know, and greetings. Your brother, X Y.”

Should the other chief be averse to war, he will write back: “Both thine and my people rob each other mutually, rab‘i w-rab‘ak jitamâ‘arûn bênhom. If thou desirest war with us, elja‘ tabri kwâmetna, return our fair name to us, rudd ‘alejna an-neka‘. We do not intend to fight with you and shall not return your integrity to you. Let us know whether ye are our friend, šiddîž or šâheb, or enemy, kowmâni.”

When in the early part of 1909 the Rwala began to harass the oasis of al-Ġowf, which lies in their territory and for more than fifty years had belonged to the kin of Eben Rašîd, the minister of the Emir Sa‘ûd eben Rašîd, still a minor, sent messengers to Prince an-Nûri eben Ša‘lân asking why his people were acting thus. An-Nûri’s answer is worth noting:

“If Eben Rašîd is still as strong, ‘azîz, as before and can protect al-Ġowf, I desire to live in friendship with him. But if his power is shattered and he is threatened with foreign sovereignty, then I shall not allow al-Ġowf to fall into other hands. This is my land, and my land I will give to nobody. It has been reported to us that Eben Sa‘ûd has defeated Eben Rašîd and is pursuing him in the direction of his seat, Ĥâjel. Go there and see for yourself what power your emir still has. If he prevails upon Eben Sa‘ûd, we will come to a friendly agreement; but until that happens his representative had better depart, together with the garrison. If he does so at once, no Šammari shall suffer the least harm. Before tomorrow’s sunset let me know when the garrison will leave. Should the answer not be in my hands by that time, behold! my face will remain white to you, you will be our enemies!”

Sometimes a chief will send word: “By God, let there be enmity between us, so that blood flows; w-allâh w-al-kowm al-ḥamra.” Or: “Let there be between you and ourselves regularly declared enmity; bêнна w-bênkom kowm ‘ala waḏḥa-n-neka‘.”

Neka‘ means honesty, a fair name. After peace is made the neka‘ remains with both tribes. Should one of these tribes attack the other, it would cover itself with infamy and stain, or blacken its face — meaning its honor or integrity. This status of integrity or of a good name must be first removed; this is done by the declaration of one tribe that it returns the honesty, raddejna an-neka 'alejkom, or wipes, or scrapes, it off, mağrūd 'alejkom an-neka. As soon as this is done, they may attack without injuring their honor in the least; elja 'raddejna an-neka 'narîr 'ala wazḥa-n-neka. Their face will remain white. But when they attack without having first wiped off the neka, they commit treason and blacken their honor; elja 'mâ raddejna an-neka 'hâda bowken buktûna jâ sūdân al-hejl. The neka is the beginning of the war, râs al-ḳwâme, also the pillar of fighting, 'amûd al-ḥarâjeb, and thus signifies the declaration of hostilities.

The chief of any tribe may declare war. If several tribes ally themselves under one prince, they do not thereby renounce their right of declaring war independently. Prince an-Nûri eben Ša'lân is the recognized head of the Rwala, the Weld 'Ali, the Ešâġe'a, the Kwâčbe, and others, and yet he never declares war in the name of them all but merely of his own Rwala. During my stay there the Rwala lived at peace, šaḥeb, with the Fed'ân, but this did not prevent the Weld 'Ali from making war, ḳowm, on the latter. When Prince an-Nûri declared war on Eben Rašîd the envoys of the Tûmân, a division of the Šammar subject to Eben Rašîd, immediately appeared before him, suing for peace. Only when the chiefs of all the allied tribes give him the full power, mauwanûh, can he declare war in their name, and war is also waged against all of them, ḳowm 'ala-l-ġamî'.

RAIDS

Small Raids

As soon as war has been declared raids, both large and small, begin and often a regular battle, manâh, is also fought. If the hostile tribes camp somewhere near, a few men start out for robbery on foot, jihanšelûn. If the camps are at some distance, they ride on camels, ma'âjîr bizhûr ar-rčâb. When more than twenty men on camels, ġejš, or on horses and camels, hejl w-ġejš, gather, then it is a raid, razw, called ṣarîr when the number of participants is small, and čebîr when it is large. Every expedition of this kind has a leader, 'ažîd (pl., 'uḳda'), who need not always be a chief of a tribe, as every tribe can have its own military leader or war commander, šejh aš-šdâd, if the chief is not possessed of sufficient military ability, or is ailing, or too old. Sometimes the chief's son or one of his relatives is entrusted with the command. But any Bedouin conspicuous for his prudence and bravery in time of war may be promoted from leader of the men on foot to leader of mounted men and may even be recognized as the commander-in-chief. The chief generally tries to gain his favor, marries his daughter to him, and adopts him into his kin, but likewise may bring about his death on finding that the commander does not wish him well. For a leader who rises in such a manner usually deposes the reigning kin and becomes chief himself. Therefore the members of the reigning kin are very careful when choosing a chief and recognize only the most distinguished of their kin. This is also the reason why the dignity of a chief does not pass from father to son as a matter of course.

The commander of the smaller expeditions gives notice to his friends: "We intend to start on foot — or on horseback — on a raid, nabri neḥanšel or ne'ajjer." When some men have declared their willingness to participate, he says to them:

"We shall go when the sign is favorable, nimedd bel-waġbet az-zêne, either on Monday or Thursday."

For the small expeditions dark nights are the most suitable, lejâl az-zalma' zêne lil-ma'âjîr w-al-ḥanšel. But by far the best is the lejlet as-sarra, the last night of the lunar month, when the moon does not appear at all, "as he is then staying with the sun." On clear nights, lejâl al-ḥamra, small expeditions are never undertaken. Among the seasons of the year the cold period is the most favorable, as there is not so much danger from thirst, which is greatly feared. On the whole, both small and large expeditions are made preferably in the time of abundance, rabî', when edible plants, good pasture, and plenty of water may be found anywhere. This is the time when the inner desert swarms with raiders of every description.

Preparations for a Large Raid

Whenever the commander intends to undertake a large raid, jîmedd ʔazzâj, he announces it to the chiefs in substantially these words: "Behold! we wish to go on a large raid under the leadership of the All-Highest. Shoe your horses and prepare supplies for yourselves, eḥdû hejlkom w-wazzenû zehâbkom. Behold! ye will assemble at the appointed place on Monday [or Thursday] which is always favorable to us, bwağ-bet at-tnên."

They answer: "O Allâh, may success be our lot! May he grant us luck! Jâ-llâh maḵsûm ḥejr allâh ja'ti as-sa'ad."

Then they begin to hunt for good camel bags, flour, water bags, and barley for the horses. He who means to go on his mare only seeks someone to carry his food supplies, zammâl. If he finds a camel rider who will do him that service, jez-maleh, he loads his supplies on the camel and himself rides in the saddle, while the owner sits behind. The mare runs beside the camel to which she is tied. But every owner of a mare generally has a camel of his own and is accompanied either by his slave or a younger relative. Those who ride on camels are always in the majority, and for long raids in the hot season none but she-camels are used. Horses are ridden mainly on short raids, undertaken in the time of rabî. Nor can all the horses in camp be taken out—at least half must be left at home in order to repel a possible hostile attack. All the horses are shod before making a raid, and a few extra horseshoes taken to meet emergencies, jetanaşşel ḥda-ha. They also sew up, generally with horsehair, the vaginas, jeşabberûn al-faras, of mares big with young, especially the older ones, in order to prevent miscarriage.

Old men and small boys must not go on a raid. They are left at home to guard the camp. However, a boy of twelve is old enough to join the raiders and may properly do so, especially in the rabî season when neither thirst nor hunger threatens. In the hot months mainly men between 16 and 40 take part. They do not like to be accompanied by a young husband, arrîs (sic), in the first year of his married life. This time, called krân al-ars, is not very favorable to important ventures, therefore it is better that the young husband should stay at home. No custom forbids men to have intercourse with their wives immediately before starting out, nor is it necessary that they should put on freshly washed clothes. Everybody usually leaves in the clothes he wears at the moment.

The preparations for a raid take a considerable time. However, nobody ever knows definitely against which tribe he is going, for the simple reason that the Rwala always have several enemies at once. Only the most intimate friends of the commander-in-chief know his objective, while the rest of the camp is kept guessing. This secret it is necessary to preserve, as some wayfarer or foreign herdsman might easily give warning to the hostile tribe and enable it to lay a trap for the raiders. It is generally the slaves of the prince or commander who overhear the conversation and then relate it to show that they know more than the Rwala themselves.

On the day agreed on they depart in smaller or larger groups either for the commander's tent or the appointed place of rendezvous. A guide familiar with the watering places, delîl, is always taken and, whenever possible, a member of the tribe to be attacked as well. This is usually an elderly herdsman who has hired himself out with them; he is sent for by the commander at the last moment before setting out.

The commander is also accompanied on the raid by a seer or sorcerer, şâheb as-sirr, to whom Allâh sends dreams in his sleep of a certain significance, ‘arza ma‘âwdijje. He is asked by the commander: "O So-and-So, didst thou have a dream of such-and-such a significance? ‘arzatî ğatk." It is a favorable omen, for instance, if he has dreamed of a mare or a she-camel; if he has kissed a girl, put on a new dress, or eaten dates—all these presage a rich capture of camels. If he has eaten meat in his dream, it means that tents will be captured, together with the kettles in which the meat is boiled. If he has put on a greenish jacket in his dream, ġowħa ħazra, the commander will distinguish himself in a duel. If he dreamt that he was standing on a high hill, it is a sure sign that the commander will defeat the enemy decisively. If he has seen regular soldiers attacking the Bedouins, it is a sure sign that a heavy rain will compel the raiders to rest for some time. Of unfavorable significance, ‘arza šêna, is a dream in which the sleeping seer sees a wounded, a naked, or a snake-bitten man; or one in which he has his front teeth knocked out; or in which he falls down a well, wâže‘en bel-želîb, or is fettered, or holds gold in his hand, or goes blind. But if he puts on a red jacket in his dream, then the commander's blood is sure to flow.

The commander takes care not to meet before his tent any member of the ‘Orzân (Misfortunates) kin of the Kwâċbe, of the Flete (Surprised) of the Rwala, of the Bdûr (Oppressed) of the Ešâġe‘a, or of the Kšûš (Chased Away) of the ‘Abdelle, for the names of these kins prove that they possess qualities very unfavorable to any large undertaking, ‘arzathom mâ hi zêne.

When the commander reaches the place of meeting, the partakers in the raid greet him with the words: "May this project bring luck, râšda han-nijje," his answer being: "The same to thee, lenowlak."

In every raid there is a commander or leader. In the smaller ones there is only one, in the larger there may be more. In the smaller raids the leader, ʿaẓîd, takes the best of the captured riding camels, nâkt aš-šdâd, as well as a she-camel which strikes his fancy, al-mhawwa, and finally a she-camel for sacrifice, al-ʿaẓîre, because according to the custom one she-camel is sacrificed after each successful raid.

If the raiding party is made up of various tribes or clans, each of them has its own wholly independent leader. Only when the commander-in-chief also participates will he command in person and thus become al-munîh al-muṭîr, that is to say, the one who gives orders when to rest and when to march. To al-munîh al-muṭîr one she-camel, ṣadrijje, is given by each of the leaders, and besides he gets all the pack camels captured in the raid, such animals being recognized by their bald or gray backs, ašhab aẓ-ẓahr. Moreover he can pick out any she-camel he desires, ḥazîzateh (sic), and the best riding camel, and the camel for sacrifice. As a leader of his own troop he shares equally with the other leaders except when nothing but pack animals, he-camels, zaml, and she-camels, rohl, have been captured in the raid. In that case the leader takes as many as he wants, the rest going to the men under his command.

The commander also decides whether the booty is to be divided, ḥišer, or whether every one has to seize it on his own account, rejr ḥišer. In picking out a riding camel after a raid in which every man has taken booty for himself, the ʿaẓîd permits its owner to take any other he pleases in exchange, but has the right to except three participants from whom nothing may be taken. Such a permission is given with these words: "I empower thee to select from all raiders excepting from these three, A, B, and C. To them do not go, but otherwise take what thou desirest. Ana mheddak behal-razw ʿoḳob talâte flân wa-flân wa-flân lâ tiġihom ḥod illi tarḳik." The she-camel he thus takes is called razwa. If stray horses, mâreġ, or abandoned camels are caught or dropped rifles found, both these being called hâreġ, they are handed over to the commander, who is entitled to them. For the rest, captured horses always belong to the captor, are never shared, and cannot be claimed by the commander. If a horse owner who has formed a partnership with a camel owner captures only one she-camel, he keeps her, giving his partner six meğî-dijjât ($5.40) in compensation. If he captures a horse, he gives his comrade a she-camel from his own herd; otherwise the first captured she-camel is always his, while the second, âjde, belongs to the partner. But when everybody takes booty on his own account he must mark the captured she-camel in such a way that she may not be taken by someone else. Usually he makes her kneel and fetters both her forelegs to prevent her from running away. A she-camel about which two raiders are in dispute is called rubâša.

If the commanders of a raid agree to share the booty obtained by all, jetahâšarûn, they begin by counting the participants. If one of the leaders has many and another only a few men with him, the latter is given more, so as to equalize the strength of all the troops. The booty is divided equally into as many parts as there are leaders; these take their share and apportion the rest among their men. Demanding a head rope from each man, the leader lays these ropes over his left arm and, walking among the captured animals, hangs one rope after another around their necks. Every one then takes the she-camel with his head rope. The remaining animals are divided in the same manner. Should there be more participants than captured camels, the âzîd divides them arbitrarily. As a rule he takes into consideration how much booty has been taken by the men individually or the fact that some of the men may have lost camels of their own. The manner of getting booty and of its division should always be agreed on before the raid, to prevent trouble afterwards.

When all the men taking part in a raid assemble, the leader informs them whither they are bound. After midnight two or three men on horseback are ordered to ride ahead in order to examine the country through which the expedition has to pass as far as their next night's rest. They are called âjn (pl., ujûn). As far as possible they should have white horses, because white means success. Their duty is to find the tracks of Bedouins, to look from hilltops for camps, grazing camels, and troops of riders, and to examine the neighborhood of the next night's stopping place with regard to water and pasture, etc. If they sight a troop of riders or if they find neither water nor sufficient pasture near the spot designed for their night's rest, they send one of their number to the commander with the report of what they have found, while the others keep an eye on the strange riders or continue their search for a better place to sleep in the direction given to them by the leader.

In the morning the leader announces to his troop: "Our supper will be in such and such a place." Each man saddles his animal. Then he looks fixedly at the leader. As soon as the latter jumps into his saddle, all follow his example and ride after him.

Raiders' Marching Songs

On the road, especially in the morning, the Rwala exercise their horses or let them prance at will, and amuse themselves with songs known as ḥdaʿ.

*Jâ-llâh ṭalabnâk jâ-l-rafûr jâ-ba-d-darâġ al-ʿâlije teġʿal lena ḥazzen jetûr
bel-awwala w-at-tâlije.*

O Allâh! we beg of thee, thou forgiver,
O Lord of the stairs which lead up to the heights!
To let our luck uplift itself
With the first she-camel and the last one too.

Jetûr means a kneeling camel in the act of rising from the ground.

*Fâlakom jâ razw tîb fâlakom ṭaršen ʿazîb fâlakom jâ razw ṭajjeb
fâlakom ṭaršen krajjeb.*

May your omen, O razw (raid)! be good;
May it signify herds spending the night far from tents.
May your omen, O razw! be good;
May it signify herds close by.

Fâl is a sign, omen, from which either the success or the failure of the undertaking is judged. Ṭaršen ʿazîb is a herd grazing and sleeping far from the tents, which are usually pitched near a watering place.

*Jâ mâ hala țâri-l-ħarâjeb
w-aš-šejh jowžed nâraha min fowk mušammart aš-šelîl
w-mu'askaran mismâraha.*

Oh, how dear are the tidings of wars,
When their fire is stirred by the chief Riding on a mare with her tail held upright
And with the nails of her shoes inward bent.

Țâri-l-ħarâjeb, the report or tidings of wars, has the same meaning as ħabar al-ħarâjeb. Šelîl signifies a tail and the hairs of the tail. A good mare holds her tail upright, mušammart aš-šelîl, while galloping, so that her hips are covered by the hair of the tail.

*Harîbina mitl al-‘alîl
w-elja’ beri ‘âdeh belâh ‘âdâtana dabħ al-ħalîl
w-aț-tâmeh nelheċha hawâh.*

He who wars with us is like a sick man Whom, scarce recovered, his disease overtakes once more.
We are wont to kill a husband,
Enabling a woman who sighs for a braver man to choose whom she desires.

He who is at war with the Rwala is never safe from an attack. Even if a whole month or two go by without their making their appearance, he must not imagine that they will come no more and that he is wholly safe and well. They might be twenty days away, for example when camping in northern Palmyrena and their enemies in the valley of ar-Rma’ or in the neighborhood of Ĥajbar, yet they will come suddenly, and thus his disease — meaning defeat and the loss of herds — will return. In fighting them, many a husband will die whose wife was longing for a better, braver man. If her husband refuses to divorce her and her kin will not allow her to leave him, she can only wait till the enemy’s arms rid her of him. Thus the Rwala offer her, as a medicine, nelheċha, the free choice of a better husband.

*Al-bâreħa ĥulli žerîb
w-al-jowm bass dijârahom da’ bâlak ar-riġm aț-twîl rađîk tațâle’ nârahom.*

Yesterday my beloved was near
 And today [I only see] the territory of her tribe.
 Behold the stone pile on the high hill,
 Perhaps [from there] thou wilt see her fire.

Yesterday he left the camp, passing by the tent of his beloved, while today he is far away from her but still in the same territory. There, on a high hill, he sees a cairn, riġm. He wishes to ascend, hide behind the stones, and look in all directions. Perhaps he will see the smoke or flame of the fire in the tent where his sweetheart is living. The desert air is clear, the Rwala have sharp eyesight and can see a fire even if sixty kilometers distant.

*Abri atamanna menweti šakra dehûb muḥaġġala abri elja lahž aṭ-ṭalab
 w-rajjezha mâ-aġġelha.*

I wish to explain for what I long:
 For a gold sorrel with white forelegs!
 I wish, if the pursuing enemy overtakes us,
 To let her walk but slowly, not urge her to speed.

Ṭalab is the term for camel riders pursuing raiders. While being overtaken, the greedy cowards urge the captured animals to the highest speed in order to make their escape. Our rider, who desires to capture a sorrel mare of a golden tint, has no intention of galloping away but means to check his animal in order to repel the enemy, although he knows that the owner of the mare and his relatives will do their utmost to throw him from the saddle in order to recover the sorrel.

Jâ amm wa-štar li ġemûh jâ budd mâ hi sâjere jâ budd min jowmen jesîr beh al-ḳalâje hâjere.

O uncle, buy for me a mare that clears all obstacles;
 Oh, truly, how such a one will attack!
 Oh, truly, on the day when she attacks,
 Mares whose riders have been thrown will run to and fro.

Ġemûh is a mare able to jump over any obstacle. She does not slip on soft salt-covered ground, nor fall from a sunken bank, ǧurf, nor stick her foot into the holes made by the various field mice; hence she never throws her rider. When such a mare attacks, sâjere, the enemy, her rider throws his opponent easily from the saddle, and the enemy's mare then runs to and fro, hâjere.

*‘Ammi šara’ li mohrati lâ jâ ba‘ad kill al-‘amâm al-jowm urawwi ħarbatî
w-aẓreb ‘ala waṣṭ al-ċitâm.*

My uncle bought a mare for me,
Oh, may he live longer than all the uncles!
Today I shall give my spear blade [blood] to drink
And strike in the midst of the rising dust.

Lâ was explained by the word rejṭ (for lejt), “Would that, If only”; ba‘ad signifies both death and the remoteness of it. Ĥarba stands for the spear blade. Ċitâm is used here instead of ‘aǧâǧ al-ħejl or maĥâs al-ħejl and means the opaque cloud of whirled-up dust and sand which envelops fighting riders. Our warrior intends to throw himself into the midst of this ċitâm, although he knows the danger threatening him there. Ċitâm in its original sense signifies a slight fog or haze obstructing a free view.

Jâ mâ ħala rkûb al-aṣîl jâ mâ ħala hedbâtaha ma’ surbeten mâ hi želîl ‘ala-l-‘edw ‘ejlâtaha.

Oh, how sweet it is to ride on a thoroughbred mare!
How sweet her prancing!
And with the troop not of the smallest
The enemy shall feel her rearing.

A thoroughbred mare greatly enjoys a fight. When the riders clash she prances merrily, and as her rider attacks she rears, trying to strike down the enemy's horse with her forelegs.

*Jâ mohrati ĥobbî ĥabîb
w-al-ħarf lâ jeṭri ‘alejċ mâ ṭûl aḥu kuṭne ĥarîb
w-al-rowǧ lâ ĵenzi ‘alejċ.*

O thou little mare of mine! prance but slowly
 And let not galloping enter thy mind;
 For as long as Kuṭne's brother is warring
 No stud horse shall cover thee.

Hobbî habîb is an easy gait combined with playful prancing, as is the wont of young, spirited mares. If a mare walks in that manner, the rider can look all around and see danger much sooner than when she is at full gallop. Hobbî habîb denotes the same as emši ʿala keĵfeĉ, or ʿala dûbeĉ. (In this latter phrase dûb means "slowly," "carefully," "with difficulty." "Farask radiĵje dârha dûbak maʿaha" means: "Thy mare was brought up poorly, be careful with her." "Al-ʿarab baʿîdîn dûbak tâṣalhom hal-leĵle, the Arabs camp far from here, thou wilt hardly reach them tonight." "Didst thou understand what they were saying to each other?" "By God! no; only the sound of men talking was heard; lâ w-allâh dûb ar-reġâl jat-harraġûn.") Harf means a gallop. Kuṭne's brother is Turki, chief of the Fedʿân, who use the war cry: "I am the brother of Kuṭne! ana-hu kuṭne," because they call by the name Kuṭne all their camels, especially white ones, just as the Rwala call their camels ʿAlja. Turki was constantly making raids on the Rwala, who for their part were always ready to retaliate. Therefore the rider will not let his mare be covered by a stallion, because a mare big with young is good neither for a vigorous defense nor for a furious attack.

Al-asmar alli kâdaha
w-al-bî mâ jaṭri ʿaleĵh
ĵâ mâ ĥala ġowz ar-redâni
wa-mġarrez jazhi ʿaleĵh.

Dark skinned is he who led her,
 And to sell her will not occur to him.
 Oh, how sweet to carry two pistols
 And a spear, too, rising above the rider.

From a raid undertaken in summer the participants are now returning after a long absence. One of them, burned dark by the sun, leads a captured mare, which he refuses to sell. A youth observing him comforts himself with the idea that he too will succeed in capturing something in the next raid. The words ġowz ar-redâni, a pair of pistols, prove this song to be of considerable age, because for the last fifty years no pistols have been carried; revolvers have now taken their place. Al-mğarrez, the killer, means the long spear—but this also has had to yield to a good repeating rifle.

*Jâ hejh jâ râ'i-l-ka'ûd
rajjez ka'ûdak jammana min 'okob mâ henna ba'id
w-nahmed allî lammana
w-elja' telâken bes-semâh narzik w-naz'al 'amma.*

Oh, hail to thee, O thou camel rider!
Let him walk by our side leisurely.
Now that we are far away
We, it is true, praise him who assembled us.
Still, if [our mares] should meet [the foe] on a hard plain,
It is thee we desire, for we are angry with our uncle.

The negroes serving with Prince an-Nûri wished to be commanded on the raid by his son Nawwâf, even if the prince himself took part in the expedition. Young Nawwâf was more fiery than his prudent father, who was too considerate of the lives and health of his warriors. They expressed their wish in the above ditty.

The camel rider is Nawwâf. The raiders were assembled by an-Nûri. Semâh is the term for a hard plain where there are no impediments to the swift movements of the horses. Elja' telâken is said of the mares of the Rwala and also of their opposing enemies. Narzik stands in the Šammar dialect for the nabrîk, we wish or desire thee, of the Rwala. After the power of the Šammar emir, Eben Rašîd, had collapsed in 1906, many of his negroes went to an-Nûri. 'Ammâna, "our uncle," is Prince an-Nûri himself, for the negro addresses his master with the word 'ammi, "my uncle."

*Jâ 'azejb jâ marhi-l-ğerîr
jâ šowk mardû' al-wašâm muhli-l-'ağûz min al-ğenîn jâ-llî şwîbak mâ janâm.*

O 'Azejb! O thou who slackenest the rein,
O darling of her who is tattooed with dye,

Thou deprivest an old woman of her only son,
O thou by whose hand the wounded finds no restful sleep!

‘Azejb eben Mow‘ed is a Rwejlî hero. He slackens the rein to let his mare take him into the midst of the enemy. A ġenîn is an only son of an aged mother.

*Jâ htejl wa° kalbi rada° mâ bën dlejjel w-ar-ratû° jâ htejl low tašûfaha
mâ telbes al-meltam dalû°.*

O Htejl! ah! my heart is wandering Between Dlejjel and the mare Ratû°.
O Htejl! shouldst thou ever see her,
She wears no veil but keeps her mouth free.

The youth is to take part with his mare, Ratû°, in a raid of at least a month's duration; but, hating to part for that length of time from his sweetheart, Dlejjel, he complains to his comrade, Htejl. Ratû° is a species of the kbejše breed. Meltam is a large kerchief, folded under the chin and sometimes pulled by women and girls up to their noses, thus forming a sort of veil. A dalû° is a woman who never covers her mouth.

*Waġdi °ala-r-rab°i sanad tannab ar-râ°i jašîh zaban al-ḥşân elja° balad
ar-rab°i čassâb al-medîh.*

My desire takes me after Sanad ar-Rab°i,
As soon as the herdsman's high voice gives the alarm.
He defended the stallion when he stopped from exhaustion.
Ar-Rab°i was a raider of great fame.

Sanad ar-Rab°i, the famous Šammari war chief of the Rbâ° clan, rode a mare whose endurance surpassed that of any stallion. When, in a long fight, the strength of even the most powerful stallion was so far gone that he exposed both himself and his rider to the danger of capture or death, it was Sanad who, appearing in the nick of time on his mare, rescued the rider and the stallion too and never failed to return with booty. When giving the alarm cry the herdsman or watchman holds the palm of his left hand before his mouth and shakes it, at the same time prolonging the vowels. In his right hand he holds his staff or a rifle, to which he ties his kerchief for a flag, and points it in the direction of the threatening danger. Hşân always means a stallion, faras a mare, hejl horses in general. The hşân is, as a rule, more enduring than the mare. Al-hşân balad means "the stallion became tired," implying that he stopped moving owing to oversweating or because he was so weakened by heat and thirst that he could not escape from the enemy hard in pursuit of him. Zaban, he protected, took his part. He that is threatened with death or is in fear of an avenger asks the protection of one more powerful, who will then shield and bring him to a place where he can live in peace, zabaneh.

Jâ 'ejâl dukkûl-l-barûd
lel-morrebi muhḥ al-ḥadîd lâ budd min jowmen ja'ûd jafroḥ wadîden 'an wadîd.

My sons, pound the powder;
 For al-Morrebi we need steel,
 And the day is sure to come
 Which will take the lover from his sweetheart.

A Turkish officer, known to the Rwala only by the name of al-Morřebi, was in command of the regular troops who drove back the Bedouins whenever they tried to encamp in the settled territory. This happened in the seventies of the last century, when it was the policy of the Turkish Government to protect the fellâhîn from the Bedouins. The Rwala, who had lost many men, thirsted for revenge and as they could go neither to Syria nor to Irak they manufactured their powder themselves. Muḥḥ al-ḥadîd is steel. They wished to shoot al-Morřebi with a steel bullet, thinking that an ordinary one of lead would not kill him.

*Narmi-l-ʿaša benḥûrhen laṭ-ṭejr
w-en kankabb al-adnas waraʾ bemšenšelâten ṣanʿahen bed-dejr berkab ʿadlât al-ğenāʾ.*

Before the throats [of the she-camels] we shall throw their supper to the birds of prey,
Though the base one still lingers behind;
With spears adorned with chains made at ad-Dejr [Driven] into the necks of mares fed from the new crop.

Benhûrhen means the confusion of galloping camels and also their throats. Our riders are loath to retreat; they want to knock down the enemy blocking the way in front of their she-camels. The word kankabb (or kankab) is used of a rider who pretends to repair something in order that he can stay in the rear. If his comrades are getting the best of the fight, he, too, joins in, but otherwise he makes his escape. The honor of such a man is stained, he is an adnas, a base or filthy one. Mšenšelât are spears adorned at the ring between the shaft and the spear blade with tiny chains which tinkle at every movement of the rider. Ad-Dejr is a town on the right bank of the middle Euphrates.

Jâ dîb jâ dîb an-nefûd
şawwet 'ala dîb al-ğalad
er' at-tijâha bes-senûd
mâ bên aş-şâjeb w-al-walad.

O wolf! O thou wolf from the Nefûd!
 Say to the wolf of the rocky desert:
 "Behold those wandering in the upper part of the valleys,
 What a throng is there of old men and youths, too!"

The repulsed and defeated enemy hide in the gullies intersecting the rocky desert. Nefûd (pl., nifd) means sand, a sand-covered country, a sandy desert; ğalad, stone, rock, or a rocky desert. Senûd signifies that the enemy is fleeing upstream.

Jâ hzûm w-eħleb lel-faras jedkar abu mâjele lafa' ħarâjeb mâ bah manâġi
w-lâ bah 'ala-l-ğâhel ħafa' abri 'alejha naħħat âl řajjâr
w-al-'elem elja' ħilteh wafa'.

O Ĥzûm! draw milk for my mare,
 For it is said Abu Mâjele has arrived,
 And the wars to come are no secret,
 Not even from a fool concealed;
 That is why I will attack Âl řajjâr on her,
 And what I foretell will doubtless occur.

Abu Mâjele negotiated with Eben Smejz and Eben řajjâr about the settling of various mutual complaints but without success. After his return it became evident that war with Eben Smejz and his followers was inevitable. Âl řajjâr, famous for his personal bravery, was in command of the hostile troops. — It is seldom that camel's milk is given to a mare except in the time of the greatest abundance and then only when preparations are being made for a difficult raid. Ġâhel does not mean precisely silly but, rather, imprudent or indifferent to everything, a Jack-of-all-trades and master of none.

*Waš 'âd low radd an-neka' [farḥân
w-ješûf nafseh zâjede narwi-l-ralab wa-mdallekât az-zân
w-nu'awwedeh 'awâjedeh.*

And what if Farḥân returns our good name
And boasts of his greatness?
We shall give drink to the ostrich feathers and spear blades
And shall make him accustomed to what is already his wont.

Waš 'âd (correctly, w-ajj šaj 'âd), what happens?, occasionally wšu, what?, is said. Farḥân eben Hdejb was the father of Bargas, the chief of the 'Ebede. Ješûf nafseh zâjede, grows conceited, arrogant. Mdallekât are the blades and zân the shafts of spears. The spears are often adorned in their upper part below the blade with ash-gray ostrich feathers. The blood flowing down from the blades will give drink to them. Farḥân eben Hdejb allied himself with other tribes, thinking to overcome the Rwala in this manner. Till then he had always been defeated. Ġed'ân eben Ġandal, an-Nûri's father-in-law, in composing this ditty urged the Rwala to cure Farḥân of his conceit and make him accustomed to another defeat.

Jâ drajjem wa'-šûfak bedîn šab'ân w-lâ-nt beḥâlana ġanneb 'an as-sejhed jemîn nab'ri načîl 'ejâlana.

O Drajjem! I see thou art well fed indeed,
Satiated, too; thou farest not as we do —
Thus go to the right of as-Sejhed
For we want to load supplies for our children.

Once when the Rwala had to travel to Kerbela (pronounced by them "Karbala") to buy supplies for their children — for the Turkish regulars prevented them from entering Syria — Drajjem eben Haddâl, the leader of the 'Amârât, with a strong army, attempted to block their way. Refusing to let them pass, he was defeated and killed. This affair took place south of Kerbela, at the end of the escarpment Târ as-Sejhed.

Jâ târešen leben haddâl jižbel 'ala-l-ma' w-ar-rabî bên al-obejjez w-al-ṛadaf beshejleten na'ab ġamî.

Thou who goest to Eben Haddâl, [ask him]
To approach the abundance and water.
Between al-Obejjez and al-Ṛadaf
On the plain there we shall play together.

The Rwala invited Eben Haddâl, the head chief of the 'Amârât, to come to the inner desert, ješarrež, and there to meet them between the valleys of al-Obejjez and al-Ṛadaf, both of which belong to the 'Amârât and where the herds of the Rwala were grazing at that time. This region was full of water, annuals, and perennials; and hence abundance, rabî, reigned there.

Approaching the Enemy

If no report comes in from the 'ujûn, the commander rides without stopping to the night quarters where the 'ujûn always wait for him. But should the commander see a troop of riders who on coming closer are found to be enemies, there ensues a fight the result of which decides whether the raiders shall return or go on with their venture. If the 'ujûn find a better place for the night's rest, the leader accepts it. There they water and feed the horses, let the camels graze, and prepare supper for themselves. As a rule five or six men club together for that purpose. The different groups invite each other with the words: "We invite you, O brothers of ours! let him who comes reach out for the luck, and may he fare well who remains seated! al-hwa ĵâ hwiĵâna eflah min ġâ w-eršed min ka'ad."

The invited answer: "May booty be our food and another such supper, and also may we be not too long absent from our kin! hwa min ṛana w-ṭana w-ġâ haleh mâ twanna." All are eager for booty and an early, happy return to their families in order soon to make a new raid and again to invite their brothers to a supper like the last.

After midnight the leader sends out the scouts, ‘ujûn, once more and repeats this till he comes near the camps and herds of the tribe he wishes to attack.

When the ‘ujûn report that the enemy is close by, at a command from the leader six or eight men mount three or four camels and go to examine the situation. These are called sabr (pl., sbûr). Concealing their camels in a gully, they find out in the daytime how many camps there are in the neighborhood and where the camels are grazing; at night they try to count the tents and horses in the camp. If they succeed in capturing one of the enemy, they bring him to the leader, who makes him tell, by kindness or, if necessary, by threats, all he wants to know. Otherwise he must depend merely on the report, ‘elem, brought by the sabr.

Having learned the strength of the enemy and the location of their pastures, the leader examines the camels of his own party. The exhausted or slow animals are separated from the hardy and fast ones. The former (called radd) are then laden with all the baggage of the raiders and sent back to the previous night's quarters where they are to wait. The rest of the camels are then mounted each by two men armed with rifles. They are called şâbûr. Each horse is mounted by a man carrying a revolver or pistol and, when possible, a spear. The leader rides on horseback in front. Near the camp they conceal themselves. The cavalry prepare for the attack, řâra, while those on camels wait quietly for whatever may happen.

The Attack and Counter Attack

The attack is timed either for sunrise, şabbahñâhom şabbâh, when the left forelegs of the resting camels are being unfettered, or for the řâha, i. e. when the herds start for the pasture. Ehtâfa is an attack made in the middle of the afternoon; swêlme, an evening attack, when the herds are still scattered over the pastures; an attack on the herds returning from the pasture is called řâra ta‘labijje; when they have already returned to the camp, but are still unfettered, an attack known as řâra dâkka is made. All these attacks are considered honorable, because the attacked party has time for defense. In daytime they can see and hear; after sunset, not being yet asleep, they can hear; after midnight, however, and especially when the morning star appears, they are sound asleep. Both men and dogs sleep under cover in order to protect themselves against the dew and chill. An attack launched at this time is called bejât and is dishonorable, as the surprised enemy cannot defend himself.

The order to attack is given by the leader with the words: "Gain success, O ye looters! efleḥû jâ rānimîn," and by a gesture of his hand to the cavalry to advance. For their part they shout: "O Allâh, by Allâh himself!" or: "O Allâh, thy will be done! jâ-llâh 'ala bâbak," and throw themselves on the herds without paying attention to the herdsmen. Every one tries to reach an animal with his spear, calling at the same time on his comrades to witness that it was he who captured it; he then drives it before him to a second and third, which he also makes his own. A long spear is very useful in this kind of work. Sometimes they succeed in surrounding and capturing all the herds, but usually some of the camels shy and gallop away madly. These animals can never be overtaken by the attackers unless they run towards their last quarters, for frightened camels will not stop until quite exhausted.

The captured herds are driven by the cavalry to the leader, who waits for them with the camel riders. There the cavalry divides. One half, armed with spears, drives the booty to the last quarters, the other, armed with revolvers, pistols, and rifles conceals itself in some suitable spot between the leader and the camp of the enemy. These hidden warriors are called čemîn, the reserve.

Both the reserve and the leader with the camel riders, šâbûr, wait for the counter attack, faz'a, which the enemy usually makes in order to rescue the captured animals and to drive the raiders back. The task of the camel riders, šâbûr, consists in opposing the sortie, and in this they are supported by the reserve in their rear. If the sortie is beaten back and the enemy dispersed, the šâbûr fall on the camp, taking all the tents there with everything in them.

However, it is only on rare occasions that the enemy can be taken wholly by surprise, because the chief of every camp follows the rule of sending out riders on camels, called tullû, to observe the country on all sides. They usually start before sunrise, ascend the highest hillocks, survey the neighborhood in all directions, and do not return till after sunset.

Should the pastures be more than twenty kilometers from the camp, the herds are accompanied by a troop of cavalry, ġanab, who stay with them all day and also return only after sunset. Besides this, on all the highest elevations at different points around the pastures and between them and the camp, sentinels lie hidden behind piles of stones. These keep a sharp outlook for anything suspicious that may appear on the horizon. If something unusual is noticed by one of the mounted pickets, ṭullû, he ties his kerchief to the muzzle of his rifle, waves it in the direction of whatever has aroused his suspicion, and shouts at the top of his voice:

"At their backs, O riders, an attack threatens you! ḡhaw-rahen [sic] jâ-hla-l-ḡejl 'alejkom râra."

This shout is repeated and the direction indicated by the next sentinel, so that the whole camp is put on its guard in a few minutes. The girls and women hasten to open the iron fetters on the mares' forelegs, while the men put on cartridge belts and seize their rifles. One rider after another speeds in the direction from which the danger is expected, singing ḡda ditties on the way. Those who own no mare wait, weapons in hand, for the next report. If the alarm cry, ṣijâḡ, proves false and thus that the man who gave it, ṣâjeḡ, called for help, fazza al-ʿarab, unnecessarily, the sentinel shouts: "Forgiveness, al-ʿâfje," and the cavalry who came out return home in groups, singing. But if the enemy really appears and is near at hand, the warriors who have no horses run from the camp afoot to help the cavalry. In case the enemy flees and the cavalry cannot overtake them, they return to the camp, pick their riding camels from among the herds, saddle them, load them with water bags and food, and start as the ṭalab in pursuit of the hostile troop.

Should the rescuing cavalry who make the counter attack, fazʿa, find out that the attackers are too numerous, they dispatch messengers to the neighboring camps, who shout from afar: "Come out to our help quickly! Your comrades have been robbed! efzaʿû rabʿakom wuḡedû." As this cry is repeated by the sentinels of the other camps or by the herdsman, it is often unnecessary for the messenger to reach the camp itself. He stops and waits for the first riders to respond to his call, and with them he then gallops to assist his people.

If, for instance, Eben Šaʿlân is informed that a strong enemy is approaching, he orders all his tribal divisions to get ready. Soon troop after troop headed by their chiefs arrive at his camp, defile before his tent, je'arzûn, and shout their battle cry:

"Before thine eyes, 'ajnâk, O chief! The rider protecting the 'Alja camel herds rides before thine eyes, and that rider is a Rwejli, 'ajnâk hajjâl al-'alja rwejli."

The battle cry, nahâwa, uttered before the chief is intended to rouse both his courage and that of his warriors, jesiddûn mahzam aš-šejh w-jukawwûn (sic) 'azmahom. As a proof that they will not desert their fellow tribesman they defile before him on horseback; this is called 'arza. The 'arza is always connected with the nahâwa. Without a nahâwa there is no 'arza.

Whenever Eben Ša'lân sets out to rescue his captured herds, he shouts to the enemy from afar:

"Oh, how many times have we freed herds like these from enemies like you. The rider protecting the 'Alja herds is a Rwejli! By Allâh himself! This day is the most ruinous of all days for you. Oh, how far are your kinsfolk from you! Jâ mâ fakkejna mitlehen min mitlekom hajjâl al-'alja rwejli w-allâh hal-jowm akrad al-ajjâm 'alejkom w-ba'ad ahalkom al-jowm 'alejkom. All of you must perish, your kins will not come to help you!"

If the victorious attackers expect a second counter attack, faz'a, stronger in numbers, before hiding themselves their cavalry defile before the commander and the camel riders and shout their battle cry:

"Before thine eyesight, O chief! Before your eyes, O comrades! The rider protecting the 'Alja is a Rwejli!"

The commander answers: "We shall not desert each other! lâ hâla' w-lâ 'adam," and is the first to throw himself on the enemy, with the words:

"If Allâh grants luck to us we shall capture your mares as we have already taken your camels!" for nothing inspires the troop so much as the bravery of its leader. On the other hand, if he betrays hesitation, all is lost. If the leader on his part notices that his men are wavering, he admonishes them with the battle cry:

"Before your eyes, O comrades! The rider protecting 'Alja is I, So-and-So. I fill even heroes with fear, I, So-and-So, da'âr as-sebâja w-ana flân eben flân." If they answer: "Enough now and grace! kafw w-na'am," he is positive that they will not desert him.

If he sees a man fleeing, the leader cries: "Shame on thee for running away! Thou art not worthy to mount a she-camel! Thy daughter shall not marry lest she bear a scoundrel like thee, who desertest thy comrades!" If more try to run away, the leader shouts: "Shame on you, ye runaways! Face about, come back, ye are going in the wrong direction!" and beats them with the flat of his saber. This is effective. First one and then another rejoin him, howling: "At them! At them! O So-and-So! say not afterwards that thou hast not seen me throwing myself at them! at them! at them! fowkahom 'alej-hom." If it seems as if the enemy would win, the girls, if present, with words and gestures encourage the warriors to persevere. With their breasts bared and hair loosened they ride on camels where the greatest danger appears, call to their friends and to those dear to them, remind them of amorous moments spent together, and threaten to join the enemy if their own people disappoint them.

Many, especially the younger warriors, then with the left hands raise the hem of their cloaks before their eyes and, with the saber or dagger in the right hand, throw themselves on the enemy. During the fight they shout: "Away! Tremble! At you! at you! O faithless people! Ye shall not escape. We came from afar to get you!" And then the fight changes into a series of duels. Personal bravery, though greatly limited by the use of firearms, may even now be exhibited.

If the attackers learn that there is in the camp to be assailed a fighter feared for his bravery, they prepare to destroy him. The evening before the attack the leader takes a cup of black coffee in his hand and says:

"This cup is filled with the blood of So-and-So. Who will drink it?"

If one of the men present takes the cup and drinks the coffee with the words "I am drinking the blood of So-and-So," he is obliged to meet the aforesaid hero in a duel. During the fight he asks again and again:

"O riders, who of you has seen So-and-So?"

If the hero is not among the fighters on that day, a comrade of his will answer: "O thou son of an honorable family, he is not here. If he were, thou mayst be sure he would not hide from thee. But here is one who will take his place. Only come nearer with her [the mare]! Jâ walad al-ḥalâl mâ hw ḥâzer lâ cân ḥâzer mâ cân ittakaʿ ank ḥâzer min jesedd anneh mâr žarrebha ġâj."

But if the hero happens to be present, he says: "Oh, who is inquiring for So-and-So? This is he. Thou hast reached him. Jâ nâšeden an flân hâda hw wašelt ḥâzer."

The comrades of both warriors then stop fighting, the better to observe the result of the duel, mulâkaʿ. Both duellists first utter the battle cry of their tribe, adding: "Never say: 'He has surprised or tricked me.' Lâ tkul raṭarni w-bâkni. Brace up now and defend thyself! ḥod ḥazarak w-enfaʿ ḥâlak. Oh, how do I frighten heroes! Thou sneeredst at me and thy lips are twitching!" A duel always ends with the death of one of the warriors. Of the victor the tale quickly spreads: "He fought, tanâtaḥ, with So-and-So."

Whoever catches sight of the chief during the battle and longs to defeat him, cries out: "O Allâh, help me to defeat the chief and I will sacrifice a fat she-camel to thee! jâ allâh baš-šeḣḣ w-fâter."

It is a fact that there are still many who drink the blood of the stricken enemy. ʿAwde abu Tâjeh shouted: "O Allâh, give Daʿsân to me that I may drink his blood!" Daʿsân al-Hemš was a brave Šarâri warrior. Meeting him in a battle, ʿAwde abu Tâjeh with a well-aimed bullet swept him from the saddle, jumped down on him, and, putting his mouth to the wound, drank his blood. Then he cut open his breast, tore out the still beating heart, and ate it.

A raider who wishes either for his brother or for himself to capture a fine mare on which the enemy is still sitting, calls out: "Oh, for the luck of So-and-So! [here he names his brother or himself], help me to throw this rider off his mare and I will sacrifice a she-camel! jâ baḥat flân beha-l-ḳlâʿa w-fâter." Then he shoots at the enemy, cuts him with his sabre or stabs him with his spear, and throws him from the saddle, ḳallaʿeh anha.

A warrior coming face to face with an enemy by whose hand his father, brother, or another relative has fallen, shouts at him: "O So-and-So, I wish to avenge my father! jâ flân jâ betarârât abûj." If the other is not afraid he will answer: "Away with thee who rememberest a debt and askest for a settlement! ṭṭasa jâ ḥâfz ad-dên w-ṭâlbeh." But if he is afraid he begs: "I ask thy protection! Shouldst thou refuse it and avenge thy father, the fire of hell will be thy punishment; daḥîlak bên abûk w-an-nâr," or: "Higher than thy hand is the hand of Allâh, who is sure to prevent blood flowing from this neck of mine." If the one who is challenged does not feel guilty, he corrects the other: "O thou, suspect me not! Seek him not with me at any hour of the day or of the night; for it was not I who cut his skin and made his son an orphan! Jâ flân lâ-tâhem mâ leh 'endî medâr w-lâ sâ'at al-lejl w-lâ sâ'at an-nahâr w-anni mâ şakķejt leh ğild w-lâ ajtamt leh wild." Then, when the avenger looks at him more closely, he may answer: "And I do, by Allâh, believe it; w-ana ballâh žana'at."

He who sees certain death before him asks for pardon in these words: "Give pardon, O rider! emna' emna' jâ ḥajjâl."

The man addressed will answer: "Come hither and thou wilt save thy neck. Come hither, Allâh lies on thee," or: "Dismount before the face of So-and-So" — naming himself. The suppliant, coming nearer, says: "Aṭni allâh, give me Allâh," or "Ḥoṭṭ alejji allâh, lay on me Allâh!" When this is done, the pardoned man says: "Aṭâni allâh w-aṭajteh allâh 'an al-bowķ, he assured me by Allâh and I assured him by Allâh against treachery."

He then surrenders his arms and most of his clothing and receives from his captor either a kerchief or head rope, accompanied by the words: "Here, take my kerchief (or my rope) and tell any one who approaches thee that thou hast been pardoned by So-and-So, hâk kżâṣti ('aşâbti) w-alli jeġik ḥabbereh ana manî' flân."

His mare or she-camel is taken by the victor, mâne'eh, or the latter lets some comrade keep her for him a while and returns to the fight. The pardoned one waves the kerchief or the rope, crying: "I am the manî' of So-and-So." If both himself and his animal are wounded, his pardoner, mâne', conducts him to his own party where assistance will be given him, or else the mâne' will allow him to return home at once. Should he live too far away, he is furnished with a she-camel, water bag, food, and a reliable guide, but must give his word of honor to return everything or to give compensation.

When a comrade of the victor is about to return home, jenkeş, the victor says to him: "The man who stands before thee was pardoned by me. Conduct him to my relatives!"

He who asks no pardon while in danger is generally killed, elja' mâ mâna' endabaḥ. There are many who hide, concealing their arms and clothing among the rocks or in the sand, and at night manage to creep to some tent. If they see a little boy or girl, they salute the child; if the salutation is repeated or if they succeed in entering a tent, they are saved. But if the fugitive is seen by an adult man, he may be killed despite his crying: "Give pardon! emna." For he should have asked for it during the fight, not now, they say.

Sometimes, however, the commander-in-chief declares that no pardon will be given. "O comrades, behold! the granting of pardon to them is abolished; jâ ġemâ'a tarâhom maḳtû' al-man' 'anhom."

Frequently the fight lasts many hours. If the attacked party succeeds in scattering the horse riders, it then usually surrounds all the camel riders, ḥâlow 'ala-l-ġejš killeh, captures them, and starts in pursuit of the raiding party which is driving off the captured herds. During the pursuit they encourage each other with the words: "At them! at them! fowḳahom fowḳahom." Or: "It has come upon them [i. e. defeat] ê... ê... ê... Hail, I smell the fragrance of So-and-So from their tails. Râḥat 'alejhom râḥat ê... ê... ê... hejḥ jâ rîḥat al-flâne bedîjûlehen." Just as he would allow nothing to keep him away from the maiden of his heart, so he has now to overtake the fleeing enemy.

After the Attack

If the rescuing counter attack of the despoiled camp is repulsed by the ṣâbûr, camel riders assisted by the ċemîn, reserve cavalry, the reserve starts in pursuit of the scattered enemy, while the camel riders surround the camp, take from the tents what suits them, roll up the tents, and load all on their camels. The women and children suffer no harm; on the contrary each woman is given at least one she-camel so that with her children she can reach her nearest relatives. The girls beg the raiders: "E'klû 'alejna, give us something to fether," and the she-camel returned to a girl by a raider becomes her property. As the saying is: "A girl's booty is the animals returned to her by the raiders, ċasb al-banât 'oḳl al-ḥalâl." Should a raider accidentally rob a tent belonging to some fellow tribesman then camping with the enemy, he returns either to him or to his wife everything he has taken, al-wahama tarî. This is also done when the raiders rob on the march travelers unknown to them and later discover they were their friends.

To spend the night in the camp of a friendly clan which maintains amicable relations with the plundered clan is not allowed.

The Rwala bury their dead friends; their wounded they carry off on their camels, having first bandaged their wounds as best they can. To the dead enemy no attention is paid. At the same time whoever has swept an enemy from the saddle and sees him writhing on the ground is obliged, as a man of honor, to help him. Should he kill an enemy in that condition, ṭarîḥ, he would commit a dishonorable deed, ʿajb, in the same manner as he who kills a man he has pardoned, or one sleeping, or a woman, or child. Likewise it is considered shameful to attack a related tribe, even if hostile, after the appearance of the morning star, bejât, or to cripple or kill captured animals when to escape with them proves impossible, fedaʿ bel-ḥalâl.

The successful bringing of captured herds from a distant territory to the home camp is the highest proof of a leader's sagacity, especially if he undertakes raids against tribes encamped as far as 600-800 kilometers away. A prudent leader will at once separate the camel calves from the grown animals and have them driven back; he will occupy the more important mountain passes and try to retreat through a country where the camels will find sufficient pasture. If he returns with the booty without any considerable losses, everybody talks of booty and success, ʿasab w-salâme, but if the booty is taken away from him by some ambushing party on the way, the raiders come back, one after another, very much depressed, for besides having gained nothing they have lost many comrades, ḥasâra. If the defiles have been occupied they can march and rest at their leisure, for, as they say, "our little brothers follow in our tracks, ḥwijjâna kḏabaw aṭârna." The troop following the returning raiders and protecting them against the pursuers, ṭalab, is called kazb.

Returning Raiders' Songs

As soon as the returning warriors feel safe, they intone ditties, ḥdaʿ, appropriate to such occasions; elja kfejna naḥadaʿ (sic).

*Jâ dîb jâ dîb edra'ât
 sawwet 'ala dîb al-baṭîn en čân 'ejâlak meṣwiġġât dūnak abu leḥje samîn bšalfa min čaff eben ša'lân farak ḥabîben 'an ġenîn.*

O wolf! O thou wolf of Edra'ât!
 Call for the wolf of al-Baṭîn:
 If thy sons go to bed without supper
 Here, take this fat longbeard
 Struck by the spear blade of Eben Ša'lân, Who has parted the sweetheart from an only son of his mother.

Near the settlement of Edra'ât, Eben Smej, head chief of the Weld 'Ali, suffered a great defeat at the hands of the Rwala. Al-Baṭîn is the basin east of Edra'ât. Meṣwi is a supperless man. Ġenîn is an only son. The girl lost her sweetheart, the mother her only son.

*Jâ târešen lel-ġandali eslam w-sallem 'alejh
 er' an-na'wâši bel-baṭîn wa-mḥârana dâġen 'alejh henna ḥadejna târahom le'ujûn min natri 'alejh.*

O thou who journeyest to Eben Ġandal!
 Hail to thee and greet him!
 Behold an-Na'wâši in al-Baṭîn,
 How our young mares have enveloped him
 And how on them we avenged him
 For the eyes of her of whom we now think.

An-Na'wâši, a chief of the Sardijje, who camp in the plains west of the Hawrân, allied himself with Eben Smej and in the war that followed killed Hâjel, a brother of the chief Eben Ġandal. But in the decisive battle near Edra'ât an-Na'wâši was surrounded by Eben Ša'lân's cavalry, defeated, and killed. Dâġen 'alejh: the mares enveloped him in a cloud of dust and fine sand whirled up by their furious attack. The wife of the fallen Hâjel eben Ġandal, a famous beauty, called on the Rwala to avenge her husband.

*Jâ drajjem laḥalfat ʿalejk hoṭemt w-ʿakabk al-felâḥ min ʿokob mâ rišak četîr
 w-al-jowm makṣûm al-ġenâḥ.*

O Drajjem! faith, it was measured to thee with the same measure.

A rap on the nose thou hast got, and thy success is gone.
 Though many feathers thou hast inherited,
 Yet today thy wings are broken for ever.

Fakḳ al-ġelam ʿajja ješûl waʿ dîreti ṛadaw baha ešraw lmarat ʿali zebûn ḥalawh jalbes tawbaha.

He opened his shears, refused to attack.
 Ah, they occupied my territory!
 They purchased a caftan for ʿAli's wife
 And made him wear her dress.

Owing to the lack of good rain, there was no pasture in the Rwala territory at one time and consequently no affluence, dîrt ar-rwala maḥal mâ baha rabîʿ, but in the regions inhabited by their enemies, the tribe of Sbaʿa, the vegetation was luxuriant, rîf. So they agreed among themselves, tawâzaw, to move into the Sbaʿa territory, dîra, and said:

"We shall go there and encamp near our relatives, the ʿAneze; eḥna ntawaġġeh ila had-dîra wa-nzel ḥawâli žerîbna ʿaneza (sic). If they accept our friendship we shall become their friends and conclude peace with them, elja ḳbalaw suḥebna šâhebnâhom wa-tšâleḥna maʿhom; if they refuse we will fight them, w-eljaʿ mâ ḳbalaw aš-ṣulḥ willa nhârebhom. Either they will take us or we shall take them, drive them out and use the pastures in their territory, and thus save our herds and our own lives; amma jâhedûna w-amma nâhedhom wa-nhaġġeġhom w-narʿa al-marʿa alli bdîrthom wa-nsakḳem ḥalâlna wa-nîš."

Remaining steadfast in this resolve, ṛaṣabaw ʿala har-raʿj, they marched into the Sbaʿa territory and soon reached the settlement of al-Midân, which belongs politically to the administrative district of Ḥomṣ, tabʿ ḥomṣ. There the Sbaʿa and Fedʿân tribes were already encamped and ready to fight. The Rwala, halting not far from them, at once formed a war camp, tenâwahaw menâh. All camel herds were driven into one line, and each animal was made to kneel and was fettered. The women and children sat down by their herds, while the men, posting themselves between them and the enemy, waited for the attack. This situation lasted for four days. On the fifth day, when a few young camels had already died of hunger, the Rwala assailed the Sba'a and Fed'ân with such fury that they drove them out from their tents in flight, 'addawhom ila wara-l-bujût. Some succeeded in loosening the fetters of their camels and in fleeing with them, minhom min kadar jetallek ba'arîneh w-inhazam bah 'ala-l-hala, but others were surprised in this act and captured, w-minhom min a'ġelûh ar-raġâl 'an tatlîż ħalâleh w-hâlaw 'alejh ar-rwala. The Rwala took all the tents with the sheep which they found near them, also many horses and camels, and continued to pasture their animals in that territory undisturbed until the Sba'a finally made peace with them. The Sba'a asked 'Ali al-Fkîkî, chief of the 'Ebede division, to join them in assailing the Rwala in order to eject the latter from their territory, but 'Ali refused. Then they sang the preceding ditty about him.

Fakk, he opened, is an insulting allusion to Fkîkî. 'Ali often called himself al-ġelam, shears, meaning that he would cut up any hostile raid. Zebûn is a garment with narrow sleeves, open in front along its whole length and reaching down to the ankles. It is worn by men over the shirt. Towb is a woman's shirt of blue fabric.

*Jâ mĥammad jâ bedîn az-zejj râ'i-l-wa'ide ġâ' laha slîmân 'ammar leh sebîl
mîn ĥufratak wa-dlâlaha.*

O Mĥammad! O thou who hast sated thyself with the guest
Who came to the meeting agreed on!
Slîmân has surely well filled his short pipe
At thy fire and did drink from thy coffee-pots.

Muĥammad eben Smejr sent word to his enemy Slîmân eben Meršed, the head chief of the Kmuša division of the Sba'a tribe, to come for a smoke to his tent. Slîmân answered that Muĥammad should not expect such a guest with much pleasure. Shortly afterwards Slîmân attacked Muĥammad's camp, scattered his warriors, took all his tents with their supplies, smoked Muĥammad's pipe, and drank coffee from his pots. Hufra is the pit in which fire is made in the men's compartment of the tent.

*Slîmân law tak'od wa-tšûf al-'arfa waš ġara laha
bên as-swejda w-al-'ala
ħalġen tadûr 'ejâlaha.*

Slîmân, if thou wouldst only sit down and look [thou wouldst see]

By the 'Arfa herds what has happened to them,
How between as-Swejda and al-'Ala
The she-camels now seek their young.

Slîmân eben Meršed, the chief of the Kmuša, who call all camel herds "al-'Arfa," made a raid against the Rwala but was defeated and pursued as far as the inner desert. Then, before he could return home, Eben Ša'lân attacked his camp between as-Swejda and al-'Ala and captured many of his herds. The riding camels of Eben Meršed's troop after returning to camp sought for their weaned calves in vain, for the Rwala had driven them away.

Al-mešrefe tartan raġin taġġawabat hi w-al-'ala eben ša'lân aċâl surûġ zowden 'ala ħomş w-ħama'.

Al-Mešrefe all the time is jabbering,
Talking with al-'Ala
How Eben Ša'lân loaded corn at Surûġ
More than he would find in Ĥomş and Ĥama'.

Surûġ is a settlement between as-Swejda and al-'Ala, inhabited by fellâĥîn who cultivate the fields of Eben Meršed's house. Al-Mešrefe is peopled by Circassians, who also own some settlements in al-'Ala. Their language is not understood by the Rwala, hence the phrase: "She [al-Mešrefe] is jabbering, tartan raġin." After defeating the Kmuša and plundering Eben Meršed's camp, the victorious Rwala took all the corn stored at Surûġ.

*Jâ lâbeti tawen širebt al-kejj
w-al-čabd ġalejna šadâh min 'aġġeten šârat 'alejhom
bên as-swejda w-al-'ala'.*

O comrades mine! now I have drunk of satisfaction,
Because we have cleansed the stomach of its dirt,
And that in the cloud of dust that enveloped the foe
Between as-Swejda and al-‘Ala’.

*Jâ surbaten ġat tahtadi
mâ sannadaw ġihhâlaha ‘wa’ mâ ‘addalnâhom w-‘ajjû jâ mâ baṭa! ‘addâlaha.*

When the troop came, singing its ditties,
The gay youths did not hold in their mares,
Oh, how we warned them and still they paid no heed!
Oh, what hero was even the least of that troop!

Surba is a troop of ten to twenty riders. Tahtadi: it (lit., she) sings the ḥda’ ditties. Mâ sannadaw: they did not hold back their mares on meeting a much stronger enemy. Ġâhel (pl., ġihhâl), a gay youth, is a youth between his fourteenth and eighteenth years, who is imprudent and will be neither advised nor remonstrated with. Wa’ mâ has the same meaning as jâ kutr mâ, Oh, how much! ‘Addalnâhom: we warned them, we advised them to hold in their mares and to wait for help, for a counter attack, faz’a, from other camps; but they ‘ajjû, rejecting our warning, threw themselves on the enemy.

*Jâ tej̣r jâ-lli tdîr al-howm
sallem elja’ ġît ṭarḥûme ‘ašîraha ḍaḍa’ bel-kowm telḳa’ ta’âġîb bel-lûmeh wallaw ġemâ’eh rašâkom lowm alli ma’ al-ḥejd mazmûmeh.*

O thou bird of prey, who ever circlest above us!
A greeting, if thou wilt fly to Ṭarḥûme.
Her darling has shaken the enemy;
Thou shalt hear news of him to make thee wonder.
But his comrades fled — Oh, may so many reproaches
That they make the plain level with the hillside. [cover them

Hejd is a slope or hillside shutting in a plain.

*Heġġî haġġî aš-sejd ma’ waġh al-ṛulma’
ma’ waġh dasmîn al-lḥa w-aš-šawâreb.*

Run as the hunted beast runs from the face of the
 From the faces of those whose beards and moustaches are covered with fat.

Hağğ means a panic, helter-skelter flight. Rulma' or şabwa' are youths from eighteen to twenty years of age, who are ever making raids, from which they always return with rich booty and then feast on the fat camels they have captured until their budding chin beards, lha, and mustaches, şawâreb, shine with fat, dasmîn. They are well fed, of great endurance, and never abandon the pursuit of the enemy's fleeing mares or camels until they have captured them.

Songs of Booty

* The returning victors are not met by the women or girls of the camp. When near they break into songs of booty.

1. Jowmen wald al-hejs jabħa maḣḣa'eħ wa' mâ ḣaṭa'na lejleten ħarmesijje wa' ħâj jâ lallâħ wa' ħâj jâ lallâħ.
2. Jâ nâšeden 'anna min ajje žebûle
'ejâl ar-rwejlî min aħjâr al-ħamâjel
wa' ħâj . . .
3. Ĥowfân az-żulma' marâwîr az-zaħa' nowda' 'ala čabd al-ma'âdi debâjel
wa' ħâj . . .
4. Elja-ddejt mağħûdi w-mağħûd fâteri mâ-ni 'ala-d-dinja četîr al-ħasâjef
wa' ħâj . . .

1. While the idler shook up his bed,
Hey! through how many dark nights have we ridden!
Hey! glory be and by Allâh himself!
2. O thou who askest about us of what tribe we were,
(Know that) we are descendants of the Rwala, counted among the best of tribes.
Hey! glory!
3. Like thieves in a dark night, like attackers after the passing of the dew
We are wont to plant ulcers in the enemy's stomach.
Hey! glory!

4. If I risk my vigor and that of my old she-camel, Then, faith, I have not much in the world that I should Hey! glory! mourn.

Verse 1. Mažža means, properly, the spot where sexual intercourse takes place. 2. The hamûle is larger than the ahl, and is almost like the žebîle (see above, p. 47). 3. Debâjel: ulcers or abscesses. Such growths in the stomach make eating unpleasant and interfere with digestion. The fear of thieves and assailants robs a man of his appetite and the pleasant sensation of digestion.

Jâ mâ kaṭa'na dûnehen min zerâže tarmi beha ferž al-ğwâzi 'ejâlaha wa' hâj . . .

Oh, how many plains vast and scorched we had to cross
before we captured them,
Where even a stray gazelle which suffers not from Hey! glory! thirst will miscarry.

Zerâže are vast, waterless plains. Ğwâzi are gazelles which never taste water. Ferž means an animal which has become separated from the herd, has gone astray. Such a one will loose the fruit of its womb from exhaustion.

The Raiders' Home-coming

Once in the camp every man makes straight for his tent, driving or leading his booty. From behind the tents the women and girls watch them greeting their friends as they pass:

"Strength to thee! kaw flân." Answer:

"O greeting to thee! jâ hala."

"O Allâh, grant him life!" Answer:

"May Allâh grant life to thy dear ones!"

"This booty be thy consolation, ṭalak hal-fowd." Answer:

"For thy consolation, and mayst thou capture still more!
ṭalak wa-tfîd."

Sometimes the raider is asked for a gift with these words: "Prove that thou esteemest me! al-hazijje." If he answers: "Rejoice over this gift, bešš behal-ʿatijje," the suppliant may be sure of receiving something.

Their relatives invite the raiders to stop for a meal with them. "Have it good for once, have it good, ye booty getters!

Loosen your spittle! Look at the abundance! The ǧīre oath rests on you!" Should they be reluctant to accept the invitation, they usually declare their readiness to have the oath rest on them and continue on their way. (On the ǧīre oath see above, p. 460.) But if some one implores them with the words: "The ǧīre oath of the slave Râšed rests on you, 'alejkom ǧīrat al-ʿabd râšed," they must stop and eat something. Who the slave Râšed may have been, nobody knows. It is said of him that he was most hospitable and even forced travelers to eat with him.

Within three days after his return either the leader or the man appointed by him offers the customary sacrifice, 'ažīre. He kills a she-camel and exclaims:

"O Allâh, this is our custom! This belongs to the face of Allâh and to the face of our ancestor! Jâ-llâh hâdi ʿadatna hâdi liwaǧh allâh w-liwaǧh ǧeddina." Every kin reveres its ancestor but never knows at what period he lived or where he was buried. The blood of the sacrificed animal is caught into the bulging iron sheet used for baking bread, sâǧ, and with it the humps of the captured animals and the necks of the riding camels are besmeared. This is done in order to make sure of fresh booty.

A boy who has taken part in his first raid and brought back booty with him tries to buy a goat or a sheep in order to sacrifice it. Its blood he then sprinkles over his booty, dbîha rušûš al-čâseb; if a she-camel, he besmears her whole hump, if a mare, her whole forehead. From the tail of the captured mare he cuts a lock of hair, which he hangs up in his tent. This he does with every horse he captures to let all the guests know how many he has already taken; this custom is called šedeb.

After the return from a raid the story of who has fallen, where, and in what manner, quickly spreads. The female relatives of the slain men then walk out of the camp to a distance whence even a loud cry cannot be heard, there to bewail their dead.

A mother cries: "Alas, woe is me! alas, my child! alas, woe is me! alas thou whom I bore in my womb! alas, woe is me! alas, thou little son of mine! Waʾ wâjli waʾ waledi waʾ wâjli waʾ ǧenîni waʾ wâjli waʾ bunajja."

A wife cries three times: "Alas, woe is me! ah, ruined is my tent! waʾ wâjli waʾ hadem bejti."

A sister cries three times: "Alas, woe is me! alas, thou brother of mine!"

A daughter: "Alas, woe is me, alas, thou father of mine!"

Then they sit down; cry till their eyes are dry, and return quietly to their tents. There is no other mourning.

LARGE BATTLES, OR MANÂḤ

The fight called manâḥ, as distinguished from the razw or raid for booty, is very different. When a stronger tribe wants to possess itself of the territory of a weaker or to increase its fame, zowd al-ʾitibâr, it moves with all its herds and tents into the territory occupied by the latter, ṣâl ʿalejh ṣowla, and finally encamps near the main camp of the enemy. The tents form as a rule two long rows, which behind the herds graze; in front of them, within rifle shot, stands the tent of the leader and a few others belonging to his retinue. In these few tents there is nothing except the utensils for making black coffee, meals being prepared in the tents behind. All the mares stand saddled by these war tents, bujût al-ḥarb, while the riding camels lie fettered between the other tents. The men on foot are posted right and left of the war tents. Before the attack, the men on foot sometimes hide by the war tents. The cavalry attempts to drive the enemy to them and within rifle shot. Before the attack the tribal emblem Abu-d-Dhûr is fastened to a camel which walks in the midst of the bravest youths on horseback. These warriors are accompanied by the prettiest women and girls of the camp, who, with their bosoms bared and hair loosened, keep shouting:

"He who runs away today shall never receive anything from us; illi ješred al-jowm mâ leh ʿendana ḥaḳḳ." Their inspiring high-pitched cries, zarârît, are heard for a great distance. In order to raise the courage and steadiness of his warriors the chief orders the ʿAṭfa, a fancy litter, to be placed on a she-camel and the handsomest of the girls to take her place in it. Throwing off her kerchief the maiden loosens her hair, unfastens the string holding together the dress under the throat, and seats herself in the litter. Her female companions, likewise, mount she-camels and shouting zarârît hasten to join the melée in order to encourage their relatives and friends. If it is impossible to withstand the superior strength of the enemy, they call out to the girl on the ʿAṭfa to conceal herself, as the capture of the 'Atfa by the enemy would mean the greatest disgrace for both the reigning kin and the whole tribe. Thereupon the girl on the 'Atfa drives her animal to her father's tent, makes it kneel here, and either jumps off, unbuckles the litter, and pulls it inside the tent, or flees with it from the camp.

When the tribe is attacked while migrating and the women driving the camels laden with all their household goods fear that the enemy may rob them — the men, meanwhile, being engaged in repelling the attackers — they beg every passing rider to defend them, and the girls, especially, at the top of their voices, call out the names of their sweethearts:

"Bring me So-and-So, ye men! Call So-and-So hither, ye who like to amuse yourselves with girls! I want So-and-So, him of whom all talk!"

If a man passes by whom the woman expects to help her, she cries: "Thou wert praised to me so highly, and yet I have not seen thee do anything today."

When a lover reaches the woman of his heart, she breaks into an inspiring shout, uttering in a high-pitched tremulous voice the syllables of the word zarârît. The lover greets her:

"Oh, how I rejoice before thine eyes! jâ mâ 'ajnêč wa-frahi," or: "To thy joy, O So-and-So! farḥateč jâ flâne."

Ditties Sung by Defenders of Their Camps

While speeding through the camp or the moving throng in order to repel a hostile attack the men sing short ditties.

*Jâ rabb naṭlobak al-huda'
w-as-sitr w-al-'elm al-malîḥ rab'i medâbis al-'uda'
w-en ḥarrafaw 'enda-t-tarîḥ.*

O Lord! we beg thee for a lucky guidance,
For protection and good news!
My comrades, cudgels for the enemy,
Will not turn their mares save when a rider is thrown from his saddle.

They pray to Allâh for lucky leadership and favorable news about the position of the main force of the enemy, that they may attack at once and thus avoid being taken on the flank. Dabbûs is a heavy wooden staff, about 120 centimeters long. Medâbis (sing., medbes) are youths armed with such staves. They beat the enemy with the staves, pursue those who flee, and if they turn their mares in another direction it is only to save a comrade swept from his saddle. Harrafaw: turned their mares about for a new attack, tahrîf. Ṭarîḥ is a rider thrown from the saddle. He is usually seriously wounded and calls to his comrades to help him. It is considered dishonorable, a shame, ʿajb, to give a ṭarîḥ the finishing stroke.

Jâ rabb jâ rabb ar-raḥûm
tarmi-l-haja bidijârana narmi-l-ʿaša lalli jaḥûm laʿujûn ġillen bikârana.

O Lord! our gracious Lord!

Thou wilt pour forth a copious rain on our lands,
 Whilst we shall pour forth a supper for the circling birds,
 Before the eyes of our big she-camels.

Haja are abundant rains which assure a luxuriant growth of annuals. If the latter cannot thrive, it is because there has been no haja, and no affluence, rabîʿ, will follow. Dîre means territory belonging to one tribe or subject to one emir. Thus Eben Saʿûd is obeyed by many different tribes, and their territories all form the dîret eben saʿûd. The Rwala eat to satiety only once a day — in the evening — and therefore use the word ʿaša, meaning supper, to express a meal in general. Jaḥûm, it circles, is used of a white vulture with reddish wings and yellow beak. It accompanies the warriors on almost all their trips and flies above the battle ground untiringly. Ġill are strong, big she-camels. The enemy tries to capture them, but their defenders come in time to repel the attack.

Habbî lana hbûb ar-rîḥ habbî lana
eljaʿ mâ tekâmel hejlana.

Blow luck to us, O wave of the wind! blow,
 Until our riders are assembled.

The first riders on reaching the attacked herds must, together with the herdsmen, repel the first attack of the enemy; therefore they appeal to the breeze to be favorable to them, for, if they have to fight against the wind which blows dust and sand in their faces, they are at a great disadvantage compared with the enemy. But as soon as they are overtaken by all the cavalry, they can attack the enemy from the rear too and the direction of the wind will not matter. The blowing of the wind also means the blowing of success, or the fortune of war.

*Ešrefû miz'aže
w-en'abû tejraha dîrat hajjî w-lâ arîd ana rejraha.*

Climb the hill from which we are wont to give the alarm
And by your cries summon the wild beasts of this terri-
It is the territory of my tribe [tory.
And no other I desire.

The enemy intend to drive away the tribe from an important watering place. A girl calls on the men to climb instantly a high cone and by alarm cries and various signals to attract the attention of outlying camps which could send help.

Miz'aže are the tallest cones rising near the camp, from the top of which warning signals can be sent to the herdsmen and sentinels of other camps, posted on similar hills. En'abû means the harsh cry with which the person giving the alarm ends his call. The word tejr in this ditty is used not only for the falcon but for any bird of prey.

*Šahrên mâ ğanni 'alâm
w-ašûf as-sulṭa misterîh jâ waġh ad-dîb en ṭâla' ar-ra'jân adnâhom w-aḳṣâhom jeṣîh.*

For two months, now, I have received no news [of a hostile raid]
And I see that the war chief entrusted with the highest power is resting.
Oh, the face of a wolf! when the herdsmen behold it,
Both near and far cry out in alarm.

In the wars with Muḥammad eben Smejir Prince Saṭṭâm was entrusted not only with the chief command but also with all political power. In a few raids he expelled the enemy from the disputed territory; whereupon the Rwala camped there

*Jâ hâjefîn min al-manâja
min ġâh melek al-mowt mâ al-mowt mâ fakk as-sabâja jâhod ranâdîr al-banât.*

O ye who fear death! [know]
That he whom the death angel visits dies.
Death, however, cannot free captured she-camels
Yet can take those who always linger with the girls.

Ranâdîr are elegant youths who from love of the girls remain at home instead of going out on raids.

*Jâ hâjefîn min al-manâja
al-mowt mâ ġâ' leh nadîr al-howf mâ fakk al-ħabâri
w-lâ tawwal al-'omr al-kaşîr.*

O ye who fear death! [know]
That death is not preceded by a herald.
Fear cannot rescue the ħabâri birds [from the falcon's
Nor prolong life, short as it is. talons]

*Jâ-hal as-sebâja rûsehen
elja' mâ 'amâmi jelħakûn naqqâlaten şurul al-'aġam dabbâhaten mâ jarħamûn.*

O riders! ye plunderers, pull up the heads of your mares
Till my uncles come,
Who are carrying arms of Persian make,
Who only slay and know not mercy.

Ahl as-sebâja has the same meaning as ahl al-ħejl, horse riders who throw themselves on the herds and then drive them away as their booty. With rûsehen eşbetû is understood: "lift up the heads of your mares." In order to stop the galloping mares the reins are pulled up short, which makes them raise their heads and slacken their pace. They are to wait till overtaken by their paternal uncles—that is, by their kinsmen, as maternal relatives are not considered kin if not related to the father in some other way. The Persian-made weapons are mainly swords, broad spears, and daggers.

Jâ lâbeti jâ mḥajjelîn al-ḥajl
tara²-l-‘azab ‘âdeh bala²
amma nefukk dijârana
w-allâh neġûz min al-ḥaja².

O comrades of mine who let not your mares be covered!
 Behold, yon cripple has been wont to torment us,
 Therefore we either must free our lands,
 Or, by Allâh! we shall vanish from life.

Mḥajjelîn al-ḥajl: they leave their mares sterile, so that they may fight without anxiety. Al-‘azab, a cripple, was the name given to Muḥammad eben Smejr, the chief of the Weld ‘Ali and commander of the allied tribes bent on expelling the Rwala from their territory. He was called so because his right hand had been shot through and was crippled.

Râkân juṣawwet bel-manâm jâ min jubaššerni be‘aẓîl rab‘i muḥaddedet lal-ġemal kassâraten lal-ġam‘ at-taẓîl.

Râkân in his sleep calls out:
 "Oh, who will bring me joyful news of ‘Aẓîl?"
 My comrades chained themselves to a camel
 To defeat a mighty troop.

Râkân eben Meġlâd led out his Dahâmše to resist an attack of the ‘Amârât. Recognizing, at last, their inability to oppose the superior strength of the enemy, Râkân’s comrades chained themselves to the camel carrying the ‘Aṭfa litter. They fell to a man, the camel was also killed, and the ‘Aṭfa taken by Eben Haddâl, the commander of the ‘Amârât. The dead Râkân was supposed to be urging his son ‘Aẓîl in his dreams to take vengeance for this, and expecting all the time the joyous news that he was avenged.

Jâ-llâh ṭalabnâk jâ-l-kerîm
mâ hw ‘ala četr al-ḥalâl mâ hw ‘ala mâlen ‘aẓîm
tarmi fahad walla² ṭalâl.

O Allâh! We beg of thee, O thou most generous one!
 Not numerous herds,
 Not great wealth,
 But only to strike Fahad or Ṭalâl.

The wife of the fallen Râkân entreats Allâh to destroy Fahad or Talâl of the Eben Haddâl kin, who had killed her husband.

Tadallahî w-er'î hawâč Leisurely move and graze at will,
jâ hâjilen ma' futtari O sterile one with she-camels old!
w-alli jeruddeč 'an hawâč And should anyone check thee hadâk 'elmeh mâ jenterî. Pay no heed to reports concerning him.

Tadallah means a quiet, unrestricted movement; she can go where she pleases, fast or slow. Such a leisurely gait is enjoyed especially by the young sterile she-camels, hâjel, who like to prance and run from one place to another in search of the best pasture. They are often joined by she-camels more than twenty years old, which, if they bear no longer, are not restricted in their freedom. In regions entirely safe such animals can scatter far and wide, but in the proximity of the enemy they are kept together. The brave warrior tells the she-camels to disregard the danger, as he will protect them—and if any one should still try to herd them, not to obey him. 'Elmeh mâ jenterî is said of a man who talks too much. The news, 'elm, he brings is interesting, but nobody believes it, mâ jenterî. With such a babbler an honest Rwejli should have nothing to do, mâ ja'tri leh.

Aṭan la'ajni fâteri
w-aṭan elja' hâb ad-dalîl en mâ hamejteh bel-žena
jâ lejt mâ 'omri ṭawîl.

To rescue my old she-camel I will stab, Yea, stab all the more when he becomes afraid who does not esteem honor.
 And should I be unable to save her with my spear
 Then, Oh, may I not live long!

Fâter is a twenty-year-old she-camel. Dalîl is a man who values his health and life above his honor. Seeing that during a hostile attack he would have to face superior numbers, he fears for his life, hâb, and takes to flight, while a man of honor stays and tries to replace such a coward by greater bravery. Rather than allow his old she-camel to be captured, he will die.

and-So," calling the animals by their different names. This call is termed daw or dawda; the youth jedôdi. He urges them in this manner especially when there is danger of a hostile attack, in order to keep his herd quiet, for otherwise they would shy, throw off their loads, and run away. The older and, therefore, calmer animals understand at once that danger threatens them, and stop and wait till joined, jibra' laha, by their protecting troop, ġanab.

Jâ nâjiman 'an fâtereh maġhûl 'ajneh bes-sahr ħalûbeteh rukûbeteh
ġelûbeteh jowm ad-dahr.

Oh, he who sleeps—unmindful of his old she-camel!
 In his heedlessness he keeps not his eye awake
 Over his camel which he milks, which he can ride,
 And sell, too, when want threatens him.

Nâjem 'an has the same meaning as sâhi 'an. The watchman sleeps carelessly beside his camels. The word maġhûl or ġâhel is used of a lad from fourteen to eighteen years old, who, from thoughtlessness, makes all kinds of mistakes. Jowm ad-dahr, or jowm al-maħal, or jowm al-rolla, mean the period of want and misery caused by light and irregular rains. At such times the younger camels cannot even sufficiently nurse their sucking young and give no milk for use of the owner's family, thus compelling him to sell the old camels in order to buy barley or wheat for himself and his children.

Jâ nâjeme nowm al-fahad lâ tež'edûn an-nâjeme a'ġû-l-ašâjer ħakkehen
w-ar-rûħ mâ hi dâjeme.

Oh, do not awaken this sleeping one
 Who sleeps the light sleep of the panther;
 Let pregnant camels have their right
 And [remember that] the soul will not remain [in the body] forever.

'Ašra', a camel big with young, sleeps lightly, is easily frightened, and just as easily shies. Frightened camels run as long as possible and will not stop until completely exhausted.

Often they run all day and all night, many of them miscarrying in consequence. In our song the defenders of the camels are called upon to repel the hostile attack quickly and effectively, so that not even one single she-camel may awaken. The pregnant camel is entitled to protection, as she is willing to give her protector both her calf and her milk. Her protector should not be afraid of losing his life. The human soul will not remain forever in the human body. A man must die, even though he always stay at home in his bed and never take part in a fight.

*Jâ haġmeten 'endah ħarrâs
w-al-mowt 'end-arkânaha
w-mâ kaṭa'na 'endah min râs mâ derhamen ħîrânaha.*

Oh, the herd sleeping far from the camp under their guard's care!

Death is circling around them from all sides.

How many heads we cut off there

[So quickly that] not even the suckling calves started to trot.

Haġme signifies a herd spending the night far from the camp; it is also called 'azîb. Haġġamna is equivalent to mraĥ-na, we spent the night. Arkân are the four corners of the world. Min râs is pronounced mir râs. Derham is the camel trot. The men guarding the camels repelled a bloody attack so quickly that even the timorous calves were not alarmed and did not run away.

*Al-'alja tar'a' bel-ḥaṭar
w-ar-riġl fowḵ al-ma'lebe ḥenna čema' sejlen nḥadar naff al-'ada' bel-meġnebeh.*

Our camels are grazing amidst danger;
[Alien] feet already touch [their] necks,
But we, we are like a torrent which swiftly rolls
And carries away all that it gathers up between its banks.

Al-'Alja is the name given by the Rwala to their herds, especially the white ones. He who succeeds in mounting it is surest of capturing a camel when he crosses his legs on its neck and guides it by a slight kick of his foot. But if the enemy succeeded even in that, the Rwala would throw themselves on them like a flooded creek or torrent, and would overcome and capture them. Naff is a torrent which carries away everything in its way. ‘Adā means both dry or live bushes, grass, excrements, dirt, coarse sand, etc., all of which, lying generally between the banks or in reach of the torrent, are carried away by it. Meġneb is the slope shutting in the valley through which a creek runs.

La‘ujûn šikhen rawwahat
tasma‘ baha dann al-ġaras en mâ rumejt (sic) ‘abd al-kerîm jaħram ‘alej rkûb al-faras.

For the eyes of the white [camels] of reddish hue who have just reached the place of their night's rest
 And from whom thou hearest a slight tinkling of bells,
 If I do not throw down ‘Abdalkerîm,
 May I not be allowed to ride a mare.

‘Abdalkerîm âl Ġarba, the war leader of the Šammar camping in Mesopotamia, frequently attacked the herds of the Rwala when they were encamped with the ‘Amârât on the middle Euphrates. A bell is hung on the neck of only a valuable she-camel which is inclined to wander afar.

Jâ lâbeti hoṭṭû řalab
w-ar-rîš mardûmen ‘alejh jâ hejf jâ haṭw al-walad
jinîr w-mašrûhen ‘alejh.

O comrades mine, [on your spears] tie ash-gray ostrich
 But cover them with the black feathers. [feathers,
 Oh, shame! Many a youth
 Flees and yet all relied on him.

Rîš means the black, řalab the ash-gray feathers of a female ostrich. When a youth has distinguished himself in repelling an attack, the chief orders his comrades to fasten to the spear where the blade is set into the shaft ash-gray feathers of a female ostrich and to post it before his tent. When people ask in whose honor the spear is placed there, they are informed of the youth's heroism. If during an attack an otherwise worthy youth does not stand his ground, the gray feathers are covered by black ones as a sign that for the first time he has not behaved in a manner befitting his honor. Ḥaṭw means "many a one." ʿAlejh šarha: he was depended on; kunt mašrûhen ʿalejh: I depended on him.

*Aṭ'an la'ajni šâḥebi
w-aṭni la'ajni ʿandeli ḵalbi rada beh šâḥebi
minni aṭijjat ġandali.*

To aid my sweetheart I wish to stab,
And I will stab also to help my thoroughbred mare;
Of my heart my beloved took possession.
She received it from me like a Ġandal's gift which is never returned.

ʿAndelijje is a thoroughbred white mare; in poetical language this expression is used instead of ašile. Ḥada beh and aḥadeh, he took him, have the same meaning. Anything a father has given may be demanded back by the son. However, if any member of the Eben Ġandal kin makes a gift, nobody, as will be explained below, may ask for its return. Therefore, he who wishes to make his gift secure, gives it first to a member of the Eben Ġandal kin, who then hands it to the person for whom it was intended.

*Aṭ'an la'ajni bint eben ḵublân
oḥt alladi zabn aṭ-ṭariḥ
al-ʿajn ʿajn mušaddar al-ruzlân ʿašîžaha mâ jesterîḥ.*

I will stab to help Eben Ḵublân's daughter,
The sister of the defender of one from his saddle thrown.
Her eye keeps a sharp lookout like a frightened gazelle;
Her lover will, faith! not have much rest.

Eben Ḵublân is the name of a kin of the al-Ḥsene division, Weld ʿAli tribe. One who assists a comrade thrown from the saddle acts honorably, as by doing so he abandons any booty he might capture and also exposes himself to the danger of being attacked while lifting the fallen man from the ground and placing him on his own horse. The gazelles live in constant fear and therefore keep a sharp lookout all the time. In the same manner the daughter of Eben Kúblân watches for danger from the enemy and wishes that her lover may always be ready to go to her assistance.

*La'ujûn min labes al-ḥarîr šukran ḍwâjeb râseha
w-elja' talâḳow bel-wa'ad
w-aš-šejh bimahâseha.*

For the eyes of her who wears a silk garment
And has braids of fair hair!
When men shall meet in the fight appointed by Allâh,
The chief himself will be the first on the battle ground.

The daughters and wives of the chiefs wear silk kerchiefs. Fair hair is rare among the Rwala women; they generally dye it. Our beauty with braids of fair hair has a suitor in the person of the chief himself, who therefore hastens to her aid when the migrating clan is attacked and fights on the battle ground before her eyes. Wa'ad is a fight ordained by Allâh himself. Maḥâs means the place of an encounter, a battle ground.

*Arḥašt 'omri w-al-faras
ḍûn al-ġemal w-alli 'alejh jâ-bu ḳrûn čaha-l-maras ḳalbî muštâken 'alejh.*

I risked my life and my mare
Before the camel and her who sat on him.
For her with braids like this rope,
My heart is longing for her.

*Kill jowm 'ajden lal-banât
w-al-jowm hâda 'ajdana narm-al-aša lal-ḥâjemât lal-'ujûn min terîdana.*

Every day is a holiday for the girls,
But this day is a holiday for us,
As we shall throw a supper to the birds of prey
For the eyes of her who longs for us.

The girls sing, amuse themselves, and turn the heads of the young men every day, but the youths show them their real qualities on the day when they repulse a hostile raid.

Henna zejzûm al-ḥarb al-awwal naşbor w-law enneh teẓîl čamen tamûhen min ʿedâna
râḥat tedawwer leh ḥalîl.

We are the rampart against the first onslaught;
 Be it ever so fierce, we shall hold our ground,
 For there are many wives of our enemies, displeased
 Who seek another man. [with their husbands,

Al-ḥarb al-awwal is the first or surprise attack on a camp. It is repulsed as a rule by the bravest and steadiest warriors. Zejzûm is the man who guarantees the safety of the herds, caravans, and people. Tamûh is a married woman desiring another man. If her husband is killed, she may marry the one she desires.

Jâ mâ ḥalaʾ tard as-sebâja
min fowḵ muşammart aš-šelîl
w-jâ mâ ḥalaʾ hebb at-tenâja
eljaʾ şâr ʿašîžak şarîr.

Oh, how sweet is a fight with the plunderers,
 When thou sittest on a mare whose hair spreads over
 And how sweet the kissing of teeth, [her back!
 If thy sweetheart still be young!

Muşammart aš-šelîl is a mare holding her tail high so that the hair spreads over her back.

Jâ mâ ḥalaʾ tard as-sebâja
eljaʾ şirt min fowḵ al-ğamûh
w-jâ mâ ḥalaʾ hebb at-tenâja
eljaʾ şâr ʿašîžak tamûh.

Oh, how sweet to fight with the plunderers,
 When thou bestridest a rebellious mare!
 And how sweet kisses of the teeth,
 When thy beloved longs for [thee] a braver man!

Tard is the actual encounter or clash, a hand-to-hand fight in which one man attacks another trying to outflank him. Sebâja are the fighters whose task it is to capture the herds of the enemy. To repel or at least to stop these warriors or plunderers is not easy, as they are always superior in number to the guardians of the herds. No woman if married to a coward will ever fall in love with a man like him.

Jâ râčeben ĥorran mu'anna wa-mšaddaran zejn al-fedîd mâ nuĥalli waṭanna la'ujûn min lebseh ġedîd.

O thou who ridest a thoroughbred camel making a straight course,
A camel looking round in fear, with a back falling away to its tail!
[Know that] our homeland we shall not desert
For the sake of the eyes of her who has put on a new dress.

Mu'anna is one who follows a straight, well-defined course. "Ent la wên mu'anna; where art thou headed?" or "Where art thou going?" "Ana m'anna (or nâher) eben ša'lân, I go to Eben Ša'lân." Fedîd is the sloping of the back to the tail, beginning at the hump. The more simple and symmetrical this line, the handsomer the camel. Waṭan has the same meaning as dîre, a region, country, territory belonging to one of the tribes.

*Lâbes zebûn ĥmâš w-ġibba
w-al-mowt w-allâh mâ ṭara' la'ujûn min 'atâni ĥubba
w-ummaha w-abûha mâ dara'.*

I put on a silk zebûn and a ġibba,
And, by Allâh! it never occurred to me to die.
[I wish to fight] for the eyes of her who gave me a kiss
Unknown to her mother and her father too.

Zebûn ĥmâš is a silk coat open at the front and reaching to the ankles. Ġibba is a waistcoat with narrow, tucked-up sleeves. It is worn only by the wealthier youths who wish to be admired.

*La'ujûn min faġġ ad-dra w-jwiż
'atšân w-jabri šowfana
'âdâtana fakk al-wsiż
ġejb al-kałâje ĥowfana.*

For the eyes of her who draws apart the tent wall and peeps out
 Thirsting and longing for one of our glances,
 Our custom is to rescue the captured herds,
 And our task is to bring in mares whose riders we have hurled down.

When, after repelling the attack, the warriors return with their booty to their tents, they are inspected by the women and girls from the tents. Being themselves invisible, the latter look through the small space between the tent wall and roof. This wall or tent side is called ad-dera. "Derrûna 'an ha-l-bard, hang up the wall to protect us from the cold." Awâk means to examine something thoroughly. The chief orders the sbûr, scouts on camels: "Ewîžû 'ala ha-l-ḳowm, examine this detachment of [the enemy well." On their return they will report: "Awakna 'alejhom, we have looked them over," and give a detailed report. With the same thoroughness will a maiden examine her lover when he returns from a raid, anxious to know if and what booty he brings. Wsîž is the same as ahîd, i. e. a herd, ṭarš, captured from the enemy, Ḳalâje are the mares of the foes thrown from the saddle.

Mamdûh w-allâh mâ narûh
nahûš 'enda dijârana la'ujûn min ḳarnha jelûh
dabḥ as-swâri ḳârana.

O Mamdûh, by Allâh! we shall not depart,
 But harass you from our lands instead,
 For the eyes of her whose plait is appearing —
 For the killing of troopers is our sport.

Mamdûh Pasha was the commander of the Turkish troops fighting the Druses in the Ḥawrân. When defeated he asked the Rwala for help, but this they refused and, instead, composed this poem. Nahûš means guerilla warfare, in which small regular detachments and frontier guards are attacked. The regular cavalry sent by Mamdûh against the Rwala were beaten by them because their horses could stand the heat and thirst much better than the army horses. They awaited the soldiers in ambush, surrounded, and killed them. Ḳâr means hunting by lying in wait or catching the game in snares.

Lâ budd al-aškar dâre'an bel-hejl amma jeġi walla' jarûh la'ujûn min riheh zebâd w-hejl alli 'an al-âka tamûh.

Al-Aškar certainly is arming cavalry;
Either he advances or he runs away.
[We will fight] for the eyes of her who sends forth sweet fragrance —
Who instead of a coward longs for another man.

Al-Aškar is the surname of Sa'dûn, head chief of the Muntifež tribe. Al-Aškar's impending raid became known, and the warriors from all camps hastened to help the camp most endangered. They knew that al-Aškar would certainly attack their camps, too, if he were not repelled in time. Therefore they meant to fight bravely for their sweethearts, among whom there was many a one who, although married, longed for another man, knowing her husband to be a coward. 'Âka is a man who takes a long time to dress, to arm himself, and to mount his horse in order to evade repelling the hostile attack.

*Jâ mḥammad šift eben rummân
'ajjentûh ḥammâj az-za'an walad al-frejġi zaḳlabeh la'ujûn bižen fara'an.*

O Mḥammad, hast thou seen Eben Rummân?
Have ye seen the defender of the moving clan?
A son of the Freġe gave him a good blow
For the eyes of the fair ones with loosened hair.

Muḥammad eben Smej'r was an antagonist of the Rwala; Eben Rummân, a dreaded hero among Eben Smej'r's warriors, was killed by 'Ejâd eben 'Aršân of the Freġe clan of the Rwala. Zaḳlab is said of a falcon, who first stuns its game with its beak and then kills it.

*Liġe šâḥiban zêna šikkâḥ ḥelwan suwâd 'ujûnaha lâ farra'at 'ala-l-mibṭâḥ
al-'omr jirḥaṣ adûnaha.*

I have a sweetheart fair, white and rosy;
Charming is the black of her eyes.

When she once rises in her litter,
Life before her loses its worth.

Šikkâh is white tinged with rose. Mibtâh are the long upper poles of the litter by which the woman sitting in it supports herself when rising to look out.

Bint ahu kutne jâ nawwâf
turkijje lâ tigûnaha
elja' telâken bes-semâh ukalletak la'ujûnaha.

To the daughter of Kutne's brother, O Nawwâf,
To Turkijje go not too near!
If our mares meet on a plain covered with coarse sand,
I shall throw thee forward for the sake of her eyes.

Ahu Kutne, brother or defender of the camel herds called Kutne, was the head chief of the Fed'ân. His daughter, Turkijje, famous for both her beauty and prudence, was greatly enamored of Saṭṭâm, the prince of the Rwala, her love being returned. Nawwâf eben Ka'ejšîš, a near relative of Turkijje, claimed her for himself and would not allow her to marry Saṭṭâm. After trying in a friendly way to change Nawwâf's mind, Saṭṭâm composed this ditty and sent it to him with the threat that he would declare war on the Fed'ân if Turkijje were not given to him peaceably.

Kalaṭ is said when a camel saddle inclines forward. In using the word ukalletak Saṭṭâm threatens to meet Nawwâf in a duel and so terrify him that he will flee; Saṭṭâm will then strike him from behind with his weapon and throw him forward.

Bint ahu kutne jâ saṭṭâm
šakha ja'ûzak lownaha tis'at ġemû'en rarrabat
mâ zanneti ja'tûnaha.

The daughter of Kutne's brother, O Saṭṭâm,
Is like milk and blood; her color is not to be thine!
Nine clans have gone from the desert to the settled
Hardly I think would they yield her to thee. [lands,

The Fed'ân were camping in the inner desert, when Nawwâf was visited by Saṭṭâm's messenger. In order to increase the distance between themselves and the Rwala, they left the desert, ṛarrabow, crossed the Euphrates, and encamped on al-Ḥâbûr, whence Nawwâf sent his answer, also in verse. Yet Saṭṭâm got his Turkijje and was very happy with her.

*Jâ râ'i-l-ḥamra šenûf
w-ḥelw šabtāt rāseha
jâ mî ḥalaḥ ḥebb al-henûf
w-mlâ'aben befrâšeha.*

O thou who ridest the bay who always holds her head
Faith! pretty is the motion of her head. [high!
Oh, how sweet is the kiss of the smiling beauty
And the struggle in her bed!

Šenûf is a horse which habitually carries its head erect and breathes through its nostrils, even while galloping. Ḥebb means a kiss. "Kiss his hand! ḥebb îdeh."

*Šawâjeḥen w-al-ḥejl 'azzam
w-e'ljaḥ račebna mâ nešûf
'âdâta ra ramja-l-muḥazzam
min šânak jâ-l-ṛarw al-henûf.*

They cry alarm and the horses are shying,
And, as we rode out, nothing we saw.
Our custom is to strike down armed men
To please thee, our little gazelle, who smilest so prettily.

Šawâjeḥen are the sentinels announcing at the top of their voices that they have seen danger. On hearing these alarm cries, the horses begin to shy, pull at their halters, jump up, and try even with the forelegs fettered to run in the direction whence the alarm is heard. 'Azzam al-ḥejl: the horses are shying, will not be controlled, lâ tasned. 'Azûm: a shying horse, either a stallion or a mare. Muḥazzam is a warrior armed not only with a rifle and revolver, but also provided with plenty of cartridges, which he carries in one or two belts, one of them thrown over his shoulders and across the breasts. Ṛarw is a young gazelle; henûf, a young beauty with a pleasant smile.

Nešmijjeten tarčaḥ lena w-ḥelw ṛazzat 'ûdaha

malbûsaha riš an-na'am
w-mdellelen ka'ûdaha rašûšaha damm al-ḥamar
w-al-bizr tal' enhûdaha.

A beauty is leaning towards us,
 And how prettily she stands up in her litter
 In ostrich feathers dressed;
 She rides on a camel with gay trappings.
 Stained by red blood is she,
 And her breasts appear like lead bullets.

A young girl, with her breasts bared, sits in a fancy litter and during the fiercest fighting encourages her countrymen to persevere. 'Ûd is the essential part of the litter.

Aşkâr dwâjeb 'addabak
w-arwâk naḳḳâz al-ğ'a'ad
walad ar-radi lâ tâḥedeḥ jigîk mitl abûh walad.

The one with his braids dyed blond is a hindrance to thee,
 And he yearns for thee, he who often dishevels plaited hair.
 The son of a degenerate thou hadst better not marry,
 Else thy son will be like thy husband's father.

The eben al-amm, or nearest kinsman whom it is permissible for her to marry, has a right to the girl since he has reserved her for himself, ḥağğarha. He is a hindrance to the girl, because he lusts, rawa, after her; rawa is more sensual than hawa. Hawjân means an enamored one, while rawjân is a man lusting for sexual intercourse. Ğ'a'ad is the plaited and combed hair, consisting in the case of a girl of kuşsa, or hair trimmed above the forehead; of zidle, small braids made of the trimmed hair above the forehead; and of dwâjeb, long plaits on the upper part of the head and above the ears. Naḳḳâz al-ğ'a'ad is a man passionate in sexual intercourse, thus dishevelling the woman's hair. The Rwala call such a man radi, a degenerate, and dislike their daughters to marry him. Just as he has inherited his bad qualities from his grandfather, her son would be like his father. The Rwala firmly believe that both good and bad qualities pass from the grandfather to the grandsons.

Jâ-bu temânen dubbalen wa-rhâf ʿedâb liṭarrâd al-hawa jâ židleten rîš an-naʿâm erdâf jeṭab beha šafž al-hawa.

O thou with eight teeth fine and small,
 Which so torment him who is given to flirting!
 O braids above the forehead, as thick as the ostrich's feathers,
 With which nothing but a strong breeze can play.

Temân are the four lower and the four upper incisors. The finer and smaller, the prettier they are. When they are shown by a smiling beauty, the passion of amorous men is inflamed to a high degree. Ṭarrâd is a warrior who, circling on his mare, attacks the enemy with the one aim of defeating them. No sooner has he vanquished one, than he throws himself on another. Ṭrâd is a hand-to-hand fight, also a mock battle in which the struggles of a real battle are imitated. It is often performed in honor of an esteemed guest. Ṭrâd al-ḥejl has the same meaning as leʿeb al-ḥejl, mock battle, cavalry play. ʿArâza has nothing in common with ṭrâd. In ʿarâza the warriors defile, one by one, before the standing chief, assure him of their fidelity, and by uttering their war cry raise one another's war spirit. He that devotes much of his time to love affairs also resembles a ṭarrâd, because, having gained the victory over one beauty, he leaves her in order to win the favor of another. The feathers on the hips of an ostrich are the thickest. A beauty's židle should, likewise, be so thick and heavy that nothing except a strong breeze could move it. Safž or šalf is a strong, sudden gust of wind.

*Jâ šowk jâ dakḳâk al-ḥejl
 jâ merteči fowk al-ḥani eḳhar ḳaʿûdak ʿenda rkûz al-ḥejl abi-zmanak w-atrok hali.*

O sweetheart mine who givest forth a fragrance as if pounding cardamom!
 O thou who supportest thyself by the bent litter pole!
 Stop thy camel at the cavalry assault,
 For I will desert my kin to guarantee thy safety.

When a migrating tribe is attacked by the enemy, the maiden should put both herself and her camels under the protection of her lover. Hejl, cardamom, is pounded and added to black coffee. He that pounds hejl in a mortar smells of it. The women like to sprinkle their hair and dress with it. If the girl or woman sitting in the litter wants to observe better, she has to kneel and support herself with her elbows on the bent horizontal pole. The lover will neglect the property of his own kin in order to rescue his sweetheart from being robbed by the enemy.

*Jâ bint wa' kalbi širebč
širb al-ḡarâḥ bel-ḡâjile jâ bint w-allâh mâ-refč mâr enn ġa'ûdeč mâjile.*

O girl! Oh! my heart drinks thee With the same lust as we drink fresh water during the greatest heat.
O daughter! by Allâh himself, I know thee not,
But thy waving plaits caught my eye!

The warrior saw the long, loosened braids of an unknown beauty and began to desire her with his whole heart.

*Er' aš-šalâfi dâre'ât mitl aš-šenâber bel-hawa'
'ajněč jâ tîrf al-benât
jâ lâbesen towb al-ṛawa'.*

Behold the blades of the decorated spears,
Shining in the air like a red garment!
Before thine eyes, O tender maiden
Who appearest in a seductive dress!

The blood-stained spear blades remind one of the long red kerchiefs worn by dressy women. Towb al-ṛawa' is a woman's dress unbuttoned below the throat. It hangs loosely over the shoulders disclosing both the throat and the breasts. Thus the girl, who in a perilous fight encourages the men to persevere, arranges her dress.

*Jâ hejh jâ râ'i-l-ka'ûd
wa-mḡalladen riš an-na'âm*

*al-ḵalb min jammak jahûb
w-al-ʿajn ʿajjat lâ tanâm min šânaha narḥi-l-ġerîr
narmi-l-ʿaša laṭ-ṭejr šamâm.*

O hail! O thou who ridest a camel Adorned with ostrich feathers!
The heart in thy presence takes fire,
And the eye will not yield to slumber.
To please her, we shall loosen the rein
And at once throw supper to the birds of prey.

The maiden accompanies the men into the fight so that they attack the enemy with greater courage. They will loosen the reins to allow the mares to bring them into the midst of the enemy more quickly. Only a coward will hold back his horse. Šamâm means to reach a thing as quickly as a scent reaches the nose.

Jâ bint jâ šakra-l-dwejbe O maiden! thou with the fair plait, jâ ʿajn zubejj an-nâziye O thou keen eye of a gazelle!
al-ḵalb min jammak jahûb In thy presence the heart takes fire
w-al-ʿajn mâ hi ʿâziye. And the eye cannot become calm.

Hejjeh jâ-bu žedîle Hasten, O thou with little braids on thy forehead!
waʿ hejjeh jâ-bu temân Hasten, O thou with eight teeth!
ente taʿtîni-llâh Thou wilt with Allâh pledge me
thy faith,
w-anâ-ṭîč amân. And I shall pledge to thee peace.

The youth promises the maiden he intends to marry that he will not maltreat her if she remains faithful to him. Conjugal fidelity can be assured only by the fear of Allâh, as no witness will ever come forward in a suit for infidelity.

Jâ raʿjet al-awzah O thou who sittest on a camel pure white!
ʿan ar-radi šûmi Turn away from a scoundrel
šûmi laḥu šîta And incline to Šîta's brother, jâ zebn al-mazjûmi A protector of the oppressed;
šûmi lwaġh allâh Bow to the face of Allâh [beset.
ġallâj al-ehmûmi. Who leads into safety one by troubles

Aḥu šîta, Šîta's brother, is the battle cry of the Šâlân reigning kin and signifies any of its members. Zeben means him who grants a safe asylum to one imperiled by a blood feud or in battle, or to those who are persecuted.

*Lâ tâhedî alli šarad jâ hâjibe
w-al-mesč w-ar-rejhân bedwâjibeh.*

Wed not him who cowardly fled, O maiden who loves
a coward,
Even if his braids were scented with musk and other perfumes!

Hâjeb is a man who returned without booty. Such a one brings no luck, for he is predestined to evil, fâleh šên. He who runs away from fear deserves no booty, and the maiden who loves him is in danger of forfeiting all good fortune and is, also, a hâjibe. The messenger bringing the first report that the raiders are returning is pressed with questions: "A raid with or without booty? al-razw hâjeb walla' šâjeb." Many young men plait their hair in the female style into dwâjeb and then scent it with musk and other perfumes.

*Râ'anê jâ-bu zmejjen râ'anê hatta tšûf muṭâ'anê jâ-bu zmejjem lâwîteh
čejf an-nedel mhâwîteh.*

Look at me, thou with a nose ring;
Behold how I fight!
O thou with a nose ring which thou squeezest!
How couldst thou fall in love with a coward?

Zmejjem is a brass or silver ring, about one or two centimeters in diameter, worn in the left nostril. Muṭâ'anê, properly muṭâ'anî, means a contest with spears, a contest in general. Lâwîteh or lâwajteh: she kept pressing the ends of the ring together to prevent it from falling out of the nostril.

*Jâ šowk jâ zejn al-medâre jâ 'awd rejhânen rağûh en mâ hamajna lak mešâre
w-allâh 'an ad-dîre narûh.*

O sweetheart! O thou with fair elbows!
O fragrant flower stalk to all sides inclining!
Know that if we hold not the watering places,
By Allâh! we shall move from our territory.

The sleeves of the woman's dress, towb, are very broad but comparatively short, leaving the arms bare up to the shoulders. 'Awd is a stalk holding blossoms. If these are too numerous or heavy, the 'awd bends with the breeze, raġûḥ. Mešâre is the term for places with abundant and good water, where, besides watering the herds, the women also get all the water needed in the camp. In our ditty it is from the watering places in the Hawrân territory, south and southeast of Damascus, that Muḥammad eben Smejir wished to drive the Rwala. This territory is called ad-dîre by the Rwala.

Hellî-d-dwâjeb	Loosen the plaits of thy hair,
hellîhen	Loosen them,
w-etla'î nhûdeč	And uncover thy breasts
kellîhen.	Altogether.

Dwâjeb are a girl's hair plaits. She usually keeps them covered with her kerchief. Hallat ad-dwâjeb is said of a girl who has thrown the kerchief off her head and has unplaited and loosened her hair. This is done only by girls or young women accompanying the men into battle, manâḥ, or when an attack is made on a migrating clan.

Jâ ḥmûd ballâḥ hebbeni lâ jâ ba'ad hebb al-banât al-ḥarm marḥi râsaha
jowm as-sebâja mowżîfât.

O Ḥmûd, by Allâḥ, I implore thee, kiss me!
 O mayst thou yet kiss maidens!
 A hero gives his mare's head freedom,
 When all the plunderers have stopped.

The maiden wishes in the thick of the fray to inspire the youth Ḥmûd with a kiss and give him courage. A hero disdains, even when the danger is at its highest, to restrain his steed, but will let it gallop at will into the midst of the enemy although he sees that his comrades have halted and therefore will not come to his aid.

Ṛazw al-ḥarâri rawwaġat
bên ar-rwejşed w-al-ġeżî jâ razwetên mâ fawwadat
ajtam biha mâjet razî.

The raiders led by al-Ḳarârî were seized with giddiness Between ar-Rwejšed and al-Ġezî'.
Oh, that raid, from which there was no booty
And which made hundreds of sucklings orphans!

Al-Ḳarârî was a famous war leader of the Sba'a tribe. The Rwala once surrounded his troop between the valleys of ar-Rwêšed and al-Ġezî'a and killed them almost to a man. Fawwadat: they captured; the booty is called fowd. Rawġe is giddiness; rawwaġat: they spin around as if giddy. The Sba'a, who raise great numbers of goats and sheep, are often derided by the Rwala as suffering from giddiness themselves.

Ġawna-s-sbûr w-aḵraṭaw al-aġelle
w-arčebaw 'alejhen ḵaffalaw kill mišwâl.

When the enemy's camel scouts came to us, [our youths]
tore from the mares their long blankets, Mounted them, and compelled each beast to lift its tail to evacuate.

Aġelle are the blankets protecting the mares from cold. Ḳaffalaw: they played with the mares till they evacuated, for this helps them to endure more fatigue.

Jâ 'aġġaten abri tašîr	O dust, I wish thee to rise,
jenġâl 'an ḵalbi šada'	So the dirt flies out from my heart!
aḥu šâha jâ 'anân al-'azûm	Šâha's brother is a check rein
elja' ṭâla' as-surba ḥada'.	And on sighting a troop he in- tones the ḥda' ditty.

Among the Šammar in al-Ġezîre civil war once broke out, the 'Abde and Aslam tribes trying to destroy each other. At the head of the latter was the chief al-'Âši with his son, the war leader al-Hâdi, while the former were commanded by Ġârallâh. Tîḥ, a son of al-'Âši, sought refuge with Ġârallâh, with whose son, Abu Rwejs, he formed a close friendship. The cause of the war was jealousy between the two tribes. The 'Abde had been despising the Aslam for a long time, and Ġârallâh reproached al-'Âši with acting dishonorably and with having defiled his honor. These insinuations embittered al-'Âši's heart to such an extent that he finally declared war.

The chief and war leader of the Aslam is here called, briefly, the brother of Šâha, Aḥu Šâha, because he called the herds Šâha and used this phrase as his battle cry. ‘Ağġe or ‘ağâġ is dust and sand caught up by a whirlwind which runs like a pillar through the desert. Such columns of dust and sand often envelop the cavalry, whose horses raise up the dust with their hoofs. During a war, when troops cross the desert every day, the ‘ağġe also appears more frequently. Surba means here a hostile troop. The warriors galloping to repulse the enemy sing the ditties called ĥda. Aĥu Šâha never waits for his comrades, but, intoning a ĥda, attacks the enemy as soon as he sights him.

Li dîreten ġennat an‘âm	I have a land, a paradise for herds,
met‘eb w-sîb ĵurîdeha	Met‘eb and Sîb long for it,
aš-šejĥ mitlak lâ jenâm	A chief like thee must not sleep,
jet‘ab ‘ala tabrîdeha.	But strive to hold his property.

Al-‘Âṣi, the son of Farĥân, inherited from his father as his private property extensive pastures irrigated by a live creek, where he kept large herds of cattle and sheep. Some time afterwards Ġârallâh attempted to take the pastures away from him by force, in which he was supported by the Šammar war leader named Met‘eb âl Hadab and by his own son Tîĥ, who likewise were seeking an ally against al-‘Âṣi. This chief was not a little vexed with his son al-Hâdi, who seemed to care for nothing. His reproaches having no effect, the disappointed father composed this ditty, which was sung by his followers to insult the young man. An‘âm means cattle, especially cows and sheep. Tabrîd: to defend what belongs to one lawfully. Roused by the poem, al-Hâdi answered with another:

Dâri beha ħablen tekûl binten taġadded ‘êdaha mîfrâş bâlûd alli jeṛûl beĥnûk mîn ĵurîdaha.

I knew [our land] before thou didst warn me,
It is like a maiden, always changing its holiday garb,
While I am like steel pincers which crush
In their jaws him who longs for it.

Dâri beha: I know of it. Mâni dâri: I do not know. (“Mâ-dri-n-ċân aĥad behal-kaşr; I do not know if there is anybody in this castle,” remarked Ĥmâr on one occasion. “Beh, there is” was Prince an-Nûri’s answer.) ‘Êdaha: her holiday dress. The land renews its holiday dress owing to the constant irrigation which stimulates the growth and blooming of the vegetation. Mifrâş bâlûd are teeth forceps. Al-Hâdi means to crush, jerûl, in his jaws those who try to seize his land.

Jâ zejd 'abde rarrabaw oķ'od tahejzem lâ tanâm radaw bemnaffeš derwateh hadwân zejzûm al-ġahâm.

O Zejd! the 'Abde are encamped in the settled lands,
Mount, gird thyself, do not sleep;
They assailed him who is wont to unplait the hair on
The leader, the protector of deserted herds. [his head,

The 'Abde camped in the desert between the middle Euphrates and the Tigris; the Aslam on the middle part of the Tigris, the numerous islands, hawâjeġ, of which belonged to them. In order to humiliate the Aslam completely, the 'Abde marched from the desert direct to the Tigris, rarrabaw, and attacked al-Hâdi. In the furious battle that ensued both al-Hâdi and Ğârallâh were slain. Al-Hâdi wore his hair in long, thick braids, which he unplaited before every battle. Ĝahâm is an abandoned herd, to be captured by the enemy without fighting. Zejsam is equivalent to hama^c, shielded, protected. Zejd was al-Hâdi's little son, who remained hidden on an islet in the river, taking no part in the battle.

*Abu rwejs ġâ minneh medîh
w-at-tîh mâ ġâ leh ħabar jâ waġeh dîh mżâbel ad-duhân waš bik nâjem jâ rabar.*

Of Abu Rwejs nothing but praise is told,
But of Tîh no news is as yet heard;
Oh, the face of a dog sitting by the smoke!
What art thou worth, who art wont to sleep in the dust?

After Ğârallâh's death the command was taken over by his son Abu Rwejs, who soon distinguished himself and won the praise of every one who left his presence. But with the Aslam matters were worse. Al-Âši had died in the meantime, al-Hâdi had fallen in battle, his son Zejd was too young, and his brother Tîh, who stayed with the 'Abde, cared for nothing but women. He used to loaf day and night in the women's compartment, seated by the fireplace where his wife was cooking their meals, not unlike a dog who lies down on the dust and ash heap and does not stir until his mistress is done with the cooking and throws bits to him.

*Lije zanwiten razejtaha min 'oqb ahu šâha fesâd beha zu'ejli w-ad-dawîš
w-'azejb hâl abûh wkâd ğâsi hadîdeh mâ jelîn
mâ leh 'an al-fetna ğelâd.*

I have sons whom I have suckled,
When Šâha's brother's activity ceased;
Of them are Zu'ejli and ad-Dawîš
And 'Azejb, his mother's brother, for sure.
He is hard, his armor will not soften,
Nor will he ever brook any opposition.

When there was no one left in the chief's family to unite all the Aslam, the command was taken over by Nâjef az-Zu'ejli, ad-Dawîš, and 'Azejb eben Mow'ed, chief of the Šâjeḥ kin and a brother of al-Hâdi's mother. 'Azejb utterly crushed the opposition of the Aslam, inspired them with fresh courage, and avenged the death of his nephew. This ditty was sung by al-Hâdi's mother, who brought up the orphans Zu'ejli and ad-Dawîš, and also her young brother, 'Azejb. Fesâd, or fâsed, means a useless, impotent, or inactive man; bêza fâsde, an egg that was not fecundated; his sons are good for nothing, killeh fâsed; he is impotent, sterile, fâsed.

*Jâ wanneti wannejtaha
baḡṣa-ṣ-ṣumâjer testedîr
ṣajja'et ṣejr al-ḡabâri
wa-kneṣet bel-farḡ aṣ-ṣarîr lâ zâl rab'i jarkebûn al-ḡejl aṣ-ṣulḡ w-allâh mâ jeṣîr.*

This is my lament with which I mourn
And which enters my innermost entrails,
I lost a hunting falcon for the ḡabâri trained,
And then hunted with only a young one.
As long as my comrades cease not to mount their horses,
By Allâh, there will be no peace.

Tejr is a trained falcon. Habâri, bustards, are ash-gray birds, rather smaller than hens, distinctly clumsy in flight. A falcon trained to catch them is very valuable. A passionate hunter when losing an old falcon will not fail to get a young one and to start at once to train it so that he can hunt again. A passionate fighter does not appreciate peace, but seeks all the time for a reason to fight and to get booty. — This poem is attributed to the widow of the fallen al-Hâdi. He was her trained falcon, while Zejd is her young, whom she has not yet tried.

TREATIES OF PEACE

It is long before a chief decides to sue for peace. He can do so only when he hears from all sides that after all it would be better if both tribes became friends again. A request for peace is hardly ever refused. And yet Prince an-Nûri eben Şalân declined three times when Eben Meġlâd, the chief of the Dahâmşe, sued for peace, because the latter had not ordered three clans of the Kwâcbe tribe, rebellious subjects of an-Nûri, away from his territory. The offer of peace either verbally or in writing is generally brought by a traveler, very seldom by a slave of the opposing chief. Such an offer is nearly always worded as follows:

"As is known both to you and to ourselves, our people attack yours and your people ours. Ours harm yours, yours harm ours. There is no profit in it either for you or for us. Why this constant injury? Are we not relatives? We do not want to fight you any more. From today we are your friends. All that has happened we have already buried. Decide as you like and then let us know. Greetings!"

The answer usually is: "After a thorough consideration of your offer we inform you of the great joy we feel because you desire our friendship. We do not reject it but must request that our enemies be not allowed to march through your territory to attack us from there, lâ jetamatnâkom w-jaîrû 'alejna. This much for your information. Farewell!"

To conclude peace in a solemn manner the prince rides with his suite to the chief of the tribe with which he wishes to be reconciled, or the latter comes to him, and they agree on all points. After the defeat of the Beni Şahr Prince an-Nûri rode with fifteen companions from al-Azrağ to the camp of Eben Fâjez near Žerjet Abu Ğâber and remained there for thirty nights. One fat she-camel was killed in his honor every day. The peace treaty ends with the words: "Interred and buried, ħafâr w-defân," or: "Interred and buried under a steep bank, damdûm w-ğurfen mahdûm; a steep river bank has fallen upon its shadow, ğurfen inhadam 'ala zelleh; no wolf will hurt the sheep any more, mâ dîben ja'di 'ala-š-ša."

The chiefs then grasp each other's right hands and say: "I give thee Allâh and the peace of Allâh. And whoever would deceive thee, may Allâh deceive him! I give thee Allâh against all instigation and calumny. A'ṭajtak allâh w-amân al-lâh w-min bâḳak jebûkeh allâh a'ṭajtak 'an al-mesmesijje w-al-mahâči-r-radijje."

THE TRIBAL EMBLEM, ABU-D-DHÛR

The Rwala have no flag of their own. They go on raids without any special device; but when waging war, whether of aggression or defense, that endangers the whole tribe, they take with them a special kind of a litter, called Abu-d-Dhûr or al-Markab. This is perhaps the old decorated litter 'Aṭfa destined originally for the prettiest girl, who used to lead the tribe to the decisive battle. But there is nobody now who can remember that a girl has ever sat in it. The Markab litter (Fig. 59) is constructed of stout poles, the frame being about 90 centimeters high, 270 centimeters long at the top, and 190 centimeters long and about 50 centimeters wide at the bottom. All the poles are wrapped round with ostrich feathers; to the upper poles are tied 12 short pegs, zerânîž, with plumes of bent ostrich feathers, ṛalab. To be loaded, the Markab is placed in the litter called ħarağ, and this is tied to a camel with ropes, mečârîb. The ħaḳab rope is drawn through under the breast, the bṭâne under the belly, the ṭafar under the tail, and the lebab, twisted from variegated camel's hair threads, under the neck. The single parts of the Markab litter (Fig. 58) are called: ħarağ (a), 'idân al-ħarağ (b), bdûd (this because they rest on the cushion, bedd (c), ħoşra (d); mibṭâh (e), ğenûb (f), ğerâjed (g), zerânîž (h), and ṛalab (j).

The Rwala believe that the litter is called Abu-d-Dhûr, Father of Indefinite Periods of Time, because it is inherited from generation to generation, from age to age, min ğîlen ila ğîl, and that it will last forever. Al-Markab forms the visible token of princely power, and therefore this litter remains in the prince's tent all the time, in the part of the tent reserved for the women; here it is guarded, day and night, both by the prince himself and by his slaves, against everybody and especially against the prince's nearest kinsmen. For, if a revolt breaks out in the reigning kin against the prince, his opponents attempt first of all to snatch the Abu-d-Dhûr away from him, as he who has this emblem of the whole tribe in his possession must be recognized as their prince. Should the enemy at war with the Rwala succeed in capturing the Abu-d-Dhûr, the respect for it would be entirely lost, and the Rwala would not use it again. To carry this litter when the tribe migrates, an especially strong and docile camel, usually one of white color, is selected. The animal then, as a rule, walks between the laden camels and the herds, thus forming the center of all the migrating families.

FIG. 58—Abu-d-Dhûr or al-Markab litter.

When attacked by an enemy in force on the march, the best fighters at once surround the Abu-d-Dhûr to protect it. If it seems that the enemy will push back the fighters resisting his attack and that he will break through to the pack camels, the commander of the chosen troop of fighters (called ṣanam) who defend the Markab will take the camel carrying this symbol by the rein and lead her at the head of his troop against the enemy. The ṣanam are accompanied by girls seated on she-camels, who encourage the men to persevere, and behind them follow women who threaten to beat to death any one who deserts the Abu-d-Dhûr and flees. So far no enemy has succeeded in defeating the Rwala sufficiently to take the Abu-d-Dhûr away from them. The prince, it must be said, is very prudent — the more dangerous the region through which the tribe has to pass when migrating, or where it encamps, the nearer together stand the tents of the various camps.

FIG. 59—Abu-d-Dhûr or al-Markab litter.

When the Rwala engage in a war of al-manâh (see above, pp. 540f.), during which they move with all their herds and tents into an enemy's territory, the camel carrying the Abu-d-Dhûr walks at the head of the whole tribe, surrounded by warriors who follow every movement of the animal with the closest attention. They believe that Allâh gives signs by means of the Abu-d-Dhûr, from which the outcome of the fight can be foretold. Sometimes, in a dead calm, the ostrich feathers adorning the Abu-d-Dhûr begin to flutter. At other times the litter leans to the right or left, but suddenly straightens itself, remains quietly upright, and then rocks a few times from side to side. All this, the Rwala think, happens by the power of Allâh, kudrat min allâh, who sends them help, enâje, from al-Markab, where He is believed to seat himself for a while. The waving of the feathers and the straightening of the Abu-d-Dhûr are signs that Allâh has touched it with his power.

After each victory a camel is killed before the Abu-d-Dhûr in honor of Allâh. This is also done every year, even if the Rwala have had no war to which the Abu-d-Dhûr had to be taken.

NARRATIVES OF RWALA WARS AND RAIDS

Ad-Drê'i eben Ša'lân's Raid on the Zefîr (Early Nineteenth Century)

Of their wars and raids much was related to me by the Rwala.

In bygone days (at the beginning of the nineteenth century) they had a head chief named ad-Drê'i eben Ša'lân, who was celebrated for his bravery, w-leh šît bel-furse. Once, while encamped with his Arabs west of the Ḥawrân mountains, he heard of the defeat of Eben Haddâl, the head chief of the 'Amârât, who, while migrating with his tribe, was attacked by the Zefîr chief, Sultân eben Swejt, and despoiled of all he had. During the fight one of the enemy's warriors had tried to seize a pack camel guarded by Ḥoşsa, Eben Haddâl's daughter. She had defended her animal from the man as best she could, but when he struck her she had cried out: "Ad-Drê'i, O my hero! W-şâḥat ad-drê'i jâ rağğâlî."

As soon as ad-Drê'i in the Hawrân learnt that the girl in Irak had called to him for aid while in distress, he decided to help her, for he was a true man, w-ċân ja'edd min ar-reġâl. When the time for the departure of the Rwala to the inner desert came, w-ṣâr waġt tešârîž ar-rwala, ad-Drê'i issued an order to his people, nebeh 'alejhom, that nobody should lead his mare to the stud horse and that whoever happened to have a mare foaling should throw away her colt so that it might not impede the speed of the mares on the raid which they were about to undertake against Eben Swejt, because the cry for help emitted by Hoṣṣa must not remain unheard, naḥwat hoṣṣa mâ trûḥ balâš. The Rwala were encamped in the territory of al-Wudijân when ad-Drê'i set out against Eben Swejt. This chief defended himself as well as he could, but the Rwala attacked him like wild beasts, killed a great number of his fighters, dabaḥow mineh ḥilken 'azîm, and captured many of his camel herds. Among the warriors of the Zefîr tribe one Sultân al-ʿAmri especially distinguished himself by slaying many Rwala, but was finally struck down by the spear of Sultân eben Šaʿlân. When the head chief Sultân eben Swejt saw his friend unhorsed, he threw himself, foaming with rage, on Sultân eben Šaʿlân and killed him with his saber.

Some member of the Zefîr tribe sang thus of this fight:

1. Sultân dabaḥ sultân bsultân jâ zejd raġlen dabaḥ bel-ġâr tumma-starâḥi
2. w-dabaḥ al-mšowbeš 'endana čenneh al-ʾid
w-jînka' 'ala čabdi ladîd al-ķerâḥi.

1. Sultân killed Sultân to avenge Sultân, O Zejd!

A man he killed for his neighbor and then was appeased.

2. Al-Mšowbeš he killed too, which was a great festival for us,
And clear, sweet water filled my entrails.

This poem was sent by its author to Zejd eben Swejt, who had formerly been Sultân al-ʿAmri's neighbor, ġâr. Sultân eben Swejt also unhorsed al-Mšowbeš of the Freġe clan, who had raided the Zefîr frequently. There was much rejoicing among the latter tribe and also a festival, when the death of the dreaded raider became known.

1. Al-bâreḥa mâ dîket nowm at-tarâčîd
w-ʾajni sehîra mâ terîd al-marâḥi

2. min ʔoll min jirsel čelâm at-twâ'id
swêtât kafwan al-lura w-al-mezâhi
3. jâ šejh mâ hennâ hamâjel mesâ'id
teharranna lannak same'et aš-šijâhi
4. embarže'in rūsenâ bel-bwâlîd
w-šilfen talâla' fowk rûs ar-rumâhi
5. w-tara ħarbana jebħal beh aš-šejh w-jiġ'id
w-jižell wâžef mâ jidûk al-btâhi
6. nesžih min murr aš-šera' w-at-tenâčid
mašrûb ħanzal bâretîneh malâhi
7. ħoşsa nahatna bwazâjet ar-raġâġid
'ajnêč jâ ħoşsa nuhezz al-eslâhi
8. w-ġina čema-l-čitfi řada' leh senâžid
w-ať-tard mâ bân al-žebilên šâħhi
9. w-jâ mâ dabahna min krûmen w-wâlîd
wa-btûnana mînkom bedânen al-kâhi
10. hazzâ' ħelli ġabhateh tekred al-ħejd
w-al-ġhejr 'ešši lâfeħât al-ġenâhi.

1. Yesterday no refreshing sleep I tasted —
For mine eye wakened, not desiring rest —,
2. Thinking whom I should send with the promised words
To Swejt to compensate him for all the slander and sneers.
3. O chief! we are not of the Mesâ'id clans;
When we shall kick, thou wilt hear a cry of alarm.
4. Our heads are enveloped with steel,
And sharp blades glisten on our spearheads.
5. And, behold! in a war with us the chief must prove his worth
And remain firm, not lying on his belly.
6. We shall let him drink the bitterness of torments and miseries,
A cup of colocynth mixed with salt.
7. Ĥoşsa's war cry called us when we dwelt in Wazâjet ar-Raġâġid,
[Our answer being:] "For thine eyes, O Ĥoşsa! we brandish our arms."
8. And we came like small locusts who are visited by want,
And a fight ensued between two opponents.
9. Ah, how many we killed, both elders and sons,
Till our bellies ye made fat like those of the pregnant!
10. Hazzâ', whom I well knew, with his brow digs in the ground,
And al-Ġhejr gives supper to those who wave their wings.

The poem was composed by a member of the Durmân clan in answer to the poet of the Zefîr who praised the reigning kin of Eben Swejt and inveighed against the kin of Eben Ša'lân.

Verse 2. Swêât (Confounded) is an insulting nickname for the members of the Eben Swejt kin. 3. Mesâ'id are breeders of goats and donkeys, šikkâra, in the Ĥawrân. The Rwala will remain calm before sneers and even thefts, but when they do decide to retaliate, Eben Swejt, the chief of the Zefîr, will soon hear the alarm cries of his followers from all sides. 7. Hoşsa, the daughter of the chief, Eben Haddâl, was with her people on the lower Euphrates, and when she called on the Rwala to help her they heard her cry as far as Wazâjet ar-Rağâğîd in the Ĥawrân. 8. Kitfi are young locusts not yet winged, which crawl on top of one another and can be held back by nothing, especially when they are hungry, senâ-žîd. Tard signifies a man-to-man fight; şahh at-trâd: the fight developed. 10. Hazzâ and al-Ğhejr, both of the Eben Swejt kin, fell in the war with the Rwala.

War Between Eben Ša'lân and Eben Rašîd (Second Half of the Nineteenth Century)

It happened in the course of years, w-ĉân min middat sinîn, that Muḥammad eben Rašîd, also called al-Emîr, became the head chief in Neğd. Allâh granted him many happy days, so that it seemed as if everything that he undertook would succeed. By wars and depredations he finally brought a number of Arabian tribes to obedience, ṭawwa' al-'orbân bel-ḥarb w-al-aḥâjed, and soon had no rival in the whole desert. The chiefs of the various tribes brought him mares, the envy of all, al-hejl al-maṭlûba, and female riding camels without blemish, ar-rĉâb al-manğûba, and they all sued for his protection and peace, amân w-şulḥ. The Rwala alone opposed him. Enraged at this, he organized a raid against them, attacked at al-Āğrûmijjât the camp, firqa, of the Ršûm kin of the Ka'âž'a clan, and looted it completely, aḥadhom aḥîdaten ġajjedaten. Men, women, and children wandered round the camping ground disconsolately, jetadâwağow 'ala-l-mrâḥ. At that time Hazzâ eben Ša'lân, the father of an-Nûri, was the head chief of the Rwala. His camp was four days from al-Āğrûmijjât. On learning of the misfortune sent by Allâh on the Ka'âž'a, he assembled all the Rwala warriors who were camping near him and went in pursuit of Eben Rašîd's raiders, aṭlab razw eben rašîd. On reaching the looted camping ground, they found there some camel calves barely a few weeks old, searching for their mothers and wailing piteously. But, as their mothers had been captured, ummahâtaha ma'hûda (sic! not mawhûda), the calves were threatened with death. This sad sight so moved the Rwala warriors that they paraded one after another before the young animals, kâmow ja'rezûn w-jintahûn enda-l-hejran, shouted their war cry, and encouraged one another with the words: "O thou little camel! listen to glad tidings of thy mother! jâ hwâr ibšer bummak."

During this parade, al-arza, some of the warriors were so affected with pity that they dismounted and began to weep. Gnashing their teeth, they searched for the tracks of Eben Rašîd's troop, ṭallabow bâṭâr eben rašîd w-ġmû'eh, followed them, masakow âṭârhom, quickened their pace, and, overtaking them at the watering place of al-Ḥazel, attacked them at once, arârow 'alejhom. Chief Hazzâ' shouted to his men:

"This day is your day! You will either be killed or you will liberate your animals. Al-jowm jowmkom amma tindabehûn amma-tfakkûn ḥalâlkomp. Leave nobody alive! lâ ṭhajjow minhom ḥaden. Whoever amongst you shall flee today, will become a son of a slave; alli jinhazem minkom al-jowm tarâh eben ra'ijje."

The Rwala answered as with one voice: "A rider protecting 'Alja belongs to the tribe of the Rwala, ḥajjâl al-alja rwejlî," and instantly broke the enemy's lines. Allâh gave them victory. Eben Rašîd's raiding troop lost nearly a hundred men; the rest fled. Among the fallen were forty pairs of brothers, 'arba'in ġowz aḥw. All the animals taken from the Ka'âẓ'a clan were recovered by the Rwala warriors, besides which they captured, ksabow, many horses and riding camels and won much glory by liberating their own she-camels and defeating the enemy, tenawmasow bfikkat abâ'erhom.

When Muḥammad eben Rašîd returned to his people, jowm waṣal ila ḥajjeh, and learned the extent of the losses the Rwala had caused him, he sent his friends, ṣuḥbeh, to the head chief, Eben Ša'lân, with the following message:

"I swear by Allâh, O Eben Ša'lân, that as long as I live, I will be thy comrade, the friend of thy friend and the enemy of thine enemy! W-allâh jâ-ben ša'lân inni mâ-zâl w-ana mawġûd inni šaḥeb lak w-šiddîẓ šiddîẓk w-'adw 'adawwak."

In this manner Eben Rašîd and his tribes became the friends and comrades of the Rwala, just as if they were related by blood, mitl al-beni amm. Whenever Eben Rašîd wished to undertake a dangerous raid he asked the help of Eben Ša'lân, jistafza, who then either went with him in person or sent him his Rwala with some other commander. All that was captured by Eben Ša'lân he kept for himself and his troops, kill min ksa-beh leh eben ša'lân ala ġemâ'ateh. Eben Rašîd never shared with his ally, because Eben Ša'lân was independent.

The battle at the watering place of al-Ĥazel is known among the Šammar as "the day on which the partakers in the raid who sat behind the camel saddle were slain, jowm (or dbaĥat) ar-ridefa."

1. Al-bâreĥa bel-ĥalb wa' min al-malâjel
w-sâbeġi ĥaṭṭ al-araĥ fowĥaha a'id
 2. jâ šên jâ hamlân odd aš-šamâjel
elja' ġît sūk meċâtterîn at-tanâšîd
 3. ĥil leh aĥu nûra-ĥad leh ĥamâjel
wa-ṭlabek eben ša'lân ma' al-barârît
 4. elja' ġît ĥabra rmejĥ elja-d-damm sâjel
min ĥalk eben ĥaġġâġ ĥw w-al-wâlîd
 5. w-ĥam menšaben râseh an al-maten mâjel
elja' ġît râs al-ĥerr mitl ar-rwâġîd.
1. Ah, yesterday [I thought I had] a red-hot coal in my heart,
For a worn leather saddle was laid by A'id on my unrivaled mare.
 2. O unworthy one! O babbler! relate true stories,
When thou comest to the market where men inquire for news.
 3. Tell him [who should ask thee] that, though Nûra's brother has beaten the clans, Eben Ša'lân did pursue him over the wilds.
 4. When thou comest to the Rmejĥ rain pool there blood is streaming From Eben Ĥaġġâġ's and his sons' throats.
 5. Oh, how many a grandee's head is rocking on his shoulders!
When thou enterest the beginning of the al-Ĥerr valley,
like a field with heaps of cut grain it will look to thee.

This poem was composed by Fahad eben Šbejĥ. The reciters were Ĥmâr abu 'Awwâd and an-Nûri eben Ša'lân. Eben Rašîd, who calls his camel herds Nûra — whence his battle cry “an-aḥu nûra, I am the brother of Nûra” — organized a great raid against Eben Šaʿlân under the command of Eben Ḥaġġâġ, who succeeded in surprising some clans subject to Eben Šaʿlân and in completely robbing them. The news of this disaster was carried by Aʿîd, a negro, who, borrowing a horse, rode in all haste to report it in all the camps. Our poet, Fahad eben Šbejh, was greatly affected by the news brought by Aʿîd, to whom he had lent his horse, yet he soon learned that the raiders had been at once pursued by Eben Šaʿlân, overtaken by him at Ḥabra Rmejḥ at the beginning of the al-Ḥerr valley, and that, besides recapturing all the herds from them, Eben Šaʿlân had also killed their commander, Eben Ḥaġġâġ, with his sons. Fahad therefore urges Aʿîd to spread this true account so as to give Eben Šaʿlân the credit due to him.

Verse 1. Al-ʿaraĉ is a poetical expression for a worn leather saddle. 2. Ḥamlân is a jester, a laughder, or babbler. Šamâjel means well-founded reports; šâmel al-kilme, the truth. A market place, sûk, is frequented by people from all sides who receive and spread news. 3. Barârît are desolate waterless regions. The negro Ḥmâr thought the proper spelling of the word was barârîd, meaning men armed with rifles. 4. Ḥabra is a shallow but often very extensive depression in a vast plain where the rain water remains for a long time. Ḥabra Rmejḥ lies near the beginning of the valley of al-Ḥerr. 5. Menšab is a poetical expression for the lesser chiefs or their relatives. Râseh ʿan al-maten mâjel, he received a saber stroke in his throat, which was not cut through completely, so that the head remained hanging by the skin of the throat and then fell on the small of his back, maten, from which it rolled to one side, mâjel. Rwâġîd are handfuls of cut grain laid crosswise.

Wars Between the Rwala and the Beni Wahab (1850—1864)

The Rwala were wont to encamp for a few weeks every year in the fertile an-Nukra territory on the west slope of the Ḥaw-rân in order to supply themselves with all they needed during their ten months stay in the desert. But their encamping was resisted by the Beni Wahab, led by Eben Smejḥ, head chief of the Weld ʿAli. Long wars followed. The head chief, Muḥammad eben Smejḥ, succeeded also in winning to his side some kins of the al-Eššāge'a clan, yet all the other tribes of which the al-Mihlef group was formed remained faithful to the Rwala, mâ eħtalafat 'an maṭabbha dâjmen ma' ar-rwala bikill šaj'en (sic! not ši'). Many years after, when both sides had lost great numbers of men, Muḥammad eben Smejṛ and Prince Saṭṭâm eben Ša'lân met, were reconciled, and both buried all the fallen men and the captured animals; teḳâ'adow w-tešâlahow w-te-ħâfarow w-tedâfanow al-maḍbûḥ min ar-raġâl w-al-ma'ħûd min al-ħalâl. Consequently, neither of them could make any further demands, and they were forever relieved of all responsibility, killeh ħâfi. The Beni Wahab as well as the Âl Ġlâs, to whom the Rwala belong, became and remained good friends, keeping faith with each other even under difficult circumstances, bil-hene' w-aš-šife'. And so it is even today when an-Nûri is the head chief, bšajħat an-nûri.

1. Jâ râčebîn kwâr ħejlen mešâ'ib
arba' abkâren ħil min zummar al-ħuġ
2. ħejžen ħaġġât ħejžen ješîġen al-mašâlîb
kejj an-nišâma zaffat al-ħeġen bel-ħrûġ
3. mirbâ'hen mâ ħaddar at-tinf tarrîb
wa-mkîzâhen 'an ħerwat al-rošš bel-mrûġ
4. jelfen labu farĥân 'aṭb al-ašâwîb
en šâr bel-fersân zâ'eġ w-maz'ûġ
5. zejzûm ħamlât wariden al-mzêrib
en tarramow ħemr at-ṭwâži 'ala-s-šûġ
6. ķil jâ ħmûd lâ jeġzâk šaķ w-'arâzîb
en entaşar jeṭâk ber-reġel bâbûġ
7. 'endak ħabar ba'adak 'an aš-šejħ težrîb
w-rîž az-za'al bân al-ħarîbên mamġûġ
8. fejšal šara'-l-ġejdûr bemfâšel an-nîb
w-ħaṭwa'-l-ħşân-mrâba' ar-râs ħâjûġ
9. fejšal elja' naššab 'ala-s-sejj tenšîb
w-mâ fazah min ķalb 'âzel w-ħaġħuġ
10. ħenna 'ala-l-ġejdûr ħaķķ w-teḳâzîb
w-'enda-l-ġlâs mudawwer al-ħaķķ maflûġ
11. awlâd 'abdallâh balâhom tarow ṭîb
emĥârahom ṭowât w-arkâbahom 'uġ
12. w-jâ ħejf jâ fakķâķ 'uġ al-meṭâlîb
bân al-ħwêlef w-as-serâġîf mar'ûġ
13. jeṭni ķafa'-hla-z-zhûr al-maĥâdîb
w-ħulli čema čabšen wara-z-zân marjûġ

14. aḵfow mā hâk at-tlâ az-zanâbîb
w-ḥejl al-ʿalîž murabbaṭâten ʿala ġûğ
 15. w-ʿejfe jeṣadder fâtereh lel-maʿâzîb
jedûr bel-belḵa mḵâšîd marġûğ
 16. jâ ḥejf ʿejfe mâ jedâni-l-lwâhîb
ḥalḵeh wašî w-laḵmeteh teḵil daḥrûğ
 17. w-an sûḵ eben šaʿlân ḥaḵḵ w-teḵâzîb
w-harrâğ tara min kaṭar al-herğ masmûğ.

1. O ye who ride in the saddles of stubborn she-camels,
 On four young sterile she-camels, slender ones from al-
 Hüğ —
2. Like an ostrich they run, moving their upper parts;
 The heroes can rest when their saddlebags are raised like wings by the riding camels!
3. In the spring they grazed southwest of at-Tinf,
 But in midsummer at al-Mrûğ, far from the heat which brings bone diseases.
4. They will come to Farḥân's father, that tormenter of the wounded,
 In a struggle of riders, when one vanquishes and the other is vanquished,
5. To the protector of loads, freighted for al-Mzêrib,
 When the redcaps fix the day of complaints.
6. Say: "O Ḥmûd! he surely will reward thee with cuffs and kicks,
 And, if victorious, will tread on thee as on a slipper.
7. Thou must know what it means for thee to be far from the chief and what to be near him,
 Also that the spittle of anger has long ago been spat out between the fighters."
8. Fejşal bought al-Ğejdûr with the help of those with worn teeth
 And of a few rutting stallions with their square heads.
9. Firmly did Fejşal grasp his sword by the handle, Oh, how terrified was the heart of the cautious and the incautious too!
10. We are entitled to al-Ğejdûr both by right and by possession.
 And the Ğlâs think one who seeks his right is already vanquished.

11. 'Abdallâh's descendants, behold! have recovered from their illness,
Their young mares obey and their men turn round [on the command].
12. Oh, shame! that solver of the most intricate disputes Was wounded between his left shoulder blade and his 13. He that protected the bent [fleeing] riders [first rib!
Was deserted like a wether left behind by the flock and dying of the rowġe disease.
14. They fled through those narrow gullies yonder
And today keep their horses, fed only from food bags, tied up at al-Ġuġ.
15. 'Ejfe with his old she-camel searches for a host,
And in the land of al-Belġa hands around pots of whey diluted with water.
16. Oh, shame! 'Ejfe goes no more near the flames of war!
His throat is so widened that his mouthful is like a bundle meant for a camel.
17. Concerning Eben Ša'lân's market place I declare that it is ours by right and possession;
He who denies it is for his babble justly despised by all.

The author of this poem was Jûsef eben Mğejd; the reciter, Hmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 1. Mešârib are camels which have been ridden only for a short time, tawwâh ma'sûfât. They are very fast and equally disobedient. Al-Hûğ is the territory of the Šarârât north of Tejma, in which lies the watering place of al-Hawğa. The Šarârât breed riding camels of very slender build but of great endurance. 2. Hejž is a male ostrich. The camels run like a scared male ostrich; as he moves his wings and hips while running, so does a running camel move her shoulder blades, the small of the back, and the saddle frame. When a good riding camel begins to trot fast, both halves of the saddle bag rise, its fringe flutters in the breeze, and it seems as if the camel had wings and were trying to lift herself with them as the ostrich does. Heğen is a poetical term used instead of rečâjeb or delûl in the singular. Nišâma is a word used of hardy and fearless young men. Kejff is always a substantive, čejff an adverb of interrogation. The faster the she-camel trots, the more comfortable is the seat of the rider.

3. Mîrbâ' and mekîz are pastures in the time of rabî' and in midsummer. At-Tinf is an isolated hill in the northeastern part of al-Hamâd. In the time of rabî' the country around at-Tinf is covered thickly with grasses and perennials, but no spring water is to be found anywhere near. As soon as the rain water in the habâri or rain pools evaporates, nothing is left to the Rwala but to depart. After this they stay for some time on the east or south border of the Hawrân, and in the al-kêz season they camp in al-Mrûğ, on the numerous meadows south and southeast of Damascus. The abundance of spring water there protects the camels from the al-rošš disease which attacks the bowels, especially those of the young she-camels. 4. Abu Farhân was a nickname of Muḥammad eben Smejr, the chief of the Weld 'Ali tribe, his eldest son being Farhân. The poet calls him 'aṭb al-ašâwîb, a torment to the wounded, because the wounds caused by his blows were slow in healing. 5. The Weld 'Ali had undertaken to transport half of the supplies destined for Mecca and al-Medîna as well as half of the pilgrims from al-Mzêrib, south of Damascus, to Medâjen Šâleḥ, or al-Heğr. Muḥammad eben Smejr guaranteed to the Turkish officials, who from their red tarbushes were called hemr aṭ-ṭwâżi, redcaps, not only the safety of the transport but also its punctual delivery, tarramow 'ala-š-šûğ. The latter word means a complaint or an accusation; ent muṣawwağ is equivalent to 'alejk da'awa: an accusation was brought against thee. For failing to keep to the time agreed on or for despoiling the caravan Muḥammad was liable to prosecution by the Turkish officials. He was therefore dependent on them, as if he were their slave. The second half of the transport and the pilgrims were convoyed by the Beni Šaḥr as far as Ma'ân, from this place by the Beni 'Aṭijje to Tebûk, and thence by the Beli to Medâjen Šâleḥ. 6. With Muḥammad eben Smejr the chief of the Ešâğea' clan, Ḥmûd eben Me'gel, originally an ally of the Rwala, was staying at that time. 7. The poet informs him that he should ponder upon the position he occupies with Muḥammad and also begs him not to be angry with him for taking this liberty. They fight each other, therefore the spittle of rage has already been spat out between them. 8. Fejşal, the father of Ṭalâl and brother of Hazzâ', captured al-Ğejdûr, a territory southwest of Damascus, with the help of hardy, old, and therefore prudent warriors and of a few bold young chiefs. Me-

fâšel an-nîb are she-camels, but also people whose teeth are worn down from long use. In the breeding of horses, stallions are sometimes used whose heads appear square when seen from the front. If sexually excited, such horses will shrink from no danger, like a young chief who desires to win the support of his clan. Should he not gain their full confidence and admiration, another chief will be chosen. 9. Hağhûğ, or ğâhel, is a reckless, incautious person. 10. As a matter of fact the Rwala by occupying al-Ğejdûr were the lords of that territory and thus had a right to it. Their opponents wished to have their right to al-Ğejdûr reestablished. The poet makes merry over the circumstance that with the Rwala and their allies, the descendants of Âl Ğlâs, one who seeks his right, mudawwer al-ħakk, is no more esteemed than one who has already lost it, maflûğ. He that is strong will not allow his right to be taken away from him. He who seeks it, therefore, has lost it. The descendants of ‘Abdallâh, like Ĥmûd, joined the poet’s enemies but owned their mistake, returned to their relatives, and obeyed them. 12. Fakkâk ‘ûğ al-meṭâlîb was the name given to Minwer âl Ṭajjâr, a celebrated judge, ‘ârefa, who could solve disputes even after the most confused statements of the contending parties. After being seriously wounded by a bullet which entered his breast through his left side, serâğîf, and passed out above the heart between the shoulder blade and spine, he was shamelessly deserted by his own people. 13. He that singlehanded used to defend his cowardly companions, who bent their backs, al-mahâdîb, with fright on their galloping horses, hla-ṣ-ṣhûr, lay there like a wether dying of the rowğe disease. 14. The defeated enemy were afraid to let their horses out to graze; therefore they kept them tied up in the hamlet of Ğûğ, feeding them only from the food bag, ‘alîž. 15. ‘Ejfe, a relative of the poet, also went over to the enemy and after the defeat did not know how to become reconciled with his clan. In the territory of al-Belka he went from one host to another, where, after drinking himself, he had to pass the pannikin filled with marğûğ to the other guests. Marğûğ is a mixture of milk or whey and water. The poet scoffs at him because he, a Bedouin who would have considered it a disgrace to offer his guests anything less than pure milk, must now be satisfied with marğûğ. 16. ‘Ejfe was tired of fighting, but would not return to his people, for he neither could nor would be content with a subordinate position.

He is insatiable, halkeh wasî, and needs a mouthful as big as dahrûğ, a large handful of rolled-up grass handed to a camel whole and also chewed whole by the animal but swallowed piecemeal.

1. *Jâ râčeben ħorren elja' širt maddâd
nâb ad-defûf w-ğâflen mutrašâni*
2. jelfi lamĥammad mwârît al-ağwâd waddak tehûf lehjeteh bel-ĥsâni
3. *'ajja' 'an aš-şuĥbe jowm ĥije bel-awdâd
w-ĥakwah ketr melâşef aš-šejşehâni*
4. *ğâb al-'asâčer min wara min râd
w-ahl twîl al-felğ w-at-turkmâni*
5. *w-lammaw bihom rab' min al-roll zakhâd
w-mĥarremîn al-man' hw w-al-ĥesâni*
6. awlâd meğles surbat al-ĥarb w-an-naĥkâd min fowk ĥilen mukrammâten asmâni
7. ekharaw ĥal al-ğed'a 'ala 'ujûn al-aşhâd elja' mâ tebajjen ġam'ahom bel-bajâni
8. raddaw 'alejhom raddeten mâ beha snâd wa-tsallemau ĥağğâğ w-al-ĥammadâni
9. w-awlâd ġam'ân tekel 'askar akrâd min ad-damm bellaw jâbs al-murğumâni
10. bemĥarrarât ramîhen şowb beşmâd brâs al-ara w-en aĥtateh bel-ĥsâni
11. *w-elja' kba' nekzaha tesned asnâd
w-mzajjenîn melĥahen bel-wazâni*
12. w-ğmû' eben smejr râĥat šarrâd jilemmahom lemm al-'amad beş-şebâni
13. *alli dubaĥ minna min wara-s-sejl min râd
w-mowteh ĥakîk w-malfâĥ al-ğenâni*
14. aĥadna meddâhom elfên ba'dâd naşfen fehîm w-naşfehom turtumâni
15. *wêleh 'ala ĥokmeh mabti w-al-ağdâd
w-endeleh ber-rijâz al-amâni*
16. ĥârabt rab'en ježtelûnak bel-ab'âd ğâsi-l-ĥadîd elja tma'enûneh lâni
17. *aš-šejĥ aĥu dînja furûsen w-mutâd
w-'azm alli jeţĥaneĥ jowda' marmahâni*
18. *elja' şijjîgen ĥarab sbejbek w-lâ 'âd
wa-mtadajjeren tekel ĥa'ûden 'omâni*

One in that condition cannot be frightened. The fatter a camel, the more spirited and nervous it is. Muṭrašāni is a camel used mostly on shorter journeys. 2. Muḥammad eben Smejṛ lost his honor, therefore he should lose his beard too. To shave a man's beard is the greatest punishment among the Rwala. Eḥsān or ḥsāni is a razor used in shaving, jehassenû. 4. Ṭwîl al-Felġ, the High Mountain Covered With Snow, here means Hermon, inhabited chiefly by the Druses. 5. Zaḥḥâd, ʿaj-jâf, or zaʿlân min ʾoll are men who cannot show their hatred. Al-manʿ means pardoning an enemy who yields. The pardoned enemy, manîʿ, may remain in the tent until he has an opportunity to return home. Muḥammad and Ḥasan Pasha, the commander of the Turkish soldiers, declared that every Rwejlî — even if he had yielded — should be slain. 6. The awlâd meġles were members of the Šaʿlân reigning kin. They with their servants and slaves were the first to attack the Ešâġeʿa, Muḥammad's allies, whose war cry was: "Râʿ al-ġedʿa ana-ben meʿġel; O protector of Ġedʿa, I am Eben Meʿġel!" 8. Snâd denotes a definite course. Mâ beha snâd means either that the Ešâġeʿa were compelled to change their direction or that their counter attack did not meet with success. Eben Ḥaġġâġ and Ḥamâmde are kins of the Weld ʿAli, subject to Muḥammad eben Smejṛ. 9. Awlâd Ġamʿân was the name given to Daʿmân, Nṣejṛ, and Šlâš, the three heroes of the Šaʿlân kin. The Kurdish volunteers wore red waistcoats and red tunics. 10. Maḳrûra is a rifle of the original make, not an imitation. Šowb bešmâd, direction to the goal; šâmed šowb signifies a marksman who hits his target, mâ jiḥti. 13. Mowteh ḥakîk: as if a sacrifice, ḥakîka, had been brought for him; his death is atoned for. In the opinion of the Rwala fallen warriors are allotted wide pastures in Paradise by Allâh. 14. Ṭurṭumâni is a derisive name for the Turks, Turcomans, and Kurds, whose languages the Rwala do not understand. 17. Aš-Šejḥ Aḥu Dinja alludes to Nâjef aḥu Dinja, the first of the Šaʿlân family to rule the Rwala. 18. The camels of the attacking Rwala were so spirited that they neighed as if rutting and dashed at the enemies as if they were camels for whom they were craving. Sbejbēḥ was the commander of the regular cavalry. 19. ʿAġel al-Jâḳîn, an officer subordinate to Sbejbēḥ, wanted to ambush the camels carrying grain and other foodstuffs to the Rwala before their return to the inner desert. A horse usually has two halters, one without a bridle, which holds the rope for tethering, the other provided with a bridle and rein. 20. Dej-dehâni means the commander of the Turkish corps, whose military cap was as red as the wild poppy. Ġdê' eben Mašhûr was a hero of the Eben Ša'lân kin.

1. Jâ râcebîn kwâr hîlen 'arâmîs
jetwen mîd msâhamât al-hezûmi
2. hîlen tekubb 'ulûkahen ben-nisânîs
rakkâbahen mâ jistazaff al-hedûmi
3. hezzow al-manġûb al-harâr al-melâhîs
jibri-l-'alîl nisâ'eheh 'okob nowmi
4. jimšen brâ'i muċajjes al-kâ' taċġîs
mamša tamânt ajjâm lel-heġen jowmi
5. ṣubḥ at-talâte brejb al-ġân wa-blîs
temsûn bedijâr ar-refâka lezûmi
6. w-elja' lifejtu mutabîn al-maḥâmîs
jâ 'ejâl hâtow min rarâjeb 'elûmi
7. telfi mḥammad sûr hejlen marâwîs
habb al-hawa lak jâ 'anân al-'ezûmi
8. 'an lâbetak kâmat teġaddam 'an al-ċîs
tekazzebû lemkaṭṭe'in al-hezûmi
9. marâref al-aṭmâ' râḥû mefâlîs
min zarb šîlf muġarrebbîn al-ekrûmi 10. ċejf al-wahaċ jarmi 'arûd al-ķerânîs
mâ beh ḥlâf w-'âġzen lâ jeċûmi
11. ḥâlow 'alejh w-neċċes al-'awd tenċîs
jelûž bežijâ' aš-šeġar tekel bûmi 12. šârat 'elûmeh kill abûha ḥamâlîs
jâ bint 'an mitleh hâk al-jowm šûmi
13. habb al-hawa jâ dâjerîn an-nwâmîs
bes'ûf nawlâna žuwijj al-'ezûmi.

1. O ye who ride in the saddles of sterile, hardened she-camels
Which are running through distant, multicolored hillocks!
2. These are the sterile she-camels at whose fast gait
the loads flutter in the air
So that their rider cannot hold his garment with his foot.
3. Show a stick with its bark peeled off to thoroughbred and eager she-camels, Whose steady though fast pace will cure a sick man
when he awakens from sleep.

4. They keep to one course like one who has well surveyed a plain;
An eight-days' journey the riding camels make in one day.
5. On Tuesday morning — Oh, may both the ghost and devil vanish! —
Ye will be in the allied country where ye must spend the night.
6. As soon as ye, exhausted, reach those who are ever roasting coffee,
O sons! give them your wondrous news.
7. Thou wilt reach Muḥammad, that wall who protects the horse covered with sweat.
May the breeze of good fortune blow upon thee, O thou tried bridle!
8. And as to thy people, they began to crawl from a sack,
For ye must block the road against those who traverse the parallel hillocks.
9. They brought big spoons of greed but left empty-handed Because of the spear wounds dealt by those who ride
the fiercest riding animals.
10. What! will fright throw the molting genius?
Nothing has befallen him, and yet he does not rise.
11. When our warriors reached him the old man belied his former words,
Crawling like an owl among the roots of perennials.
12. His fame, no matter by whom spread, proved a lie.
O daughter of mine! beware of one who acts like him
on that day.
13. May the breeze blow good fortune towards you who seek a good reputation
With the help of our Lord steadfast in his decisions.

Muḥammad eben Smejṛ, the head chief of the Weld 'Ali, became reconciled with the Rwala and promised not to allow the Fed'ân to cross his territory when bent on raiding the Rwala. It was then that he used the expression that he would hold both his people and the Fed'ân as if in a sack, ċis, from which nobody would crawl out against his will. But soon after the Fed'ân did cross, while many of Eben Smejṛ's own men joined them and attacked the Rwala again. They were defeated and lost many of their own horses and camels, captured by the Rwala. In this raid the Fed'ân poet, Meḥda' al-Hebdâni, also took part; in some of his poems he had boasted of his bravery and threatened to humble the Rwala. During the attack Mehda's mare stumbled, taḡanta'at, and threw him to the ground; fearing for his life, he crawled into the bushy perennials, where the Rwala youths found him. Prince Saṭṭām, before whom he was brought, let him go free, after some sarcastic remarks. Muḥammad âl Mhelhel, one of the Rwala poets, then composed this poem and sent it to Muḥammad eben Smejr. I learned it from Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd.

Verse 1. Arâmîs are she-camels which may be depended upon not to run away at night but to shift for themselves in the matter of food and to endure even the greatest fatigue. Mîd means far away, distant. Ḥazm is an elevation, rather low, but long, and dotted with many small hillocks. These ḥzûm usually run parallel. When shining in the sun's rays they assume variegated colors, white, pink, and bluish — whence their name, msâhamât, multicolored. 2. The rider's garment is blown up when his camel walks at a fast pace against the wind. His cloak waves like wings, the long sleeves of his shirt fly up above his head, and its hem is lifted up, baring his legs to the knees. When this happens the rider wraps both the lower part of his shirt and the foreparts of his cloak around his legs and presses his knees to the camel in order to keep his garment close to his body, jistazaff. 3. If the rider wants his camel to go fast for a length of time, he grasps in his right hand the small stick hanging by a band from his wrist and holds it straight out over the animal's head. With the motion of the camel the hand holding the stick moves too; this action is called hezz, rocking or quick pace. A manġûb is a small stick from which the bark has been peeled off, no matter what its shape may be or what the wood it is made of. Al-melâhîs are she-camels which push to the front all the time, so that they must be held back with the stick. Therefore, "Elhas had-delûl, make go back, push back this riding camel," has almost the same meaning as "Ezreb had-delûl, strike, hit, this riding camel." Nisâ is a long, regular pace, during which even a sick man can fall asleep. 4. Heġen is never used in common speech; the poet thus prefers words which are seldom heard. A Bedouin would say reċâjeb or, in the singular, delûl. 6. The Weld 'Ali are known to be great lovers of black coffee. They are said always to be roasting, grinding, and making coffee. 7. Heġlen marâwîs signifies a troop of riders who, by exerting their whole strength, have come up with the enemy but are in danger because their perspiring and fatigued mares may succumb. Muḥammad eben Smejṛ interposed himself between the tired mares of his comrades and the enemy, like a strong wall holding back the hostile onslaught. 8. Kâmat teğaddam 'an al-čīs is said of small animals held in a sack when they begin to stick out their heads and try to escape. Žazzebû lehom: prevent them from returning, from reaching the watering place, etc. 9. Ekrûm is a poetical expression for spirited mares and she-camels, which have not long been ridden. Only an experienced rider will dare to mount them, and even such a rider is often thrown. Morrafa is a big wooden spoon for taking meat from the kettle. The Fed'ân brought big spoons of greed expecting to capture many herds of camels. 10. Žernâs (pl., kerânîs) are grown animals losing their hair, molting. Here the expression 'arûd al-kerânîs, a molting celebrity, means the poet Mehda', whose head was almost bald and whose beard was very thin. "Mâ beh hlâf: there is nothing the matter with him, it is not so bad with him", is usually said after a sick, wounded, or injured person has been examined for the first time. 11. Neččes tenčîs: by his cowardly behavior he belied all his claims to bravery; he proved them all to be idle words — and those who believed and spread them, spread lies.

Wars Between the Rwala and the Fed'ân (1877—1900)

The head chief of the Fed'ân tribe left this world, dara'; and his son, Turki eben Mhejd, was recognized as his successor. He was classed with the heroic men, čân je'edd min ar-rağâl al-fursân, and had great success on his frequent raids, šâr bahît bel-marâri. Therefore he was famous all over the desert, w-kaḍ ištahar šiteh. Once he attacked the Rwala. Saṭṭâm eben Ša'lân, the prince of this tribe, was unwilling to fight him, mâ hw bâri kwâmteḥ, as he loved him, čân leh ṭajjeb, and was related to him, nasîbeh, having married his sister, Turkijje, whom he kept with him all the time, hi 'endeh. But Turki continued to provoke the Rwala incessantly. At one time he fell upon, râr 'ala, a clan of the Kwâčbe tribe who were in the act of migrating, compelled them to construct a war camp, nawwahhom, and then fought them from morning until mid-afternoon, ila-l-ašr w-al-kown 'âğed bênhom.

After having killed some men and women, zilm w-ḥarīm, he robbed them of all he could, aḥadhom, and returned with the booty to his kin, ila haleh.

Shortly afterwards he undertook a new raid against the Rwala, assailed the herds of the Âl Zejd kin in the depression of al-Ḥôr, and took all their camels together with the 'Alja herd, which consisted only of white she-camels, marâtîr, and which had belonged to them from ancient times; isemha al-'alja w-hi marâtîr w-žedîme 'endahom 'ala dawr ġdûdhom. These camels were then entrusted to the special care of 'Arsân abu Židle. On his return Turki caught a member of the Rwala tribe, każab każîb min ar-rwala zelema, and, after learning from him where the prince was encamped, he let him go on his way but in parting shouted:

"Greet my relative Saṭṭâm and tell him that he should not allow himself to become a chief of nomads raising goats and sheep, because there is grass enough in al-Ḥamâd this year; lâ jsîr šajḥ aš-šikkâra w-al-'ešeb bel-ḥamâd wâğed."

The man gave this message to the head chief Saṭṭâm, 'allem saṭṭâm bhâda-l-ğawâb, who, enraged, instantly exclaimed:

"Oh, that man! Let Allâh decide between us and him. Hâda-r-rağğâl ješûf allâh lena w-leh. We did not want to fight him, but he provokes us all the time, w-hw mubtalîna. O ye Arabs, shoe your horses and get your supplies ready, for tomorrow we shall go on a raid as ordered by our highest commander; jâ 'arab eḥdû hejlkom w-eḥsû zehâbkom w-ḥenna tarâna bâčer meddâdeh razw bamr al-hâdi."

In that part of al-Ḥamâd called al-Herijjân the Rwala warriors sighted a herd of camels and also caught a man, to whom they said:

"Who are these Arabs? minhom hal-'arab haḍôla." His answer was:

"They are the Âl Mhejd, haḍôla âl mhejd."

Saṭṭâm then found a camping place for his men which was well hidden from casual observation and at night sent a special messenger, naḍîr, to warn the head chief Turki eben Mhejd in these words:

"We undertook a raid against ye, ğîna ḥenna 'alejkom razw, not knowing that thou wert encamped on our route. Yet it has already happened, and now I cannot prevent my people from attacking you, w-lâ atmakken aruddhom 'an al- râra 'alejkom. Think it over! If thou believest thou canst beat us, tanteĥna, behold! here we are, hâ ĥenna ġînâk, but in my opinion thou shouldst make thine escape tonight, wa-bšowfti ennak teheġġ bhâda-l-lejl, and keep at a distance from us, w-trûĥ 'an waġĥana. If thou dost that, we shall come tomorrow to thy camp, see that thou art gone, stop a while, and then return to our kinsfolk; nanċef w-narġa' ila halna."

After hearing the message Turki instantly said:

"God will help us against them, 'alejhom ma'ûnaten min allâh. Tomorrow I shall fight them, bâċer lâzem atnâteĥ ma'hom."

The next day the Rwala came like a whirlwind, attacked the camp, entered it, and possessed themselves of all the herds there, including the one called 'Alja, which had been captured by Turki some time before. Ĥalaf âl Iden killed, as was the will of God, bamr allâh, the great chief Turki himself, and took his mail shirt, der'ateĥ, his saber, and his mare, one of the fleetest of horses, faraseĥ ċânat min ġijâd al-ĥejl. Ĥalaf offered this mare to Saṭṭâm as a gift.

After Turki's death there broke out between the Rwala and Fed'ân a war so cruel that rider after rider fell off his horse, w-âd aṭ-ṭarîĥ bênhom mâ jeṭîĥ, and the members of both tribes were bent more on killing a man than on capturing animals, w-šâr 'enda-l-farîžên dabĥ az-zelema aĥsan min ċasb al-ĥalâl.

Another version of Turki's death is as follows:

"It was at the time of abundance, when we set out against Turki eben Mhejd. He was generally called al-Haddâb, meaning omnipresent, as never half a month passed without news coming in of a fresh attack by him on some Rwala camp near or far. Many a warrior was afraid of him, the women frightened their children with his name, and the herdsmen were reluctant to drive the herds out of the camps. Finally Saṭṭâm agreed with other chiefs to undertake a raid against him. Personally he liked Turki, for besides being a brother of his favorite wife, Turkijje, he was also a man of noble mind and honest. The Rwala, however, threatened to depose Saṭṭâm if he would not crush Turki once for all. We were encamped in az-Zrejbinât at the time. Saṭṭâm set out for the decisive fight with six hundred riders on horseback and eight hundred on camels, he himself being the commander-in-chief. The Ešâġe'a clan was led by Eben Me'ġel, the 'Abdelle by Eben Mġejd, and the Sirhân by Eben Merdeğ. Halaf âl Iden was Saṭṭâm's chief lieutenant. First we drank from the Hubejrat ad-Daḥal, then we found water at the head of al-Ṛadaf, crossed aṣ-Ṣwâb, and saw a small camp of the Şlejib, who told us that Turki was encamped at al-Heri. In al-Ṛadaf Saṭṭâm hired a Şlubi and sent him at night secretly to Turki. The Şlubi overtook the latter on the march to a new camp, made a sign to him to come nearer, and then gave him the message he was entrusted with:

'O Turki! I was sent to thee by thy brother Saṭṭâm. The Rwala are on thy heels, desiring thy life.'

"This enraged Turki to such an extent that he drew his saber menacingly and commanded the Şlubi to be gone, with the words:

'Leave at once! Let nothing of what thou hast now said to me escape thee. If thou utterest a single word before my people, I shall kill thee. Am I, from whom the Rwala have fled so often, expected now to run away from them?'

"Turki's slaves wondered not a little why he had his tent erected so far southwest from the camp.

"We first sent five of our scouts on horses, 'ujûn, to examine the country ahead of us, but these turned back as soon as they caught a glimpse of the camp fires. In the morning we sent out others, this time on camelback, şbûr. One of them soon returned with the report that the enemy was withdrawing in a northerly direction and was being followed by the rest of our scouts. We moved after them in a leisurely manner. Not long after noon a second scout finally came with the report that they had put up their tents and that coffee was being ground at Turki's tent.

"At that moment every rider mounted his horse, grasped his weapons and ammunition, and waited for the command. The commanders pointed out the places where the riders of tired or overburdened she-camels, radd, were to wait, placed the other camel riders, şâbûr, between them and Turki's camp, divided the horse troop into two halves, posting one of them on the flank of the şâbûr to form the reserve, çemîn, while with the other they decided to attack, râra. Then we attacked the camp directly. At that time the Âl 'Awâğî clan was also camping with Turki, so we had at once several hundred riders against us. The fight of rider against rider lasted till sunset. Turki exhausted six mares during that time, his slaves changing them at his command. An-Nûri was wounded and many other Rwala, and still the fight was not yet decided. Saṭṭâm was loath to call up the reserve, for he wanted it either to decide the victory or to cover the retreat.

"Finally Turki's mare was hit by a shot. In falling she pressed his leg to the ground, and, as he was clad in a mail shirt, he could not free his leg quickly enough and was stabbed by a spear twice. At that moment Rarrâf, Saṭṭâm's slave, sprang to the struggling chief in order to save him, pulled him from under the horse, and the women carried him into the tent, which was at once occupied by four of Saṭṭâm's slaves as guards against the Rwala, inflamed by the battle. Turki's fall having been observed and jubilantly announced by the attackers, the Fed'ân began to retreat but were intercepted by the reserve cavalry, while the camel riders, şâbûr, sped to the camp to pick up both their dead and wounded friends. Ḥalaf âl Iden, who was left in charge of the camel riders, now reached the tent where Turki in the meantime was being cared for by Saṭṭâm himself, and was on the point of giving him the death blow but was prevented by Saṭṭâm, who threatened him with instant death should he lay a finger on his friend. Then Ḥalaf called on his camel riders to come and get their enemy themselves. In response all the Rwala — and there were some five hundred of them — surrounded Turki's tent, while Ḥalaf spoke to the prince thus:

'O Saṭṭâm! the Arabs do not fight on such conditions. Behold, we shall not ask thee again. I swear by Allâh, if thou dost not give way, thou wilt roll into thy grave. Canst thou not see that the muzzles of all the rifles are pointing at thee?'

"Thus coerced, Saṭṭâm turned to Turki with the words: 'Forgive, my brother, and may Allâh also forgive me. There thou seest how my Rwala obey me. O Ḥalaf, O thou rascal, sell me him whom thou wishest to destroy. I will give thee gold!'

'Away with thee, brother! Knowest thou not that an-Nûri has fallen, that Kurdi, Nâşer eben Me'gel, and countless others also have fallen today?'

"Nodding to his slaves, Saṭṭâm then with them left Turki's tent, stricken with grief on hearing that an-Nûri and his brother Kurdi were among the slain. Kurdi was dead, but an-Nûri still lived and later fully recovered. After Saṭṭâm's departure the enraged Rwala threw themselves on Turki and beat him to death. They captured all the herds and tents in the camp. Over thirty Rwala had fallen, and about a hundred were wounded. Of the fallen the hero Za'ejtel was the most lamented. They also lost twenty-five mares."

1. Jâ râceb alli mašiha rowğ w-arwâğ
hâjel temân sinîn maḥlan zaharha
 2. ma' al-bejâḥa mašiha al-'aṣr diflâğ
wa-hmîme mâ 'omr al-mu'anna nazarha
 3. telfi 'ala meḥda' al-habâdîn ma'âğ
w-eḥci-l-'elûm alli bḳalbeh ḥabarha
 4. ḳelt eḥwât kuṭne ḥârabûna belâ ṣwâğ
w-eḳfow bṣiḳḥen 'an mešâti dijarha
 5. w-al-'elem ṣâdež w-ṣâr len-nâs neğnâğ
w-mel leh ḥalîle 'âf raṣṣat tamarha
 6. w-saṭṭâm 'ajjaw beh maḥlîn al-asrâğ
w-kattaw 'alejkom biğmû'en ḥadarha
 7. jâ ḥzejl w-allâh ḳâjem tekel sejjâğ
w-tkawwedû serd as-salâjel betarha
 8. w-ḥîn aṣ-ṣaḥa sawwaw 'ala-š-šejh semâğ
bsaḥâbaten kešt al-ğwâher maṭarha
 9. w-turki šallawḥ muḥlîn al-asrâğ
min čaff ḳarmen šaḳlabeh min zaharha
 10. w-hâda-l-faḥar mâ hi b'ârîn behbâğ
alli 'azal 'ejlâtakom 'an ḥadarha
 11. jâ hejf jâ-lli rab'ateh mitl haddâğ
bisjûfena w-ḥelw mantar ḥemarha
 12. abḳârana jâ ḥzejl min ra'jet al-ḳafr sejjâğ
w-abḳârakom jâ ḥzejl ter'a wabarha
 13. eḳṭâ'akom 'an rûtt al-hôr tin'âğ
w-abḳârana teḥottaha binaharha.
1. O thou who ridest a she-camel with a regular pace,
A sterile one, whose back has borne no burden for eight years!
 2. Over the plateau towards the evening she quickly trots, For, being fleet of foot, throughout her life she has never been urged on by any rider.
 3. Reaching that babbler, Meḥda' al-Hebdâni, Relate the tidings that he also well knows.

4. I said that the sisters of Ḳuṭne attacked us, though not at feud,
And their riders came back with our fair camels from where the herds spent the winter.
5. That news was true, and men shook their heads about it,
And whoever had a wife ceased to press her breasts.
6. The throwers from the saddles would not obey Saṭṭām
And rushed upon you like a rolling flood.
7. O Ḥzejl! by Allâh, Ḳâjem was like a rutting camel And led a troop of fleet-footed mares in the wake of the captured she-camels.
8. Then when the dew had evaporated they prepared red dyestuff for your chief In a cloud of dust, dripping with blood and amid the thunder of costly weapons.
9. A blow was dealt to Turki by the throwers from saddles,
By the hand of a hero who rolled him from the mare's back;
10. And it is this deed which brought glory, not the capture of she-camels in a rolling land;
This deed drove your families from the shelter of their tents.
11. Oh, shame on him whose followers were like Haddâğ
For our sabers! and how glorious the dripping of their blood!
12. Our young camels, O Ḥzejl! grew gay with pasture which no one has touched,
And your young camels, O Ḥzejl! are eating off their own hair.
13. Your herds must not come near the rûte in al-Ḥôr
Whilst our young camels move thither.

The poet was Ḥalaf âl Iḍen eben Zejd; the reciters, Mindîl al-Kat'i and ʿAwde al-Kwêċbi.

Verse 1. Kowğ w-arwâğ is a uniform, fast walk. For eight years the she-camels have neither been ridden nor used in carrying loads. 2. Bejâha is a plateau with a wide view on all sides. In the time of the day called al-‘aṣr, mid-afternoon, when the sun is sinking to the west, the rider on such a plateau may be seen from afar; therefore he urges his animal, fatigued by an all-day march, to greater speed in order to reach the rolling country where he can prepare supper for himself and let his camel graze at will. Nazarha: he urged it to greater speed with the words "Hejh! hejh!" Mu'anna is equivalent to ťareš, ťurki, a rider, a traveler. 3. Mehda' al-Hebdāni, a Fed'ān poet. 4. The Fed'ān war cry is: "Ana-hu kutne, I am the brother, protector, of the Kutne!" as they call all their herds. Ehwāt kutne are the camels of the Fed'ān, who had attacked and captured many herds owned by the Rwala. 5. The news reached Prince Saṭṭām, who was not in favor of making a raid in retaliation. This made the Rwala neġnāġ: shake their heads and criticize Saṭṭām's love of peace. Public opinion proving too strong for him, Saṭṭām had finally to declare a raid. 7. Hzejl ar-Ru'ūġi and his brother Kâjem were Fed'ān heroes. 8. Kešt means the rattling of the falling rain and the rumbling of thunder. Has-saĥāba leha kešt: this cloud is bringing thunder and rain. 10. Hebġe is a rolling country where it is possible to hide but also to be ambushed. In such a terrain the Rwala herds could easily be approached by the Fed'ān. After Turki's death the victorious Rwala threw themselves on the tents and looted at will. Ejlātakom are the Fed'ān women and children. 11. Haddāġ is a famous well in Tejma, from which as many as eighty buckets of water are drawn at once. The Rwala sabers, in like manner, drew the blood of Turki's men. 12. Al-kafr: pastures which have not as yet been visited by anybody. The better the pasture the stronger becomes the sexual desire of both male and female camels in the second half of December and in January, and, as the retaliatory raid against Turki was made in February, the poet uses the words sejjâġ, rutting, for both camels and she-camels. 13. Al-Ĥôr is a depression of some length in the center of the desert of al-Ĥamâd, overgrown for the most part with rûte. When they eat this the camels rapidly fatten. Naĥar is the part of the she-camel's breast directly under the throat. To say of a she-camel that she lays al-Ĥôr before her breast means that she goes directly there.

Two years after Turki's death the Fed'ān tribe made a fresh raid against the Rwala. Allāh led them to a camp of the Ša'lān kin, pitched, for lack of pasture, in a wholly isolated place at the beginning of the valley of as-Subiĥi in the district of ar-Rwêšdât. Far and wide there were no Arabs who could have come to their aid. The raiding troop of the Fed'ân numbered about 1200 men on horseback, while the warriors, ṣanam, of the Ša'lân kin had no more than 200 horses. Their herds were attacked and captured. As soon as the Fed'ân approached the Ša'lân camp, cries for help were heard, w-ba'ad wağ° al-mufazze°, and therefore the men of the Ša'lân kin mounted their horses and hurried after the Fed'ân. But the latter were much stronger numerically and, moreover, took up a position behind the herds captured from the Ša'lân, from where they shot one pursuer after another as they approached the herds; w-hâhom ḥalken četir w-âhedîn at-ṭarš w-âzelîn warâha w-jel'abûn ar-raḥže ila-lli jelḥakhom min al-faz'a w-jarmûnhom. Thus they avenged their great chief, Turki, rejoicing at the number of the Ša'lân kin they killed; w-jestaddûn tār turki w-ḳad istabšarû baḥd at-tār min âl ša'lân hâk al-jowm. At last the Ša'lân warriors, reassembling, recognized that they were not strong enough to repel the enemy and that they were threatened with annihilation if they did not succeed in making their escape. Some cried:

"Let us return and defend our camp and ourselves. For we see that these men have captured our herds and are concealed among them, and that only a troop as numerous as they could free the herds! Hallûna narğa° 'ala ḥemjâna lann ar-rağâl aḥadow al-ḥelâl w-âzelîn ḳafâh w-lâ jefukkah minhom illa ġmû° čitrhom."

Others again urged: "Let us attack them, happen what Allâh will; either these men will shoot us all and then take not only our herds but our horses too, or we shall free our herds; hallûna nebî° 'alejhom w-alli 'end allâh 'endek amma jarmûna ar-rağâl w-jâḥdûn ḥejlna baṭar ṭaršana w-amma neffukk ḥelâlna min ar-rağâl."

This appeal was answered by all. Shouting with one voice: "The rider protecting 'Alja is a Rwejli, and I am 'Alja's brother!" they furiously attacked the enemy, poured bullets upon them in retaliation for the capture of their animals, and, killing many and chasing away the rest, freed their herds that very day. When finally the pursuers separated from the pursued, infakk at-ṭâred 'an al-maṭrûd, the Ša'lân, returning with their recaptured herds, began to search for their missing comrades. Reaching the actual battle ground, al-ma-âra, they saw Rarrâf, the slave of Saṭṭâm, lying among the fallen. Rarrâf surpassed all the other slaves in generosity and bravery and was no less esteemed by the Rwala than if he were a chief himself; rarrâf w-čân jenûf ʿala čaffat al-ʿabîd bel-karam w-al-fursa w-hw ʿenda-r-rwala min ḥsâb aš-šujûḥ. He had been one of the first to come to the assistance of the threatened herds. His horse, being hit by a bullet, stumbled and in falling pinned its rider under its body. The Fedʿân, to whom Rarrâf was known, stabbed at him as he lay under his horse unable to defend himself, slashed him with their sabers, and, as he remained motionless under their blows, thought him dead. But the Rwala found life in him yet, beh rūḥ, placed him on a camel, and brought him to his tent. Nearly all the fingers on his hands and the toes of his feet had been cut off, w-hw muḳaṭṭaʿât ašâbe ʿidejh w-ašâbe riğlejḥ, and there was hardly a spot on his whole body where he had not been either stabbed or slashed. It took him three years to recover, but at last with the help of Allâh he could ride as before.

After Turki's death (1887) his brother, Ḥâcem, became the head chief of the Fedʿân. Once he assembled the warriors of the Fedʿân, ʿEbede, Ḥadedijjîn, and Mwâli tribes and decided to camp with them in the territory of the Zana Muslim. They pitched their tents in the neighborhood of the Weld ʿAli and al-Ešâgeʿa. Eben Smejz and Eben Meğel, the chiefs of the threatened camps, asked Eben Šalân for help. Summoning the Arabs camping with him at that time, the latter sent troop after troop to the aid of his relatives, the Zana Muslim; w-ğarrad ġurûd faẓaten likrâjebhom zana muslim. These auxiliary troops, riding with the utmost speed to the tents of the Weld ʿAli, found the enemy encamped near by. The troop, consisting of Saṭṭâm's sons with their slaves and men, surbat awlâd saṭṭâm w-ʿabîdhom w-zilmhom, reached the camp of the Fedʿân tribe. Entering it, they thought at first they were in a camp of a Zana Muslim kin and were not a little surprised to see themselves assaulted on all sides by men on horseback, al-ḥejl arârat ʿalejhom min kill ġâneb. Recognizing them as their enemies, the Fedʿân, they considered their lives already forfeited, ajesow min al-ḥajât, knowing well that in the case of themselves and the Fedʿân no fighter would fall from his horse without being killed on the spot, ʿâlemîn enn-at-ṭariḥ mâ jeṭiḥ illa madbûḥ. And, in fact, before they had got their weapons ready they were surrounded and summoned on all sides to yield. Then they were brought to the tent of the head chief, Ḥâcem eben Mhejd, where they expected to be killed one after another. But Hâcem, recognizing them, fortunately remembered their mother, his own sister Turkijje, greeted them in a friendly manner, sent for a grown camel, and had it killed in their honor. Moreover he threatened to punish severely any of his men who should dare to insult them even by a single word. This generous behavior of their mother's brother did not fail deeply to impress Saṭṭâm's sons, apart from the joy which they felt at escaping with their lives. When this incident was reported to Eben Ša'lân, he ordered his auxiliary troops to turn back at once and threatened all who should do the least harm to any member of the Feḏ'ân. This again so pleased Hâcem eben Mhejd that he likewise asked both his men and his allies to return to their homes. But before they left he made Saṭṭâm's sons and their retinue mount their horses, restored all their arms, and escorted them part of the way so that they might return safely to their kinsfolk.

War Between the Rwala and the Western Tribes (1902)

In 1902 the head chief Saṭṭâm eben Ša'lân was invited by the Turkish Government to visit Sultan Abdul-Hamid in Constantinople. When he had left home, the western tribes, seized by a desire for booty, began, although friends, šâheb, to attack Rwala camps. The worst offenders were the Hwêṭât, Šarârât, Beni Šahr, and their allied tribes, w-min jetba'hom. For instance, they captured herds belonging to the Rwala at al-Ḥaššâbijje and al-Ma'âṣer, the particular owners being the Nsejr and Der'ân kins of the Âl Mur'az clan; aḥadow tarš min ar-rwala min âl mur'az min âl nsejr w-min âl der'ân. Finally the owners of the captured herds went in a body to the chief an-Nûri eben Ša'lân to ask his help. An-Nûri then had the following letters written to the chief Abu Tâjeh of the Hwêṭât and to Âl Hâwi of the Šarârât:

"Up to this day we and you have been friends. Attacks on each other are not allowed, because we are true friends and comrades. Benn-al-ân henna wijjâkom šâheb w-lâ tgûz al-râra bênnâ w-henna šiddîž w-rafiž. We hope therefore that you will return, te'addûn, the herds you have taken from the Rwala. Should they attack you and take your herds let the despoiled parties come to us with a letter and we will return their property to them at once; w-enn lô lann-ar-rwalâ râjerîn 'alejkom w-âḥḍîn lekom ḥelâl w-jeḡûna-l-manâkîs w-ma'hom maktûb minkom ennana ne'addîha bawfa. Do not believe that we would attack you treacherously! narîr 'alejkom bebawḳ. Brave men will not stoop to deceit, w-al-bawḳ mâ hw šîmat aḡâwîd. Greetings!"

The letters were handed to the plundered Rwala to deliver. These poor wretches had to wait on the chiefs Abu Tâjeh and Eben Ġâzi and on the prominent men of the Šarârât and Šḥûr tribes for more than sixty days, imploring that their animals might be returned to them, but they got nothing at all and came back to their kinsfolk much cast down. Not long afterwards these chiefs raided the Rwala again and in an attack on the Kwâčbe camp near Ḥabra Ḳraje in al-Ḥunfa took all their she-camels. Dlejmân aš-Šrejfi, one of the Kwâčbe chiefs, min ċbâr al-kwâčbe, with an auxiliary troop composed of both Kwâčbe and Duṛmân warriors, pursued the attackers for some distance but was surrounded by them and killed with all his twenty-one comrades. When this became known to the Rwala camping in the district of al-Ḥunfa, they tied a piece of black tent canvas to the neck of a riding camel, ḍelûl ḳalladûha šuḳḳa, and sent her to an-Nûri eben Ša'lân who was at that time encamped in al-Ḥamâd.

As soon as the messengers arrived an-Nûri instantly ordered the tents to be loaded on camels and moved with all his people toward the territory occupied by the enemy, who were pasturing their herds near al-Bṛêtijje in the valley of Feḡr, northwest of Tejma near the district of al-Ḥâlât. An-Nûri pitched his camp in the district of al-Ḥûl and sent word to the Kwâčbe and Duṛmân, who were then dwelling near the oasis of Tejma:

"Stay where you are! We have come to you and will secure your rights for you, netakâzi lekom min ḳowmkom, if it be the will of God."

Following this message he approached them with his warriors only, at night found a concealed camping ground between them and the enemy, and issued this order:

"Drive your herds, sarrehow ṭarškom, in the morning to your right hand, in the direction of the enemy. They will assail them, will then be ambushed by us, and our rights will be secured, netakâzi minhom."

In obedience to this order the Kwâčbe drove their herds in the morning towards the place where the enemy was stationed. On sighting them the outposts of the latter reported to their chiefs, who commanded their warriors at once to set out against the herds and to capture them. An-Nûri, who was observing every move of the enemy, fell upon them suddenly from the rear as they passed his hiding place and with his men began to slaughter them, w-tewallûhom dabḥ. Towards noon about five hundred of the enemy had been killed. Only a small troop, širdimaten žalîla, saved itself by flight but with the Rwala in hot pursuit. The moment the fugitives reached their relatives, the tents were struck and loaded, but the Rwala rushed in before they could remove anything and took many of their tents, besides driving away a number of their herds. At last night covered them all, ḥâl al-lejl ʿala ġamîʿ, and the pursuers became separated from the pursued. The Rwala returned home with a rich booty and the satisfaction of having avenged their fallen warriors, metatârîn bzilmhom alli-ndabaḥow.

As a result of this defeat the Hwêtât, Šarârât, and the Rmejḥ eben Fâjez clan of the Beni Šaḥr hurried their herds as well as their camels carrying their tents to the Beni Šaḥr territory. There they explained what had happened to them and begged for assistance. The Beni Šaḥr, calling upon the neighboring tribes to help them, fazzaʿow kill ḥawâlîhom min al-ʿorbân, collected a multitude, the number of which was known to God alone, and erected a war camp between Umm al-ʿAmad and al-Libben, while in the meantime the territory vacated by them had been occupied by the Rwala. The Rwala tribal symbol, Abu-d-Dhûr, was rocking on a camel ahead of their first column, the rest following in the customary order. The Rwala also erected a war camp, but east of al-Libben. The Beni Šaḥr, who relied not a little on their great numbers, shouted so as to be heard by their adversaries that they would capture both an-Nûri and his Rwala.

It came to pass, however, that just at that time God directed the steps of the head chief Saṭṭâm from the Sultan in Constantinople to the camp at al-Libben, where the Rwala welcomed him with boundless joy. Defiling before him one after another, ḳâmat al-ʿarâzât ʿendahom, they vowed to persevere and to revenge themselves. Both sides thus camped for nine days in full view of each other, w-dâmow ʿala ḥal-manâḥ metanâwahîn beni šaḥr w-ar-rwala tisʿat ajjâm menaw-wahîn al-kill minhom, exchanging shots all that time. On the tenth day they finally attacked each other and changed their position, and a day ensued for them on which even the hair of a boy just weaned might have turned gray, ješīb al-atfāl. The dust whirled up by the horses mingled with the smoke of the gunpowder, and a wild storm raged from early morning till almost the middle of the afternoon, w-šubek 'aġāġ al-ħejl ma' duħān al-bārūd w-šarat 'aršaten 'azīmaten min aš-šubħ ila žerīb al-ašr. God gave the victory to the Rwala. They overcame the multitude whose numbers none knew, threw themselves on their tents, and took them with all the furniture and supplies in them. In addition they captured several herds of camels and pursued the enemy till sunset. Then they returned to their tents, rejoicing over the victory. After a further stay of a few days near al-Libben they vacated the Beni Šahr territory and returned to their own lands.

After their defeat at al-Libben the Beni Šahr made continuous raids against the Rwala, oppressing their clans whose pastures were located on the border. Their commander, 'ažīd, was usually Trād eben Zeben. Fortune favored him, mislā' w-ħazīz, and he was numbered among the brave men, w-čān jin'edd min ar-raġāl. And so it happened after a few years that he collected his fellow tribesmen and the strangers who used to take part in his raids, and surprised a small Rwala camp near a settlement in the vicinity of Edra'ât. The camp attacked belonged to the Swâlme clan, which was commanded by the chief Eben Ġandal. Although he had received information of the impending raid, it was impossible for him to escape, and to get help was also out of the question, as there were no Arabs related to them in the whole wide neighborhood. Trād eben Zeben approached the Swâlme camp before sunrise, pitched his war tents, and harried the Swâlme till the afternoon. Yet whenever he attacked them, even penetrating into the camp, they ran out of their tents and beat the attackers back until they ejected them completely. Tiring at length of such attacks, tābat nafseh, Trād retreated with shame, but afterwards, whenever he learned of some smaller Rwala camp, he surprised it and drove away all the herds found there. Finally God determined to humble him.

Trād eben Zeben attacked among others the camp of the al-Ka'âž'a clan of the Rwala, situated near the head of the še'īb of Ra'râjes. There were about sixty tents there. Capturing all their herds, Trād hastened with them to his kins-folk. But at that moment Allâh brought the Ša'lân kin, which was migrating just then, across his tracks. The Ša'lân recognized the tracks as made by a troop of raiders heading east against their fellow tribesmen and at once decided to go in their pursuit, aṭlabûh. Following the tracks they kept a sharp lookout on all sides and were finally rewarded by sighting at some distance the raiders, who were returning with a rich booty. Concealing themselves in a place favorable for ambush, they waited for the raiders to come up with them and then attacked with such swiftness that, even before Trâd and his men were aware of it, the Ša'lân both on horseback and on camels were in their midst, w-elja' mâ ja-lam trâd w-alli ma'eh illa w-al-hejl w-al-ğejš šâbakathom, dealing them blow after blow. Trâd soon saw himself compelled to abandon his booty and seek safety in a wild flight to the west. His losses amounted to eight hundred men, while the Ša'lân, besides recovering the stolen herds, also captured many she-camels and inflicted such a defeat on Trâd as he had never met before.

Songs Composed on This Occasion

1. *Horren faḵa' min râs 'âli-t-ṭwîlât
leṣ-sejdet allî ḥaṭṭ ḥamseh warâha*
2. raṭṭ al-mahâleb bet-tenâd as-semînât jim'al elja' mâ bajjen lwušwâha
3. jâ ṭejr jâ ṭejr al-felah w-as-sa'âdât jâ-lli sujûden min ralâjel 'adâha
4. *šâd al-ḥwêti bes-sabab w-aš-šarârât
w-amma-hl ar-rî'ân ḥajjeb tanâha*
5. *mar'ad abu tâjeh četîr al-'ahâdât
w-alli mazz bel-bowḵ hâdi ġezâha'*
6. jâ ḥarb mâ 'ajjent dowl an-nuṣejrât sittin lejle žâ'edîn ledâha
7. *w-aḳtâ' der'ânen 'alejhen wasîmât
'ajjat 'alejhen lehîtak min reddâha*
8. *al-bowḵ mâ hw lel-ağâwid 'âdât
'ammâl râjâteh hedîmen lwâha*
9. *low mahhalat leh lejâli ṭerijjât
'ešbet nefûden jowm jejbes tarâha*
10. henna ntağawwad bel-ḥbâl al-žwijjât be'zûz ġajjâb al-maṭar min semâha

11. bes'ûd šejhen mâ jidannež lidafsât
w-lâ hw dnû brarraten elja lekâha
12. mâ hw ent jâ-l-bâjež želil al-amânât
ardatk nijjâten ba'iden hadâha
13. w-eben ġrajjed min hal-maḳ'adijjât
w-mâ ḥâsat aš-safha le'ajnen twâha
14. w-amma sahaġna tânijje w-awlijjât
nadmaḥ w-mâr ehtejm jekatter 'ajjâha
15. lâ w-allâh kowm mâ bha rabâwât
allâh 'ala šihben tebâreḳ hadâha
16. w-ġawkom ahl al-'alja medâlîh rârât
mitl as-saḥâb alli za'ûġen hawâha
17. elja nšerow fowḳ al-mhâr al-rejârât
tekel šejâhinen aṭṭaṭṭaf kaṭâha
18. al-ḥejl w-aš-šâbûr jimšen zâfât
jitlen eben hazzâ babjaz nekâha
19. šowḳ aṭ-ṭamûḥ alli tzahhat bḥaflât
nešmijjeten bajjâm 'aġġat sabâha
20. 'âšat jemînak jâ šabijj al-ḥasârât
ḥallat fakḳâjedha 'ala min na'âha
21. awda lehom bemḥaraf al-ḥejl bâhât
mitl al-ṛanam jišderk laġġat tarâha
22. wa' ḥelw dowġathom beṭârîf ḥâlât
nâsen ta'ît w-nâs tâhi rnâha
23. w-twâzenat lalli radow leh bdênât
w-estadd bšâ al-'azîzi kaṣâha
24. w-târ aš-šrejfi šâr min fowḳ al-amjât
lâtau elja mâ-n-nafs laḥazat hawâha
25. jâ dîb jâ-lli bel-ḥala' tez'až swât
allâh 'ata mâ trîd nafsak manâha
26. bjowmen beh al-'arġa' tedûk aṭ-trâwât
w-lâ teštahi al-kašra fazâjel 'ašâha
27. jâ šên sawwet les-sbâ al-meġjîât
mâ zâl tabči kill 'ajnen šekâha
28. bâlči tswi lak 'azâjem w-kâlât
tġîb min ḥâdî w-al-uhra warâha
29. markâz abu nawwâf zebn al-wenijjât
mâkar ḥarâr w-'awwazat min ženâha
30. jišda-n-nedâwi bel-ġenâhên jâ fât
ḥamm al-ḥabâri w-aš-šwijje ramâha
31. aš-šejḥ ṭasseh bel-kfûf aṭ-težilât
elja mâ thaġja-š-šowf 'ajneh 'amâha

32. w-jâ min jiwaddi lel-hreše habârât
w-illa-l-hafijje bajjenat min zaḥâha
33. jâ 'alî mâ ḡannak 'elûm aš-šemâlât
nâsen terîr brejr raddat nekâha
34. ṣuḥbak ṣaḥîḥ w-ṣuḥob rab'ak habârât
w-'an an-neḡa' tekmaḥ swâ'ed alḥâha
35. rmejḥ jesawwi leh ma' ad-dîb 'adwât
jabri-ṣ-sala' w-hw jinaḡḡes waṭâha
36. w-al-fâjne bîat manî' al-hkejšât
'oḡob ṭalât ajjâm jâ min sedâha
37. bel-ḥaṣṣ abu ḡabha čebîr al-mtejrat
raḡlen labes min šuḡḡaten leh šarâha
38. en selt (sic) 'an waḡheh želîl al-mruwwât
aṣḡa' min az-zerḡa' 'ala berd mâha
39. al'in abu hâk al-wuḡîḥ al-mutinât
mitl al-harûm alli tbajjen ḥazâha
40. bel-'awn labsaw min tijâb al-ḥabîbât
killen šara' leh bêramâ w-ečtisâha 41. w-abûk jâ jowmen ḡara lel-ḥwêṭât
al-čabd beṣ-šâbûn řasel šadâha
42. jabri swâḥîč al-'azâm al-marîzât
low hw 'alîlen jintaseḡḡ (sic!) min balâha
43. w-en sowlefaw min jamm zowden w-naḡšât
ḡûr al-ḡerâniġjât naššed řafâha
44. aba-t-terâja jammakom kill mâ fât
w-al-jowm miššû belḡa min ḡarâha
45. 'ajjent rab'an řarhabaw lel-ḡukûmât
mitl at-tġûs alli tḡarrat ḡaṣâha
46. w-min ba'ad da jâ râčebîn ḡafîfât
al-kill minken mâ laḡaḡha řanâha 47. kizzû labu maṣṣûr minna salâmât
beṭalḡijjeten jeṭreb laha min ḡaḡâha
48. čejf ent jâ řejḡen lena 'oḡob řejbât
ent ad-dera' elja' šâr řalfen ḡawâha
49. jâkel bḡubzak wâḡeden jamm ḡowmât
hâk an-nefûd alli četîren řazâha
50. ent al-ḡelâba w-al-ḡelâjeb řa'îfât
ja'îš râsak w-abu tâjeh fedâha.

1. A noble falcon flew down from the very summit of high mountains
After his prey at which he pointed his five claws;

2. He dug his claws into fat shoulders
And pecked away till the entrails appeared.
3. O thou wild bird! O falcon, good luck and success to thee!
O thou who huntest the heroes of thine enemies!
4. He seized the Hwêti with good reason and the Šarârât, too,
And destroyed the desire for glory of those who live
5. Abu Tâjeh had torn up many treaties [in defiles.
And for his treachery received this reward.
6. O Ĥarb! hast thou not seen the herds plundered from the Nŕejr?
Why, for sixty nights they sat demanding compensation.
7. And the Der'ân herds, marked with their tribal brand,
Thou, bearded one, didst refuse to return.
8. Treason is not a custom among heroes,
He who makes treason his emblem has his flag torn down;
9. Even if he were granted moist nights,
He would perish like the Nefûd grass when its moisture
10. We are girt with stout ropes [dries up.
By the power of Him who brings rain from the heavens,
11. Led by a lucky commander who stoops not to baseness
Nor craves a thing by others lost which he has found.
12. But such thou art not, O faithless traitor!
Who didst conceive a plan hard to execute.
13. Eben Ġrajjed, too, was at those meetings
He and all aš-Šafha men, accursed be their dead!
14. For neither the second nor the first default did we regard,
Nor did we stir, but the Htejm continued their rascal deeds.
15. By Allâh! at last war began without further concealment;
May Allâh bless the gray riders under whose hoofs lightning flashes!
16. The owners of 'Alja came upon you, attacking swiftly as lightning,
Came as a dark cloud, the gale of which snatches up everything.
17. When they form a line attacking on young mares
Thou wilt say they are fierce falcons swooping on ḵata'
birds.
18. Riders on horses and camels fast are advancing,
Following to a fight Eben Hazzâ' whose honor is white,

19. The darling of every woman desiring another husband, whose beauty excels in the games,
And a heroine on the day when her goods are threatened by raiders.
20. Long may thy generous right hand live, O youth,
And may it leave thy slain foes to those who will lament them.
21. On the playground of horses he prepared for them beds
From which sounds as of sheep bleating come to thee.
22. Ah, how sweet was their confusion as they ran on the borders of the volcanic grounds!
Some mourned, some sang ditties.
23. What these borrowers had plundered was brought back,
And the debt — according to the verdict — repaid with a full measure.
24. By more than a hundred slain aš-Šrejfi was avenged;
Their throats they cut until all were tired.
25. O wolf! O thou who howlest with thy mates in the Allâh gave thee thy soul's desire [desert!
26. On the day when a lame hyena might taste fresh meat,
And the shameless one cared not for the rest of its
27. O ugly one! call the hungry wild beasts, [supper.
As long as the eyes of the wounded weep for their torments.
28. Perhaps thou wilt send out invitations for feasts and good news
And thou with thy sister wilt offer them a choice.
29. At the head Nawwâf's father rode, protector of the weary,
Leader of a nest of noble falcons, of whom every one
he raised is perfect.
30. He is like a falcon hunting in the time of the dew with open wings,
Catching the habâri and throwing their entrails away.
31. He struck the [enemy] chief with a heavy fist
Till his sight vanished and his eye became blind.
32. Oh, who is to tell the Hreše tribe what is said of them?
For what was secret is as clear now as when the dew has dried.
33. O 'Ali! hast thou not received tidings from the north
Of a people attacking without declaring war?

34. Thy friendship is certain, but that of thy friends is to be scorned —
And, as they did not return the honor, they will not meet with success.
35. Rmejḥ like a wolf commits tricks befitting a foe.
It is said he is fond of praying, and yet he defiles the ground whereon he prays.
36. A shameful sin it is, truly, that the Hkejšât should sell the pardoned foe
After three days. Oh, who has done this?
37. As to Abu Ġabha, lord of the Mtejrât,
He is a man dressed in black tent cloth, bought by himself.
38. If thou askest about his face, it has few noble qualities,
It is colder than az-Zerḳa' in the coolness of its water.
39. Cursed be the father of those unfeeling faces,
For they are like a pregnant girl whose shame is visible.
40. They deserve to wear their sweethearts' gowns;
Each to buy his own cloth and to sew a gown from it.
41. By thy father, the fate which the Ḥwêtât met on that day Washed away all filth from their stomachs with soap.
42. That day cured the pains of the sick bones, [disease.
And, no matter how ailing, every one was cured of his 43. When they gossip of the battle, one will claim some deed and another will deny it,
But we will ask witness of the rocky surroundings of Kûr al-Ġerâniġjât.
44. We took vengeance on you for all that had happened;
Today you can besmear your beards with dung.
45. I sighted a company puffed up as if they would dictate,
And today they are like he-goats that have been gelded.
46. And finally, as to this poem, ye who ride on fleet-footed
To none of which a calf has yet clung, [she-camels
47. Hand it to Abu Manşûr with our greetings
On a sheet of paper, to gladden him who will read it.
48. How farest thou, our chief, after thy long absence?
Thou art our shield against a strong cold wind.
49. With thy bread a man supports life near Ḥowmât
In that Nefûd where so much ṛaza' grows.
50. Thou art the only source of gain, and poor are all the other trades.
May Allâh let thy head live and take that of Abu Tâjeh instead!

During the absence of Prince Saṭṭām in Constantinople the affairs of the tribe were administered by the present prince, an-Nûri eben Hazzâ' eben Ša'lân. It was at that time that the Beni Šahr, Hwêtât, Beni 'Atijje, Šarârât, and Beli allied themselves against the Rwala and began to raid the camps of the various clans without a formal declaration of war. The šujûh, which means an-Nûri with the other members of the reigning kin, were camping in the interior of al-Ḥamâd. There they received almost daily messages from their despoiled, manḵûšîn, fellow tribesmen, who asked an-Nûri to have the stolen camels returned to them. An-Nûri, it is true, sent to all the chiefs of the allied tribes letter after letter, reminding them of the treaties and friendship existing between them, but all his efforts were in vain. The allies continued their raids and even killed in one of them Dlejmân aš-Šrejfi, commander of the Kwâčbe, with more than twenty of his comrades. Thus an-Nûri was forced to assemble all the tribes and clans subject to him for a defensive raid. In two months he attacked and looted, in revenge, several camps of the allies with a thoroughness intended to overawe the insolent enemy. The poet, Meš'ân an-Nšejri of the Âl Mur'az clan, describes this campaign in our poem, which he sent to Prince Saṭṭām. To me it was recited by Ḥmâr abu 'Awwâd and by 'Awde al-Kwêčbi.

Verse 1. Faka' is a sudden quick movement of either a bird or a camel. Horr is a noble falcon, the easiest to train for hunting. Ḥaṭṭ ḥamseh warâha: before the falcon overtakes his spoil he prepares or directs his five (claws) at it. 2. Tenâd are the fleshy parts of the breast, also shoulders. Wušwa': entrails, intestines. 3. Ṛalâjel are the prominent fighters. A noble falcon will select for his game only the greatest heroes. 4. Ahl ar-rî'ân are the clans of the Beli whose territory is cut up by deep ravines and defiles, rî'. 5. Muḥammad abu Tâjeh, the brother of the Hwêtât chief, 'Awde, made many treaties with the Rwala and their followers and yet broke them, tore them up, without declaring war. 6. Ḥarb who had a son, Muḥammad, was chief of the Beni 'Atijje. He captured herds belonging to the Nšejr and Der'ân, members of the Rwala tribe, who negotiated with him for sixty days for their return but without success. 9. A traitor will never escape punishment, even if granted a respite of a few happy nights. 11. Jedna' is used of a dog carrying away something from a tent other than his master's; also of a man who helps himself from a full platter set before others, without being invited. Ṙarra is a thing of value which some man finds and keeps. 13. Eben Ġrajjed is a chief of the Beni 'Aṭijje. Ṣafḥa is the general name of the territory where the Ḥwêṭât, Beni 'Aṭijje, and Šarârât like to camp, because it slopes both east and west. Twa': the dead, buried. 14. Htejm is the term for the despised clans and tribes, thus also the Šarârât, of whom the poet is thinking. 15. Šihb means attacking riders. Before the attack they divest themselves of their mantles and caftans, if they have any, entrust them to their returning comrades, radd, and are clothed only in their dirty gray, šihb, shirts. 16. Al-'Alja, the name given by the Rwala to their white camel herds. Medâlîh or marâkîz, swift, flashing, terms applied to the Rwala owing to their mode of delivering attacks in quick succession with the suddenness of lightning. Whenever the sky is enveloped in black clouds, a wind storm rises in the desert, carrying and driving dust, fine sand, and dry plants before it and overturning all tents the pegs and ropes of which are not tight. 18. Eben Hazzâ' — i. e. an-Nûri, the commander of the Rwala — did not commit treason when he attacked the enemy. His face is without blemish, that is white. Neḳa' signifies integrity, honesty, which both parties to a peace treaty have to maintain. The party declaring war, returns the integrity, neḳa', to the other party. He who attacks another without a declaration of war fails to return the neḳa' to the attacked party, commits treason, and blackens his honesty, his face. 19. Niṣâma are gay youths, young heroes; nešmijje: a gay beauty, a heroine. 'Aġġat is used alike for a violent passion, for rising dust, and for an approaching throng of raiders. Ḥmâr maintained that ṣabâha meant "her youth," but 'Awde pronounced it "sabâha." According to Ḥmâr the poet speaks of a gay beauty in whose veins was beating the blood of youth demanding its rights from another man, while 'Awde maintained that the poet expresses his admiration for a beauty who seeks to save, either by hiding or by flight, the camels burdened with household goods, against which a raiding troop, sabâha, was advancing, 'aġġat. 22. Hâlât is an area covered with basalt and lava, where neither horse nor rider can move except by a few narrow paths. The Rwala drove the defeated enemy as far as the borders of such an area. The defeated mourned, the victors sang.

23. The dry measure called ṣâ' azîzi is larger than the common ṣâ' (nine liters). 27. "Jâ šên, O rascal!" an expression used in jest even with a person dear to one. By sbâ' are here meant all such beasts of prey in the desert as suffer most from hunger. 29. Wenijjât are mares, either exhausted or wounded and therefore in the greatest danger from the enemy. Abu Nawwâf is an-Nûri. Whoever puts himself under his command finds himself in a falcon's nest, as it were. 30. Nedâwi is the name of the largest species of hunting falcon, which discovers its prey even if it is concealed in the still dewy grass, while the other falcons begin to hunt only when the dew has evaporated and the game leaves its hiding places for the pasture. A nedâwi falcon feeds only on fat flesh, throwing away or rejecting the entrails. 31. Ṭasseh: it pecked at, struck, not with its beak like a true falcon, but with a heavy fist. Thajja-š-šowf: his sight left him. 32. Ḥreše is the name of a clan from the Ahl 'Îsa. 33. Eben 'Ali: the chief of the Ḥreše. Aš-Šemâlât, or Ahl aš-Šemâl, signifies the Beni Şahr. 34. Ḥabârât are jests or humorous stories which nobody takes seriously. 35. Rmejḥ abu Ğnejb eben Fâjez: the chief of the aṭ-Tûka division of the Beni Şahr tribe. 36. Fâjne means both infamy and sin. The Hķejšât, a clan of the Beni Şahr, sold a manî, pardoned one — i. e. an enemy captured in war who had asked for and received pardon — who had been their guest for three days. He had killed in a fair fight two brothers, members of the Beni Şahr, and the Hķejšât sold him to the nearest relative of the dead men, Fanḥûr abu Ğabha, who avenged the brothers by cutting off his head. 37. Bel-ḥaşṣ or bel-ḥşûṣ: in regard to, concerning. If a man commits a dishonest act, a piece of black tent cloth is tied to a pole and the fact is proclaimed in these words: "This is the flag of So and So. May Allâh blacken his face!" Abu Ğabha deserves worse than a black flag; he should wear a whole suit of such black material. Šukḳa is a strip of goat's hair fabric of which the tents are sewn. 38. Şaka': cold, cool, unfeeling, thus a man indifferent to praise or blame. 39. Mutîn means hardened, indifferent. Harûm is an unmarried pregnant girl, threatened by death if she has not been raped. 40. Bêrama is a piece of blue fabric of which women's gowns are made. 41. The words w-abûk, by thy father, are used by the poet in addressing himself to his hearers. 44. "Aba-t-terâja, far be the revenge!" cries the avenger when he has fulfilled his duty. Miššû belḥa min ḥarâha: besmear, befoul the beard with excrement in their sorrow for the loss of so many warriors. The mourning survivors throw dust and ashes into their hair and beard. 45. Šarhabaw: they were puffing themselves up, posing. They wanted to dominate the Rwala, although they sent them presents every year as a proof of their dependence. 47. Abu Manşûr is Prince Saṭṭâm, whose first-born, Manşûr, fell in an earlier victorious fight. 48. Dera° is a tent wall hung up during a cold wind, şalf. 49. Howmât is the name of sand hills in the Nefûd.

1. Al-°elem ġâna fowḵ maslûb al-kow°
°elmen jisažži lez-žamâjer nekâwi
2. eḥwât ref°a kill abûhom °ala tow°
w-°ala-l-°ažîd ji°âkebûn al-ahâwi
3. bšilfen jikeşş al-ġeneb wijjet az-žlow°
w-jiheff talât ek°ûb bḥadd ar-reşâwi
4. alli baḥît bel-°aşa° dîb majḵow°
°azam °ala-l-fazla tamânîn wâwi
5. âl ġenk kowṭar fowḵ ṭawîlet al-bow°
wa-şlâş čanneh min čemîneh ḥalâwi
6. rakaz °alejh rîf al-ḥalâwi °an al-ġow°
w-ḥalla° ġwâdeh tedhekeh bel-ḥadâwi
7. hw w-al-faras behwâh ṭâḥaw °ala kow°
w-ṭâḥ al-°aşa° lel-°abd w-al-fedâwi
8. wa° čam wâḥeden bedwâbet ar-rumḥ maşlow°
°arašet râseh zaba°aten bel-ġerâwi
9. şlâş waṭaneh wa-rmejḥ mamnow°
min ḥarr zarben mu°atṭebîn al-ahâwi
10. ḥalaf alli °ala-l-kowm ḵâtow°
jizûd elja° čatrat °alejh hal-balâwi
11. rmejḥ ḥalla şlâş w-ar-râs makṭow°
°alejh rwejlâten jizižžûn al-ṛanâwi.

1. Tidings reached us by camels with muscular shoulders,
War tidings piercing our entrails.
2. 'Sisters of Ref'a' [they shouted], and all obeyed at once,
To take vengeance on the leader for their wounded
3. With the spear blade that cuts through flanks and ribs
And carries three parts of the shaft after it.
4. The wolf from Majḵû° gladdened with a supper
Has invited eighty jackals to its remains.

5. The Âl Ğenk fled on mares of paces a fathom long,
And Šlâš alone of the whole reserve remained.
6. He who protects a lone wolf from hunger rode at him in a gallop
And with her hoofs made his steed stamp on him.
7. For the clash made both Šlâš and his mare fall to earth;
Thus a rich supper fell to the negro and servant.
8. Ah, how many men were thrown from the saddle by the fringe-adorned spear blade,
Whose heads then the hyena left lying near al-Ġerâwi!
9. While Šlâš was trampled by mares, Rmejḥ yielded himself
Because of the burning wounds [he received] from those who dealt death all around.
10. Ḥalaf, he who splits the enemy's troops, Fights all the more boldly the more numerous his opponents.
11. When Šlâš by Rmejḥ was deserted, his head was cut off,
And a few Rwala sang over him with loud voice.

The poet was Fahad eben Šbeḥ of the Rwala; the reciter, Mindil al-Ḳaṭ'i. Of the Beni Šaḥr tribe 280 warriors commanded by Šlâš eben Fâjez assailed the herds of the Zejd kin near the watering place of Majkû' and, capturing them, fled in the direction of the al-Ġerâwi wells. When a herdsman brought the news of the robbery to the Zejd camp, its male occupants instantly mounted their horses and, uttering the war cry of their kin, "Eḥwât ref'a, Ref'a's sisters!" set off in pursuit, although greatly inferior in numbers to the Beni Šaḥr. Overtaking the latter at al-Ġerâwi, they recovered the booty, killed thirty riders, and also captured seventy mares and over one hundred camels.

Verse 1. Elmen neḡâwi, it was a war report, thus an honorable one, because the Rwala and the Beni Šaḥr had declared war on each other not long before. 2. Al-âḥâwi means the wounded or killed; also blows that cause death. 3. Ku'ûb are the different joints of a bamboo spear shaft. Rešâwi is the iron ring which grips the wood where the blade is inserted. To this ring a small wreath of either horsehair or ostrich feathers is tied. The spear was thrown with such force that the blade in piercing the side and ribs was followed by three joints of the bamboo shaft. 5. The Âl Ğenk is a clan of the Druses; they were allied with the Beni Ṣaḥr. Šlâš eben Fâjez, the war leader of the Beni Ṣaḥr, with the Ğenk had to protect the removal of the booty; but the Ğenk soon deserted him, their example being followed by his own people. 6. Rîf al-ḥalâwi 'an al-ğow' means here Ḥalaf âl Iden, the commander of the Zejd. Ḥalâwi is used in poetry for an old quarrelsome wolf which roams alone. Rîf is a territory with a good pasturage and abundant crops. Aš-šera 'rîf has-sene: in aš-Šera' there is good pasture this year. In poetry rîf signifies a battle ground where a lone wolf finds plenty of food. 7. The loss of their commander disheartened even the last defenders of the herds and tents, so that both the slaves and the free servants, neither of whom are famous for their bravery, could throw themselves upon them without any fear for their lives and make their supper from the supplies abandoned by the Beni Ṣaḥr. 9. Rmejḥ eben Fâjez was a relative of Šlâš.

War Between the Rwala and the Muntifež (1905)

One Sa'dûn al-Aškar, a member of the reigning kin of the Muntifež tribe, was known both for his violent temper and stubbornness, w-čân meğabber šâheb siṭwatan. As he was the owner of a large settled territory in Irak, he was obeyed by a great number of warriors and had a flag of his own which he took with him on his raids, hoisting it over the camping grounds of the Arabs whom he had vanquished and robbed. To show that he was not afraid of revenge, he loved to remain sitting by the flag in such camps for two or three hours after getting possession of them.

Once he attacked, near Riğm 'Alejje, the camp of the Durmân and Nşejr, containing about ninety tents. After taking them he returned, victorious and without loss, to his kinsfolk. Next year Prince an-Nûri offered him his friendship, which was accepted. This gave the Arabs a feeling of security, w-âdat al-'arab je'minûn. The chief Sa'dûn al-Aškar, however, understood little of good faith but much of treachery, želîl al-emâne četîr al-ḥejâne, and paid no regard to the treaty or the friendship, w-lâ jeğzobeh al-'ahd w-aş-suḥb. His son Tâmer one day attacked the Šalân, who considered themselves friends of the Muntifež, mettaḥedîn šâheb, near the head of the Fejhân valley, about sunrise. Before the Šalân had shaken off their sleep the Muntifež were looting the tents on the edge of the camp and beginning to drive the camels away. But the prince, šujûh, with his sons, the slaves of his household, and other men recovered the herds, pursued the attackers, and defeated them so crushingly that Tâmer barely saved himself with about a hundred riders on horses and camels, w-lâ jeslam illa' tâmer hw w-ma'eh jeġi mâje zelema mâ bên hajjâl w-râ'i delûl. This brave defense naturally pleased the Rwala greatly, filling them also with a sense of security, especially as some of the Zana Muslim tribes soon moved into that region and encamped close by.

But then they learned from some merchants that the chief Eben Meġlâd had incited Sa'dûn against them. In order to subdue Eben Meġlâd, an-Nûri eben Ša'lân assembled his Rwala and made a raid on him and his tribe, the Dahâmše, who at that time were encamped between Te'es al-Ma'ejzile and the še'ib of al-Hšejbi. But in the meantime something had happened of which the Rwala had not even dreamed. When Tâmer came back with his handful of men and told of his defeat, Sa'dûn al-Aškar became furious and forthwith began to prepare a war expedition against the Rwala on a large scale, summoning all the tribes which used to help him in his wars, w-arsal 'ala' min jelumm 'alejh, as well as the Zefîr tribe and marching out to punish the Rwala. On the way he also sent couriers to Eben Meġlâd with the message:

"I am going to raid the Rwala. Get ready to join us, for Tâmer's fallen fighters must be avenged. Should any man of the Zana Muslim be amongst you, seize and fetter him to prevent him from warning Eben Ša'lân; w-elja' mâ cân 'endakom had min-ṭwâref zana muslim okzobûh w-orbotûh en lâ tšîr habr an-naḍr 'end eben ša'lân."

By the will of God there happened to be a certain Rwejli in Eben Meġlâd's reach. He was at once put in irons. The following day an-Nûri surprised Eben Meġlâd's camp, capturing thirty-five tents and several herds of camels. In the confusion following the attack the imprisoned Rwejli succeeded in making his escape, still wearing his fetters, of which he was immediately freed by his fellow tribesmen who were plundering the camp. He wished to speak to Prince an-Nûri. When brought before him, he said:

"O an-Nûri, give up all desire for booty, return from this raid, and prepare with both thy kin and thy whole tribe for defense, so that al-Aškar may not laugh at our expense; for, behold, I listened to what Eben Meġlâd was told by messengers and was therefore put in irons. But today, during your attack, my guards had regard only for themselves, ballašow bhâlhom, and I escaped."

An-Nûri's fighters were very busy just then, balšânîn. Some were still attacking, jehâweš, the defenders, others were securing their booty, ječseb. However, an-Nûri's mighty voice called them together and made them return to their kinsfolk without delay. Thus a still greater defeat was averted from Eben Meġlâd by the will of Allâh, for, if the prisoner had not informed an-Nûri of what threatened him, all the tents in the camp would have been taken and many more of his men killed.

But no sooner had an-Nûri withdrawn than a messenger came galloping to Eben Meġlâd with the order:

"By Allâh, mount, Eben Meġlâd, thou and thy warriors, your horses and camels, for Sa'dûn with his flag is approaching the Rwala!"

In obedience to the order, Eben Meġlâd and his troop instantly followed the messenger. When he told Sa'dûn about the attack which the Rwala had just delivered, Sa'dûn replied:

"Be comforted with what I shall now tell thee. Ye will get back the long-maned mares which the Rwala have taken from you, 'arâjef, and yet more booty which we shall take from them. Only pray that they will not flee when they sight us. I have sworn an oath on my neck that I must catch an-Nûri even if I should have to pursue him as far as the Haw-rân. My spear with my flag I shall stick into the ash heap of his fireplace where he makes his coffee, for the accursed an-Nûri thinks too much of himself and brags about the numbers of his warriors; w-arkoz al-bajraž 'ala ntîla delâleh bann al-mal'ûm mesta'ezz wa-mtahażwi b'itr eġmû'eh."

Sa'dûn led more than three thousand warriors, the majority of them mounted on camels. His son Tâmer accompanied him but did not dare to come near his father, who could not forget his son's recent defeat. The warriors in an attempt to appease Sa'dûn sang the following ditty, heġênî:

*Ma'na rečâben hifâje manġûbe min hijâr al-heġen fowkhen 'ejâlen tinâbe
'an bejt an-nûri jenšeden*

jetlen sa'dûn abu tâmer jā šowķ mulawleḥat ar-reden teġîna srajbet ša'âlen bibwâz al-mawzer jež'eden.

With us are camels desired by all,
 Chosen from among the best riding camels.
 On them youths full of pride are sitting,
 Who for an-Nûri's tent keep asking.
 They follow Sa'dûn, the father of Tâmer,
 The darling of her whose shirt-sleeves flutter.
 Of Ša'lân's fighters a small troop will come to us,
 And on hearing the Mausers' thunder our camels will stop.

Sa'dûn and his retinue took hunting falcons along with them, and as soon as they sighted a hare or a ḥabâra bird (bustard) they urged the falcon, jeheddûn, to pursue it and to bring back the game. Once Sa'dûn sent his falcon, tajreh, to get a hare. The falcon pecked the hare with its beak, and when the latter tried to hide, teḥawmer 'anneh, Sa'dûn said:

"Look, comrades, at that hare! It has crawled into the bush, as did Tâmer, my son, before the falcon which is an-Nûri."

Deeply ashamed, ḥaġel, on hearing such words, ġawâb, Tâmer said: "O God, bring us to the people we are seeking and let us not pass by them or allow them to hide from us! May my father then see them with his own eyes—either to overcome or to send me against them with an army still larger than this!"

When an-Nûri eben Ša'lân returned to his people he saw that the Rwala had built small camps scattered all over the country. He ordered them to gather together at once. Some days previous the Rwala had been joined by Eben Smejir and Eben Meġel with their Arabs. An-Nûri and his allies moved to the valleys of as-Swejf and al-Helâli, where owing to good rains there was abundance, beḥa rabî, that year. Of the impending attack Eben Ša'lân did not say a word in order not to alarm them unnecessarily. The next night an-Nûri and his kin slept on the new camping ground, and with the appearance of the morning star they saw and heard group after group of Arabs fleeing with both tents and herds. On inquiring for the cause of their panic they were told that an unknown enemy was attacking the tents on the southern border of the scattered camps, and as the neighboring Arabs were yet sleepy and ignorant of what was happening they sought safety, not in resistance but in flight. The rifles thundered, and shots were heard on all sides. The confusion grew. At that moment, before the sun had yet risen, Eben Ša'lân, Eben Smejŕ, and Eben Me'ġel with their slaves and warriors sprang to horse, dashing to the place where the sound of rifles and fighting could be heard. On coming near they saw a flag surrounded by a vast throng of men. It seemed as if the Rwala were about to perish, haribat žer'athom. The enemy were pressing them back by degrees, had taken one camp after another, and had pulled down the tents. The women defended their property as best they could; many had been killed, but none would run away, and all heaped abuse on their retreating husbands and brothers. When the latter finally saw that even their women were resisting bravely, they declared: "We should rather be killed today than let our women be wronged by the enemy," and then a fight ensued compared to which all that happened before was mere play.

It was past noon and the fighting still continued. The victory had as yet inclined to neither side, for each opposed the other with obstinate fury. After noon all the Zana Muslim drew together, and at about mid-afternoon in a united body they attacked the enemy. Then it was that Allâh granted victory to the Rwala. Sa'dûn made frantic efforts to stop his fleeing warriors, but in vain. The Zana Muslim broke through the enemy's line, and whoever could not flee was killed. Finally the enraged Sa'dûn, who was beating the fleeing men with his camel stick to make them face about, had to flee himself. Besides he himself, his son Tâmer, and Eben Meġlâd only about thirty camel riders and twenty on horseback escaped, tlâtîn delûl w-ašrîn hajjâl. All the rest were slain, not one being made captive. The Zana Muslim captured all the riding camels, arms, white military tents, and everything of which the enemy had robbed them during his whole expedition. Sa'dûn returned, bowed down with humiliation, would listen to no one, would not speak, and behaved like one intoxicated. He had to recognize his defeat as a just punishment, for, having been a friend, he had turned traitor and was suffering the consequences.

Songs Composed on This Occasion

1. Ġatna ġmû' al-muntifeż ħîna-l-addân bebjârżen min kill bidden talâha
2. ġawna şabâh wa-rċebow awlâd şa'lân ħammâjet al-merkab 'an alli barâha
3. aš-şubĥ ħess al-mâţeli ċar-ra'ad bân
w-rşâşaha jeşda-l-barad min semâha
4. kownen ġara mâ-żonn jeġra bel-akwân
w-aš-šejĥ nâf alli ħazar miltekâha
5. jekşer ġwâdeh let-tefâfiż nişân
bjowmen behi (sic) -š-şerdân ħallat nisâha
6. ed'an be'omr, ħawwâd al-aż'an
jâ sitr biżen mâ jekaşşef eĥbâha
7. ħall behom an-nûri ċema-l-lejt żarmân awwal ranam dîb az-żawâri raşâha
8. ċam sâbežen râhat ħafat mâ leha tmân
w-ċam şabijjen râĥ bemiltekâha
9. dîb al-ħšejbi jaġezz beh dîb fejhân
w-aż-żab'at al-'argġa tsazżem zanâha
10. jâ šejĥ jâ meċdi 'aduwweh bel-akwân
aftar bkownênen w-bel-aşkar tanâha
11. wa' nawwâf lel-ħejl al-emtellât mizbân zebn al-ħalib elja tġaddat ħtâha
12. jaċseb w-jaĥdi šowĥ majjâh al-ardân šowĥ al-ħenûf alli-d-defij ħaşâha
13. bint aš-şujûĥ w-diċrahom bed-diġar bân wa-şĥûnahom mâ żall jabtel nedâha
14. šejĥen walad šejĥen w-midbâs forsân
ċam 'azbeten ħâlat ġmû'ak warâha
15. w-ġa'al as-sa'ad bwuġûĥakom kill mîĥân bġâh al-mulûk w-ġâh bâni semâha
16. jâ šejĥ jatlâk as-salaf ħw w-al-aż'an
w-şubjân jesżûn al-'eda min tanâha
17. jâ šejĥ jâ me'ti tẗwâlât al-arsân
w-ta'ti-l-koĥûm alli tẗwâlen ħatâha
18. wa' šejjûr mâ te'raz 'ala kell diwân wa' šejjûr mâ nunşad 'anneh waš ġezâha
19. w-aĥûl ġatni min jemîn eben şa'lân
ħamra' min 'ajrât nâbi ħarâha 20. menuwwat rarîb ad-dâr elja' şâr şafĥân tafzîz rabda w-tâla'at min ramâha

15. Before your faces good fortune will bring success to all,
With help of the angels and of Him who built his heaven.
16. O chief, both warriors and clans migrating follow thee,
And the youths give the enemy that drink for which he had much craved.
17. O chief, thou giver of she-camels with long reins,
Thou givest also long-paced fearless mares.
18. Ah, [this poem] should be sung at all gatherings!
Ah, they will have to ask us how it was rewarded.
19. Then I shall say: "From Eben Ša'lân came to me
A sorrel she-camel with bulging back and enduring of gait."
20. He who dwells far from his camp, seeks, when seized by longing,
[To hasten home as fast] as an ostrich which has sighted him who fired the shot.
21. Even if I slept, the eyes' sleep, O chief, will not bring rest,
For, O chief, every eye weeps for its own sorrow!

This poem was composed by Miz'el aḥu Za'êla from the despised Šlejb tribe and recited to me by the poet. He adapted his pronunciation to that of the Rwala, whose dialect he had perfectly mastered.

Verse 1. Among the Rwala there is no morning call to prayers, but the poet refers to it just as he used words which are not colloquial. The Muntifež carry a flag on all their raids, and the members of the tribes allied with them do the same. 2. Al-Markab is sacred to all the Rwala. Should they lose it once only, should it be captured by the enemy, they would not be allowed to procure a new one, the emblem of their unity would be lost, and they would think that Allâh had deserted them. 3. Al-mâteli is a rifle constructed after the Martini model. Ješda, or ješbah: he resembles. 4. By aš-šejl nâf is meant here Prince an-Nûri, who excelled all by his bravery and prudence. 5. Tefâfiž are sharpshooters, marksmen; tefaka, a rifle. 6. Ažân are the camels which carry the tents, clothing, household goods, women, and children of a migrating clan. One of the principal tasks of a chief is to ensure safety during migration, as it is then that the tribe is in greatest danger, for then the camels are most easily frightened. The main body of the warriors ride, as a rule, at the head of the clan, while smaller troops are interspersed among the herds of camels grazing along the way. When the enemy is sighted, the main troop advances to meet them. If the enemy is stronger, they are usually scattered, thus leaving the women and the laden camels without protection. The enemy then lead away the camels and search for what is most valuable, thus uncovering what the fair women have concealed. This was prevented by an-Nûri, who remained at the side of the deserted women. 7. Lejt zarmân, an angry, irritated lion, is another poetical expression. Like a blood-thirsty wolf, dîb az-ẓawâri, did an-Nûri crush the attacking enemy, who were unable to resist him. 8. Hafat is said of a mare either utterly exhausted or with a dislocated foot which hinders her moving. 9. The fight took place between al-Hşejbi and Fejhân, therefore the wolves there were howling with joy at the feast prepared for them. A hyena is called 'arġa', lame, because it cannot run fast or for very long. 10. Afṭar bkownênen means that he breakfasted on two fights, because the Rwala with an-Nûri at their head first repulsed at Fejhân the raid made on them by Tâmer, the son of Sa'dûn, then attacked Eben Meġlâd, a protégé of Sa'dûn, near al-Êweġ northwest of Lîne, and finally defeated Sa'dûn himself in the encounters at al-Hşejbi and al-Mḥaṭa. 11. Al-hejl em-tellât are mares, which, being too exhausted to run any farther, are left behind. Al-halîb elja tġaddat ḥtâha, long-tailed mares whose pace grew slow, are mares with long tail hair and with their legs hurt in the fight; they are too slow to avoid the blows. 12. Jahdi or ja'ti: he distributes gifts. Nawwâf does not keep the booty himself but distributes it among those whom he likes. 13. Şḥûn are large trays on which meat is set before the guests. Both Prince an-Nûri and his son Nawwâf entertain guests continually; meat is always being cooked, and therefore their trays are full of fat drops resembling drops of dew. 14. The chiefs an-Nûri and Nawwâf are descended from a house which has given to the Rwala from ancient times chiefs and conquerors of riders. 15. Mîḥân signifies success, favorable result. Mulûk, for malâjika, angels. Bġâh, or b'awne: with the help, under the protection of. 17. Ḳoḥûm is a horse afraid of nothing. 18. Wa' şejjûr is a poetical term for lâ budd, absolutely certain, necessary. 19. Nâbi qarâha is a fat camel whose hump resembles a bulging knoll, a cone. 20. The poet longs for a present so that he can return to his Şlejbi soon. Tafzîz rabda is the fastest gait of an ostrich, during which it flaps its wings. The bird runs in this manner when it sights a marksman, while the shot itself does not alarm it much. 21. Sleep will not bring rest to the poet, for even then he cannot forget his troubles and yearnings.

1. Jâ tâmer wa' ḥazzak al-maḵrûn
aṭlob 'asa tesdad abwâbah
2. ġitûna swât ad-deba' tes'ûn
wa-ġmû'akom rabbi aḥṭa' bah
3. bellejtûna 'asa teblûn
teblûn nâsen 'ala rḵâbah
4. eḥwât šîta dwa-l-maġnûn
sawwaw 'ala-l-ḥejl zaḇzâba
5. alli-nḍebah w-alli maṭ'ûn
ḥakk aṣ-ṣba' rejir šijâba
6. jâ-l-ḵarm mâ-zonn jin'addûn
ḥasabt w-zaḵje'et ana ḥsâba
7. w-lâ zenneti min ba'ad jâtûn
min aṭ-ṭam'a nafeshom ṭâba.

1. O Tâmer, ah, may the fate bound up with thee not change!
I pray that its gates may remain closed!
2. Ye came upon us like wingless locusts crawling over each
But your troops were followed by my Lord. [other,
3. Ye desired to crush us, now yourselves are crushed.
Ye are the people whose necks have been crushed.
4. With the battle cry "Sisters of Šîta," which heals the crazed,
They enveloped the cavalry in dust clouds.
5. How many there fell and how many were wounded
Of youths alone, without counting the gray-haired!
6. O thou hero, I doubt that they could be counted;
I counted, but I erred in the number,
7. And think not that they will come again;
Thus of greed for booty their soul was cured.

The poet was Selîm, a slave of the sons of an-Nûri's brother Muḥammad; the reciter, Selîm himself.

Verse 1. Ḥazz is the fate, maḵrûn, bound up with Tâmer. As long as its gates remain closed, it will not change. Fate brought Tâmer great misfortune — and will bring more misfortune should he not mend his ways. 2. Deba' are young locusts, still wingless. They crawl rapidly on and over each other's backs, tes'ûn. Rabbi aḥṭa' bah: Allâh, the protector of an-Nûri, followed Tâmer's troop in order to humble it. 3. Rḵâb means men. 4. The battle cry of the Nâjef kin is: "Ehwât šita ana-ben nâjef, Sisters of Šita, I am Eben Nâjef." The sisters of Šita who should not be afraid are herds of camels. Zabzâba are clouds of dust whirled up during a fierce cavalry fight.

1. Sa'dûn jâ maḥraḳ aš-šejbe
hint al-ahad w-al-makâtibi
2. w-eben meġlâd ṣaḥar 'ejbeh
aḥad ar-rada' w-waḥḥar at-ṭîbi
3. šârat 'alejhom elja-l-rejbe
alfên dabḥen w-šâwîbi
4. ma' waġeh rab'en lahom hejbe
merkâzahom ješba' ad-dîbi
5. min al-basra limaṣr li'atejbe
ṣannû beha jâ-hal aš-šîbi.

1. O Sa'dûn, may thy gray hair burn,
Thou hast betrayed both treaty and letters.
2. Eben Meġlâd, whose shame is seen plainly,
Has taken up with villainy and abandoned honesty.
3. They met with defeat at sunset.
Two thousand of their slain and wounded
4. Remained lying before the face of a horror-stricken troop.
Their galloping horses will satiate wolves.
5. From al-Basra to Egypt and the land of the 'Atejbe
Sing of this defeat, ye, who drive old camels.

Prince an-Nûri was both the poet and reciter.

Verse 1. Maḥraḳ aš-šejbe: Sa'dûn, together with his gray hair, is committed to the fires of hell. 3. Šârat 'alejhom šârat, it befell them. "It befell," is said when a tribe has been defeated; the word al-časra, a defeat, is understood. 5. The 'Atejbe camp east of al-Medîna and Mecca. Ahl aš-šîb are the merchants and drovers who buy up old fat camels in inner Arabia, selling them afterwards in Egypt. As they travel but slowly and meet with various tribes and settlers on their way, they are expected to spread Sa'dûn's disgrace everywhere.

1. Jâ bint šowkeč wara' mâ bân
jemza' beh an-nisr w-ad-dîbi
2. al-ḥejl lammaw bah ša'lân
w-al-ğejš râden ġenâdîbi

3. min al-kejsûma ila' fejhân
mitl al-ḥaṣab bel-ʿarâżîbî
 4. jâ bint al-mḥazzab al-awġân
ʿala-l-razî tešʿaṭ al-ġîbî.

1. O daughter of mine, thy lover is behind, not to be seen;
 A wolf and vulture are tearing his flesh.
2. Horses were gathered by the Šaʿlân kin,
 And the riding camels like locusts follow each other.
3. From al-Kejsûma as far as Fejhân
 [The fallen lie] on each other like the crosspieces in a leather bucket.
4. O daughter, thou who paintest thy cheeks,
 For thy beloved, thou wilt tear the dress on thy breast!

The poet and reciter was the slave Selîm. The victorious troop led by Prince an-Nûri returns with the booty taken from Saʿdûn, the prince of the Muntifež. The women and girls stand in the tent corners, looking through the gaps for their sweet-hearts.

Verse 2. All the horses captured by the slaves or servants go to their master, not to them; therefore the members of the Šaʿlân family collected and led them. The riding camels belong to those who capture them, even to the slaves and servants; they, however, let their masters keep them in return for payment. 3. Al-Kejsûma is a well. 4. The daughter spoken of was the wife of a fallen hero, because a wife alone is allowed as a sign of her sorrow to blacken her face with ashes and dust or to tear open the clasp of her dress below the throat.

1. Târ ad-daḥen w-ettaḥa-l-ḥawâf
elja' mâ-ş-şʿab şâr muṭwâʿî
 2. al-ḥorr al-ḩaṭâwî abu nawwâf
jâ muʿašši ad-dîb elja' ġâʿî.

1. Up floated the rifle smoke, and into hiding went the coward, Until, at last, the rebellious became obedient.
2. The falcon hunting ḩaṭaʿ birds, he is the father of Nawwâf,
 Oh, he who prepares supper for a wolf which hungers!

Of this poem Selîm also was both poet and reciter.

Saʿdûn rāzî ʿala' tâmer ʿokb az-zaʿal šâf beʿajûneh

*min kabl w-hw bel-ʿaṣa jāmer
w-al-jowm ʿajjaw jatī-ūneh nahaġ ʿazīzen w-ġâ dāmer
jâ razwat aš-šejh mal-ūne.*

Saʿdūn is again on good terms with Tāmer,
For, his anger once passed, he looked into his eyes.
At first he commanded even the rebels,
And today they have ceased to obey him.
As one possessing power he set out on his journey,
but, humbled, he came back.
Oh, that accursed raid against the chief!

The poet and reciter: Selīm. After Tāmer's defeat some tribes deserted Saʿdūn, but he intimidated them by force. Then, when he too was defeated, all rebelled against him. The raid against the chief an-Nūri was afterwards execrated by Saʿdūn.

War Between the Rwala and Eben Meġlād

Having defeated Saʿdūn, Eben Šaʿlān set out on a raid against Eben Meġlād, who at that time was camping at al-Mloṣi, and took sixty tents and many camel herds from him. Eben Meġlād then sued for peace, but to this Eben Šaʿlān was opposed, lâ jabri-š-sulh, well knowing that it was mainly he who had incited Saʿdūn against him, because he had shown so much greed for the herds, tents, and supplies of the Rwala. It was then that Jūsef eben Mġejd of the ʿAbdelle clan, who accompanied Eben Šaʿlān on his raid, composed the following poem:

1. *Jâ râčeben min fowk tisʿat alâf haddâb
maʿ rabʿen ʿenda-l-ḥasan w-al-mesâʿid*
2. mekîzâhen ʿan ḥerwat al-rošš w-adbâb beṣwêr mišfâr al-abkâr as-serâhîġ
3. *mâ fowkâhen rejṛ ašhab al-meleḥ bedbâb
w-daḵḵ al-aġam w-mdeḻaḵât al-bwâlid*
4. jelfen al-malʿûn aš-šalâhîd čenhâb čenhâb malʿûn aš-šalaʿ w-aš-šalâhîd
5. *kil hejlen twallat hejlakom ġabʿ al-adnâb
šaṭṭ al-frât w-ʿânekeḥ sejl ʿerbîd*

6. ašûf hejl šujûhekom tel'eb al'âb
'an surbet ar-ribšân hom w-al-ḥamâmîd
 7. abu-d-dhûr mu'awwed jilhab alhâb
beš'ûf rammâj al-malâbîs mar'îd
 8. wa' saṭṭak žwij al-ḥejl saṭṭat ḥalablâb
ḥallak teẓhar min zemâjelk ferrîd
 9. wa' min zâk less ḥarâbna šârebeh šâb
jûžef ġwâdeh min wara-z-zilm w-ja'îd.
1. O thou who ridest a trotting [she-camel] with a troop of nine thousand!
Their camels near the Ḥasan and Mesâ'îd
 2. In midsummer dwell, to be protected from disease of the bowels and from flies,
While at Šwêr in autumn thou wilt find camels young and well fed.
 3. The camels [of that troop] bear no load but gunpowder in horns,
Sabers of Persian make, and spears with steel blades.
 4. They will reach the accursed Ćenhâb kin,
The Ćenhâb, whose prayers and kin alike be cursed.
 5. Say to them: "Your riders on young mares with clipped tails were driven back by the cavalry
From the river Euphrates as far as the creek of 'Erbîd."
 6. I seem to see your chiefs' horses as they played Before the Ribšân and Ḥamâmîd troop.
 7. [The Rwala emblem] Âbu-d-Dhûr is accustomed to throwing of flames
With the help of the thunderer, defeating men clad in armor.
 8. Ah, that true man of strength did thoroughly cuff thy face
And left thee alone of all the pack camels.
 9. Ah, of one who has tasted the tickling of our spears
the moustache will grow gray,
He will stop his horse and will return home behind
the back of other men

The reciter was 'Awde al-Kwêḥbi. 1. Haddâb is a she-camel which trots as fast as a mare. Ḥasan and Mesâ'îd are tribes living in the lowland west and northwest of the Ḥawrân, where, as a rule, the Rwala camp from the end of June to the middle of August. 2. Šwêr is an important watering place northeast of the oasis of Škâka. Miṣfâr, fall camping grounds from the beginning of October to the middle of December. Serâhîḡ, well fed, was pronounced serâhîd. 3. Ašhab al-meleḡ, dark gray salt, means gunpowder, which in the muzzle-loader period was carried in a little fancy horn, dbâb. Daḡḡ al-aḡam, beaten by the Persians, means a Persian saber. Mdel-aḡât or mashûbât al-bwâlîd means spears, as the Rwala drag steel blades on long wooden shafts. 4. Ṣalâhîd, a poetical expression for kinsfolk and parents. Čenḡâb is an opprobrious nickname for the Ešâḡe'a. 5. The tail hair of young mares is either clipped or cut off entirely. The spring and the short creek of 'Erbîd rise near as-Samâwa. 6. The Ešâḡe'a chiefs merely pretended to urge their horses to attack. In reality they tried to keep away from the kinsfolk of Ribšân and Ḥamâmîd. 7. Abu-d-Dhûr, the ancient tribal emblem of the Rwala, here represents Prince an-Nûri and his retinue. Mar'id, thunderer, is formed from mar'ad, jemar'ad being said for jer'ad, he thunders. 8. Satṭ: he cuffed, he struck. Ḥalablâb is an onomatopoetic word for cuffs, boxes on the ears. Zemâjel are male camels which carry the supplies and tents of the chief. The Ešâḡe'a commander lost all his camels, or, as the poet puts it, of all the pack camels he alone was left, ferrîd.

POEMS OF WARS AND RAIDS

Scorn of Fallen Chief's Daughter for Kin Who Fail to Avenge Him

1. Hall al-helâl w-kamelen al-elûmi
wa-tmaḡhalat 'anna ḡamî' al-ḡačâja
2. eḡsû ḡassejtu killekom jâ-r-reḡûmi
waš 'adrakom mâ tebnaḡûn az-ḡumâja
3. ašûf 'oḡbânen 'alejkom tehûmi
tabri-l-aša minkom al-kbâr al-alâja
4. ed'aw bšedrat mâ nakaltom etlûmi
min ḡabl mâ ted'un mitl az-ḡaḡâja
5. jîščinnakom bîzen tadukḡ ar-rukûmi
entom siterhen lâ juḡhallen 'arâja
6. wa' wajlakom en čân saffahtom 'elûmi
w-allâḡ latrûḡûn killekom ḡaḡâja

7. teḥazzebû w-şîrû erġâlen efhûmi
w-al-ʿadw mâ jisla mitl al-ḥajâja
 8. waḥ howfeti jinkâl râḥaw lehûmi
ʿejâl şâlûhom biḫûr as-sebâja.

1. The new moon has appeared, the tale is told,
 And clear to us now is all their talk.
2. Begone! Ill have ye acted, O avengers,
 What excuse have ye that ye comfort not those eagerly
3. I see birds of prey circling above you, [waiting?
 Longing to have the big and fat among you for supper.
4. Cut with the sharp edge of the blade before it becomes dull,
 Before your foes make of you sacrifices for their dead.
5. Mourning over you are the fair ones, adorned with tattooing,
 For ye are their veil; they must not remain naked.
6. Ah, woe to you, if ye reject my tidings,
 By Allâh! ye all will be sacrificed for the dead.
7. Take counsel together and become prudent;
 For an enemy cannot be struck like snakes.
8. Ah, how I fear that it will be said: Our foes killed them
 And loaded their children on the backs of the captured animals.

This poem was composed by a daughter of one Heġlân of the Durmân clan. Two kins of the latter clan quarreled. One of them remained in the Rwala territory, the other under the chief Heġlân emigrated to the Šammar. An attack made on them by their kinsfolk was repulsed, but the chief Heġlân fell. The raiders were pursued but without success. Heġlân had no sons. His daughter urged her kin to revenge the slain chief and was promised that they would make a raid in retaliation, but they put it off from one day to another. Finally they assured her that the raid would be carried out with the appearance of the new moon. Yet when it appeared the avengers stayed at home. The girl then composed this poem. The reciters were ʿAwde al-Kwêḫbi and Mindîl al-Ḳaṭʿi.

Verse 2. Reḥûmi are vultures which feed only on dead bodies. 4. The Bedouins dedicated even before Mohammed's time a certain day of the year to the memory of the dead, and on this day they sacrifice for every person who has died in the past year either a she-camel or a goat. This sacrifice is called zahijje. If Heġlân's avengers do not take heart soon they will all be slain by the enemy. 8. Râhaw lehûmi has the same meaning as endabahaw, were killed.

Lament of Young Woman for Her Husband Killed in Battle

1. Wannejt jâ dahhâm tis'in wenne ma' mitlehen jowm al-halâjež heġû'i
2. ma' mitlehen jowm al-halâjež mirenne min az-zejm ješčen al-hazâjem zelû'i
3. wennet 'aġûz teshar al-lejl killeh radi lha karm al-'ejâl betû'i
4. ramla w-lâ laha ma' hal al-bejt lenne elja' ġâ twâli-l-lejl kâmat tefû'i
5. halli waladha bel-ma'âra-kalenneh saħm az-zwâri w-ašbaħen 'okob ġû'i.

1. I mourn, O Dahhâm, with ninety laments
And as many again, while all creatures rest without care,
2. And as many again, while all creatures listen,
For even my oppressed ribs complain of their evil lot.
3. I mourn, waking all night with an old woman,
Because she has lost a flower among sons, a resolute hero,
4. I mourn with a widow who has no relative left in her tent,
Who at the close of the night pitifully moans.
5. My husband, her son, on the battle field was devoured
By black and skinny beasts, their hunger stilling.

The poetess was a young woman of the Harb tribe, the reciters, Mġammad al-Ķazib and Mindil al-Ķaṭi. The young woman had lost in the battle her beloved husband, the only son of an old widowed mother, and both are mourning him.

Verse 2. In the opinion of the Bedouins any sorrow attacks the breast and contracts the ribs so that the person stricken cannot breathe freely. 3. Betû'i is a brave rider who does not shrink from the fight. 4. Lenne or lelle: surely not; these words emphasize the negative. Hal (or ahl) al-bejt here means the kin of the fallen man. The old widow had lived until then with her son; after his death she must move to her own kin. Tefû'i is said of the moaning and cries of an epileptic or a demented person.

Cowardice Reproached

1. Al-wağd wağdi lahel lebde
alli 'ala-l-ğam' dellâke
2. al-herğ mâ 'âd leh zebde
low çatterowh kill mellâke
3. eben şabbâh habed hebde
w-sa'dûn mâ tallak enjâkeh.

1. I pity, I pity the people of Lubde,

Who with courage throw themselves on the enemy.

2. Butter cannot be had for mere talk;

The more they spread the tidings, the more they all lie.

3. Eben Şabbâh ran till his head shook, [camels!

And Sa'dûn! Oh, how he dismissed the captured she-

Eben Şabbâh, the lord of al-Kwejt, together with Sa'dûn al-Aşkar, the head chief of the Muntifež, made a raid on Eben Raşîd, whose troops offered resistance. Each troop consisted of the inhabitants of the same district of Hâjel under a flag of their own. The troop of the Lubde district took to flight, thus endangering the others. But they took heart again and drove the enemy back. To excuse themselves the Lubde men then pretended to have retreated of set purpose.

Verse 2. Al-herğ mâ leh zebde, chatter without butter, signifies empty talk, gossip. He works his mouth as if churning skimmed milk but will never make butter.

Advice to a Chief

1. Jâ-bu reğâ' jâ-l-karm 'endi lakom šowr
w-eften tara-l-aşwâr muḥti w-şâjeb
2. jâ mâ ḥala-l-ma'bâr min 'enda manğûr
w-lâ takṭa' an-nahwât kûd aš-şalâjeb
3. nanḥar eben ša'lân w-al-'ezz madjûr
jâ 'ezz min dâr al-ḥara' w-al-ḥarâjeb
4. naskof min aš-šâma elja-l-herr abu zowr
marâte' aš-şidk al-abkâr al-anâjeb
5. rwejlât w-en ḥattaw bihen kill šâbûr
ṭariḥahom tağbor 'alejh an-naşâjeb
6. awlâd 'abdallâh ma' awlâd maşhûr
merwîn ḥadd muşabbahât al-keżâjeb
7. w-en ġaw hal al-belha da'âtîr w-da'tûr
bejmânahom tamroğ 'ala rejir tâjeb.

1. O Abu Reġa', I have advice for you,
But, remember, advice sometimes misses, sometimes reaches its aim.
2. How sweet to ford the Euphrates at Maṅġûr!
And yet a strong neck only will destroy firm plans.
3. We shall go to Eben Ša'lân to find power there, Oh, that power in a camp from which both friendship and wars arise!
4. Our tents we shall pitch from aš-Šâma to al-Herr abu Zowr
On pastures for young camels with wide mouths and humps.
5. Such the Rwala are who, when they dig the whole spur into the flanks of their mares,
Throw everyone from his saddle and send him to his fate.
6. The sons of 'Abdallâh with the sons of Mašhûr Give the cheeks of their daggers with their shining blades [blood] to drink,
7. And if the Swâlme shall come, troop after troop,
In their right hands [weapons will flash] robbing a horse of its rider without quarter.

The poet was Sâġer ar-Rafadi; the reciters, Prince an-Nûri and Hmâr abu 'Awwâd. The chief Abu Reġa' and his clan, as-Selġa, having quarreled with the head chief Eben Haddâl, prepared for war. Eben Haddâl camped at that time on the left bank of the Euphrates, Abu Reġa' on the right. When the latter tried to ford the river at Maṅġûr, he was warned against the unequal contest and advised to find allies first, as one of whom Eben Ša'lân was recommended. Abu Reġa' took the advice and emigrated with his people to the Rwala, then camping in the inner desert.

Verse 1. Muġti w-šâjeb, missing and reaching, are expressions used in hunting and shooting at a target. 3. Al-ġara' means charity, generosity, friendship. 5. Rwejlât is used instead of Rwala in both a flattering and a contemptuous sense. 6. Awlâd 'Abdallâh and Awlâd Mašhûr are members of the reigning kin. Muṣabbeġât al-kežâjeb are the blades and handles of daggers variously ornamented with silver, gold, and precious stones. 7. Hal al-belha means the Swâlme, whose war cry is: "Ĥajjâl al-belha, the rider protecting the Belha!" as they call their camel herds. Da'âtîr w-da'tûr are the different troops as they follow each other from the various camps to the battle ground. Tamroğ is said of a riderless mare running about the battle field. ‘Ala rej̄r tâjeb is a fight in which no quarter is given, lâ jamna’.

ANECDOTES OF WARS AND RAIDS

Trâd al-Ârefa with forty men mounted on riding camels undertook from al-Hazîm a raid against the Şkûr. After passing through ar-Rwêşdât they met some Şlej̄b, from whom they learned that a Şkûr detachment was encamped with Bender eben Haddâl at the foot of the al-Bişri mountains. On coming near the place they saw herds of camels in the distance and therefore sent scouts on camels, sbûr, ahead to ascertain if there were camps near the herds and, if so, their number. The sbûr returned with the report that they had found no camp in the whole neighborhood and the herds seemed to be spending the night all alone, ‘azîb. After sunset the raiders prepared to attack. Thirty warriors mounted on fifteen camels threw themselves on the resting herds, while the other riding camels remained with Trâd and ten men in reserve, şâbûr. On reaching the herds fifteen dismounted, began to untie fetters on the left forelegs of the kneeling camels, and in a little while had collected a group of about thirty animals. But at that moment the herdsmen, waking up, raised the alarm and, quickly blowing up the red hot coals of their fires which had been covered for the night, they ignited large handfuls of şîh which they threw burning among the herds. The frightened animals shied, and those already unfettered began to run away, carrying the enemy's riding camels along with them. Moreover, the cries and the flaring up of the fires alarmed the camp hidden in a neighboring gully, from where a troop of rescuers arrived on the scene, surrounding the place of the attack in a large circle. The attackers tried to hide but were discovered after sunrise; those who resisted were slain, three were pardoned, and nine succeeded in making their escape, twallahow, to the Şkûr camp, where they asked the women and children for protection and thus saved their lives. These nine lost all their weapons, while the three who were pardoned received theirs back. The leader Trâd took to flight with his whole reserve as soon as he heard the alarm cries and the shooting.

Once the Rwala camp was in the watershed of al-Ḥamâd, far al-ḥamâd, when it was learned that the Dahâmše were moving from the al-Wudijân territory to al-Ḳa'ara. As there was hostility between them at that time, the Rwala decided to attack. Providing themselves with barley for their mares and with flour, truffles, čema, dry locusts, ğerâd, and dry dates for themselves, they set out under the command of Nawwâf. Having traversed the upper part of aṣ-Ṣwâb, after the fifth night they sent out scouts, who succeeded in capturing three men traveling on donkeys, kzebaw zilm 'ala lhom ḥmâr. Having obtained from them the welcome information of the location of the Dahâmše camp, they hastened towards it as soon as the moon rose; but the enemy had left, having resumed their march in the meanwhile. When the Rwala followed their tracks, nakzob atarhom, they found them in the afternoon building a new camp; but the raiders decided to rest till the morning star, niğmet aṣ-ṣubeḥ, made its appearance. Then they delivered their attack, ṣabbahnâhom, and, having captured the enemy's camels, horses, tents, and various utensils, began their return march. In the afternoon clouds of dust suddenly rose behind them, whirled up by the troops sent from the other Dahâmše camps to help their attacked brothers; arriving too late to be of any use, they had gone in pursuit of the raiders. But the Rwala instantly threw themselves between their booty and the pursuers, killed two men and two mares, and compelled the Dahâmše to retreat. After three nights they brought their whole booty home.

The Şkûr clan of the 'Amârât had a stud horse, so famous throughout the country that even the Rwala had their best mares covered by him. But when war broke out between them the Rwala dared not bring their mares there as formerly. One of the young chiefs of the latter regretted that he did not know where to take his mare. Mindîl al-Ḳaṭ'i, who happened to be present in his tent, said that, as there was no better stallion in the world than the one owned by the Şkûr, he should lead the mare to him, offering to do so himself for a consideration.

The chief laughed, claiming that it was quite impossible. "Promise me the first filly the mare bears, and I will have her covered by that stallion in thy presence!"

"Thou shalt get the first filly, if thou dost as thou sayest."

"Who guarantees that thou wilt fulfill thy promise?"

"So-and-So will guarantee."

"We guarantee."

Mindil then rose, saddled his camel and rode away. Shortly afterwards he and a comrade of his set out in the direction of the Şkûr camp, bent on robbery. Coming near the camp where the stud horse was kept, they first hid in a gully. Leaving his comrade with the she-camels, Mindil crawled to the camp alone. He had arranged with the comrade that he was to stay in the gully till the next evening and to start for home in case he, Mindil, should not have returned by that time. He reached the camp when the dew had passed. At some distance from the camp he saw the tent where, as a rule, the stud horse was kept. The animal was tied up in the shade under the tent; three slaves charged with the care of him were lying not far off. As the camp was situated beside a large watering place, Mindil thought it well to wait until they either led the horse to the water or watered him in the tent. Shortly before noon he saw one of the slaves saddle the animal, while another unlocked his fetters and laid them down in the tent. One slave then jumped in the saddle and rode to the water, the other two walking beside him. At the watering place hundreds of camels were crowding, all impatient to drink. This was Mindil's opportunity. Pushing his way among the dense mass, he reached, unobserved, the place where the slaves were watering their charge, leaped at them, revolver in hand, shot the slave from the saddle, with another shot felled the one holding the bridle, jumped in the saddle himself, and dashed into the desert. The camels grazing near by protected him against shots that might have been fired after him, and as soon as he was out of range he turned into a deep gully, changed his course, reached before long a stony plain, and, crossing this to the opposite side of the Şkûr camp, hid between two crags. When it grew dark, he started for home, arriving there without any mishap. Having watered and fed the stud horse, he put on better clothes, mounted his camel, and brought the horse to the chief, from whom he received twenty she-camels in exchange. A half of them went to Mindil's comrade in the venture, but he himself had also the filly two years later, as originally agreed.

Mindil al-Ḳaṭi had as neighbor, kaṣîr, a Šammari, the father of a boy about sixteen years old. Once, when going on a private raid to the Ḥwêtât territory, Mindil took the boy with him. On reaching the Ḥwêtât's herds, the youngster was sent ahead as a spy, but, being incautious, he was caught by the herdsmen and led into the camp. Some Šarârât, who happened to be there, recognized him at once, and the Ḥwêtât thus learned that his father was camping with the Rwala, with whom they were then at war. When the boy refused to answer their questions, they bound his legs with a chain used in fettering horses and, tying his hands also, they laid him down in a tent of one of the chief's slaves. After waiting for the boy's return a long time, Mindil guessed that he had met with some mishap and, hiding both the camels he came on, crawled cautiously towards the herdsmen and arrived just in time to see them lead their captive to the camp. As the camp was located in a rocky territory, he was able to hide in a crevice, from where he could observe the tent occupied by the chief. Next day Mindil saw two slaves dragging the boy, still in chains, into a tent close to the hillside where he was hiding. A young bay mare with her legs fettered was standing in front of the tent. Towards noon a young female slave appeared, unlocked the mare's fetters and was about to lead her to the watering place; she entered the tent for a moment, evidently to get a bowl and the bucket. That very instant Mindil leapt down from the hillside, picked up the boy, and, mounting the saddled mare, broke the rein which held her to the tent and disappeared among the crags. The women in the tent shrieked in alarm, but, as some of the men were having their midday sleep and others were busy at the watering place, it was some time before they could start in pursuit of the fugitive. Mindil cunningly rode in the direction of the pastures, where the herds were guarded by men on horseback, and thus obliterated the tracks of his mare. On reaching a strip covered with rough gravel he changed his course, found the place where his she-camels and both his and the boy's rifles were hidden, and there he stopped. Breaking the boy's fetters he climbed with him to a crag where they hid behind a pile of stones and waited for the pursuers. But not a single one appeared, as they had failed to find their tracks; thus Mindil was able to return home that evening, bringing a young mare as his booty.

STORIES OF WARS AND RAIDS TOLD BY BLEJHÂN
EBEN ZERI

Blejhân eben Zeri of the Âl Meşreb kin of the al-Kmuşa division of the Sba'a tribe related the following stories:

"The warriors of the Kmuşa, commanded by Fejâz âl Meşreb, of the 'Ebede division, who were led by Turki eben Wâjel, of the Fed'ân tribe, at whose head was Ğedû' al-Karah, of the Šammar tribe in Mesopotamia under the chief Šâmân al-Ĥajjât, and of the 'Ažâžre kin, who were led by Zejd eben Ĥrejmis, went on a raid together. They numbered over four hundred and were mounted partly on the horses, partly on the camels, mâ bên hejl w-al-ğejš. They intended to attack the tribes and clans called Ahl aş-Šemâl. I rode with them. We started our march, tawwarna, from the valley of al-Murabba'a and spent the night, emraĥna, near aş-Šazri in the valley of al-Mijâh. Another march brought us to the castle of Burku', and, although we examined, ħammejna, its neighborhood thoroughly, we found nobody and therefore turned south keeping between the black and white country, w-šâr darbna 'ala ĥadd swâd min bejâz, and entered, nakett, the valley of Nâ'em, which comes from Šamat al-Wâdi. In the lowland of ar-Rašrâšijje we made our supper. The next morning we mounted our animals again and rode up, sanadna, the še'ib of al-Ĥšâjde. When the day declined, jowmen ġâ tâlût an-nahâr, Te'es al-Ĥadani, Ğedû' al-Karah, and Bargas eben Wâjel advanced to spy out the country. They returned at night with four camels big with young, ma'âššir. As we learned sometime afterwards, these animals had run away from captured herds which raiders of the 'Amârât tribe were driving before them. The leaders of our raiding party, al-'oĥada, wanted to have the camels slaughtered for the use of the warriors, but the scouts declared:

'May Allâh seize you! Whoever brings anything, much or little, he brings it for himself, not for you. Jâĥedkom allâh alli ġâjeb šaj'en (sic) ĉetîren walla' ĥalîlen jâĥodeh leh.' The she-camels thus remained their property and were driven along with us in the morning. It was then that Ğedû' al-Karah said:

'Look at these four pregnant she-camels, ħal-'ašâjer! Think ye not that their owners will make search for them? Send out a few riders to seek their owners, ħajjâlaten jetašajjeĥawn aħalhen.'

"Then Čenwân al-Karah and Bargas eben Wâjel rode up a high hill and from there sighted a rider on a whitish camel, râ'i delûlen zerka, with a water bag, following the tracks of the camels. Dashing down and unsaddling him, they put his camel with the four already captured. On we marched looking for Arabs, w-mašijna netaṭalle lil-ʿarab, but it was not until the following noon that we saw the first group of the migrating Ahl aš-Šemâl. Some were just pitching their tents and others were still on the march, awwal al-meẓâhîr nâzele w-tâlîhom mâ nazal, so that it was quite easy for us to take not only their tents but also their supplies and whole outfit, bujût w-azwâd w-ḥelwât. But we were soon overtaken by their protecting troop, numbering about thirty men on horseback. They were led by a warrior seated on a bay, who shouted at us:

'A rider trusting in the Merciful trembles with a longing for you; ye shall know him, ye infamous thieves! Where are your commanders? Ḥajjâl ar-raḥmân sakrân ḥajjâlen ta're-fâneḥ al-bowḵân sowdân al-waġīḥ wên 'oḵadakom.'

"He was answered by Ğedû: 'What is that, thou riff-raff? Are we not the sons of 'Obejd? We take from you because we have declared war on you, 'ala waẓaḥ an-neḵa' âḥdînkom.'

"Then we offered resistance and assailed, neḵarmet, both the riders on the horses and on the camels, who also had come up with us in the meantime. Ğedû struck the warrior who was mounted on the bay mare such a blow with his spear that he threw him out of the saddle. The bay started to run away with Ğedû in hot pursuit. It seemed as if the enemy were on the point of rescuing the animal, but at that moment Eben Wâjel appeared on the scene and captured her himself. Ğedû later laid claim to her, and after some dispute the matter was put before a judge, 'ârefa, who decided that she belonged to Ğedû but that he must give her first filly to Eben Wâjel and a she-camel besides. We killed many of the enemy warriors on that expedition and captured not only the horses of the fallen, ḥejl al-ḵara'a, but their grazing herds as well, aḥadna al-ḥalâl min al-fela', and then started back home by the same route. Near Ḥabra-š-Šlubijje we divided our booty, every one then going with his share to his kin, w-killen aḥad časmeh w-naḥar ahleh. We arrived there without any mishap to our booty, menâčîf. Our kinsfolk were not camping at al-Murabba'a any longer, but at al-Bišri."

"Once we camped with the Btejnât clan between as-Şazri and the Radîr at-Tejr. It was in winter time. One night it was snowing, lejlet at-telğ, and in that very night we were attacked by Eben Hanğar of the Flete kin, al-Freğe clan, Rwala tribe, who, taking our camels, w-aḥad 'alejna debeş, disappeared under the cover of darkness, rada taht al-lejl. In the morning I, that is Blejhân, followed their tracks, w-tâni-l-jowm inni jâ blejhân kaşsejt atarhom, finding such unmistakable traces of them that I could trail them like a guide who knows the desert as well as the kaṭa' birds, delîl kaṭâwi. When we asked help of the chief Eben Merşed in a neighboring camp, he joined us in the pursuit of the raiders, whom we found near as-Sîb, where they were just dividing their booty. Concealing our camels in a gully, I, that is Blejhân, went to them and asked:

'Who are ye, ye riders on camels?'

'They replied: 'We are the men commanded by Eben Hanğar, and these she-camels we took from the Fed'ân.'

'And where did ye encounter them? wên kuntom'alejhom.'

'At ad-Defâjen, yesterday morning. And who are thy comrades?'

'They are the warriors commanded by Eben Meğel.' In the meantime my comrades had surrounded the raiders, and Eben Merşed showed himself to them, crying:

'Oh, woe, what news is this that makes me tremble and grow angry? Ye, our friends, and ye attack our Arabs at night and take their camels? Such are not the ways of a trusted friend, mâ tağri 'ala-s-şiddîž.' We then took not only all our camels from them but their own, too, and, returned home with them."

"On another occasion we camped between al-Rurâb and at-Tinf. Side by side with us were the camps of Şaḩr and Fejâz âl Meşreb, of the Ab-as-Snûn kin of the Hraşa clan of the Fed'ân tribe, and of Eben Hdejb of the 'Ebede division of the as-Sba'a tribe. The chiefs had much whispering among themselves for a few days, and, when they had finished, tenâğow aš-şujûh bēnhom w-jowmen ḩalaşow min ḩal-manğwi, they announced to us:

'Behold a raid! He who has no comrade with a pack camel, let him seek one; tarâkom razw w-illi mâ 'endeh zammâl jêdawwer leh zammâl.'

"A pack camel should be an animal of some strength to be able to carry water and food for both itself and two riders. A man owning a horse usually pays to a comrade with a camel of that kind ten meğîdijjât [$9.00] or a grown goat, or the owner of the pack camel declares, jefenn râ'i-z-zammâl fen:

'I want an equal part of thy booty and do not care whether it be much or little, inni šerîč billi tgîb četîren willa' želîlen.'

"The raid was directed against the kinsfolk of Eben Mezjed of the al-Ĥsene tribe and against the as-Sa'ad clan of the 'Umûr tribe, who we learned were encamped in al-Ġwejf. When we were marching on the third day, we sighted a small fire at night, ṭala'na-n-nîre bil-lejl, between the south and the west. This moved Şaḡr âl Meşreb to say:

'Who will find out something about the Arabs of that fire? jâ min jehberhom jâ min jenoşshom.'

"Everyone thought that somebody should go there so that we could know whether they were the Arabs we were seeking or not. But as a venture of this kind is very dangerous, every commander must fix the special reward the spy is to get. Kâlow al-mwâjge bhâda wâhed jeğîhom bal ḥaṭṭû leh 'ala kill 'ažîd medle ja'ni ṭalbe. When this had been done by each commander, one of the warriors started on the dangerous trip. Putting on a cloak of gazelle skins such as is worn by the Şlejb, he rode in the direction of the fire. When near it, he made his she-camel kneel on a flat-topped height, nawwah delûleh bhâk al-matne al-'âlja, and approached them on foot, naḥarhom zelema. Walking slowly he passed from one tent to another, w-lawwad 'ala hâk al-bejt 'ala hâk al-bejt, finally saluting a woman with the words:

'May God increase thy strength, O girl! kawweč jâ bint.'

'Welcome to thee, hungry one. May God preserve thee! Jâ hala marḥaba bil-ḥwi jâ-llâh ḥajjeh.'

"Because of the cloak he wore the woman took him for a hungry Şlubi. Then he said: 'God is oppressing me, ana b'e-dâb allâh. My little donkeys were tired, so I left them with my kin in that hollow yonder and came to see who these Arabs were; hmejrâti tlajješen ahli hallejthom bihal-ḥerr žebâlkom w-ğîtkom ašûf minhom hal-'arab. I shall return and bring my relatives to one of the chiefs here, ağîb ahli 'ala-ḥad haš-şujûh.'

"The woman told him willingly: 'These are the 'Abîd of the Ĥsene, those are the Sa'ad of the 'Umûr, and those over there the Fwâ're.'

"This satisfied the man, who said: 'Oh, may God prolong their lives! They are the very people I am looking for, čâjen udawwerhom. Now I can go back at once and bring my people.'

"After a while he asked: 'Are ye going to migrate tomorrow or shall ye stay here? bâčer entom rahîl willa mžîmîn.'

'Yes, we shall migrate, rahîl.'

"Returning to his comrades, rab'eh, he reported, 'allemhom, what he had learned. But the woman also related to her neighbors, 'allamat ekšaraha:'

'A Šlubi came to me just now. He wanted to know all about the Arabs here and then left to bring his folk.' When the other women told their husbands about it, all tried to find the pretended Šlubi, w-ṭahammašû aš-šlubi jedawwerûn 'alejh, but, when he could not be seen anywhere, they became suspicious:

'That man surely was a spy of a raiding troop, hâda nu-dejse razw.' Some then left the camp that very night, taking their tents and flocks with them; others again prepared both for flight and defense.

"When the morning star appeared we sighted their migrating pack camels, attacked them, and took everything they had. Nejtûl from whom thou, O Mûsa, hast bought the greyhound Kattâf, captured a yellowish she-camel, rahûlen šafra, laden with linen trousers full of tobacco, a saddle bag filled with coffee, a wooden mortar, niğr hašab, and a large sack of dry cheese, kišk. On our side, that is to say of the warriors who took part in the raid, both brothers Âl Snûne who commanded the Fed'ân warriors were killed. After some obstinate fighting we secured the whole booty and I, Blejhân, got five sheep. Returning to our old camping ground, I found it deserted. Some traveler, ṭâreš, of the Dwâm kin of the 'Ebede, had told our relatives of a good pasture by the as-Sultâni road, and thither they had gone."

"Fejâz âl Meşreb promised to care for my sheep, and I started on a new raid. There were twelve of us on six camels with Čâseb eben 'Omejm of the Sba'a as commander. Our plan was to slip through towards the Rwala, 'ajjarna lema-r-rwala, who were then camping between Rîrân al-Banât, al-Mrejir, and Sâk al-Herr. We drank and also watered our camels at a mšâš in the hillocks, behind which the settlements of al-Krej-jât [Dûmat al-Ġandalijje and the other oases in the al-Ġûba basin] were hidden; next we stopped at Umm Tarfa, and then we went up through a valley unknown to me in a south-westerly direction. There we sighted some people with four riding camels, ṭala'na hal arba' račâjeb. Before they noticed us we made our she-camels kneel and waited for them. They were riding at a fast gait through the valley where we were hidden. When they came within shooting distance, we leapt at them, fa'na 'alêhom ja'ni rkazna 'alejhom, and threw them out of the saddles, ṭarahnâhom. But as it appeared, they were not our enemies, therefore we could take nothing from them, and, as they had nothing to eat, we gave them some dates. They turned east then, where they disappeared, lemâ haffow ja'ni ab'adow. West of Sidd al-Herr we found some Arabs. Lying down on the opposite side we sent out a spy to have a look at them, naddasna 'alejhom. He was a man from the Škûr clan. After a while he returned with the report that they belonged to the Ğmejsât kin of the Dahâmše whose chief was Eben Meglâd. As we lived in friendship with them we turned to the west, avoiding a raiding troop of the Šarârât who were driving, at some distance from them, flocks of sheep and goats as well as of camels which they had taken from some kin of the 'Amârât, who were on the way from the east to the inner desert, jowm wağhom mušarrez bawwal al-wakt. We played with these little friends [Šarârât] of ours for a while and took a few small flocks away from them. Roasting a goat and a sheep, we hid the rest in a little gully south of al-Ġûba under the guard of four camel riders. Near Rġûm Miğwel we escaped, našalna, from the Rwala, who were just migrating in small groups to al-Mrejr and aš-Šwejhet. There was abundance in the desert then and plenty of water everywhere. In such times brother does not long for brother, w-ad-dinja rabî mâ waddak aḥûk jeṭobb 'alejk. At once we observed on our right a large herd of camels. We went as near to it as we dared and moved parallel with it, našdarhen. I said:

'By Allâh himself! This herd must have been bought by an 'Akejli.' But no sooner did its guards see us than they cried for help, afza'ow 'alejna; we gulped down the anxiety which took hold of us, ğara'na al-ḥamm alli ma'ana, fled, naḥašna, and kept on fleeing for a long time, w-aḥadna waket w-ḥenna menḥâšîn. When we reached the head of the Ab-al-Kûr valley and saw nobody there, we thought we were at last safe but were sadly mistaken. Suddenly we were confronted by the sons of the Ršûm, who overtook us on their fast mares and bade us yield, with the words:

‘O ye camel riders, by Eben Rašem!’

‘Our answer was: ‘Faith, we are of the ‘Amârât, zâd henna-l-‘amârât.’

‘Then they said: ‘May God grant long life to you! If that is true, ye will ride to us with full honors. Hajjâkom elja‘ cân elhaḳow ‘ala šîme w-ḥašîme.’

‘And we replied: ‘O Eben Rašem, ye camp too far from here, and we do not want either to return or to turn aside from our course.’

‘Then one shouted: ‘Ye are enemies. Ye are no ‘Amârât’ and began to shoot at us. They had two rifles, we had three. I, that is Blejhân, attacked with my spear one of the enemy, who also had only a spear. He was about to stab at me, but missed; naṭaḥ w-ẓarabni biš-šalfa w-aḥṭâni. I knocked him from his mare and captured her. One of my comrades unsaddled another enemy, not forgetting to take his mare. In the beginning of the melée our pursuers took two riding camels from us, but as God gave us victory we recaptured them, and the enemy had to retire to their people. We reached by a roundabout way our comrades who were hiding south of Ġâwa, traversed all of al-Ḥamâd, and did not return to our camp at al-Ḥwêr until a month after our departure.”

‘Šaḳr âl Meşreb once camped between aṣ-Şwâb and al-Wa‘ar. I, that is Blejhân, camped with him. One day after the dew had passed, aẓ-ẓaḥa min an-nahâr, Šaḳr went hunting and took his glasses with him. Ascending the high bank of the al-Wa‘ar valley, jowm tahâjaḳ ‘ala še‘îb al-wa‘ar ja‘ni ašraf ‘ala-l-wa‘ar, he saw in the valley below a troop of raiders. They were just dividing their camels, ja‘zel al-ġejš, in two groups: one to carry their provisions and the other to form a reserve, şâbûr. Their cavalry was to attack our herds, jarîdûn jarîrûn ‘okb al-‘azl. Approaching nearer through dead ground, w-darakhom ma‘ al-ṛaṭâr, so as not to be noticed, Šaḳr cried out:

‘Here stands, O ye camel riders, Šaḳr âl Meşreb. What are your intentions? Now you must either bargain with me for your lives or I shall order my enraged kin to mount their horses and slay you all, jaḥebb taredûn ma‘i ‘ala ‘azîzkom jaḥebb uḥalli ‘abbâs jeraččeb dijâs.’

"Then he gave the alarm cry: 'O riders on horseback, help!'"

"When the enemy's cavalry noticed that a rider on horseback was holding up their şâbûr, they gave up their attack on the herds and pursued Şaḡr instead. But before they could reach the camp they were met by galloping Arab riders, and the raiding troop was surrounded in a moment. The enemy horse riders saved themselves by flight, but the men on camels had to yield. Fejâz âl Meşreb's share of the booty, haşşeh, was three riding camels, Şaḡr's twenty-eight; and the rest of the camels, with the waterbags and supplies, the Arabs divided among themselves."

"Under the commander Barakât eben Štêwi of the Eben Merşed of the Kmuşa division, we once undertook a raid from as-Se'en and as-Su'ên, places lying southwest of Esrija. Second in command was Ğebel aş-Şekâwi of the 'Awâġi kin of the Weld Slejmân, that is of the Fed'ân. We rode on seventy she-camels against the Šammar in Neġd, that is against the Singġâra, who were reported to be camping somewhere between aş-Subeče and al-Lîfijje. Our road led past al-Kdejm, at-Ṭajjibe, as-Suḥne, and Wâdi al-Mijâh, where we drank from the Warka wells; then to al-Herijjân, where the grave of Turki eben Mhejd is located. We halted to drink at al-Rarri, proceeded farther past al-Lmât and aş-Şrejfijje, and rested south of Kârt al-Židr at the very beginning of 'Âmež. Our next night's rest was at the outlet of al-Hazîmi into al-Radaf below the wells of Umm aş-Şerîm. But our fires were noticed by some raiders of the Singġâra, as we discovered, against whom we had come out. They approached quite close and began to shoot as we lay down to sleep. Taken by surprise, the thought of everyone of us was to reach his camel and make an escape, because in the darkness we could not even see the position of the enemy nor how many there were of them. They killed six of our men, wounded many, and took thirty-seven of our she-camels.

"Loading the lightly wounded on the remaining camels, we scattered in all directions, but all aimed to reach al-Lmât. There we found the Şlejb chief Hlejs eben Mâleč, left our wounded with his people, refreshed ourselves with the Şlejb kin of Âl Fowzi by the al-Rarri well, and cut across aş-Şwej-bât to Wâdi al-Mijâh, where we also found hospitality with the Šlejb. Then we rode to al-Hejl, slept there, left again shortly before sunrise, and next noon arrived in as-Suḥne.

"In that place we learned that the Singâra had captured some herds from the 'Ebede and were sending them home under the protection of a few guards, while the rest of the raiders still remained at al-Kowm and at-Ṭajjibe, planning fresh attacks from there against the Sba'a and the Fed'ân. Having eaten, we left as-Suḥne for at-Ṭajjibe. A spy sent out by us came back with the information that the Singâra were spending their night somewhere in al-Minšâr. That gave us an idea. Agreeing among ourselves to divide our booty equally, we at once sped on our camels to this place. The Singâra we soon found; first fettering our camels, we surrounded the enemy while still asleep, but, as most of us had lost our rifles, we had to provide ourselves with heavy clubs, madârîb. The men thus armed were first to assail the enemy, while those with rifles stayed behind in order to prevent their escaping. I, that is Blejhân, swung a long club, madrûb, which put more than one of the sleepers to sleep for ever. But the Singâra were superior in numbers. They began to shoot at us, but, the night being dark and moonless, they were unable to take aim, whereas their burning fires helped us to see them well. We took five mares and about fifty camels from them and freed all the herds they had captured from the 'Ebede. On the same night we fled with the whole booty, singing merrily all the way home, which was in a camp near Esrija."

"Once we camped for a considerable length of time, kâ-tenîn, at Ġibb together with the Fed'ân. Sammiṭ eben Mhejd of the Fed'ân and our Šakr âl Meşreb arranged to make a raid together against the Rwala. There were about three hundred of us on both horses and camels. After two days out we drank from the 'Aḳlat Şwâb, wheeled about, nenḳez, towards the grave of Turki eben Mhejd, rode up the valley of al-Heri abu-r-Rużuma, and spent the night above al-Mloşi, bfowżi-l-mloşi. The following evening and the next day we rested by the water hole Berim al-Bint. We did not water our horses at first, neţfel al-ḥejl, either in the evening or in the morning but only showed them water in order to increase their thirst the more. At last when they began to demand it, angrily neighing and rearing, estaşraben, we gave them to drink — and then so thoroughly as to enable them to go without water for two days. Leaving the next morning, we arrived in the evening at al-Mazârîf, fed the horses there, again rode all night, and finally reached, beyond 'Enâza, the head of ar-Rwêšed, which forms at that point a hollow, sowh, changing later into a valley, še'ib. There our guide, Ğâzi abu Fanḥa of the 'Ažâžre kin, subject to Eben Hrejmis, told us to rest, as a chief of a smaller kin of the Šlejb, aṭ-Tarâfi by name, was encamped in the neighborhood. He set off to that camp and soon returned, driving a few goats before him, which we cooked for our supper. Finally, between al-Hwejmât and Burḡu we sighted some herds, which we knew as we approached them at night, ḥâzejnâhom, must be grazing far from their camp, 'azîb. Attacking them in the morning, we drove away a considerable booty and did not stop before al-Mazârîf. At this place the heavy black clouds which had been hanging above us for some time sent down a copious rain, by which all were greatly refreshed, we, the sons of Adam, and our mares and she-camels as well. Then full of joy we returned to our kinsfolk, whom we found near the stone heaps between Ğibb and the še'ib of aṣ-Šlubi."

"Ĉâseb eben 'Omejm once invited us to join him on a plundering expedition, 'ajjarna. There were twelve of us on ten she-camels, mrâdîf. Having mounted our camels in our camp between at-Tinf and al-Rurâb, we first drank from al-Mšâš and headed for Želîb Hdejb and Šwêr, passing the settlement of Skâka. Stopping for a chat with the inhabitants of this settlement, naḡarna 'ala-hl hâk al-blejdât, we learned that there were some Rwala camping between Ambaṭ and the Ne-fûd. On our way to them we attacked some haymakers, but returned everything to them, addejnâhom, when we found them to be inhabitants of al-Ġowf. Soon afterwards we found tracks, evidently made by the 'Abdelle. Water we found in the shallow hollows, ḥwâja, of the rocky eminence at al-Ġeba. To the east of these we concealed ourselves in a small deep gully, where fires could be lit without being seen from the outside, ša'ejjeb allî nâreh mâ tnâwer. But the notorious Ḥalaf abu Haṭlên of the Šḡûr, who with his band of robbers had a hiding place near by, soon discovered our presence and, creeping to the very bank of our gully, observed us from above and called his men. Suddenly we found ourselves surrounded on all sides. The menacing band cried as with one voice:

‘Where are ye from, ye crowd down there?’

‘We were just then preparing for supper. Jumping away from the fire, we lay down on our bellies—for we feared they might shoot—and began to crawl out of the gully. A few of us answered: ‘We are the sons of ‘Obejd and ye—whence are ye? We entreat you by Him who strengthens, who speaks the truth and punishes with cowardice him that lies.’

‘He need not punish us with cowardice. We are the Şkûr. Your language told us that ye are really ‘Obejd’s sons. And which ones?’

‘Of the Eben Meşreb kin.’

‘So they brought their camels and sat down with us to supper. There were twelve of them in all. Next morning we rode out together against the ‘Abdelle, whose herds we soon sighted south of Kasr Ambaṭ. Then we concealed ourselves. As soon as it grew dark, we fettered our camels near the place and crept towards the camp. At midnight we were close to the tents, nestakeṭ ‘alejhom. But they were not arranged in rows; some stood in the full light on the level land, others were hidden in the darkness of the dale. This fact prevented us from coming in between them without being noticed by some of the watchmen, w-lâ şâr lena medla’ ‘alejhom. On Ḥalaf’s advice four camel riders were to make a feint attack, ḥazzâjât, in order to draw attention to themselves; and so it was done, but the ‘Abdelle would not be deceived. Only a few offered resistance, while the others, posting themselves in smaller groups at various points, counter-attacked with such vehemence that we could only run back quickly to our fettered she-camels. But the ‘Abdelle pursued us even there, and one of them, Ḥbejrân by name, shot two of our good animals. Then we fled with the Nefûd on our left after our leader Ḥalaf, the ‘Abdelle keeping close at our heels and sending their stones [bullets] after us rapidly. To save ourselves we fettered the left foreleg of our best camel and left it with both the saddle and ribbons to the pursuers. A camel thus abandoned is called ka’ajjed redde, signifying that the pursued will not harm the pursuer any more. However, the ‘Abdelle did not stop. O Allâh, what toil we had to escape with our bare lives! Behind us there was uninterrupted lightning, and the stones [bullets] fell among us like so much hail. A terrible fright took hold of us, jaṭekna-l-mşâş, and we were about to disperse, when at the last moment Eben Sa’îd with his troop came up with us before sunrise, threw himself upon the 'Abdelle, and thus rescued us from their hands. So we returned to our people camping in Wâdi al-Mijâh not far from the aṣ-Ṣaẓri wells, without having achieved anything."

"Four members of the Hwejšân kin went on a raid on foot, ḥanšalow. Hejrân eben Mesleṭ was their leader. They crossed aṣ-Ṣwâb, heading for Mesopotamia against the Šammar then encamped at ad-Demîm and as-Saba', east of al-Mijâdîn. As soon as the herds were sighted they separated, two stealing at night up to the place where the herds were resting, al-marḥ. One called ža'ida stayed with their clothing, the other crawled half-naked to the camels, intending to unfetter a few and drive them towards his comrade. Succeeding in unfettering them, he hurried the animals toward the spot where they had agreed to meet when a certain star had reached a certain height. He was pursued, however, but when the ža'ida man guarding the clothing began to shoot at the pursuers, they halted. After waiting a long time for the other two comrades they finally rode away with their booty, men-ser. The other two had no success owing to the vigilance of the dogs, who, on scenting the man approaching the herd, began to bark, causing both of them, the ža'ida as well as the plunderer, to flee. Then they hid in a gully and the following night went out to plunder again. Allâh having granted them booty, they hastened with it towards the Euphrates. Yet the Šammar pursued and overtook them by the ford. There the robbers abandoned their booty and fled. But they now tried a third time to take booty, 'âwadow tâlet nôba. This time they got two camels and, after breaking her iron fetters, a mare. One man galloped away with the she-camels, the other rode the mare. But this animal balked, and he was left far behind his comrade. When he urged her by blows to run faster, she began to neigh and would not stir. Finally he had to abandon the mare and try to overtake his comrade on foot. Thirsty and hungry he at last sat down below a slope, fearing that he would perish miserably. In this distress he said with a sigh: 'O Allâh, if thou desirest my welfare, then either feed me or take my soul to thyself!' And it happened by Allâh's will that the unfortunate man's comrade was hiding a little higher up on the same slope and sighted him from there. Descending to him, he heard his words and rolled down a stone which fell almost at his side. Alarmed by this the exhausted man cried out: 'O Allâh, thou dost not hasten to send food, but my soul thou wouldst have at once!' At this his comrade began to laugh and gave him enough to eat and drink from the supplies carried by the camels. They luckily reached the Euphrates, crossed it, and remained all day on its right bank hidden in the thicket resting. While there they saw a large troop of the Šammar, who were out on a raid against the ʿAneze, approaching the Euphrates. One half of them forded the river the same day, while the other remained on the left bank. Our henšel drew near the Šammar, whose mares had been left to graze among the bushes, stole two docile ones, and, mounting them, drove the camels before them into the desert, finally reaching their kin without further mishap."

"When we were camping in al-Ḥeġijje with Šaḡr eben Mešreb, he once asked us, nabbah ʿalejna, to go out on a raid with him. My brother, ʿAšwân, the father of the lad, abu-l-ʿejâl, who was driving our camels to the pasture grounds near al-Mloši, was willing to go and so was our younger brother, Ġîrân. ʿAšwân already had a partner, but for Ġîrân we first had to find a camel rider who would carry both his food supply and the fodder for his mare. But, as Ġîrân was still young and imprudent, ġâhel, nobody would go with him except for a full half of everything he might capture with his mare, hišer. We tried to persuade Ġîrân to stay at home, but he refused; and so we had to promise to satisfy the camel rider, zaml, ourselves. Altogether there set off with Šaḡr about a hundred camel riders, ġejš, and about thirty horseback riders, herwat talâtîn hajjâl. Šaḡr led them against the Rwala camping around Hdejb and Šwêr. On the way they drank from the wells of Hzêrân and Debâdeb, from those dug in the channel of al-Obejjez, which are known by the name of Nhejb, from the similar ones, Ġdejjedet ʿArʿar, and finally from al-Hšej. Leaving this point they rode cautiously all night and all day till they saw herds in the vicinity of al-Wadʿa, a great rock lying north of Hdejb and Šwêr. Here they made a halt to wait for the heat to pass and the coolness of the day to set in, jowmen zallat al-žâila wa-bradat ad-dinja. Then they watered their mares from the water bags, selected the reserve camels, šâbûr, and loaded all the fodder and provisions on the fatigued camels, afhaḵow al-ğejš. Şaḵr gave orders for the latter to wait for him at the beginning of the še'ib of al-Helâl all night and the next day. But in case he was not able to join them before sunset of the next day, they were to proceed to al-Barrît. These camels laden with water and food supplies departed for al-Helâl, while the others with the horse riders attacked some herds approaching Şwêr. Surrounding them completely, jelḥafûnaha, every rider whether on horseback or camel drove before him what he had captured. Ği'ân and four youths imprudent as himself kept together, şâr wağḥahom ğamî, and captured a herd numbering over fifty head. Full of joy, they drove the animals before them, unmindful of either their comrades or the course they were to take. They ran all night and all the following forenoon without finding the beginning of al-Helâl, the place appointed for meeting the supplies sent there by Şaḵr. At noon they knew each other no more, such was the thirst torturing them. At that moment an older member of the raid, razzâj, happened to pass there on his camel and saw them. Finding them perishing with thirst he said:

'I will save both you and your mares, but only if you promise to give me a colt for each mare and two camels besides, haẓîze w-âjde.'

"When they had promised, he let them drink from the remnants of water still in his pouch and then asked them to follow him. They rode until evening, they rode all night, and finally came across the tracks of their comrades leading from al-Helâl to al-Barrît. But the mares, tormented by thirst, could go no farther. Then Ği'ân's comrades mounted the best she-camels and, abandoning the booty as well as their own mares, sped after their guide in order to save their lives. Ği'ân, however, exclaimed:

'By Allâh, I will die first before I desert my mare!' And taking the reins of the abandoned mares in his right hand he rode slowly in the tracks of his comrades. The heat of the day passed, the sun had already gone down in the west, and he was still in the saddle. At night he stuck to the course he had followed in the daytime. Seeing himself thus isolated, he was seized with a terrible fear. The torments caused by thirst became well-nigh unbearable, and he heard a buzzing in his ears, taşallah. After resting a little he rode on farther. Then he let the reins of the mares drop, twisted his hand into the mane of his own mare, laid his head on her neck, and rode on as if asleep. When the dew had passed, he slid down from the saddle, spread his mantle over the perennials, and lay down under it. He thought he must surely die. But his mare licked his face, and this refreshed him a little. Rising from the ground and mounting again, he wearily resumed his journey. The mare still carried him faithfully and finally brought him to the nearest water, the wells of al-Barrît, where she stopped. The wells were entirely deserted. Rolling down from the saddle, he crawled, rather than walked, to the nearest well. He saw water there but had neither rope nor bucket. He thought of throwing himself down the well, but this Allâh did not permit. He fell asleep or fainted—he was not sure afterwards which—and remained lying beside the well.

"In the meantime Şaḡr with all his booty was camping by the wells of al-Maçmen, whither also the riders who had stopped at the beginning of al-Helâl were now turning, because the scouts sent by Şaḡr signaled to them not to touch al-Barrît. Neither did Ğîân's comrades, who followed in the tracks of these riders, stop at al-Barrît but joined the rest of the troop at al-Maçmen. As soon as Şaḡr heard that Ğîân was missing, he at once hired some Şlejb then camping at al-Maçmen to take water with them and go in search of him. Finding his tracks, they followed them and before long came at al-Barrît to the place where he was lying unconscious. They opened his mouth and dropped melted butter down his throat until he began to swallow and regained consciousness, but it was nearly two days before he could sit in the saddle unaided. When they returned with him and the mares to al-Maçmen they found nobody there, the raiders having left in the meantime with their booty for their home at al-Heğijje.

"I began at once to look for Ğîân, his mare, and spear but was told by ʿAşwân what had happened. The youth's mother mourned bitterly, and we all thought that we should see him no more. A few days afterwards we migrated, our she-camels being in front. Suddenly a man who was examining the neighborhood came running to me shouting at the top of his voice: 'O Blejhân, hear glad news! Thy young brother is perfectly well!' After a while I sighted two Şlejb with my brother and the mares. The Şlejb received five she-camels."

"We were camping near the wells of Ġibb when someone came to us, ġāna min ġāna, with the news that he had sighted not far off a large troop of riders on camels. Jumping on our mares, we drove in the riding camels, saddled them, and went in the direction indicated. All we could see were five camel riders, but they were soon lost to our sight. We took them for scouts, sbûr, and judged that the hostile troop had five commanders. Some thought we should return, but others were for going ahead. When, however, we were overtaken by the auxiliary troops of Hamad eben 'Ejde and Zejdân âi 'Awâġi, we resolved to attack the enemy before they were likely to throw themselves on our herds. At night we succeeded in surprising and surrounding them. They wounded two of our men, while we killed one of their leaders. We also held them surrounded till the dew had passed—they were in a basin and we on the height above them. Seeing that escape was impossible, they begged for mercy, ješîr al-man'. We took all their camels but allowed them to retain their arms, kept them as our guests for two days longer, and then lent them a few camels so that they could return home. They complained bitterly of their scouts, sbûr, for having fled after sighting us without warning them, as this had enabled us to surprise and surround them. Every member of our expedition received four or five camels as his share."

"Once we camped in Irak near Bradân and al-'Ešêle. The world was full of pasture. Dry grass stood thickly around all the wells, and of the kaḡkaḡ there was abundance everywhere. After our herds had grazed in the neighborhood of the wells, we pitched our tents about a winter day's march from them, manda. Then Mašhûr eben Meršed proposed to us to go on a raid with him. Soon a troop of about three hundred riding camels and a hundred riders, wakm mâje hajjâl, were accompanying him, first against az-Zefîr. We drank at al-Loşof, then from the 'Aqlat Mešhen, and soon reached the level country, where we were surprised by the trajjâwi rain. The low-lying land resembled a swamp, howr. Our camels could not make any headway there, and so we had to return without success, menâčîf. But the Bdûr, who usually encamped on the Euphrates, somehow learned where we were and without delay sent ṭalab, pursuers, on camels after us. They overtook us, laḡeżowna, compelled us twice to make our camels kneel, nawwaḥowna, and soon a fight began to rage—may Allāh never bring any true friend of thine into such a fight! ‘asa ṣiddîẓ kalbak mâ jehdar hâk al-manâh. At first shots were exchanged, then we fought with spears, and finally bare fists were used. We took all their riding camels, attacked their herds, and brought our booty away safely, although they pursued us as far as the Wâdi al-Obejjez. That year we still call the year of violence, senet raṣbe, because we drove the captured herds to our camp by sheer force. The commander got thirty camels, the others five or six each.”

“While camping by the river al-‘Âṣi between Ḥomṣ and Ḥama, Ṣaḡr asked us to undertake a raid with him. We set out, took up fresh water in Ġhâr, and halted at the edge of the plain of ad-Daw to feed our horses. Riding all night, we reached in the morning the big dam below the watering place of al-Bârde. When day broke Ṣaḡr surveyed the country around the wells with his glasses, but, seeing nothing, he nodded to us, and we had our breakfast there. After a short stop we resumed our ride and did not rest until between aṣ-Ṣwêwîne and the wells of al-‘Elejjâniyye. From here we rode again till we saw Rurâb al-Ḥadâli appearing in the distance. After resting again, we reached first the low ridge on the right bank of al-Minkât and then Burḡu. There we lingered in the shade all day and until the following noon. Having watered both our horses and riding camels, ḡejš, we did not lie down to sleep before reaching a gully between Tell Rṣên and Tell Sa‘âda. Next day towards noon we found a water hole near al-‘Abd w-Awlâdeh.

“Taking a few riders with him, Ṣaḡr went up the western summit of al-‘Abd, whence he sighted with his glasses herds of camels grazing on the eastern slope of the Ḥawrân. Returning he said: ‘May this good news gladden your hearts! Our booty is near!’ As soon as the morning star appeared, we began our march and did not stop till sunrise, when Ṣaḡr ascended a hill the better to observe the movements of the herds. The moment they left their camps, he gave the signal for attack. We surrounded and drove them before us without any effort, just as if we had been their herdsmen. They belonged to the Zeben kin of the Beni Ṣaḡr. We fled with the booty all day and all night, the rescuing troops of the Zeben not overtaking us until the day after, but we repulsed them easily, even capturing ten mares in the encounter. We continued our flight. Suddenly we came across fresh tracks of horses and camels heading north towards the rain water reservoirs near the castle of Burķu'. Not knowing whether it was a friend or an enemy who had passed before us, we should have preferred to steer clear of Burķu', but at the same time we were in great need of water for ourselves and the horses. The scouts sent out to investigate returned with the report that a strange troop had watered at Burķu' but had left again. Giving praise to Allāh for that, we hastened to the water, drank ourselves, let the mares also drink, filled our water bags, watered the camels, and lay down to rest. But Allāh willed otherwise.

"The strange troop returned and took us by surprise. They were the Hwêtât, our enemies. They took all our captured and even our own camels from us, but the majority of our mares we saved by timely flight. That night we wandered about the volcanic area. The next day we found a tiny camp of the Šlejb, where we waited for our scattered comrades. On the third day we borrowed five she-camels and a number of asses of good breed, šihâra, of our Šlejb hosts and proceeded on our way but immediately met with an Ahl al-Ġebel raiding troop, returning from an expedition against the inhabitants of Tudmor, Tedâmre. We scattered before them like chaff in all directions, nesheġhom sehġe; however, as soon as they lay down for their night's rest we crept to them silently, nenčaleb 'alejhom, fell upon them while asleep, and drove away sixty of their riding camels and nearly two hundred of those they had captured from the Tedâmre. And although they pursued us as far as al-Ġwejf we succeeded in making our escape, were able to rest at al-Hufejjer, and from there reached al-Žerjitejn at the passing of the dew. There we divided our booty, and every one went home. We, that is to say the people, ķowm, of Âl Meşreb, learned that our tents were then at aš-Šumbul, east of Salamja."

"Our camp was in the little še'ib of al-Maġna which winds from Lâha eastwards. It was known that Šaķr was preparing for a new raid. Finally he sent us word:

'Let all who wish to go along come tomorrow at noon!'

"On the morning of the day fixed for the departure Šaķr rode up the top of Lâha, whence there was a wide view on all sides, burrez beha. Surveying the country with his glasses he saw a troop of raiders to the west. Dispatching at once two sbûr on camels to watch the strangers, he set out with his men to outflank them. In the evening his scouts returned with news that the raiders were Sirhân with whom his people, kown şakr, were then living in a state of enmity. Dividing his troop into two parts, Şakr ordered one to attack the enemy in front and the other, which he led in person, from the rear. The stratagem succeeded — the Sirhân losing all their riding camels and half of their horses. Şakr himself captured a fine mare, which he sent home at once, as many of his men refused to continue the raid now when booty had been sent them by Allâh.

“With the rest Şakr rode to the borders of the volcanic territory, where, in a tiny valley, herwat al-ḥenw, south of Abu Râsên, he found traces of a camp recently abandoned. And before long he also sighted with his glasses a few migrating kins of the Weld ‘Ali and Rwala. Riding ahead of them with his troop, when it became dark, admas ad-dmâs, he lay down for a good rest. In the morning he waited till the herdsmen should drive out their herds and the Bedouins load the tents on camels. When this was done and the pack camels began to march, the signal for attack was given. Şakr himself made for the herd belonging to Eben ‘Anejzân, while his comrades surrounded the herds of Abu Nawâs and Ğabbâr. But Eben ‘Anejzân’s herdsman had a rifle. Catching sight of Şakr, he took aim, and Allâh willed that his bullet should not miss. It hit the muzzle of Şakr’s rifle, which it shattered, and wounded our leader in the left hand, throwing him from the saddle. Praise be to Allâh that He would not let the herdsman assail Şakr while in this condition but suggested to him to flee with his herd! Şakr, when falling, grasped the mane of his mare and after a moment got into the saddle again but was without a weapon, and the enemy’s riders were already beginning to close upon him. Then we cried out to Allâh: ‘O Allâh, help Şakr and Thou shalt receive an old she-camel! jâ-llâh beşakr w-fâter lwağhak.’ Allâh helped. Şakr got back among us, took a spear from a comrade, and encouraged us: ‘If we show ourselves cowards, who will fight? low dallejna min jehûş. I am the rider protecting al-Ḳawda. We shall be laughed at if we let fear conquer us; bartam az-zuhûk low hifna.’ And his spear caught a rider on a bay mare, but she escaped. He captured fourteen camels himself, we four or five each and then returned home with good luck, nakefna la-halna."

"We camped with Şaḡr eben Meşreb in the şēibân of aş-Şwejbât where they join and form the valley of aş-Şwâb, and undertook a raid with him against the Şammar in Mesopotamia. Crossing the Euphrates at al-Mijâdîn, we attacked them and returned home with the booty. But here sad news awaited us. Eben Mâzi, the chief of the Âl 'Îsa clan belonging to the Ahl al-Ğebel, had surprised Şaḡr's people during our absence, had taken our herds, and even driven away all Şaḡr's white camels. Şaḡr beat his face with his hand and shouted his war cry, entaḥa: 'I am the rider protecting al-Ḳawda! By Allâh himself! May Allâh deprive me of my wits, dmâri, should I ever forget my white camels and not deliver them from thy hands!'

"As there was no water in aş-Şwejbât at that time, we started for the settled territory, nur'arreb, migrating east and camping with our relatives on the banks of the Euphrates near Ḳal'at Ğa'bar and Abu Hrêra, zowr abu hrêra. There Şaḡr cried out: 'We will go on a raid!' All knew at once whither and against whom. Our animals numbered sixty mares and sixty camels, with 110 men in all to mount them. We drank ourselves and watered our animals from the wells of al-Ğidd and then moved towards the volcanic territory. The Şlejb told us that Eben Mâzi was camping on its borders, near Manḳa' ar-Raḥba. Finally Şaḡr sighted some herds, adbâş, with his glasses and at once sent Şerâ'i abu Hsejjen and Rşejd eben Zeri, both on horseback, as ujûn to ascertain where the Arabs were encamped. Before long they reached some herds and stopped at the one which Eben Mâzi had taken entire from Eben Hâwi, the chief of the Şarârât, even with the leading she-camel, al-ža'ada. One herdsman came running up, then another, saluting the riders and looking them over. They did not recognize the riders as the Ḳmuşa, because both had put on light-weight black mantles, mezwi aswâd — or, as we call them, al-hâçijje, such as are worn by the Şemâlât, inhabitants of the country around the Hawrân. The herdsmen invited them:

'Dismount, riders! What tidings do ye carry in your saddles?'

‘We wish to buy camels, eḥna wassâke. Tell us where to find those of ‘Abtân.’

“At that moment the herdsmen sighted Şakr’s troop appearing on the eastern horizon and gave the alarm cry: ‘Halt, halt! Ye are bloody enemies; tremble! Ja° ja° entom al-ḳowm al-ḥamra°,’ and began to wave their kerchief as a signal for help from the camp, the tents of which looked in the distance like isolated knolls, al-heẓâb. Šerâ’i now threw himself on ‘Abtân’s herd, Ršejd on ‘Enâd’s, while their comrades, the raiders who had just arrived, surrounded all the herds, assailed the enemy’s riders, entered the camp, took the tents there, and started back with their booty. The troops which came to protect the herds were repulsed and the booty made safe. The captured white camels were divided between Mišref eben Ĥrejmîs and Şakr âl Meşreb, and we retired to our people on the Euphrates in peace.”

CHAPTER XXII

LAWS OF INHERITANCE

No Bedouin may give away the property of his family either to strangers, or to his wife or even to his daughters. If he does so, his son or his nearest kinsman outside of his immediate family has the right to demand the return of the gifts. This right is called menn. As the saying has it: "Thou wilt give it to me, but thy son will take it away from me by the right of menn; ent te'îni wa-bnak jemennah minni." It is not necessary to demand the gifts back at once; that may be done later, even after some years have elapsed. The witnesses summoned will testify that the claimant's father gave away certain property, and the receiver must return everything plus any increase which the gift has brought in the meantime. If, for example, he received a she-camel ten years ago, he is bound to return not only the old animal, but all her offspring. If, again, he has given or sold the she-camel to somebody else, suitable compensation is fixed. Only in cases when the gift was made by some member of the Eben Ġandal or Eben Rubejn kin, 'ata' ġandalijje or rubejnijje, will the menn lose its validity. No Rwejli could explain to me the reason of this custom, but all maintained that it had been the practice since time immemorial. To give an instance: Fâjez eben Ġandal once returned from a raid of which he was a commander, 'ažd, with rich booty. One of his warriors, Ĥalaf al-Flejhi, captured four camels, males, zwâmel, which were to go to Fâjez, as, according to the Bedouin law, every captured he-camel belongs to the leader. However, as this particular raid was not made on the basis of sharing the booty, rejir hišer, but everybody was to keep what he had captured, Ĥalaf would have received nothing at all. He therefore went to Fâjez's tent and entered the part reserved for the women, where the wife of Fâjez, Felġa, was suckling her two-year-old baby son, Ġed'ân. Ĥalaf stroked him caressingly and begged her help: "O Felġa," he said, "put in a kind word for me and make the baby, 'ajjel, say: 'I give those zwâmel to Ĥalaf.'"

When Felġa obligingly repeated his words, Ġed'ân said: "I give Ĥalaf the zwâmel."

Filled with joy, Ḥalaf rode to his tent, branded the camels with his mark, and let them be driven to pasture. But soon afterwards Fâjez, ignorant of Ḥalaf's stratagem, sent a slave to demand the animals. Ḥalaf, of course, sent back the answer:

"The zwâmel are mine. Eben Ġandal gave them to me."

The slave asked: "Which Eben Ġandal?"

"Ġed'ân eben Ġandal."

On hearing the message, Fâjez inquired of his wife and, learning what had happened in his absence, let Ḥalaf have the camels with the words: "A gift of Eben Ġandal knows no menn."

A camel presented by a man to his divorced wife belongs, with all her calves, to the divorcee exclusively. Neither the husband's nor her own kin can lay any claim to her. She can give or sell the camel to whomsoever she wishes and spend the money received for it without being responsible to anybody, for she is the sole owner of that property, mâ leha šerîč ill-allâh.

When a Rwejli dies, leaving a widow with a baby daughter, his kin takes his tent as well as his camels. The widow goes back with her daughter to her own kin. From the price that had been paid for her she gets a she-camel, ba'îr, which also belongs to her only. The little daughter remains with her till she grows up, returning then to her father's kin.

If a Rwejli leaves two widows with little boys, his property is divided temporarily between both widows to enable them to bring up the boys. At the sons' maturity the estate is divided among them according to law, i. e. the first-born is given one camel more than his brothers. This male or female camel is called nefel. The tent and the saber belong, as is the Arab custom, ṭarâjež al-'arab, to the youngest. The gift, ne-hîle, which the boy receives on his circumcision is his own property, which he shares with nobody.

A short time ago a Rwejli died leaving two widows, each of whom was suckling a baby boy. Ḥalaf âl Iden, who became their guardian, wâši, gave one widow both the tent and all the camels, letting the other go empty-handed with her boy to her kin. When the latter complained of this high-handed action to Prince an-Nûri, he ordered the estate to be divided between them equally, as required by the Bedouin law, ṭarâjež al-'arab.

If after the father's death his sons also die, the widow's share of her husband's property is three she-camels, so called nežîle (pl., nežâjel), that is, the first as the price of her womb, ḥakḥ baṭnaha, in which she carried her sons; the second as the price of her breasts, ḥakḥ dajdaha; and the third as the price of her hip, on which she lay while suckling them, ḥakḥ matnaha. Besides these she takes a fourth camel as the price of her husband, whom she served till his death. When this widow dies, the fourth camel, ḥakḥ rukubatha, is inherited by her kin while the first three, nežâjel, fall to the kin of her late husband.

When a man dies leaving only married daughters, each of them is entitled to two she-camels out of the estate, one on account of the dowry, sijâk, which was paid for her, and the other in remembrance of the father.

The right of inheritance, ḥakḥ al-warta, is vested in sons alone. The eldest selects first two she-camels called mhawwa w-ḥazîza, then the others take one each, then the eldest son takes another camel, and so on until all the camels are divided. The mare, too, goes to the eldest; its first filly to the second; its second to the third; while the fourth son will get the filly of that which went to the second. The tent itself belongs to the youngest brother, its whole internal equipment to the eldest. Every daughter is given two she-camels, wârda w-ṣâdera, going for water and returning with it, or ḥalûba w-rakûba, milking and riding.

In case the sons will not divide the estate but use it in common, elja' tahâsarow, the eldest offers a dabiht al-ḥișer, common sacrifice.

When an uncle on the father's side dies without male issue, all that he leaves belongs to his nephews. If the eldest of them rides his uncle's mare on raids and captures horses or camels, he must not keep them. The mare was owned by the uncle, and to his estate belongs the booty, in which, therefore, all the nephews share. Should they divide the estate among themselves but after some time agree to administer it in common, the eldest immolates a dabiht al-ḥișer, common sacrifice. He also offers a sacrifice on the day of commemoration for all who have departed that year.

A married woman may have her own estate. This comes either from her kin or her husband's or from her savings. All that she has bought from her savings she can sell at will; but, as to her other property, she must be directed by the will of her husband or her ahl. After her death her son inherits all that came from her kin, the rest goes to her husband.

A father can leave his property to his daughters if he has no son, but he must appoint a guardian for them, who is also called father. This is done with the words: "Behold, I exclude the flesh and blood from which I descend. Thee I appoint to be the father of my daughter (or daughters). My whole estate I present to my daughter. My relatives of the flesh and blood from which I descend must take nothing from her. Thou wilt see to it. But on the commemoration day of all faithful departed, ṣaḥijje, my daughter should not forget me." In case this daughter marries, her property is inherited by her son, or, if there is no son, by her ahl; her husband can claim nothing.

The right of inheritance belongs to all relatives up to the ninth degree, râ tis'a ḡdûd jaret. In the absence of lawful heirs, that is if the kin has entirely died out, temši 'alejhom ad-dinja' mâ jeṣall kûd al-ḥurma, the woman most nearly related to it receives whatever estate is left and is bound to a sacrifice on the ṣaḥijje day.

*Jâ wanneti wannet jetîm
'oḳb al-ṛala' 'ammeh walâh jaṣîḥ w-jowmî beš-šelîl
w-jaḳûl walli min ḥaja'.*

This is the lament of an orphan

Who, having lost his father, receives orders from an uncle.
He gives the alarm cry, waves the hem of his cloak,
And says to himself: 'Vanish from life.'

Al-ṛala' is a father who appointed a brother of his to be the guardian of his son. The orphan, dissatisfied with his guardian, sights the enemy. Giving the alarm cry, he waves his mantle in the direction of the approaching danger and encourages himself, nesmeh or nafseh, to resist the enemy even at the risk of losing his life. In the latter event, at least, his mourning for the loss of a dear father would cease.

CHAPTER XXIII
DEATH AND AFTER DEATH
DISEASES AND WOUNDS

Few Rwala reach a very old age. More than four-fifths of the men either fall in war or perish in consequence of wounds received, while the women die mostly when suckling their babies. Such women as survive this period generally grow to be very old. From diseases the Rwala suffer chiefly in the months of July and August, when they camp in the neighborhood of Damascus, in al-Rûṭa, Ġowlân, al-Mzêrib, and Ķerajât al-Meleḥ (the vicinity of Eṭra and Ćâf). Ķerajât al-Meleḥ are notorious for their ague, hemma, and malaria, shûne; in al-Ġûba the flies are a real pest; likewise the strong winds which blow there all the time, whirling up the fine sand and dust, are very injurious to the eyes. All these districts are called bilâd mâbijje by the Rwala, who therefore prefer to camp in either the Nefûd or al-Ĥamâd, where the atmosphere is both clear and salubrious, bilâd 'adijje.

The following are the diseases most universally known.

Hubṭa: pains in the spine and the head combined with a strong fever. The patient wants to lie only on the flat of his back. For a cure he is burnt with a red-hot iron about the head and temples. This occurs most frequently in winter.

Ġederî: smallpox. Treated with red clay diluted in water, which is then poured into the patient's eyes. This disease breaks out towards the end of the şferî season (October—December).

Şarba: pains in the stomach combined with fever and endless thirst. Its cure: the root of the nose is cut through so that it bleeds profusely, and the shoulders are burnt all over. Sometimes a thick thread is pulled through the skin of the shoulder and left there until the wound suppurates. The disease appears in winter, especially after one drinks cold water.

Mwallje: pains in the intestines, accompanied by swelling; also the abdomen hardens. It is treated by laxatives;

appears mostly in summer, eating of meat being most frequently the cause.

Hemma: ague. The cure: burning about the neck. Appears in midsummer.

Shûne: a violent fever; lasts two or three days, ceases for a while, and reappears in the months of July, August, and September. The cure: drinking tamarind water.

Heben: ulcers. They are treated with poultices of the haltîta and mbâraka drugs till the pus flows out.

Şotob: hemorrhoids. The cure: a piece of clay is kneaded, shaped like a large nail, allowed to dry, burned to a white heat, and then inserted into the rectum in order to burn out the hemorrhoids.

Rîh: rheumatic pains, especially in the şferi season (October—December). The afflicted limb is burnt for a cure.

Ramad: diseases of the eye. The cure: koşt al-eht or katra and twejtijjân drugs are bought, crushed, mixed with woman's milk, and applied to the eye.

Aba zhejr: pains in the small of the back compelling the afflicted person to walk with a stoop. It is treated with burning about the small of the back.

Sâbe: chronic fever combined with headache; otherwise the patient feels well but has no appetite, grows thin and weak, and finally dies. This is treated by burning from the nape of the neck across the top of the head down to the nose.

Hubejje: measles. The cure: dates mixed with pepper and butter warmed up and given the patient to eat. Occurs mostly in winter.

°Akankaš: eruption on parts of the body, with itching of the skin. This is treated by drinking the hebbhâr and tûm drugs in milk. It occurs in the months of January and February.

°Ankûd: a severe cough accompanied by vomiting, jağ-def. As a cure the sick man drinks asses' milk. Occurs mostly in winter.

Aba wağh: stiffness of some part of the face. As a cure they burn the corners of the mouth and stick three lead balls under the skin of the part of the face affected, which is then covered with a red cloth.

Lwêref: venereal disease. Cured by inhaling the smoke of some drug strewn over hot coals. It is very rare among the Rwala.

On falling sick a Rwejli instantly ties into his hair or to his head rope some red or green thread as a preventive, heğâb, against pain. If he gets worse and the home remedies will no longer suffice, his relatives send for a seer, şâheb as-sirr, entreating him to come and help the patient. A she-camel is promised to Allâh as a sacrifice for restoring health to their sick relative in these words: "O thou face of Allâh, if thou curest this man and liberatest him from the captivity of his disease, I will give thee this she-camel in sacrifice; jâ wağh allâh in tajjebt hal-walad w-fakkejteh min hal-maraz ilak hal-ğezûr."

Fractures are healed by a Bedouin versed in the art. He sets the broken bone, lays the limb between narrow boards, and then packs it round with dough made of barley flour, salt, and eggs, or lacking these of tragacanth, helbe. This composition hardens like rock. After the expiration of twenty-five days the bandage is loosened but it is not removed until after forty days. During that time the patient must not eat anything sweet and is fed on meat only, or, if that cannot be had, on milk.

A small wound is called şwâb, a large one ğurh. The wounded man, şawîb, is assigned a separate corner in the tent always on the windward side, so that no bad odor can reach him. Any scent, rîha, opens the wound anew, increasing the pain and swelling, tirfer or tizerr. Harmless are the odors of tar, kuţrân, and the drugs of hantîta, ğawelijje, ebhel, se'ed, hawağawwa, ūd al-hawa, damm al-ehwên, the smoke from the camel manure, ğelle, tobacco smoke, and sulphur. The wounded person stops his nose with the kejtarân or hantîta drug as a protection against injurious odors. Also he must deny himself sweet dishes, which according to the local belief would cause the wound to fester, jiddi, still more. At first soap is applied to the wound, later the subl drug. The urine of little children, bowl al-wurdân, is used in cleaning wounds. As the wound could not heal if reached by the light of stars, the couch of the wounded person is curtained on all sides by clothing and carpets, and he must not leave it even to satisfy his natural wants. If it is intended to camp in the same place for some length of time, a separate small tent is put up for the patient, closed on all sides, heğra, and at some distance from the camp. Visitors sit round the tent and converse with him, but no one will go inside except his nearest relative. For there might be a visitor who, having just had sexual intercourse, has not yet washed himself, and such an unclean one, neġes, would make the wound still worse, mustarfer. The visitor salutes with the words: "May thy evil disappear! jizûl šarrak." Or: "May it disappear and not come over thee any more! jizûl w-lâ jiġik." To avoid informing the patient that he looks ill, and thus frightening him, the visitor says: "It seems to me thou hast a healthy color, perhaps nothing ails thee," the patient's reply usually being: "By Allâh himself, nothing is the matter with me, merely so and so."

If the patient gets worse, nobody must mourn. "We have a soul, and he has a soul obeying Allâh, ma'ana nesem w-ma'eh nesem taĥat allâh." The patient gets worse every Wednesday and Friday, for these are the heavy days, jowm at-takîl, for him. Likewise every sixth, sixteenth, and twenty-first day of the lunar month aggravates the condition of the patient and spreads the news of his illness, mubajjeĥ al-ĥabar.

A demoniac is called mharfal. As such they consider the imbecile, the demented, and the insane. If he does not get well soon, he is fettered and allowed to perish of thirst.

If a mad dog, ċalb mṛalût, bites, ji'azz, a man, sulphur is applied to the wound, which is then burned with a red-hot nail. After forty days the injured person generally is stricken with rabies. Then they fether him and throw hot ashes on his head until he dies.

In the case of a snake bite the soothsayer, ḡarrâj, is sent for and cures the bitten man with his spittle. The ḡarrâj learns this art from a member of the Rifâ'ijje Order at an-Nukra in the neighborhood of Damascus, paying one quarter of a meġḡidijje (22.5 cents) for tuition. No snake can harm a ḡarrâj.

Bites of scorpions and poisonous spiders are cured by wrapping the wounded limb in a raw skin or by laying the patient in an oblong pithole, the bottom of which is covered with camel manure thrown over camel urine, abas al-bel. Then, covering the patient up to his head with clay or sand, they build a small fire at his side to make him sweat thoroughly. But to prevent him from falling asleep they shout at him: "O thou who has been bitten by an ankabût spider, wilt thou live or wilt thou die?" He must answer: "I shall live, I shall live, not die."

A person seriously ill appoints a guardian for his young children with the words: "O So-and-So, I do not know what Allâh will write to me, therefore, behold, I put my children and my estate like the ring of a turtle dove's neck from my neck on thy neck. In the high station [before Allâh] I shall inquire of thee about them. Jâ flân ana mâ-dri waš allâh jaktob 'alejji mâr tara 'ejâli w-ḥalâli towk ḥamâmaten min rukubti birkubtak anšedk 'anhom bel-mâkez al-'azîm."

The answer will be: "I shall take thy place. May Allâh have mercy on thee! Ana lak bel-makân allâh jarḥamk."

In the absence of him whom he would like to appoint as guardian the sick man will declare before one or two men: "O ye, X and Y, I ask you to witness that I put my children on the neck of So-and-So."

In the majority of cases the sick man prefers to appoint a faithful slave to the guardianship. Sometimes he also names the camels which are to go to one or other of his children and what she-camel he wishes to be sacrificed for him. However, any of his stipulations may be annulled by his first-born son. Neither the father nor the mother give their children any last advice.

DEATH

Water is dropped into a dying person's mouth without any words. They do not close the eyes of the dead, nor stop his nostrils, dead bodies being carefully avoided by the Rwala. If they camp near a settlement, or some fellâhîn happen to be with them at the time, they hire them to bury the dead. Rubbing the body over with a wet cloth, they wrap it in its shirt, or when that is torn they lay it on a piece of white linen, cover it with the same material, then sew both pieces in three places, load the body thus enshrouded on a mule, and carry it to the grave. This must be deeper for a woman than for a man. Its depth for a woman must be such that even the breast could not be seen if the body were placed upright; for the man its depth is only to his knees when in a standing posture. A stone is put under the head and the body is laid invariably with its right side downwards and facing south. Covering it then with a few stones they shovel in the excavated earth. For a man two stones, našâjeb, are raised above the grave, one for a woman. One and a half meğîdijje ($ 1.35) is paid to the grave-digger for this work. In the inner desert a grave about twenty to twenty-five centimeters deep is dug anywhere, the body wrapped in its cloak, ‘aba, laid into it on its right side and facing south; then all is covered with stones or earth.

In the desert a man's body is never accompanied to the grave by a woman, and a woman's body is buried by women alone. The whole funeral procession consists of no more than two, at the most four people. The body is carried either on two staves or two ropes. Neither the staves, nor the ropes, nor even the handle of the mattock used in digging the grave may be brought into the tent, such is the fear of everything that has come into contact with the dead body. If there is water enough, it is poured over the grave so that the dead may not suffer from thirst.

No one mourns for the dead except his mother, wife, sister, or daughter. In the tent they may utter, quietly, only one cry, then they go outside the camp, lament twice more, tear their dress at the breast, scratch their faces, jeŕarreŕen wuġih, throw dust all over themselves, jetkawwaĥen bet-trâb, wind a white band, ‘aŕâba bêza, around their forehead, weep, and then return to the camp. Only the sister and daughter may cut off their hair, jeġuŕŕen râŕhen, which they either hang over or lay on the grave. There is no other mourning. The white band is worn by the women until the third night, or to the next aŕ-zaĥijje holiday. For three nights in succession no salutation is offered to the dead person's next of kin. It is said of them:

"So-and-So is not in a good temper, his father (brother or cousin) is dead; hâtreh mâ hw tajjeb majjiten abûh walla' aĥûh walla' eben 'ammeh."

They try to console him with the words: "O So-and-So, this has come from Allâh; it happens not to thee alone but to all people. May Allâh replace him who has passed away! Jâ flân haŕ-ŕi min allâh mâ hw 'alejk ente wâĥed mâr 'ala-n-nâs killehom allâh je'awwez mâ râh."

His answer is: "What can I do? Allâh is omnipotent. Wuŕu bîdi allâh aġwa."

Towards the evening of the third day a hbâta sacrifice is prepared for the dead; either a camel or (if it can be bought) a sheep or goat is tied to the spot where he died, or simply bread is baked. The animal is killed with the accompanying words: "O Allâh, this is the hbâta of So-and-So." The flesh is cooked and the bread baked on the spot where he died, but outside the tent, which on this occasion is removed, its rear wall taken off and the ropes loosened, so that it looks as if it would fall down. Not before the morning following the hbâta sacrifice will the rear wall be hung up again and the ropes tightened. Nobody is invited to the supper given after the sacrifice. Whoever wishes, comes and eats. The meat from the sacrificed animal, the bread baked, and everything prepared for the hbâta, must be eaten outside the tent. Nothing connected with this sacrificial meat must be carried inside, not even the utensils used. For those fallen in war or murdered the hbâta is held in the night from Wednesday to Thursday or from Thursday to Friday.

At the next az-zaḥijje holiday the nearest relative of the dead man saddles a fat, healthy she-camel (never a he-camel), and puts on her a traveling bag, mezhebe, with flour, fire flint, a leather pouch full of milk, semîl, a leather bag with water, and some other trifles. If a woman has died, he saddles the camel with a pack saddle, ḥedâḡe, puts on some kind of carpet, a female dress, and for the rest the same supplies as in the case of a man's death. In front of his tent, seizing the head of the camel, he announces to the dead person:

"O So-and-So, come here and behold thy zaḥijje; jâ flân dūnak zaḥijjetk or jâ flâne dūneč zaḥijjetč."

Repeating this three times, he kills the animal, sprinkles her blood toward all four quarters of the world, rubs the flesh with salt, and either gives it away or cooks it outside the tent. All that the camel wore, her hide and flesh, etc., belongs to the dead person. By right all these things should be given away, but it is also possible to borrow them from the deceased, just as the knife used in killing the camel, the kettle in which the flesh was boiled, and the ṣaḥn or platter on which the cooked meat was piled are borrowed.

On the third day after the zaḥijje they take a small piece of the fat or tallow from the sacrificed she-camel, melt it, and pour it over ʿejš meal. The next of kin then takes a bit of the dish in three fingers, carries it to the three stones on which the kettle used for boiling the flesh is still standing, and besmears them with ʿejš, saying: "With this I wish to cool the fire burning So-and-So, hâda brūd an-nâr ʿan flân." The rest of the ʿejš he wipes off his fingers into the fire.

If the relatives happen to camp again near the grave of the dead person before the zaḥijje day, they prepare a supper for him, ʿaša-l-majjet, buying either a sheep or a goat, dbîḥa, which they kill with the words: "O Allâh, this is the supper of our deceased." Or they take a small piece of bread and a bit of butter, throw and drop them into the fire, and say: "O Allâh, this belongs to our dead."

He who passes by the burial place of a person dear to him can do him much good if, taking a pebble from his grave, he says: "I take this in order to lighten the soul of So-and-So. May Allâh have mercy on him. An-âhed hâda muhaffefen 'an rûh flân allâh jarhameh."

That which keeps life in both man and beast is called nefes, nesem, or rûh. The nefes (or nesem) of both the man and the animal is alike, wâhed. Whether the nesem of an animal ever dies is known to Allâh alone, yet, in all probability, not even an animal will die completely but will go with the man either to paradise or to hell, because animals live merely for man. The nefes, nesem, or rûh are put into the man as well as into the animal by Allâh. As long as the child lies in its mother's womb, it has no nefes, but the moment its head comes out at birth, Allâh opens its nostrils, jeftah allâh hšûmeh or manâhereh, and puts the nefes into its body, jedhel an-nesem beh. This nesem had never before been in any other living being, for Allâh creates an entirely new nesem in every case.

Mindîl al-Ḳaṭ'i told me that every living man has a soul, nesem. If there were no soul, he would not live. The soul cannot be seen but can be heard, being identical with the breath, ar-rûh hw an-nesem. The soul of the first man was breathed by Allâh into the nostrils, hence the human soul originates from Allâh's breath. This original soul exists in human beings to this day, because Allâh not only did not take it away from them but is still augmenting it. When a child is born, it receives the nesem from its mother, to whom Allâh adds from his own breath every time she conceives. The nesem dwells in the man's inside, bečabdeh wa-bšadreh. On the man's death the soul leaves his body through the nostrils, returns to Allâh, and waits till another mother conceives a man, ins, when Allâh will add the waiting soul to that of the mother.

As long as there is a nesem in the man, he lives, illi nesemeh beh hajj, but when it leaves his body, he dies. The nesem departs through his nostrils, jetla min al-manhar. After his death the deceased is suspended in the air above his grave, head upwards. His nesem floats over his head.

Thus it remains till the hbâta sacrifice has been brought, after which the body takes its place in the grave and the nesem departs, no one knows where.

After the zahijje sacrifice Allâh weighs both the good deeds, hasanateh, and the sins of the deceased, sajâteh radijje. Allâh punishes sins: az-zena, which means sexual intercourse with a girl betrothed to another or with another's wife, for that is a betrayal, bowk, of persons to whom the females belong; al-howne, the robbery of a guest or companion who has trusted one while on the road; dabh az-zelema, killing of a man not subject to the blood feud or of an enemy who did not attack one; az-zelîme, false testimony under oath before the court. These four sins alone are punished by Allâh both in this world and hereafter. In this world he punishes by disease, by sending robbers against the sinner's estate; by taking away his sons, or by having him murdered. In weighing these sins and good deeds, the weight of the hbâta and zahijje sacrifices is added; also of the kettle in which the flesh was cooked; of the three stones, hawâdi, supporting the kettle; of all the utensils used in preparing the supper; of the fuel, as well as of everything that was laden on the she-camel sacrificed on the holiday of the commemoration of all departed, az-zahijje. The Rwejli is certain that, as far as he is concerned, the scales will always dip in his favor and that he will enter paradise intact with both his body and his soul, nesem. He that falls in war needs neither the hbâta nor the zahijje, for all his sins were washed off with his blood. A murdered man, too, goes directly to paradise, because his sins fall on the head of the murderer, unless the latter was destined by Allâh to punish the murdered man for his sins.

HELL AND PARADISE

Paradise is somewhere below ground. There it rains regularly, there is always rabî, abundance, good pasture, hejr, and there also the moon shines all the time. In paradise all the Rwala live together, are young, and never grow older. They can marry there and have grown children at once. Every one has a big tent, big herds, and many children. They raid hostile tribes which have been condemned to hell, where all enemies of the Rwala are sent.

Hell is situated either on the sun or in some other place above the earth. There the sun scorches by day and night, rains are very rare, the breeding of camels meets with no success, the soil has to be irrigated artificially — and the Bedouins there must work long and hard. They serve the fellâhîn, have to obey the government, are conscripted, perform military duty, and Allâh himself knows all their torments. Some call hell dalfât and think that in that place neither the moon nor the stars ever shine.

Allâh dwells in both paradise and hell. He is omnipresent, hears and sees everything, but is himself invisible. With Allâh's permission even the dead may leave either paradise or hell and visit their kin, to whom they appear in dreams.

In the belief of the Bedouins and the Şlejb there is somewhere far beyond the horizon a tall mountain on each side of the earth. One half of each mountain rests on terra firma, the other half in the sea, into which it sinks abruptly, while towards the land it sends out a sharp spur called hašm. These four mountains carry the whole firmament. During the rainy season the spirits and even Allâh himself prefer to dwell near the southern mountain, which the Arabs call aš-šerk, as it is supposed to be situated in the inner desert. In summer, however, Allâh moves with all the spirits to the northern mountain, jeṛarrebaw.

CHAPTER XXIV

TERMS APPLIED TO PHYSIOGRAPHIC FEATURES

The Rwala tribe camps in northern Arabia between latitude 28° and 34° north and longitude 36° and 42° east. For the various topographical features of this area the tribe has strictly defined terms, of which we noted the following:

- ‘Abd: black cone
‘Abrak: dark rock partly covered with reddish sand
‘Ada: both dead and live bushes, grasses, excrements, clay, coarse sand, and any débris brought down by a torrent
‘Adra: pastures defiled by the excrements of countless herds
‘Ajârât or ‘ejârât: huge, flat-topped elevations
‘Akla: a well by a channel or in a valley, which caves in after heavy rains and has to be restored
‘Akûla: a rather small, low depression in a plain, where the rain water gathers ‘Alâme (pl., ‘alâmât): landmark ‘Amijja: the pear-shaped hollow of a moḵr rain well ‘Anza (dimin., ‘unejza): a long flat-topped hillock rising from a plain ‘Arejż: a long arm of a sand desert
‘Arġa (pl., ‘arġât): a turn of a valley or gully
‘Arḵûb: a slope; steep rocky hillside
‘Asâma: scorched tract of land without pasture or water
Aşba‘a (pl., aşâbe‘): “fingers,” a row of low isolated cones
Baḥṣa: soil from which the rain water runs off quickly
Barârît: desolate, waterless regions; camel paths across such regions
Barbak: a small artificial rain pond
Barḥûs: movable sharp ridge of sand dunes or drifts, bare of vegetation
Barrâde (pl., barârîd): a path trodden out by camels between stones or gravel
Bâten: broad and deep valley without any channel
Baṭḥa (pl., baṭḥât): a shallow river bed
Baṭîn (pl., buṭnân): a low hillside, slope, base

Batn: long depression bordered on one side by a high slope

Bed: abundant or large spring

Bejâḥa: a plateau giving a wide view

Berka (pl., burk): a rocky hill partly covered by sand

Bilâd 'adijje: the salubrious districts of an-Nefûd and al-Ḥamâd

Bilâd mâbijje: the unhealthful districts of al-Rûṭa, Ġowlân, al-Mzêrib, Ḳerajât al-Meleḥ, and al-Ġûba

Bîr (pl., bijâr): a well in general; well with spring water

Bûra: a narrow, deep ditch

Burrêž: rock salt; also mica

Ġettân: a rock or stone which falls to pieces, crumbles

Dabbe: a rough ridge of flat-topped hillocks

Dahl (pl., duḥûl): a long, subterranean cavern where water bubbles out, doline

Daww: a vast, elongated, level plain enclosed by two mountain chains

Demlûr: an isolated, blunted butte in a wide plain

Derwa: a sharp summit

Dîre: the Bedouins' term for a settled territory where they get their supplies and the inhabitants of which pay them tribute

'Ebb (pl., 'ebûb): a shallow dale, gully, bay

'Edd: a perpetual spring well

'Edwe (pl., 'edwât): low place in a sowḥ valley incapable of holding rain water and therefore suitable for pitching tents

Ekšâš: a mixture of large stones and gravel

'Eleb (pl., 'elebân): an isolated table-topped hillock

'Elejm (pl., 'alâjem): an isolated elongated hill rising from a plain

'Erf: isolated hill, visible from afar

'Ernîn (pl., 'aran or 'arânîn): channel of a torrent; channel in a steep hillside

'Erž (pl., 'urûk): long spur of sand

Fâğ (pl., fîğân): a wide rocky hollow

Far (pl., frû): the starting-point of a gully or valley; a branch gully of a side valley

Farağ: a spacious area where no danger threatens the Bedouin

Farše (pl., frûš): a funnel-like pit in the sand

Fazr (dimin., fzêr): a crevice in clay soil where the rain water accumulates; a narrow, deep channel

Fegǧ: a hollow of some width between two hills, with a road running through it

Fejza (pl., fijâz): a fertile depression

Fekâra: stony table-land

Felk (pl., flûk): an elongated sand dune

Ġâbija: a shallow pit in the earth into which water for camels is poured

Ġâdde (pl., ġwâdd or ġwâd): path trodden out by camels in the flat desert

Ġâl (pl., ġilân): the bank of a river channel; the slope of a gully or valley; a long, steep escarpment by which a plateau falls off to a lower level

Ġam: rain water

Ġaww or ġaw: a basin or valley with spring wells having water enough to supply big camps

Ġeba: an open cistern

Ġebb (pl., ġbebe or ġebâb): a deep rain well or cistern, wider at the bottom than at the top

Ġebw: a natural hole in a rocky plain, as much as two meters deep, where rain water accumulates. Sometimes it can be covered with a big stone

Ġelad: a rocky desert

Ġelîbe: a low, flat-topped elevation

Ġemedede (pl., ġemed): the stony foot of a ġâl

Ġer: a region covered with white or gray sand, where nothing will grow

Ġhara: a desolate plain

Ġîlf: a steep, narrow, rough ridge

Ġûba (pl., ġûbât): a deep valley; a basin in a plain

Ġubb: an artificial well with spring water

Ġufra (pl., ġfâr or ġafar): low ground in a plain, where rain water gathers

Ġurf: a crevice; steep river bank

Ĥabâra: mouse holes

Ĥabb (pl., ĥbûb): long, narrow strip of rocky land bordered by sand dunes

Ĥabče: narrow, elongated depression as much as three meters wide and filled with rain water

- Habiĵe*: a rain water hole
- Habîr*: stony hollow forming a passage between long sand dunes
- Habl* (pl., ĥbâl): a narrow long sand drift
- Habra* (pl., ĥabâri): a large or small depression in a plain in which the rain water gathers
- Habt*: a basin covered with gravel and sand, where small ponds are sometimes formed by rain water which cannot run off
- Ĥadaĥ*: a round hole in either clayey or stony, but soft, soil into which water runs
- Ĥadlûl* (pl., ĥadâlîl): shallow valley without a visible channel
- Ĥala'*: volcano
- Ĥala'*: a region where the camels will find no sustenance in any particular year; all that lies beyond the camp
- Ĥâlât*: an area covered with basalt or lava, through which neither horse nor man can move except by a few very narrow paths
- Ĥalîže*: an artificial, subterranean hollow; a cave
- Ĥalk al-želîb*: the opening of a well
- Ĥall*: a path or trail through the sand
- Ĥamâd*: a barren, scorched-appearing plain covered with small gravel
- Ĥarbata*: a region of rough hillocks
- Ĥarîme* (pl., ĥarâjem): a narrow gully shut in by steep hillsides
- Ĥarîže* (pl., ĥarâjež): a shallow well (from which water can be drawn by hand)
- Ĥasa'*: rocky lowland covered with a layer of clay, sand, and gravel, under which the rain water gathers
- Ĥaša'*: gravel
- Ĥašm* (pl., ĥšûm): a "nose" or steep spur of a ridge
- Ĥawâja*: shallow, artificial, stone- and mud-walled reservoirs on a rocky surface, where rain water is caught
- Ĥawĥa*: a fenced-in date grove
- Ĥazba* or ĥazb (pl., ahzâb): an extensive but isolated rocky hill
- Ĥazm*: a rather narrow but long height sinking down into a plain steeply on the one side and gradually on the other
- Ĥebĝe*: undulating country where it is possible to hide but also to be attacked from ambush
- Ĥefne*: a round hole by the river bank or at the foot of a hillside, where rain water gathers; it resembles the radîr hole, but the latter is usually found in the river bed itself

Hejd: the foot of a hill; a slope shutting in a plain

Ĥemma or ĥamme: lava

Ĥerr (pl., ĥerara): a river channel in clay soil, with steep banks

Ĥesw (pl., ĥesjân): a depression in a rocky river bed into which the rain water runs under sand and gravel

Ĥôr: a depression where the rain water forms numerous pools

Ĥšabe (pl., ĥšabât): a circular, natural rocky wall shutting in small level spaces called krajje (pl., krajjât)

Ĥubta: a depression in a flat rock, where rain water can accumulate

Ĥta: undulating plain covered in places with sand

Kâ (pl., žîân): a flat plain where the rain water forms no brooks

Kâara (pl., ka'ar): a large hollow shut in on three sides by steep slopes

Kara or aḵra: a ridge

Kâra (pl., ḵûr): an isolated table mountain; a mesa

Kaš'a (pl., ḵšâ'): a shallow natural depression in a rocky surface, where the rain water remains

Kašime (pl., ḵašâjem): isolated sand dunes in a rocky plain

Kasr: a large but shallow basin which becomes a pond after unusually heavy rains

Kaṭar (pl., ḵṭâr): the last spur of a mountain range

Kaṭṭâr: a spring the water of which does not flow actively but merely trickles drop by drop

Kejš: shallow holes in a channel

Kenna: an isolated conical hill on top of which a beacon is lit whenever the enemy means to attack herds grazing far from the camp

Kîr or ḥummar: bitumen

Krajje (pl., krajjât): roughly circular basin surrounded by walls of crumbling stone

Lâl: a level plain glistening in the sun

Laššâfa: a hillock with mica

Luruf: the eroded border of a sand desert

Mahâl: a great distance between two wells

Mahâri: the last spurs of a range of hillocks

Mahfûr (pl., mahâfîr): artificial rain pool

- Maḥîra*: a small flat area flooded and thus fertilized by rain water
- Marabb*: low-lying ground where the rain water of a channel is absorbed
- Maşmad* (pl., maşâmed): an extensive but shallow crevice at the foot of a hillside, where the rain water remains. It is of greater dimensions than the žalta
- Maşnaʿ* (pl., maşâneʿ): a rocky flat area artificially changed into a large reservoir
- Maṭabb*: a junction of two channels
- Matne*: flat-topped elevation rising gradually from the surrounding plain
- Maʿw*: hollow on two sides bounded by sand dunes and on two merging into rocky plain
- Mefâze*: barren tract between two camping grounds
- Meğneb*: a slope shutting in a valley through which a creek runs
- Mehîr* (pl., maḥâjer): a basin where much water is absorbed; small hole in clay soil where the rain water accumulates
- Mehmehijje*: waterless desert
- Melaʿ*: a plain covered with a thin layer of alluvium
- Mellâḥa*: salina
- Meżîʿ* (pl., meżʿân): a shallow branch channel in a valley through which the rain water runs off into the main channel
- Mizʿâze*: the highest conical hill near a camp, whence warning signals can be given to herdsman and watchers on similar hills near other camps
- Mšâš*: a shallow well in a clay basin into which rain water slowly percolates through the soil
- Mukra* or moḵr (pl., mḵûr): half natural, half artificial well, five to ten meters deep, dug in a rock, into which the rain water flows. The opening, which is usually narrow, can be covered with a stone of moderate size
- Muntâr*: a conical hill
- Mutribe*: a path through a lava field
- Nab*: spring water
- Nâziye* (pl., nawâzi): a vast sand plain
- Nâzra*: height conspicuous from afar
- Nebaʿ* (pl., nebjân): isolated dome-shaped hillock
- Nedra*: spur of a rock
- Nedwijje*: a small spring disappearing in gravel

Nî: a ditch around a tent for draining off the rain water

Nijât: a boundless stony plain

Nukra: basin into which much rain water runs

Nurur (pl., nurûr): a hillock composed of white and dark strata

Obta: a deep basin

Ra'an (pl., ra'ân): a line of rocky hillocks

Rabh: the small stones which scatter under the hoofs of a galloping camel

Radha: a cavity in a stony slope, into which rain water runs

Radîfa (pl., radâjef): a low spot in a wide, shallow river bed where the rain water gathers

Radîr (pl., rudrân or rudr): a hole in a channel with steep banks where rain water remains for a long time

Rahârîh: a wide plain glistening in the sun

Rakrûka: a plain covered with small, crumbled stones

Râr: a precipice; crevice; canyon

Rarb (pl., rurûb): a reservoir from which water is distributed

Ġarmûl (pl., Ġarâmîl): an isolated, low, narrow hill

Rasm: an artificial well left unfinished

Raşrâş (or raşrâşijje): a plain with rock surfaces worn flat by wind and sand, with pebbles and gravel scattered around. When a camel treads on such pebbles, the friction against the rocky surface produces a sound not unlike the word raşraş, which gives such plains their name

Reġde (pl., riġdât): a stratum of solid rock in a steep slope

Rî: a narrow, short defile

Rîf: a region with good pasture, good crops

Riġle (pl., riġl): a shallow valley, particularly one tributary to a main valley

Rîşijje or rîše: a shallow valley in an undulating stony plain

Riss (pl., rsûs): a well without water

Rowz (pl., rîzân): lower ground in a level desert, into which silt is deposited by rain water, producing a growth of perennials, sometimes even of annuals; a meadow

Ruzuma: a stone, boulder, rock

Ša'ara: a spring which merely trickles and does not flow

Sabha: salt marsh

Ša'fe: an elevation not necessarily high, but prominent

Safha (pl., şfâh): the base of a mountain

Šâheċ (pl., şhûċ or şehzân): the highest summit of a range

- Ṣaḥl* (pl., shûl): a narrow channel dammed-in by rocks, where rain water accumulates under gravel
- Ṣaḥṣaḥ*: a plain shut in by low but steep bluffs
- Ŝâma* (pl., šâmât): hills of different colors; dark undulating country covered in some places with rose-tinged sand
- Ŝa'nûn*: a deep well with no water
- Ŝarâhîğ* or şahârîğ: deep rock crevices with a narrow opening where the rain water remains pure for a long time
- Sarḥa*: a plain covered with young annuals
- Ŝatne*: short branch valley; a shallow channel in a plain
- Ŝawwâne*: tract or hill covered with flints, şawwân
- Ŝedawijje*: a plain covered with dark-brown gravel
- Ŝe'en*: creek
- Ŝefa'*: a flat top of a long ridge
- Ŝeffa* (pl., şfâf): the brink of a plateau sinking steeply down to a valley
- Ŝe'ib* (pl., şe'ibân or şe'bân): a main valley or watercourse of an intermittent stream
- Selîl al-ma'*: a wild torrent, appearing and disappearing with equal suddenness
- Semâḥ*: a plain covered with coarse sand, with nothing to hinder rapid movement
- Şen'* (pl., şnû'): an artificial hollow in a rocky surface, where rain water remains
- Senûd*: the upper parts of a valley
- Ŝerje*: narrow gully
- Sihl*: a crevice in a stony plain, where rain water remains a long time
- Sirdâb*: subterranean passage
- Sowḥ* (pl., sîḥân or sijâḥ): a valley without a channel or with one partly filled in; shallow depression
- Ŝrejf*: a narrow mountain spur
- Ŝwâhîğ*: small paths
- Ŝwâhîż*: high, steep, impassable mountains
- Ṭablât* or ṭbûl: hollow knolls, domes, or "bubbles"
- Ṭaffa* (pl., ṭfâf): a plateau cleft by a deep valley
- Ṭâğ*: the opening of a snake hole
- Tanhağ* (pl., tanâheğ): a hillock serving as a landmark
- Ṭâr*: a long, high, steep escarpment
- Ṭarab* (pl., ṭurbân): a crevice in a rock or a small hole in a rocky gully, where rain water gathers

Tarak (pl., trâk or trâk): a long, low ridge

Tel (pl., tlâ): a small gully ending in a tributary of a main valley

Tell (pl., tlâl): an isolated hill standing high above the surrounding country; volcano

Temîle (pl., temâjel): a small depression in a rocky river bed, into which the rain water runs under the gravel

Tenijje (pl., tenâja): a mountain defile; passage between two rows of tents

Tomijje: hillocks, slopes, and depressions formed in sand by the wind

Ûd: a narrow valley in rocks

Wâdi (pl., wudijân): a long and wide main valley

Waššâš: cascade

Wizij (pl., wuzâje): cavities in the solid stony strata of a steep hillside

Wuți: ditch around a tent for draining off the rain water

Žadme: a projection from a rocky hillside

Žalta (pl., žlât): a crevice in a rocky slope, at least one meter deep, where rain water accumulates

Zel: an isolated, rugged mountain, usually of granite

Želîb (pl., kulbân): a well, whether walled and deep or unwalled and wide

Zemle (pl., zempl): a low elevation; a rise

Zerâže: vast arid plains

Zobot (pl., zubtân): the clay foot of a ğâl.

INDEX

INDEX

The positions of place names occurring on the author's map of Northern Arabia accompanying his Arabia Deserta, The Middle Euphrates, Palmyrena, and Northern Neġd, New York, 1927—1928, are indicated in the index in parentheses by key letters and figures referring to the quadrangles on the map. The letters SM refer to the author's map of Southern Mesopotamia which accompanies his The Middle Euphrates.

Brief, non-technical characterizations are given in parentheses for the majority of the Arabic botanical terms. The Latin names of such plants as have been identified by J. Velenovský¹ are also given.

- Ab-. See main part of topographical proper name
- Ab-al-Hejl, member of the 'Aneze, 46
- Ab-as-Snūn, kin of the Hraša clan of the Fed'ān, 643
- Ab-at-thejh, reptile, 42
- Al-'Abd (m11), 211, 212
- Al-'Abd w-Awlādeh (h6—7), 657
- 'Abdal'azīz eben Met'eb eben Rašid (1897—1906), 305
- 'Abdal'ērīm (or 'Abdalkerīm) āl Ġarba', 317, 551
- 'Abdallāh eben 'Ali eben Rašid (1834—1847), 57, 301—304, 307, 308
- 'Abdallāh eben Hasan eben 'Askar, 295, 299
- 'Abdallāh eben Mešreb, 48
- 'Abdallāh eben Ša'lān, 57; descendants of, 583, 585, 636
- 'Abdallāh eben Sbejjel, lord of the oasis of Nefi, 182, 292, 297—300
- 'Abdallāh al-Maṭrūd, 182, 184, 297, 303, 308, 311
- 'Abde, tribe of the Šammar in Mesopotamia, 566, 568; tribe of the Šammar in Neġd (o11—r16), 301, 302, 441
- 'Abdelle, clan of al-Mihlef, 139, 509, 595, 630, 650—652
- Abdul-Hamid II (1876—1909), 603
- 'Abejče, Eben, mayor of Kna', 467
- Al-'Abid of the Hsene, 644
- 'Ablān, Eben, of the 'Adwān tribe, 194, 199
- 'Abtān, a Kmāši, 444
- 'Abtān of the Āl 'Īsa, 661 [name]
- Abu. See main part of topographical proper
- Abu Bejdar, 285—287
- Abu-d-Dhūr, tribal emblem, 540, 571—574, 605, 631, 632. See also Al-Markab and Tribal emblem
- Abu Farḥān. See Muḥammad eben Dūḥi eben Smejir
- Abu Ġabha (or Fanḥūr abu Ġabha), chief of the Mtejrāt, 612, 615
- Abu-l-Ḥala, Rwala's name for every Šlubi, 325
- Abu ḥamad. See Żabb
- Abu Mājele, 520
- Abu Maṣūr (or Saṭṭām eben Ša'lān), 612, 616
- Abu Nawās, 659
- Abu Nawwāf. See An-Nūri eben Hazzā' eben Ša'lān
- Abu Rašid, 171, 172
- Abu Reġa' of as-Selka, 636
- Abu Rīmān, a Bedouin, 366
- Abu Rwejs eben Ġarallāh, 566, 568
- Abu Šāma, ruling house of the Serāḥin near Hajbar, 57
- Abu Sbejjel, 181. See also 'Abdallāh eben Sbejjel
- Abu Tājeḥ, ruling house of the Hwētāt, 603, 604, 610, 612
- Abu Tamad, a Kwēčbi, 227, 228
- Abu Zejd, hero of stories, 12, 13, 291, 292
- Academy of Sciences, Vienna, xiii
- Adam and serpent, 23; descendants of ∞ slay serpents, 23
- Ādān (or Āl Īden, kin of the Rwala), 288
- Adjuration, 435; ġira, 460
- 'Adrūb, a Rwejli, 141
- 'Adūb eben Meġwel, 59
- 'Adwān, tribe in al-Belka', 168, 192, 193, 198; southeast of Mecca, 264
- Al-'Afājeḥ, Tlūl (e12—13), 413, 414
- 'Āfet, a Bedouin, 500
- 'Aġāġ al-Msēḥi, a Rwejli, 138
- Aġda', Āl, kin of the al-Mwājġe clan of the 'Ebede, 427
- 'Aġel al-Jāḳin, 588, 589
- 'Aġla, camel's name, 335
- 'Aġmān, tribe, 130, 184
- Al-Aġradi, Barēt (q20), 301
- Al-'Aġrafi, a Dahmaši, 501, 502

¹ J. Velenovský, Plantae arabicae ex ultimo itinere A. Musili a. 1915: constituting Věstník král. české společnosti nauk. Třída II. na rok 1921—1922 (Mémoires de la Société Royale des Sciences de Bohême, Classe des Sciences, 1921—1922), No. 6, Prague, 1923; idem, Plantae arabicae Musilianae, constituting: Věstník král. české společnosti nauk. Třída matematicko-přirodovědecká (Sitzungsberichte der königl. böhm. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, Math.-naturwiss. Classe), 1911, No. 11, Prague, 1912.

'Ağram (shrub with long, stiff branches and scaled, needle-shaped leaves; resembles rimt), 338
 Agreements, must be made carefully, 394
 Al-'Ağrumijjât, Ĥabâri (111), 577
 'Ağrumijje swamps, 501
 Ahâli-l-Kerak, inhabitants of al-Kerak, 50
 Ahejzer, Āl or Eben, 414
 Ahejzer, Kaşr eben (or Āl) (h18—19), 155, 243
 Ahl al-Ġebel, inhabitants of Ġebel Ĥawrân, 50, 434, 660
 Ahl 'Īsa (or Āl 'Īsa), clan of the Ahl al-Ġebel, 615, 660
 Ahl aš-Šemâl, 138, 615, 641, 642, 658
 Aḥu Bnejje al-Jemini, 436
 Aḥu Dinja (or Nâjef aḥu Dinja), 588, 589
 Aḥu Kuṭne, head chief of the Fed'ân, 558
 Aḥu Šâha, war leader of the Aslam, 566, 567
 Aḥu Šita (or Eben Ša'lan), 563
 A'îd, negro, 579, 580
 Al-Ājde, division of the Weld 'Ali, 319, 320
 'Aḳâb, a Bedouin, 192, 193, 196
 'Aḳejl, camel traders, 112, 219, 278—281, 314, 315, 348, 439; tent of, 62
 'Aḳejli, member of the 'Aḳejl, 279—281, 315, 646
 'Aḳlat. See proper name
 Āl. See main part of proper name
 Al-'Ala' (b5—6), 536
 Alarm cry, giving of, 518, 525, 559; recalling Alarm fires lit, 386 [of, 525]
 Alarms sent from tall cones, 543
 'Alejje, Riğm (n16), 618
 Aleppo, 184, 239, 441
 Alexandretta, 184
 'Ali, kin of the 'Aḳejl, 315
 'Ali, Āl or Eben, ruling house of the Šammar, 300, 301, 303, 312, 313
 'Ali, Eben, chief of the Ĥreše, 611, 615
 'Ali al-Fḳiḳi, chief of the 'Ebede, 533, 534
 'Ali al-Ĥâzemi, 212
 'Ali ibn Abi Tâleb (d. 661), 314, 403, 454
 'Alja', camel herds of the Rwala, 262, 420, 516, 526, 550, 594, 595, 601, 610, 614
 'Alja, camel's name, 335
 'Alja, sweetheart of Abu Zejd, 12, 13
 'Aljân, camel herds of the Rwala, 262. See also 'Alja' Allâh, adds to a man's days, 139; adds waiting soul to that of the pregnant mother, 673; and guest, 461, 462, 469; and sacrifice of the sorcerers, 402; and virginity, 240; and vows, 420—425; anger of, 421, 427; assures against treachery, 529, 563, 571; bestows love, 135, 221; blesses camels, 329; blesses fighters, 610; blesses tent, 229; breathed the soul of the first man into the nostrils, 673; brings kinsfolk together, 260, 265; brings pasture, 6; built heaven, 625; called to witness, 426; carries out what He desires, 86; comforts, 174, 209, 210; created all spirits, 411; created no horses in Arabia, 371; created the night, 260; creates men, 160; creator of wealth, 474; cures man, 668; curses, 394; cuts fate, 345; decides between enemies, 594; decides fate, 323, 422, 670; desires welfare, 652; destroys, 394, 395; does not permit suicide, 655; dwells

in both paradise and hell, 675; dwells in heart, 211; enthroned above the earth, 272; exalts a man's name in this world and hereafter, 493; expands heart with joy, 463; facilitates vengeance, 529; fear of ∞ assures conjugal fidelity, 563; for Allâh's sake thieves are let go free, 116; forgiver, 172, 394, 512; given praise for protection against enemy, 658; gives chance of eating, 87; gives clear mind, 261; gives prey to wolves, 611; gives rain, 7, 260, 542, 610; gives signs by means of Abu-d-Dhûr, 574; gives victory, 578; good, 290; gracious, 542; grants boy, 244; grants favor, 434; grants forgiveness and paradise, 323; grants good news, 541; grants life, 538; grants luck, 364, 512, 524; grants lucky guidance, 541; grants security, 455; grants success, 291, 420, 456, 508, 625; has forbidden some things, 86; has pity on men, 172; heals broken bones, 305; heals cholera, 424; helps men, 172, 563; helps paupers, 453; helps to destroy an enemy, 528, 546, 547, 595, 606, 612; honored by prayers, 135; increases strength, 644; increases welfare, 463; invisible, 675; judges between men, 117; knows all secrets, 197; knows all things, 290; knows hell torments, 675; knows working of love, 144; law and tradition of, 466; leads raiders, 507, 600, 607; liberates from disease, 668; light and right of, 430; looks after the Bedouins, 86; Lord of stairs leading to the heights, 512; Lord of this world, 477; makes fate clear, 323; makes something deceitful, 178; makes sound sleep possible, 398; merciful, 6, 116, 642, 670; merciful to dead, 673; messenger of, 7; migration of, 675; moderation for the sake of, 197; most generous, 546; name of, 265, 311; obeyed by clouds, 6; obeyed by souls, 669; omnipotent, 671; omnipresent, 675; one only, 213; opens the child's nostrils and puts the life into its body, 673; opens the gate of freedom, 474; permits dead to visit their kin in dreams, 675; power of ∞ eminent, 430; preserves health, 456, 461, 462; preserves travelers, 463; prevents blood flowing, 529; prolongs life, 12, 612, 645, 647; protection of ∞ asked, 497; protects against evil eye, 311; protects children, 11; protects hoisted bucket, 343; protects man, 30, 95, 163, 265, 271; punishes, 401; punishes anger, 254; punishes sins, 172, 674; punishes perjury, 429; punishes those who persecute seers, 401, 402; punishes untrue finder, 453, 454; punishes with sickness, 168; pursues the enemy of the Rwala, 627; puts life into the man as well as into the animal, 673; quick of hearing, 474; reads hearts, 421; remembered at the beginning of every purpose, 290; removes evil, 448; replaces dead, 671; restores fortunes, 210; returns the distant, 421, 422; rewards, 116; rewards sufferers, 272; rids of disturbers, 402; rules man, 7, 344; saves from evil, 114; saves life, 490, 491, 493; sees everything, 675; sends angel to drive the clouds, 6, 7; sends breeze, 18; sends celestial spirits to men, 411; sends dreams, 395, 396,

- 509; sends food, 652, 653; sends leader, 406; sends rain clouds, 7, 419; sends sufferings, 671; sends those who have sinned against their tribe to dalfāt, 342; shapes women, 143; spokesman of, 396, 400, 401; spokesman of ∞ in the shape of a rider seated on a white mare, 400; steadfast in his decisions, 591; strong, 6; swearing by, 2, 54, 183, 193, 196—198, 200, 213, 218, 219, 221, 227, 303, 317, 318, 346, 361, 423, 426, 429, 434, 436, 453, 462, 472, 537, 556, 562, 564, 565, 578, 599, 610, 633, 646, 546, 669; takes soul to himself, 652, 653; tongue of ∞ truthful, 430; trusted in by raiders, 642; weighs both the good deeds and the sins of the deceased, 674; weights of ∞ are just, 430; whitens face, 452, 493; will of, 524, 595, 604, 652, 658; wills success, 396; witness, 651
- Allium atrovioleaceum*, Boiss. See Karrāt
- ‘Allūs, Eben, of the ‘Ebede, 427
- ‘Allūs, Eben (or Mešhen eben ‘Allūs), 432, 433
- ‘Alūb as-Sidr, tavern on the Āmbār-Bagdad
- Al-‘Amad, Umm, 605 [road, 314, 315
- ‘Amārāt, tribe (h12—16), 46, 82, 85, 131, 148, 250, 291, 292, 304, 309, 420, 440, 449, 503, 521, 522, 546, 551, 574, 638, 641, 646
- Al-Ambār (SM f 10), 315
- Ambaṭ, Kasr (m-n15), 650, 651
- ‘Amer, Eben, settler of Čāf, 220
- ‘Āmež, Š. (f14), 416, 648
- ‘Amlūš ab-al-Wkal, 286, 287
- Ammunition belt, 131, 559
- ‘Amra’, camel’s name, 335
- ‘Amša, mother of Fāres āl Ġarba’, 274, 275
- ‘Amūd, Tell (j10), 78
- ‘Am‘ūm, a Bedouin, 364
- Anarrhinum orientale*, Bth. See Mwāṣal
- ‘Anejza (q15), 111, 112
- ‘Anejzān, Eben, 659
- ‘Aneze, xiii, 134, 137, 184, 267, 279, 292, 304, 419, 440, 441, 533; division of, 46
- Angel, angry with Bedouins, 4; announces Allāh’s will, 400, 411; brings success, 625; causes lightning and thunder, 6; death ∞ visits men, 545; kills a disobedient seer, 400; rides a white mare, 400; rides camels, 7; rules over the rain clouds, 6, 14; speaks to seers, 402
- Animals, bad and good signs of, 392, 394, 395; given as recompense for a man killed by them, 499; protection of, 443, 446
- Al-‘Anḳari. See Fejṣal al-‘Anḳari
- Annuals, essential for rabī‘, 16, 542; sprout after abundant at-trajjāwi rain, 226
- Ant, 43; and umm sālem, 41
- ‘Antar, hero of tales, 292
- Antelope, 26; hunted by the Šlejḅ, 325; use of ∞ skin, 325
- Appeal to a board of judges, 431, 435, 436
- Arabian desert, 185, 345
- Arabic letters, transliteration of, xiii, xiv
- Arabs, are inhabitants of black tents, 44; 42, 44, 45, 141, 155, 161, 163—165, 172, 203, 222, 223, 247, 264, 326, 346, 367, 423, 425, 461, 468, 497, 500, 516, 574, 594, 597, 600, 602, 606, 618, 621, 642—644, 646; of Rāši, 222
- ‘Arād (shrub with thin branches and yellowish, hairy leaves; resembles rāte), 338
- ‘Arājeṭ, mares or camels looted and later rescued, 620
- ‘Arāza or ‘arza, proclamation of fidelity to the chief, 81, 526, 561, 578, 605
- ‘Arej‘er, Āl, ruling house of the Beni Ḥāled, 215
- Al-‘Arejž (n9—o10), 38
- Al-‘Ārez, 367
- ‘Arfa, camel herds of the Sba‘a, 81, 449, 535
- Al-‘Arfaḡijje, 301, 302
- Aristida plumosa*, L. See Naši
- Arḳaṭ (i10), 418
- Armor worn under the clothes, 388
- ‘Arsān abu Židle, 594
- Arṭa* (Calligonum comosum, L.; nearly leafless shrub with scaled branches, clusters of small flowers, and nut-shaped hairy fruit), 231, 337; serves as wisp, 473
- ‘Arūḡ, Eben, chief of the Beni Lām, 188, 367
- ‘Arza. See ‘Arāzž
- Al-‘Āši, Orontes (b—c5), 657
- Al-‘Āši eben Farḡān, chief of the Aslam, 566—568
- ‘Asir eben ‘Awde al-Kwēčbi, 244
- Al-Aškar, nickname of Sa‘dūn, head chief of the Muntifež, 557
- ‘Askar, Eben. See ‘Abdallāh eben Ḥasan eben ‘Askar
- Aslam, tribe of the Šammar in Mesopotamia, 566, 568, 569; tribe of the Šammar in Neḡd (r17—p20), 441
- Al-‘Assāfijje (p9), 205
- Asses, pure-blood ∞ bred by the Šlejḅ, 197
- ‘Ašwān eben Ibrāhīm eben Dāper eben Žeri eben Mešreb, 48, 653, 655
- ‘Atejbe, 264, 298, 364, 628
- ‘Atejbi, member of the ‘Atejbe, 362
- Al-‘Āten, a Šarāri, 486
- ‘Atfa, fancy litter, 214—216, 540, 541, 546, 571; lost forever, if captured by the enemy, 215, 396, 397, 541
- ‘Atijje, Beni (m4—p6), 136, 584, 613, 614
- Atriplex*, L. See Ḳaṭaf
- Atriplex dimorphostegia*, K. K. See Rorejla
- Atriplex leucoclada*, Boiss. See Rorol
- Attack, 523—530; after midnight or shortly before sunrise prohibited among beni al-‘amm; 47; announced by an alarm cry, 107; causes panic in camp, 173; feint ∞ made to draw attention elsewhere, 651; frequent when the dew has evaporated, 385; honorable, 523; made by the horse riders, 305; noise during, 251; on a migrating tribe, 107; prohibited among friends, 449, 603, 614; riders in an ∞ clothed in their gray shirts, 614
- Author, poem composed in honor of the, 291
- ‘Awāḡi, Āl, clan of the Weld Slejmān, 170, 171, 596, 648
- ‘Awde abu Burkān al-Kwēčbi, 147, 212, 224—228, 244, 386, 430, 484, 487, 488, 588, 599, 613, 614, 631, 633, 634
- ‘Awde abu Tājeḅ, 528, 613
- ‘Awejnān eben Sa‘id, judge, 427, 447

- 'Awēnān eben Sa'īd, a Kīmāsi, 499
 'Awğa, camel's name, 335
 Awlād Gam'ān (Da'mān, Nşejr, and Şlās eben Sa'lān), 587, 589
 Awlād al-Ḥala (or Şlejib), 325
 Awlād Maşhūr of the reigning kin of Eben Sa'lān, 636
 Awlād Rānem (or Şlejib), 325
 'Awna, Helper, name of a mare, 383
 'Awseğ (Lycium arabicum, Schw.; dense thorny shrub with sweet reddish berries) inhabited by spirits, 416
 'Awwād eben Tāḥūs of the Milḥāk kin of the Swālme clan, 436, 437
 'Aẓāẓre, clan of the Fed'ān, 641, 650
 'Azejb eben Mow'ed, chief of the Şājeḥ kin of the Aslam, 569
 'Azejb eben Mow'ed, Rwejlī hero, 517, 518
 'Azem, despised tribe of Arabia, 136
 Al-'Aẓēr, Arabian harbor on the Persian Gulf, 280
 Al-'Azīb (b—c7), 412
 'Azīl eben Meğlād, 546
 'Azīz eben Ştēwi of the as-Shejm clan of the Kmuşa, 427
 Al-Azrak (i5), 28, 40, 570
 'Azzām, sword of Ġdē' eben Haddāl, 85
- Badger, 22, 30
 Bagdad, Āl Sālem live in, 279; commercial caravans from ∞ to Syria, 315; commercial relations of 'Anejza with, 112; peddler from, 125; road from Damascus to, 420
 Baḥatri (Erodium cicutarium, L.; Erodium pulverulentum, L.; gray herb with reddish flower heads), 95, 271
 Bājer, Kaşr (j6—7), 415
 Baķ'a (q15—16), 389
 Baķara bint Ḥmār abu 'Awwād, 244
 Bakr, Eben. See Maş'ān eben Bakr
 Balḥa, camel's name, 335
 Banana bush, 323
 Barakāt, aš-Şerif, 484
 Barakāt eben Ştēwi, 648
 Barēt. See proper name
 Barğas eben Hdejib, 449, 521
 Barğas eben Maşhūr (d. 1859), 58
 Barğas eben Wājel, 641, 642
 Al-Barķ (i10), 418
 Barraş eben Sa'īd, 427
 Barri eben Dārer eben Zeri eben Meşreb, 48
 Al-Barrīt (i17), 654, 655
 Basalt area, difficult access to, 614
 Bāşeķ or ḫala, hawk, 35
 Al-Başra, agents of Eben Bassām in, 278; apricots of, 213; camels sold in, 279, 628; district of ∞ settled, 214; imitation of St. Etienne rifles manufactured in, 134; Turkish troops march from ∞ to al-Ḥasa, 184
 Bassām, settlement in al-Kaşīm, 278
 Bassām, Eben, 278, 279
 Bassia muricata, L. See Orejnbe
 Baṭṭa bint 'Awwād, a recognized sorceress, 402
 Al-Baṭīn, basin east of Edra'āt, 532
 Baṭṭāḥ (or Smejir), Eben, 427
- Battle, 578, 596, 597, 601, 606, 619—622; in a ∞ riders bare their heads, 247. See also War
 Battāş, plant with red fruits, 172
 Bauer, Archbishop Dr. František, Olomouc, xiii
 Bawwa, bird, 39
 Bāz, sparrow hawk, 35
 Al-Bdūni, stud horse of the Mtejir tribe, 384, 385
 Bdūr (Oppressed) of the Eşāğea, 509; have an unlucky sign, 391
 Beard, 115; cutting of chin ∞ great insult, 116, 117, 341, 587, 589; shaved in a dream is bad omen, 398
 Bedouins are those who spend the greater part of the year in the interior of the desert and who breed mostly camels, 45
 Bees, 43
 Begetting, faculty of ∞ strengthened or destroyed by witches, 407
 Beggars, 452
 Belha, camel herds, 636
 Belhān eben Mnazzel, 443, 444
 Beli, tribe, 584, 613
 Al-Belķa, 191—193, 387, 583, 585
 Belts fasten the towb and zebān, 119; on bare bodies, 118, 150, 313; on bare bodies loosened in litters, 259; over the dress of wealthy women, 254
 Bender eben Haddāl, 637
 Bender eben Tālāl eben Raşīd (d. 1869), 309
 Benefactors, recognition of, 452
 Beni. See main part of proper name Berīm al-Bint (f10), 649
 Berzān in Ḥājel, 183—185
 Bewitched person cured by fumigation, 408
 Bewitching, faculty of ∞ destroyed by eating human excrement, 408, 409
 Bezī' eben 'Arej'er, 184
 Al-Beẓze (near al-Mzêrib), 366, 367
 Bhejder, a chief from the Frege, 59
 Al-Bijāz (i10—11), 78
 Bird (r9—10), 227, 228
 Birds, 31—41; brought down from the air by the evil eye, 409; heart thrown away, 97; of prey, 31—37; of prey level the floors of their nests, 271
 Bişr, ancestor of the Fed'ān, Sba'a, and 'Amā-rāt, 420
 Al-Bişri (b—a10), 307, 309, 458, 637, 642
 Black, flag indicates dishonor, 451; tent canvas on the neck of a camel indicates sad event, 604
 Blacksmiths, 281, 282; cure sick, 198; forbidden to marry Bedouins, 136, 137, 297; receive flesh from slaughtered camels, 96
 Blechová, Anna, xiv
 Blejhān eben Ibrāḥīm eben Dārer eben Zeri eben Meşreb, xiii, 48, 81, 83, 179, 180, 273, 404, 418, 420, 424, 425, 432—434, 443, 641, 643, 645, 647, 649, 655
 Blisters caused by uneven saddle, 262
 Blood, of an enemy drunk, 527, 528; of killed animals left for earthly spirits, 411; of slaughtered camels eaten, 97; of the sacrificed animal sprinkled on the tombstone, 418, 420; sprinkled toward world quarters, 672

- Blood feud, aid in a ∞ is gratis, 493; rewards of the court in judgments of, 437
- Blood marks, on a guest's camel, 463, 467, 469, 470; on the face of a man, 423, 425
- Blood price, abatement of, 492, 493; arrangements for payment of, 491—493; among beni al-'amm, 47; among unrelated tribes, 47; for an eloper, 138; for caused miscarriage, 494
- Blood relationship, derived from the father's side, 46, 47; granted to unrelated tribes, 47; representative of, 49
- Blunt, W. S., 58
- Bnejje, Eben, kin of the Rwala, 57, 95, 303, 304
- Bombay, Eben Bassâm in, 278
- Booty, capturing of, 524; desired, 459; disputed, 432—435; division of, 510, 511; not shared by independent leaders, 579; returned to a girl, 530; securing of, 524, 531; songs of, 537
- Boşra, 58, 266
- Boşra bint 'Orejč, a soothsayer of the Ĥa-wâzem tribe, 405
- Boulders believed to be spirits' herds, 415
- Box, 113; rare and admired, 320
- Boys, can be begotten on the night from Thursday to Friday, 231; circumcised, 244—255; games of, 256—258; boys increase mother's esteem, 254; newly born destroyed by earthly spirits, 417; small ∞ must not go on a raid, 508
- Bradân (f18), 656
- Bravery, 471, 472; depicted, 514, 515, 545; in war, 483; of a commander, 483, 526, 527
- Bread, baking of, 91, 92; convex sheet of iron for baking, 72; kinds of, 92
- Breakfast, pancake bread for ∞ for guests, 92; unknown, 87, 385
- Brejda in al-Ĥasim, 357
- Al-Brêtiĵje (p8), 604
- Bride, compensation for, 139, 222; compensation for a ∞ among the 'Adwân, 193; dowry, 139, 140; dowry belongs to the ∞ only, 236; dowry of a ∞ bought by husband, 229; dowry of a ∞ not returned easily, 235; fixed price for, 193; al-muĥalledât gifts for a ∞ among unrelated families, 445
- Brother-protector receives tax, 60, 280, 281
- Bsejĵel* (species of onion), 95
- Btejjen eben Midbaĥ eben Meršed, 418
- Btejnât, clan of the al-'Amîra division of the Ĥmuşa, 427, 643
- Bulbs enjoyed, 15
- Burial, 670, 671
- Burĥu' (g8), 641, 650, 657, 658
- Burying places not permanent, 418
- Bushes inhabited by spirits, 416
- Butter, for guests only, 468; may not be sold, 129; measured in a pear-shaped vessel, 130; dropped into a parched throat, 95, 655
- Buţum* tree, 95
- Bwêza, camel's name, 335
- Al-Ĥa'aĥi, še'ib of (h13—14), 415
- Ĥâf (j7), 94, 220, 227
- Caftan, worn by women, 124; silk ∞ , mezâwi, worn by wealthy women, 178
- Cairo, agent of Eben Bassâm in, 278
- Calendula aegyptiaca*, Desf. See Henwa
- Calendula micrantha*, Boiss. See Henwa
- Calligonum comosum*, L. See Arĥa
- Camels, 329—370; accompanied by ravens, 36; abandoned ∞ caught during a raid are handed over to the commander, 510; and Ġibrin, 5; appellatives of, 12; bald spot on the right shoulder blade proof of long journeys, 365; best riding ∞ raised by the Šarârât, 165, 291, 298; big with young entitled to protection, 550; big with young frightened easily 549; big with young not sold, 320; black predominate in Neġd, 264; black ∞ raised by the 'Atejbe, 364; branded, 312; broad and bony, 158; calves killed if weaklings, 209; calves of ∞ journeying far killed, 194; calves prevented from suckling, 89, 298; calves suck strange, 87, 88; calves without herdman's care would perish, 221; cared for by son or daughter, 262; cautious mountain climbers, 168; colors of, 165, 334, 335, 343; cured by flesh of short snakes, 42; dislike settled territory, 226; examined, 320; exchanged for arms and ammunition, 280; exchanged for wares, 270; exhausted ∞ cannot be frightened, 589; fat boiled and preserved is preferred to butter, 97; fat or marrow used for rubbing hide, 70; fat ∞ liked, 155; fatten rapidly eating râte, 600; feeble ∞ left on the camping ground, 197; find no pasture in the neighborhood of settlements, 312; flesh as food, 96, 97; forced to go fast, 592; frightened easily, 299; frightened purposely, 637; frightened ∞ run away, 524, 549, 550; give milk to their young, 476; good qualities in, 294, 295, 298, 320, 334, 355; good-tempered, enduring ∞ are precious for long raids, 475; gray shoulder blades and white spots below belts, 298, 308; graze while riding, 286; hair of white ∞ carefully gathered, 336; hair spun, 67; head never set before guests, 470; hedgehog skin tied around the neck of timid, 28; herds of, 159; herds guarded by warriors, 263, 475, 525; herds have special names, 262; hide dressing, 70; hump covered with long thick hair, if never saddled, 548; judged after the sloping of the back to the tail, 555; kept together, 324; killed in honor of important guests, 214, 603; kneeling, 152, 312, 313; loins sink in on insufficient pasture, 299; lose their humps on long fatiguing journeys, 308; lost ∞ discovered by a soothsayer, 405; male ∞ carry a chief's equipment, 262; markets, 270; merchants, 278—281; merchants spread news, 628; migrating ∞ kept quiet by the daw calls, 549; milk as main nourishment, 87—90, 348; milk not churned, 89; milk, procuring of, 21, 22, 87—89; milk of ∞ from six to ten years old tastes best, 320; milk of young white ∞ is best, 175; milk seldom given to a mare, 521; milk, sour, serves as supper, 87; milking many ∞ with the aid of one calf, 209; milking ∞ never sold, 89; milking of, 88; more

- than twenty years old not restricted in their freedom, 547; most fatigued when traveling in midsummer, 182; mourn their young lost, 195; named differently according to the stages of pregnancy, 324; names, 335; of inner desert enduring, 397; of a mission, 319; of settlers graze with the herds of Bedouins, 312; on distant pasture, 309; pace and trot of, 286; pack ∞ on raids, 644; pasturing, 336-338; price of ∞ dependent on cotton crop in Egypt, 279; promised to Allāh in vows, 421-425; protected by spring water from the al-rošš disease, 584; pure blood not recognized, 191; quiet in danger of attack, 549; rest before sunrise and after sunset, 368; rest during kājile, 189; rest three months after long marches, 298, 357; ridden for a short time are very fast and disobedient, 583; rider behind the saddle, radif, 313; riding ∞ belong to those who capture them, 629; riding ∞ fatten when not ridden, 189; riding on white ∞ desired by women, 261; run of ∞ likened to that of a scared male ostrich, 583; saddle covers, žwā'ed, 368; saddles, 350-354; saddles cause blisters, 262, 370; saddles of pack ∞ end in conical ornament, 273; sexual desire is the stronger the better is the pasture, 600; she- ∞ are more enduring than male, 588; slaughtering, 96; speed at night, 157; speed before and after sunset, 148, 356; speed of, 356, 357; stained with blood of riders are sold, 395; strong ∞ liked by women, 141; suet may not be sold, 97; teats closed with sharp clamps, 298; thoroughbred imported from 'Omān, 312; thrive best upon the hamz pasture, 83; trade in, 278-281; turning a flush wheel not used for breeding purposes, 322; urine used for washing hair, 117, 118; used for long raids in hot season, 508; uses of, 348, 349; walking on lava, 275; watering of, 203, 338-340; watering of ∞ chief work of slaves, 276; watering from a deep well tiresome, 344; weak young killed to secure milk, 87, 88, 194; white ∞ form the pride of every tribe, 261, 335, 336, 397; with bruised soles, 275, 300; with galled backs, 397; with large and fat humps, 313; young ∞ protected before beasts of prey by Solomon's circle, 348; young sterile ∞ run after the best pasture, 547
- Camping grounds, 76-78; in dangerous localities, 253
- Camps, form and extent, 77, 81; in different periods, 584; in lowlands in midsummer, 164; in the shape of an ellipse, 77, 180; protected against wind, 346; of less than ten tents, 156; of less than thirty tents, 81; tents dispersed when there is no danger, 149; tents in parallel lines, 180; together in times of danger, 621
- Captive, sharing of booty with, 484
- Captured herds, warriors driving ∞ can easily be overcome by the enemy, 153, 531, 649, 651, 658
- Caravan going to buy supplies, 182
- Cardamom added to black coffee, also used as perfume, 562
- Carpets, 64, 66
- Časeb eben 'Omejm, 645, 650
- Čehaf Ĥamme (al-Ĥamme, all), 303
- Čen'ān āl Tajjār, 172, 175
- Čenhāb, nickname of the Ešāge'a, 631, 632
- Chameleon, 42
- Charity, principal motive for ∞ is care for honor, 451
- Chief, advances himself by marriage, 232, 233; cannot interfere with the jurisdiction of the hereditary judges, 427; distinguished member of his kin, 50, 507; endangered by a military leader, 50, 51, 507; follows public opinion, 597, 600; gets a tax from every camel bought by the 'Akejl, 280; insubordinate ∞ punished severely, 59; of enemies' tribe often friends, 593-595, 597; power of a ∞ in his slaves' hands, 277; protects despoiled fellow tribesmen, 613; qualities required from, 471, 486; rides at the head of a migrating tribe, 76; šejb or šujāb, 58; sons are brought up by slaves, 277; supplies despoiled fellow tribesmen, 90; supplies water when scarce, 249; supplies of ∞ carried by male camels, 262
- Children, 243-246; care for, 126, 127; dress, 126; endangered by earthly spirits, 416, 417; growth of ∞ increased or hindered by šlejb women, 406; inherit their parents' qualities, 288, 289; inheritance, 663; property of their parents, 495; protected against diseases by hyena's teeth, 20; raising of, 255, 256; small ∞ fed with a thin paste, 94; till the age of seven stay with their mother, 236; who kill one of their parents must leave tribe forever, 495
- China, dishes brought from, 104; wandering dervishes from, 327
- Christians, daughters of ∞ mentioned, 196; use the phrase w-an-nebi, by the Prophet himself, 219
- Circassians inhabit al-Mešrefe, 535
- Circumcision ceremonies, 244-246
- Al-Člābāt (h13-14), 415
- Clans, bearing a bad omen, 391, 392; bearing a good omen, 391
- Cleanliness not cared for, 134
- Cleome arabica, L. See Žorrēt an-na'ām
- Cloak, 'aba', 120; cheap, 10; men's, 120, 121; required by decency, 126; winter, 149, 150; women's, 123
- Clothes, 118-125
- Clouds, and rain, 5-7; watched carefully, 345
- Coffee, fresh for guests, 469; pounding of beans, 469; preparation of, 100-102, 104, 107, 468, 469; prepared in the men's tent, 502; roasting of, 107, 113; spiced, 104, 110, 114, 260; twice-boiled, 107
- Coffeepots, 100-102, 117, 157; resemble black geese, 103, 106, 107
- Commander, in raids, 510; must be brave, 526, 527; shares in booty, 510
- Constantinople, Saṭtām eben Ša'lān in, 603, 605, 613

- Countenance, compensation for lost, 444;
white ∞ possessed by Bedouins only, 479
- Countenance blackened, 451; black feathers on a spear indicate, 552; black tent cloth on a tent pole shows, 615; by an attack after midnight, 524; by an attack without a declaration of war, 614; by keeping lost articles, 454; by not returning robbed property to a protected traveler, 439; by offering a guest anything less than pure milk, 585; by refusing protection or declining its obligation, 441, 443; by remaining behind comrades in a fight, 520; by stealing from a fellow tribesman or neighbor, 450; by yielding a guest to the enemy, 466;
feared, 451
- Countenance or protection, 438—440; granted by an absent hero, 55, 574; lent assures safety, 55
- Counter attack, 525, 530
- Cowards, bring no luck, 564; hated, 202, 209, 475, 557
- Cradle, 126
- Culprit fleeing before an avenger cannot become traveling companion, 440
- Curses, 394; of seers feared, 401, 402
- Cushion, mirake, for rider's legs, 171, 291, 351—353
- Customs, fixed ∞ guide the social and private undertakings, 389
- Cynomorium coccineum*, L. See Ṭartūt
- Cynomorium giganteum*, Vel. See Ṭartūt
- Ad-da'ā'*, variety of semḥ, 93
- Dagger, 133
- Ad-Daḥal*, Hubejrat (i9—10), 596
- Dahâmše (j16—20), 84, 85, 309, 326, 502, 503, 546, 570, 619, 638, 646
- Dahḥām, a Ḥarbi, 634
- Daḥilallāh, a Šammari, 160
- Da'ūlak* (Scorzonera Musili, Vel.; perennial with long roots, white, dense branches, and hairy heads of yellowish flowers), 95
- Da'fman, hero, 589
- Damascus (e4—5), 56, 57, 71, 78, 82, 85, 109, 112, 168, 171, 205, 226, 273, 278, 279, 321, 368,
407, 420, 422, 439, 469, 565, 584, 666, 669
- Darb. See proper name
- Dāṣer eben Ṭeri eben Meṣreb, 48
- Da'sān eben Hemš, Šarāri warrior, 528
- Dates, ḥelwa, most delicious variety, 211;
meals of, 94
- Dāūd, Jewish armorer, 84, 85
- Dāūd eben Sulejmān eben Šāleḥ, al-Ḥāḡḡ, Damascus, xiii
- Ad-Daw (d7), 657
- Ad-Dawīš, an Aṣlami, 569
- Dawwās (SM g11), 303
- Day, division of, 4; jowm, from sunset to sunset, 477; significance of, 389—391
- Dbajje, a girl, 143
- Dead, are avoided, 670; benefitted when one takes a pebble from the grave, 673; supper for, 672, 673
- Death, awaits everybody, 550; causes a stir, 489; inevitable, 484
- Debādeb (h17), 653
- Debts, cause much torment, 269; contracted easily, 270; contracted with the Kubejsāt paid regularly, 270;
- Decency requires sufficient clothes, 86, 126
- Ad-Defājen (b10), 643
- Defrān eben Baṛri eben Dāṣer eben Ṭeri eben
Meṣreb, 48
- Ad-Dejr (Dejr az-Zōr, b12), 133, 418, 519, 520
- Ad-Demīm, Ṭār (b4—c5), 652
- Demon drops urine into a yawning mouth, 399
- Demoniac fettered and left to perish of thirst, 669
- Der', a girl, 154
- Dera'*, millet, 93, 189
- Der'ān, Eben, of the Āl Mur'az, 280, 603, 610, 613
- Der'āt (g4), 226
- Ad-Der'ijje, 279
- Desert, population on the borders of ∞ changes according to the government, 45
- Dew, 17, 18
- Dhejjen*, 40
- Dialects, differences between the Šammari and Rwala, 517
- Diba, She Wolf, a mare's name, 383
- Dibān, white slave of Eben Meḡwel, 138
- Dijāb, a Bedouin, 106
- Dijāb eben Nedī eben Šāleḥ eben Ṭeri eben
Meṣreb, 48
- Dijāb eben Rānem, 274, 275
- Direction by stars, 355
- Diseases, 666, 667; and ostrich fat, 39; hyena's teeth protect children against, 20; of camels, 368—370; of camels and flesh of short snakes, 42; of the eye cured by skin shed by a serpent, 42; of horses, 382, 383
- Dishonor. See Countenance blackened
- Dispute, about a bride, 444—446; about a camel, 446; about a captured mare, 642; of three wives about a carpet, 242; settlements
of, 426;
- Disputed territories, 260, 261
- Distribution of property forbidden, 662
- Ditties, appropriated by others than the author, 140; at circumcision ceremonies, 246—255; love, 140—227; of travelers, 457—
459; sung by defenders of their camp, 541—570; sung by girls, 258—266; sung when camels are watered, 340—347
- Divorce, 232—239
- Divorced wife, is the sole owner of the camel, given to her by her husband, 663; may be limited in her freedom, 233
- Dlejjel, a girl, 518
- Dlejjil bint Māzi, recognized sorceress, 402
- Dlejmān aš-Srejfi, 604, 611, 613
- Dmej, a Bedouin, 488
- Dmejr (e5), environs of ∞ preferred camping grounds, 44, 168, 172
- Ad-Dmejte (h8), 397
- Dogs, and foxes, 25; bite of a mad ∞ , 326, 669; in the women's compartment, 73, 569;
kept by the Šlejb, 325
- Dowsān, clan of the Mtejr, 182, 296, 299
- Drājjem, a Bedouin, 533

- Drajjem eben Haddâl, 521
 Dreams, as omens, 395—399; concerning return from an important undertaking, 395—398; on raids, 509
 Ad-Drê'i eben Ġandal, war chief of the Rwala at the beginning of the 19th century, 57
 Ad-Drê'i eben Mašhûr, 53
 Ad-Drê'i eben Ša'lân, head chief of the Rwala at the beginning of the 19th century, 574, 575
 Drejb, kin of the Ķmuša, 499
 Drejjem az-Zulmâwi, 469
 Dress, 115—125; difference in, 134; opinion about, 126
 Drums used by the inhabitants of villages by the Euphrates, 85
 Druses, aid the Beni Šahr against the Rwala, 618; aid Muḥammad eben Smejir against the Rwala, 588; Allâh cares for ∞ too, 129; fought by Turkish troops, 556; inhabit Hermon, 589
 Duel with a famous hero fought during a raid, 527, 528
 Duḥejna, a camel's name, 335
 Ad-Duḥejne (c13), 356
 Dūmat al-Ġandalijje (m11), 645
 Durmân, clan of the Rwala, 148, 576, 604, 618, 633
 Durmi, Eben, of the Âl Ġlâs, 427
 Dwâm, kin of the 'Ebede, 645
 Dwejle, a girl, 166
 Dyrynk, Karel, xiv
- Eagle, 36
 Earth, conception of Bedouins and Šlejib, 675
 Eating, 98—100, 462, 463; of 'ejš, 129
 'Ebēi, a Šammari, 322
 'Ebede, division of the Sba'fa, 180, 181, 239, 391, 417, 423, 427, 449, 496—498, 521, 534, 602, 641, 643, 645, 649
 Eben. See main part of proper name
 Eben al-'amm, compels the reserved girl to marry him, 234, 235; hinders marriage of a girl, 219; rights of, 137, 225, 444, 560
 Edible plants, 95
 Edra'ât (or Der'ât, g4), Eben Smejir defeated near, 532; Rwala surprised in the vicinity of, 606
 Egoist turns his back when meeting his benefactor, 486
 Egypt, 'Aḳejl drive camels to, 112; camels sold in, 112, 279, 280, 348; cane sugar imported from, 179; imitations of St. Etienne revolvers manufactured in, 134; many Bedouins visit ∞ as camel drivers, 247, 628; old English military rifles imported from, 132; price of cotton in ∞ affects prices of camels in Arabia, 349; wholesale camel merchants live in, 278
 Ehdejjan, a Ķmâši, 434, 435
 'Ejâd eben 'Aršân al-Freġi, 557
 'Ejda, a camel's name, 335
 'Ejda, Snappy, a mare's name, 383
 'Ejfe eben Mgejd, 583, 585
 'Ejš, boiled wheat, 92 [in, 57
 Al-'Ela' (s8), court at, 237; judge al-mballe'
- Al-'Elejânijje (e8), 657
 Al-'Elejm (c12), 38
 Elopement, ditties on, 199—201; of a married woman dissolves the marriage, 239; punished with death, 203; with a girl revenged as is murder, 138
 Eloper, blood money for, 138
 'Elwa, division of the Mtejir, 146, 147, 295, 299
Emex spinosus, L. See Humbejz
 Al-Emir. See Muḥammad eben Rašid
 'Enâd of the Âl 'İsa, 661
 'Enâza (h10), 650
 'Erbid near as-Samâwa, 631, 632
Erodium bryoniaefolium, Boiss. See Tummejr
Erodium ciconium, L. See Tummejr
Erodium cicutarium, L. See Bahatri
 Al-Ešâġe'fa, 391, 509, 581, 584, 589, 595, 602, 632; recognize an-Nûri as their head, 506
 'Ešba bint Hmezi, recognized sorceress, 402
 Al-'Ešêle (f—g18), 656
 Esrija (b7), 180, 181, 648, 649
 Etra (j7), 94
 Euphrates, 85, 131, 133, 180—182, 184, 199, 210, 239, 250, 269, 274, 275, 292, 304, 309, 314, 315, 322, 418, 443, 484, 491, 520, 551, 559, 568, 577, 631, 636, 652, 653, 660, 661
 Europe, rabbit of, 27; weapons made in, 314
 Europeans buy mares, 377
 Evil eye, 407—410
 Al-'Ēweġ (m17), 626
 Experience makes every enterprise succeed, 292
 Eyebrows dyed black, 193
 Eyelids dyed black, 124, 125, 177, 178, 193
 Eyes praised, 555—557
 Eye-witness entitled to compensation, 428
 'Ezzaddin, 404
- Fahad*, panther, 20
 Fahad eben Haddâl, 131, 546, 547
 Fahad eben Hazzâ' eben Nâjef eben Ša'lân (d. 1905), 58, 236, 237
 Fahad eben Mašhûr, 59
 Fahad eben Šbejh, poet, 205, 579, 580, 617
 Fahad's father (or Hâjes eben Meġlâd), 501, 503
 Fâjez, Eben, ruling house of the Beni Šahr, 571
 Fâjez eben Ġandal, 662, 663
 Falconer coaxes a falcon by swinging a decoy, 475, 485
 Falcons, and falconry, 31—35; and the ḥabâra, 37, 570; best which find prey in fog, 171, 615; do not return when meeting a wild one, 259; hejla', swiftest, 187; hunt when the dew has evaporated, 615; largest species, 615; young do not desert their prey, 199
 Falḥa, Bringing Good Luck, a mare's name, 383
 Fallâġ eben Štêwi of the as-Shejm clan of the al-'Amira division of the Ķmuša, 427
 Fame assured by successful raids, 474, 593, 594
 Family, 'ajle, 50
 Fanḥûr abu Ġabha, 615
 Faraġ eben Murabbeġ, 445

- Fāres of the Āl Ġarba' family of the Šammar, 274, 275
 Farḥa, Joy, a mare's name, 383
 Farḥān, a Bedouin, 153
 Farḥān eben Hdejb, 434, 521
 Farḥūd, chief of the 'Amārāt, 314
 Fast in vows, 426
 Fate, [against ∞ all self-help is useless, 187;
 bound up with a man, 627; changes, 627;
 cut by Allāh, 345; foreordained by Allāh, 324
 Fāṭma bint Muḥammad, 454
 Faṭṭāl, Ḥalīl, Damascus, xiii
 Fā'ūr, Eben, of the 'Ebede, 239
 Fāz, mattock-hatchet, 66
 Fazīl, Eben of the 'Ebede division of the Šba'a, 423
 Al-Fed'ān (a9—c12), 46, 58, 83, 117, 130, 253,
 288, 289, 291, 292, 303, 304, 391, 419, 420, 491,
 498, 506, 533, 534, 558, 591, 593, 595, 597,
 600—603, 641, 643, 645, 648, 649
 Fed'āni, a member of the Fed'ān, 83
 Fedne, a girl, 166
 Feḡer eben Šulḥān, 403
 Feḡer eben Ṭajeb of the Mwāhib clan, 403
 Feḡr (o8), 604
 Feilchenfeld, Dr. Otto, Prague, xiii
 Fejjāz (or Fejjāz) āl Mešreb, 641, 643, 645, 648
 Fejd (r15), 311, 313
 Fejhān (n18), 187, 618, 624, 626, 629
 Fejhān eben Žā'ed eben Zrejbān, 182, 292, 296—300
 Fejšal, comrade of an-Nūri eben Ša'lān, 168
 Fejšal al-'Anḳari, 214—216
 Fejšal eben Nājeḡ eben Ša'lān (d. 1864), 57, 58, 582, 584
 Felḡa, wife of Fājez eben Ġandal, 662
 Fellāḥin. See Settlers
 Fertāž, 174
 Fertež, Ġaw, southwest of Ḥājel, 175
 Fetna, a girl, 241
 Fettering of a man to prevent him from informing his kinsmen about approaching raid, 619
 Fever assuaged by hyena's gall mixed with water, 20
 Fhejd, a camel herdsman of Kna', 469
 Fhejd eben Ma'abhel, 53, 55, 56, 439
 Al-Fhejḡāt, a despised Arabian tribe, 136
 Fidelity can be assured only by fear of Allāh, 563
 Fingers stretched out in surprise, 114 Fire, building of, 100; igniting depends on wisp, 473
 Fireplace in the men's compartment, 66; indicates owner, 83; protected from wind by a narrow partition, 301
 Fīrs (scented shrub resembling wormwood), 338
 Flag replaced with tribal emblem by the Rwala, 571
 Flēfla (low, dark green, strong-scented herb), 338
 Flete (Surprised) of the Rwala, 509, 643
 Flour bought not believed to be genuine, 90,
 91; eaten as lehme, 92
 Flush wheel, 322
 Fnejd, Eben, kin of the Rassālīn clan of the Kmuša, have a good omen, 391 Fog, afraid of fox, 18; čitām, 515; hears human beings, 18
 Food, 86—114
 Footwear, 121, 122
 Fowzi, Āl, kin of the Šlejb, 648
 Fox, 23—25; and fog, 18; has a good sign, 392; never deserts its protégés, 30
 Fractures healed by a skilful Bedouin, 668
 Franks produce good arms, 367
 Freḡe, clan of the Rwala, 50—52, 59, 481, 557, 575, 643; have an unlucky sign, 391
 Freḡi, member of the Freḡe, 134
 Frejha, Little Joy, a mare's name, 383
 Friends not allowed to rob each other, 531, 646
 Friendship, between fighting parties, 578, 579; must be proved by deeds, 484, 485
 Frog, 31
 Frost, 17
 Fsejst, bird, 40
 Fuel, 66; gathered by the serfs, 308
 Al-Fwā're (d5—6), 644
 Fzūl, kin of az-Zefir, 213, 214

 Ġa'ade (Teucrium Polium, L.; scented, white, woolly subshrub with hanging flower heads) used as protection of armor against moths and arza borers, 53
 Ġa'bar, Ka'fat, 660
 Ġabbār, a Rwejli, 659
 Gadfly, 36
Gagea reticulata, Pall. See Šaḥḥūm Ġāhel, a youth who is imprudent and will be neither advised nor remonstrated with, 536, 653
 Ġaḥla, camel herds of Eben Bakr, 502, 503
 Ġandal, Eben, ruling house of the Swālme, 50, 57, 237, 280, 323, 324, 532, 552, 606, 662; chief judge in the Āl Ġlās group, 427; gift of ∞ must not be demanded back, 552, 663;
 renown for his protection, 491
 Ġārallāh, chief of the 'Abde in Mesopotamia, 566—568
 Ġarba', Āl, ruling house of the Šammar in Mesopotamia, 275, 303, 317
 Ġarḡara, bird, 40
 Ġaw. See proper name
 Ġāwa (m11), 415, 647
 Gazelles, 26, 27; ḡwāzi never taste water, 539;
 hunted by Šlejb, 325; in constant fear, 552, 553; in the hollows of the Nefūd, 145; led and warned by an old goat, 176, 201, 308; miscarry from exhaustion, 538; thrive in the pure air of the desert, 201
 Ġāzi, Eben, of the Ḥwētāt, 604
 Ġāzi abu Fanḡa, 650
 Ġazzā', Eben, of the 'Ebede, 427
 Ġbāl, a Bedouin, 343
 Ġdē' eben Haddāl, chief of the still united
 'Amārāt and Dahāmse, 85
 Ġdē' eben Mašhūr, 588, 590
 Ġdejjedet 'Ar'ar (i-j14), 653
 Al-Ġeba' (n14), 650
 Ġebel. See proper name

- Ġebel aš-Šekāwi, 648
 Ġed'ā, protectors of (or al-Ešāḡe'a), 587, 589
 Ġed'ān eben Fājez eben Gandal, 521, 662, 663
 Ġedū', a Bedouin, 361, 362
 Ġedū' al-Karah, 641, 642
 Al-Ġejdūr (or an-Nukra), 57, 582, 584, 585
 Ġeme, 35
 Ġenāwa (m11), 415
 Generosity, inherited from parents, 471;
 praised by guests, 465
 Ġenk, Āl, of the Druses, 617, 618
 Gentility, granting of protection is a mark
 of, 443
 Gentleman, eben ḡalāl, a man against whose parents there is no reproach, 345; qualities of, 480, 481; ṡāheb al-marḡala, 52, 471; ṡāheb al-mruwwa, 275, 471; walad al-ḡalāl, an honest, godly man, 327
 Geographical Society, Vienna, xiii
 Al-Ġerānījāt, Kūr (o8), 612
 Al-Ġerāwi (19), 366, 367, 617 Ġerdi, 28, 29; and jerboa, 28, 29; young of ∞ gnawed by ṡabri, 40
 Ġerida, a camel's name, 335
 Al-Ġezifa (h9), 566
 Al-Ġezire, civil war among the Šammar in,
 566; a guilty kin of the Kmuša flees to, 443
 Ġezzā' eben Meḡlād, 501, 503
 Ġhār (c7), 657
 Al-Ġhejr eben Swejṡ, 576, 577
 Ġi'ān eben Ibrāhīm eben Dārer eben Zeri eben Meṡreb, 48, 404, 405, 653—655
 Ġibb (c12), 649, 650, 656
 Ġibbe worn by a wealthy Rwejlīje, 124
 Ġibrin, angel, and the Rwala, 14
 Al-Ġidd, K. (g11—12), 660 Gifts, defective ∞ injure the giver, 313; demanded back by the giver's heir, 236, 552, 662; of Eben Ġandal must not be demanded
 back, 663
 Ġimlān, goat and sheep breeders, have an unlucky sign, 391
 Ġinn. See Spirits, earthly Ġirūn walad Dhejjel, 414 Ġirḡir (Senecio coronopifolius, Desf.; herb with alternate leaves and heads of yellow flowers; species of groundsel), 95
 Girls, belong by right to their eben al-'amm, 137, 445, 560; encourage kinsmen in dangerous fight, 104, 105, 147, 223, 527, 540, 560, 563, 565; escape to meet lovers, 166;
 exchanged for their father's wife, 137;
 hindered in marriage by eben al-'amm, 219; in danger from earthly spirits, 413;
 in 'Atfa litters, 214, 215; unmarried pregnant ∞ threatened by death, 612, 615
 Al-Ġlās, valley at Ḥajbar, 57
 Ġlās, Āl, division of the Żana Muslim, 46, 427, 582, 585
 Ġlejdān eben Šaleḡ eben Zeri eben Meṡreb, 48
 Al-Ġmejsāt, kin of the Dahāmše, 646
 Goat and sheep breeders. See Šuāja
 Goose, depiction of, 328
 Gossip cannot be foundation for acts, 478 Government, population on the borders of the desert changes according to, 45
 Al-Ġowf (m11), 52, 120, 184, 185, 205, 211, 212, 228, 286, 291, 298, 309, 312, 320, 478, 505, 650
 Ġowfān eben Sūdān of the Kmuša, 405
 Al-Ġowlān, unhealthy district, 666, 677
 Ġrajjed, Eben, chief of the Beni 'Atīje, 610, 614
 Graves, different kinds of reverence for, 182; digging of, 670; hearth stones placed on ∞
 of women, 182; revered rarely, 417—420;
 stone-covered ∞ filled with earth, 228
 Greeks sell good weapons, 367 Greeting, 185; of a guest, 460, 461; of the commander by partakers of the raid, 510;
 of returning raiders, 538. See also Salutation Ġrejḡ eben Mowzān, 500
 Greyhounds, 23, 33, 34; privileged before other dogs, 208
 Guardian, appointed to small children, 669, 670; appointed to daughters who inherit their father's property, 665
 Guarmani, C., 58
 Al-Ġūba (m11—12), 645, 646; flies are a real pest in, 666; Rwala spring pasture, 78; unhealthy district, 677
 Al-Ġubb (or Ġibb, c12), 499
 Ġubba (p13), 146, 155, 311—313, 468, 470
 Al-Ġubejlīje in the Ḥawrān, 418
 Ġūde, a girl, 203
 Guerilla warfare, 556
 Guest, 455—470; camel killed in honor of an esteemed, 214; enjoys special privileges, 47, 267, 427; halts by the side wall of the men's compartment, 73, 459; mock battle performed in honor of an esteemed, 214, 561; must not get stale bread, 92; neck of a guest's camel daubed with blood of beast killed in his honor, 467, 470; of distinction offered a she-camel and a mare by Eben Rašīd, 309; room for ∞ in settlements, 322; served with food, 97—100; welcomed by the wife, 232; who yields his ∞ to the enemy loses his honor, 466; with Eben Haddāl may stay eight days, 148
 Ġūḡ, 583, 585
 Guide, familiar with the watering places accompanies raiders, 509; good ∞ knows the desert as well as the ḡaṡa birds, 40, 643
 Gunpowder prepared by Bedouins, 226
 Gutmann, Dr. Max Ritter von, Vienna, xiii
 Ġwād abu 'Alī al-'Āni, 111, 114, 129, 168, 169,
 191, 192, 214, 217, 305, 311, 327, 328, 387, 467,
 477, 479, 481, 484
 Al-Ġwejf (f7), 644, 658
Ḥabāri, bustards, 33, 34, 37—38, 570
 Ḥabāri, plural of Ḥabra. See proper name
 Ḥabra. See proper name
 Al-Ḥābūr (b12—13), 303, 304, 559
 Ḥācem eben Mhejd, 602, 603
 Al-Ḥadab, hillock near Der'āt, 225, 227
 Al-Haddāb (or Turki eben Mhejd), 595
 Haddāḡ, well in Tejma, 599
 Haddāl, Eben, ruling house of the 'Amārāt,
 131, 148, 177, 415, 522, 546, 547, 574, 636
 Al-Hadedijjīn, 602
 Al-Hādi eben al-'Āṡi, 566—570
 Al-Ḥadīta (j6), 416

- Hadlân, a Bedouin, 221
 Al-Ḥafāḡi, Kaşr, 154, 155, 243, 244, 414. See also Aḥeizer, Kaşr eben
 Hafāḡi eben an-Nûri eben Ša'lan, 244
 Hağer eben Meğwel of the Rwala, 471
 Hağğāğ, kin of the Weld 'Ali, 587, 589
 Hağğāğ, Eben, commander of Eben Rašid, 579, 580
 Al-Hağm (i10), 418
 Hair, 115—117; arrangement of girls', 118, 560; braids adorn girls', 118, 562; braids adorn vain Bedouins', 116, 564, 568; braids praised as an ornament, 143—145, 174, 175, 177—179, 190, 209, 225, 226, 272, 553, 560—563; dyed yellow with henna, 124, 211, 553; fair rare, 553; loosened and braided, 175; shaved on the top of the head, 248; washed in camel's urine, 117, 118
 Hajbar, 57, 85, 513
 Ḥâjel (q14), 57, 175, 184, 185, 227, 228, 301, 302, 305, 309, 312, 469, 505, 635
 Ḥâjel eben Gandal, 532
 Hâjes eben Meğlâd, 106, 502, 503
 Halaf, a Bedouin, 218
 Halaf abu Ḥatlên, 650, 651
 Halaf âl Iden eben Zejd, 236—238, 595—597, 599, 617, 618, 663
 Halaf al-Flejhi, 662, 663
 Al-Ḥâlât, region northwest of Tejma, 604
 Hâled, Beni, tribe of al-Ḥasa', 214
 Hâled eben Saṭṭâm eben Ḥamad eben Ša'lan, 58, 59, 254
 Halifa, a Bedouin, 177
Halimocnemis pilosa, Moq. See Kalša
Haloxylon articulatum, Cav. See Rimt
 Hama' (b5), 180, 181, 314, 315, 657
 Al-Ḥamâd (d9—110), 17, 26, 39, 69, 78, 223, 275, 345, 397, 415, 418, 584, 594, 600, 604, 613, 638, 647, 666, 677
 Ḥamad eben Bnejje, military leader of the Rwala, 58
 Ḥamad eben 'Ejde, 656
 Ḥamad eben Nâjef eben Ša'lan, 57, 220
 Ḥamad al-Hnejdi, 217
 Ḥamad al-Wlêd'i (or al-Wahbi), Eben, 280
 Ḥamâmde, kin of the Weld 'Ali, 587, 589
 Al-Ḥamâmîd, subdivision of al-Ḥa'âẓ'a, 631, 632
 Hamdân, nephew of Barğas eben Maşhûr, 58
 Ḥâmi Rařif, 227, 228
 Hammâd al-Hâwi, chief of the Šarârât, 366, Ḥamme (a11), 304 [367
 Ḥamşijja bint Fâre' of the Sba'a, 425
Ḥamşis (Rumex lacerus, Balb.; kind of sorrel), 95
Hamz, best camel pasture, 82, 83, 337, 338
 Hands dyed with henna, 144
 Hañğar, Eben, of the Flete, 643
 Harb, chief of the Beni 'Atijje, 610, 613
 Harb, tribe, 634; allow the guest to leave the tent at any time, 464
 Hare, 27, 28, 33, 34
 Harfûş, a Bedouin, 159
Harra (Sisymbrium irio, L.; Sisymbrium irioides, Boiss.; high species of hedge mustard), 95
 Harra, lava territory, 273
 Harrân, a Bedouin, 146
 Harrâs, an 'Ebedi, 496—498
 Harûfa, a camel's name, 335
 Harunar-Rashid (Hârûnar-Rašid, 786-809), 315
 Al-Ḥasa', Beni Hâled camp in, 214; occupied by Turkish troops in 1871, 184
 Hasan, a Bedouin, 241
 Hasan, Beni, tribe, 387, 631
 Ḥasan, Eben. See 'Abdallâh eben Ḥasan
 Ḥasan Pasha, 587, 589
 Al-Ḥaşş (a6), 391, 491
 Al-Ḥaşşâbijje (k8—9), 603
 Ḥaṭib teaches religion and leads prayers, 306
 Ḥaw'a (or al-Ḥâwa, m12—13), 54
 Al-Ḥawâzem, despised tribe of Arabia, 136, 282, 404, 405
 Al-Hawğa (o9), 583
 Hâwi, Eben, of the Šarârât, 603, 660
 Hawrân, Gebel (g—h5—6), 50, 138, 167, 191, 194, 205, 227, 228, 239, 266, 317, 320, 415, 418, 491, 532, 556, 565, 574, 577, 580, 584, 620, 631, 657, 660
Ḥawt persecutes moon and sun, 2
Ḥawwa, variety of semh, 93, 95
 Hazâ'el (or Haz'al), tribe, 199
 Al-Hazb (al-Hazb al-Bajaz, r8, and al-Hazb al-Ḥamar, r—s8), 329
 Al-Ḥazel, 20, 578
 Al-Hazîm (i6), 637
 Al-Hazîmi (g14), 648
 Hâzmijje, a woman of the Hawâzem tribe, 404
 Al-Ḥazra, in Africa, 5; (p18), 419
 Hazzâ', Eben (an-Nûri eben Ša'lan), 610, 614
 Hazzâ' eben Nâjef eben Ša'lan Abu-n-Nûri, 58, 397, 398, 418, 577, 578, 584
 Hazzâ' eben Swejt, 576, 577
 Ḥbejrân of the 'Abdelle, 651
 Hdejb, Eben, ruling house of the 'Ebede, 423, 643
 Hdejb, Želib (112—13), 650, 653
Ḥdejja, kite, 35
 Head, bare when going to battle, 247; covering şumbar, 124; kerchief for men, 119, 120; kerchief for women, 123; kerchief serves as a veil, 518
 Hearths of inner Arabian towns, 113
 Heat, 17; at its highest between one and three, 189; at noon makes air quiver, 220; rest favored when ∞ at its highest, 209
 Al-Hebdâni. See Meḥda' al-Hebdâni
 Al-Hebeke (m16), 57
 Hedgehog, 28; and fox, 24, 25
 Al-Ḥeğâz, Jews camped in, 329
 Al-Ḥeğijje, 653, 655
Heğin (bushy subshrub with thin branches, small leaves and flowers), 338
 Heğlân, chief of a Duřmân kin, 633, 634
 Al-Heğr (s7), 584
 Al-Hejl (f8, d8—9, c10), 649
 Al-Hejl, Rađir (h16), 356
 Hejrân eben Meslet, 652
 Al-Helâl (or al-Helâli), Riğlet (k14, j14—15), 621, 654, 655
 Hell, 675
 Helmer, Abbot Gilbert, Teplá, xiii

- Hemorrhoids, remedy for, 36
Hemri, dry grasses, 338, 369
Henna, hair, nails, and palms dyed with, 124, 145, 211
Hemwa (Calendula aegyptiaca, Desf.; Calendula micrantha, Boiss.; a species of marigold), 338
Al-Herbid eben Swejd, 322
Herdsmen, 336; milk camels, 88; supper, 341; unsatisfactory ∞ should be dismissed, 233
Al-Heri (one of the Še'ibân al-Herijjân), 274, 275, 419, 596
Al-Heri abu-r-Ruzuma, 649
Al-Herijjân (e11), 594, 648
Hermon, 227, 228, 587, 589
Al-Herr (m16, i—j17—18), 579, 580
Al-Herr abu Zowr (al-Herr, i—j17—18), 636
Ĥesma' (m2—p4), 17
Hips admired, 70, 143, 145, 174
Ĥit (e17), 269, 273, 314, 315, 420
Ĥkejšât, clan of the Beni Šaḥr, 612, 615
Ĥlejs eben Mâleč, 648
Ĥmâr abu 'Awwâd, 4, 82, 106, 147, 182, 184, 189, 214, 217, 244, 271, 275, 297, 299, 301, 303, 305, 311, 322, 327, 328, 384, 466, 467, 477, 478, 484, 567, 579, 580, 583, 588, 592, 613, 614, 636
Ĥmûd, a Bedouin, 208, 565; a Dahmaši, 326
Ĥmûd eben Me'gel, 582, 584, 585
Ĥmûd eben 'Obejd eben Rašid, 305
Homesickness expressed in poem, 309—313
Homs (e5), 180, 181, 422, 533, 657
Honesty. See Countenance, Name
Honor, in ∞ of a youth ash-gray ostrich feathers are fastened to his spear, 551; man of ∞ will rather die than allow his camel to be captured, 547; motive of charity, 451
Hoopoe, 40
Al-Ĥôr (i9—j10), 223, 594, 599, 600; Rwala winter pasture, 78
Ĥorâsân, cast steel from, 133
Horses, 371—388; captured by the slaves go to their master, 629; colts belong to their mother's breed, 372, 385; colts thrown away before a raid, 575; desired by youths, 514, 515; good ∞ known throughout the desert, 386; good qualities, 159, 513, 554, 559; in fight, 152; lock of hair from each captured mare is cut and hung up in tent, 539; mares not allowed to be covered before a fight, 516, 546, 575; never shared in a raid, but belong to the captor, 510, 511; prepared for a raid, 508; protected from cold by the agelle blankets, 566; pure blood not of much importance with the Fed'ân, 288; reserved pastures for, 309; returned home from a raid stained with blood of their riders are sold, 395; ridden on short raids in rabî', 508; saddle cover, 155; saddles from captured ∞ belong to blacksmiths, 281, 282; seldom given camel's milk, 521; shoes with nails bent inward, 548; shown water to increase their thirst, 649; shy on hearing an alarm cry, 559; stallion more enduring than the mare, 519; stop in a gallop by pulling up the reins short, 545; stray ∞ caught during a raid are handed over to the commander, 510; tail hair of young mares clipped 'or cut off entirely, 632; the more enduring the tougher is the flesh to the right and left of the root of the tail, 386; thoroughbred ∞ enjoy fight, 515; two halters, 590; white mare is a good omen, 392; whose eyeballs vanish in a white circle favored, 83; with square heads used in breeding, 585
Hospitality, 455—470; important for good reputation, 483, 487; indicated by a blazing fire in an open tent, 154; indicated by tent built in an easily accessible place, 154; indicated by the extent of the heap of ashes, 66; ought to be unaffected, 105
Ĥoṣṣa bint Haddâl, 574—577
Host responsible for his guest, 462, 464, 465
Hour unknown, 4
Household utensils, 69, 70
Ĥowmât (or al-Ĥowme, p15—16), 612, 616
Ĥowse, a girl, 223
Al-Ĥraṣa, clan of the Fed'ân, 643
Ĥrejmis, Eben, of the Fed'ân, 650
Ĥrêra, Abu (a8), 660
Ĥreše, clan of the Ahl 'îsa, 611, 615
Al-Ĥsâjde (j6), 641
Al-Ĥsej (j14), 653
Al-Ĥsejbi, še'ib (n19), 619, 624, 626
Ĥsejjân eben Mnezzel eben Nims, 496
Ĥsejni of the Rfedejkin, 406
Ĥsên (Ĥusejn ibn 'Ali ibn Abi Tâleb), 403
Al-Ĥsene, 57, 272, 552, 644
Ĥtejl, a Bedouin, 518
Ĥtejm, collective name for despised tribes, 136, 278, 332, 610, 614; pay ĥûwa, protection tax, 60
Ĥubejrat. See proper name
Al-Ĥufejjer (d6), 658
Al-Hufhûf, 184
Al-Hûg (n8), 25, 582, 583
Al-Hûl (p—q9), 604
Ĥulfa bint Ĥlejf âl Ĥdêreš of the Sba'a, 422
Human body, names of the different parts of, 115
Human figure, outlines of, zowl, 206
Ĥumbejz (or ḥammejz; Emex spinosus, L.; a species of sorrel), 95
Al-Ĥunfa (p9—q10), 368, 604
Hunger feared, 86
Husband in the first year of his married life ought not to accompany a raid, 508
Al-Ĥwejmât (h8), 650
Hwejšân, kin of the Ĥmuṣa, 652
Hwejšân, kin of the Rassâlin clan, have an unlucky sign, 391
Ĥwêr, Kaṣr (b10), 647
Al-Ĥwêtât (12—n6), 136, 279, 291, 292, 398, 447, 603, 605, 612—614, 640, 658
Ĥwêti, member of the Ĥwêtât, 448, 610
Hyena, 20; a good omen, 392; young ostriches protected against, 39
Ĥzârî, bird, 41
Ĥzejl ar-Ru'ûḡi, 599, 600
Al-Ĥzejri from the southern territory, 385, 386
Ĥzêra, 179, 193

- Hẓērân (g17), 653
Hẓûm, a Bedouin, 520
- Ibex, 25, 26
Iblis, is not dead, 297; leads on the road of sin, 297; seduces man, 297; tempts every beloved one, 181, 182
Ibrâhîm eben Dârer eben Zeri eben Meşreb, 48
'Id, a Dahmaşi, 84; a Rwejlî, 103
'Id, Eben, camel breed, 359
'Ida, aš-Sarrâbî's mare, 384, 385
Iden, Âl, kin of the Rwala, 289
Iden, Umm (j8), 345
Impotency, malas flesh as cure for, 42
India, camels and horses sold to, 214; imitation of an English military gun imported from, 132; wandering dervishes from, 327; wholesale camel merchants live in, 278
Infants. See Children
Ingratitude disagreeable to Bedouins, 116
Inheritance, 662—665; of an only married daughter, 446, 447
Ink, preparation of, 112, 175, 320
Inkstand in the inner Arabian towns, 112
Interest for credit 25 per cent in five months must be paid at once in cash, 269
Invitation to meal accompanied by the gîre oath of the slave Râşed, 539
Irak, camels sold in, 348; commercial relations of 'Aneja with, 112; culprit from ∞ seeks shelter with the Kmuşa, 500; Hoşsa calls for aid in, 574; al-Kwâbe clans emigrated to, 58; large territory in ∞ owned by Sa'dûn al-Aşkar, 618; Rwala prohibited from migrating to, 519; trade caravans from ∞ to Syria, 272, 308; wandering dervishes join moving clans in, 327; wheat imported from, 467
'İsa, Âl, wholesale firm trading in camels, 279. See also Ahl 'İsa
İskanderûna (Alexandretta), 184
İslâm, ecstasy, 401, 403, 411; protection of God, 400
Islam considered weak because it cannot free the settlers from their miseries, 479
Itinerant merchant, 61, 269; accompanies the Bedouins the whole year through, 125; called Kubejsi, originated from al-Kubejsa, 269, 270; called Rhejbâwi, originated from ar-Rahba, 125; ğallâb exchanges goods for camel's hair, traveling bags, etc., 142; praises a chief, his protector, 273—275; searches after lost articles, 454
- Jacob, patriarch, 305, 306
Al-Jâkin. See 'Ağel al-Jâkin
Jâtoḥ, Ğaw (r14), 357
Jerboa and ğerdî, 28, 29; gnawed by ğabri, 40
Jewelry, liked by women, 124, 175, 204; nose rings, 124, 150, 204, 261, 564; rings above the ankles, 111, 150, 174—176, 211
Jews first bred camels, 329, 330
Jidda, arms brought from, 132
Joseph, son of patriarch Jacob, 197, 306
Judges, hereditary, 426, 427
Judgments kept in mind, 431
- Judicial decision, about the inheritance of a married daughter, 447; in a dispute about a bride, 445, 446
Judicial procedure, 426—437
Jûsef eben Mğejd, poet, 272, 583, 630
- K. Abbreviation for Kûlbân. See proper name
Al-Ka'âka', judge of the Âl Ğlâs, 427. See also Ka'ka'
Al-Ka'ara (e12), 28, 413, 449, 638
Ka'âz'a, clan of the Rwala, 396, 577, 578, 606; have a good omen, 391
Kabşân, ridge in the 'Atejbe territory, 295, 298
Kaḥaṭân of the 'Aneze, 46, 52
Kâjem ar-Ru'ûğî, 599
Ka'ka', 51
Kalša (Halimocnemis pilosa, Moq.: small, bushy, gray, woolly herb with thin, prickly leaves), Ķandara, heavy bird, 39 [338
Al-Kâra (m12), 247
Al-Ka'ra. See Al-Ka'ara
Karabacek, Dr. Joseph Ritter von, Vienna, xiii
Al-Karâri, war leader of the Sba'a, 566
Kardûş, Eben, of the 'Ebede, 447, 448, 497, 498
Karrât (Allium atroviolaceum, Boiss.: garlic with bluish-purple flowers), 95
Kârt. See proper name
Al-Kaşîm, 112, 278, 279, 314, 315
Kaşmeriije (or Raşmeriije), a girl, 186
Kasr. See proper name
Kaşr. See proper name
Kaşr, description of, 160
Kaṭa', 39, 40; and the Bedouins, 40; fly suddenly from the rider, 363; nest in low plains covered with luxuriant grasses, 328
Kaṭaf (Atriplex, L.: subshrub with small drooping, yellowish flowers), 338
Kaṭra, bird, 39
Al-Kawda, camel herds of Eben Meşreb, 659, 660
Kazkâz (Salsola inermis, Forsk.: subshrub with grayish leaves and small flowers), 338
Kazzijje bint Wahîf, 205
Kbejsât, itinerant merchants, 61. See also Kubejsât
Al-Kdejîm (b8—9), 648
Al-Kejsûma (n17—18), 629
Kerajât al-Meleḥ, settlements in Wâdi Sirhân, 666, 677
Al-Kerak, 50
Kerbela (pronounced Karbala by the Rwala, g20), 155, 449, 521, 522
Khejsân, a Bedouin, 221
Kin, assures happiness, 192; bearing a bad omen, 391, 392, 509; bearing a good omen, 391; bound to mutual protection both aggressive and defensive, 489; camps together, 160; does not include maternal relatives, 545; explanation of, 48, 49; head of, 47—49; helps its oppressed member, 451, 452; includes second cousins, 503
Klejb, servant of Drejjem az-Zulmâwi, 468
Klinger, Jindřich, Prague, xiii
Kmaşi, member of the Kmuşa, 412
Al-Kmuşa, division of the Sba'a (d6—10), xiii, 180, 391, 405, 427, 443—445, 447, 473, 496, 499, 534, 535, 641, 648, 660

- Kna' (q13), 299, 467, 469, 470
 Knejne, a girl, 170
 Al-Knène (o20), 346
Koelpinia linearis, Pall. See Laḥjat at-tejs
 Al-Kowm (b9), 60, 649
 Kraje, Ḥabra (p10), 604
 Al-Krejġāt, settlements in al-Gūba, 447, 645
 Krejtān eben al-Hūm, 446, 447
Ksejbre (Pimpinella arabica, Boiss.; Pimpinella puberula, DC.; anise-like plant), 95
 Kšūs (Chased Away) of the 'Abdelle, 509
 Al-Kubejsa (e17), 125, 269, 275
 Kubejsāt, itinerant merchants, 61, 269, 270
 Kubejsi, itinerant merchant, 125, 127, 269, 270, 454
 Kubejsi Baḡdādi, itinerant merchant of Baḡdad, 125
 Kublān, Eben, kin of the al-Ḥsene division of the Weld 'Alī, 552, 553
Kudrijje, 143, 171
 Al-Kūfa (h20), 210
 Kuftān eben Ḥāmed of the Beni Ṣaḥr, 471
 Kūr, plural of Kāra. See proper name
 Al-Kūr, Ab- (j16), 646
 Kurb dangerous to camels big with young, 333
 Kurdi eben Ša'lán, 243, 244, 597
 Kurdish soldiers, 587—589
 Kurds, 589
Kurrēs (Trigonella hamosa, L.; bean-like annual), 95
Kurṭa, beast of prey similar to wildcat, 20
 Kušmān, people from al-Kašim, 315; territory (al-Kašim), 469
 Kūt bint aš-Srejfi, 55, 56
Kuṭejn (or ḡejjen; mallow-like herb), 128
 Kūtne, camel herds of the Fed'ān, 516, 558, 599
 Al-Kwāḥbe of the Kaḥaṭān, 52—56, 58, 162, 250, 286, 509, 570, 593, 604, 613; recognize an-Nūri as their head, 506
 Kwēḥbi, member of the Kwāḥbe, 134
 Kwēḥeb, Āl, settles disputes pertaining to blood vengeance in the Āl Ġlās group, 427
 Al-Kwejt, arms brought from, 132, 280; camels sold in, 279
 Al-Kzej'i, 34
- Lackenbacher Fund of the Theological Faculty of the University, Vienna, xlii
 Lāha (h—i11), 415, 658
 Lahad, a Bedouin, 167
Laḥjat at-tejs (Koelpinia linearis, Pall.; annual with thin, upright stalks bearing little heads of yellow flowers), 95
 Lām, Beni, 188, 367
 Lamlūm, settlement in Irak, 82, 83
 Laṭifa bint Lifa, 177, 178
 Lawsuits, 427—435; about paternity, 236—238
 Leather vessels, 71, 91
Lepidium sativum, L. See Rešād
 Al-Lhejb, tribe, 239
 Al-Libben (i3), 605, 606
 Liechtenstein, the reigning Prince Johann von, Vienna, xlii
 Lifa, Eben, a Bedouin, 177
- Life, destroyed by the sun, 1, 2; lengthened or shortened by Šlejḡ women, 406; regulated by the moon, 1
 Al-Lifijje (i17), 648
 Lightning, and thunder, origin of, 5, 6; dangerous in the desert, 210; as a guide to regions where rain has fallen, 146, 147
 Līne (o19), 413, 626
 Litters, ḡenn, 68, 70, 81; ḡetab, 68, 69, 74, 75, 77, 160, 197, 250, 252, 265
 Lizard, 42, 43; ba'ersī, effects of bite of, 42
 Al-Lmāt (f12—13), 389, 648
 Locks, 112
 Locusts, preparation and storing, 93, 94; young ∞ crawl on each other, 112, 113, 577
 Loom, 68
 Al-Loṣof (i18), 656
 Lost animal returned for a reward, 414
 Lost articles, 453; keeping of ∞ punished, 454
Lotus angustissimus, L. See Zrejže
Lotus Gebelia, L. See Zrejže
 Love, awakened or smothered by Šlejḡ women, 406; compared with thirst, 156; declaration of, 135, 136; ditties and poems, 140—228; for married women, 168—170; foundation of marriage, 230; recognized, 135
 Lovers, dead ∞ lamented, 186—199; separators of ∞ punished by Allāh, 168
Lubbēna (Stachys affinis, Fres.; Stachys Musili, Vel.; subshrub with dense hairy branches and small red flower racemes; of the mint family), 95
 Lubde at Ḥājel, 635
Lycium arabicum, Schw. See 'Awseḡ
- Ma'ān (i13), 584
 Al-Ma'āser (k8—9), 603
 Al-Mačmen, Z. (h17), 655
 Mad dog, man bitten by, 326, 669
 Al-Ma'ejzīle, Te'ēs (o18—19), 619
 Al-Maḡna (h12), 658
 Maha' bint Ḥašmān, 46
 Majkū' (m9), 360, 361, 616, 617
Malak, celestial spirit, 411
Malas, reptile, 42
 Malḥūd kin of the Mḡelli clan of the Fed'ān have a good omen, 391
 Mamdūḡ eben Saṭṭām eben Ḥamad eben Ša'lán, 58, 235, 255
 Mamdūḡ Pasha, commander of Turkish troops fighting the Druses in the Ḥawrān, 556
Manāḡ. See War
 Manāḡ az-Zīrēn, Battle-camp of the Two Starvations (war between ar-Rwala and al-Kwāḥbe), 56
 Al-Manāḡer (e7—c12), 26
 Māne' eben Duṛmi, 488
 Al-Manḡūr, ford on the Euphrates, 636
 Manḡa' ar-Raḡba (f6—7), 660
 Maṇšūr, earthly spirit changed into a hedgehog, 414
 Maṇšūr eben Saṭṭām eben Ša'lán, 616
 Mantle, the most important part of dress, 120; light woollen, mezwi, 158
 Marches, length of, 76; lengthly ∞ always made on camels, 349

- Mâred, 299
Mares. See Horses
Al-Markab, 571, 573, 574; protected, 624, 625; sacred, must not be lost, 625. See also Abud-Dhûr
Market place, center of all news, 580; in inner Arabia, 113
Marmot, 28
Marriage, against the will of the eben al-‘amm impossible, 203, 225; duty of every healthy man, 135; for love, 135, 322, 323; of a squeamish fellow, 344; with blacksmiths and slaves forbidden, 138, 278, 282; with unrelated girl not favored, 200
Married couple, quarrels among ∞ forbidden, 234
Married life, first year of ∞ is not favorable to important ventures, 508
Married woman, cannot vow an animal without her husband's permission, 421; dissatisfied with her husband longs for other men, ṭamûh, 324, 344, 469, 475, 513, 554, 557; for whom her husband has paid in full may be killed, 495, 498; may have her own estate, 665; inconveniences her brother, 494; inherits two she-camels from her father, 664; in love with another ought to be set free, 238, 239; loves other men, 150, 168, 238; material good or evil of ∞ concerns her kin, 494; moral offences of ∞ concern her husband, 494; rights of, 230, 231; that has been raped avenged by death of the man, 499. See also Wife, Woman
Ma‘rûf, aš-Šejh, 314, 315
Ma‘rûf eben Mesreb, 48
Maš‘ân eben Bakr, 502, 503
Mašhûr, Eben, 280
Mašhûr eben Meršed, 656
Mašlân eben aš-Šrejfi, 53, 54
Mas‘ûd aš-Šejhi, 152
Maṭar, a Bedouin, 244
Al-Mazârî‘ (g10), 650
Mâzi, Eben, of the Ahl ‘Īsa, 434, 660
Mbârek eben Hwêmel, seer, 7
Mdaḥrağ, fedâwi, 166
Meadows, rijâz, 226
Meals, 86, 87
Meats, 96, 97
Mecca, ‘Atejbe camp east of, 264, 628; Grand Sherif of, 386; henna bought from, 124; negro children brought from, 276; Pilgrim Road from Damascus to, 226; a sherif from, 484; small plate from, 69; transport of supplies and pilgrims to, 584; wandering dervishes go to, 327
Medâjen Šâleḥ (s7), 584
Medbar eben ‘Abdallâh, 443, 444
Al-Medina, ‘Atejbe camp east of, 264, 628; negro children brought from, 276; a sherif from, 484; transport of supplies and pilgrims to, 584; wandering dervishes go to, 327
Me‘ğel, Eben, ruling house of al-Ešâğe‘a, 50, 57, 280, 449, 589, 595, 602, 621, 622, 643
Me‘ğel eben ‘Amša of the Drejb kin of the Kmuša, 499
Meğlâd, Eben, ruling house of the Dahâmše, 570, 619, 620, 622, 626, 628, 630, 646
Meğwel eben Mesreb, 500
Meḥda’ al-Hebdâni, 288, 591—593, 598, 600
Meḥi of the Freğe, 52, 53
Mehir, Eben, kin of the Sba‘a, 423
Meḥsen Raḥişarrûh, chief of the ‘Ebede, 180
M‘ejdi, a Bedouin, 156
Melhem, Eben, ruling house of al-Ḥsene, 57, 272
Men, caring for women despised, 568, 569; divided according to their qualities, 385, 472, 488; have to conform themselves to their surroundings, 477
Menzel eben Duṛmi, 588
Merchants, big ∞ in camps, 270, 278—281; profit of ∞ in hands of Allâh, 273
Merdeğ, Eben, of the Sirhân, 596
Meršed, Eben, ruling house of the Kmuša, 418, 535, 643, 648
Meršed eben Baṛri eben Dâper eben Zeri eben Mesreb, 48
Mešâ‘el bint Saṭṭâm eben Šâlân, 249, 250
Al-Mesâ‘id, tribe, 576, 577, 631
Al-Mešâliḥ, 396, 397
Meš‘ân an-Nṣejri, 613
Al-Mešâre‘, tavern on the Bagdad-al-Ambâr road, 314, 315
Meseḥḥ ar-riẓân, hawk, 35
Mesembryanthemum Forskahlei, Hochst. See Semḥ
Mesembryanthemum nodiflorum, L. See Semḥ
Mešhen, ‘Aḳlat (j18), 656
Mešhen eben ‘Allûs of the al-Mwâjğe clan of the ‘Ebede, 432, 433
Mesopotamia, ford called maḥâza in southern, 484; Šammar in, 274, 316, 317, 551
Meşreb, Âl or Eben, 48, 641, 651, 658
Al-Meşrefe (a6), 535
Met‘eb, a Bedouin, 472
Met‘eb âl Hadab, 567
Met‘eb walad Kurdi, 220
Meteorite, crushes everything upon which it falls, 275; origin of, 6, 7; pieces of ∞ preserved as keepsakes, 226
Metkâl, a native of Irak, 500
Metkâl eben Sa‘id, 427
Me‘zel eben ‘Eḳla’ of the Mwâhib, 413
Mežhem eben Ġandal, 368
Mezjed (or Melhem), Eben, ruling house of the Ḥsene, 644
Mğejd, Eben, of the ‘Abdelle, 57, 280, 449, 595
Al-Mğelli, clan of the Fed‘ân, 391
Al-Mḥâdi, a Freği, 480, 481
Mḥammad eben Sa‘id, 427
Mḥammad eben Turki, 503
Mḥammad al-Kaẓib, 182, 184, 212, 214, 216, 217, 275, 297, 299, 301, 303, 305, 315, 317, 322, 362, 467, 634
Mhanna eben Ḥmûd eben ‘Obejd eben Rašid, 305
Mḥarût (Scorodosma arabica, Vel.; scented herb with long root, tall stem, decomposed, hairy leaves, and many yellow flowers), 95, 338
Al-Mḥaṭa, 626
Mhejd, Âl or Eben, ruling house of the Fed‘ân, 58, 498, 594

- Mhejmed, a Bedouin, 144
 Al-Mhejzer (k8), 366, 367
 Al-Midân (c6), 533
 Midsummer, camps erected in lowlands in, 164; pastures in, 584
 Midwives unknown, 243
 Migrating laden pack camels led by women, 199
 Migrating tribe, troop leading. See Salaf
 Migration, chief assures safety of, 625; direction of ∞ uncertain, 163, 165; into the inner desert, 205; separates lovers, 162, 163, 165—167; to the settled country, 162, 205; of the 'Amârât and Dahâmše to the settled country, 309; of the Fed'an to the settled country, 559; of the Šammar to the settled country, 210; when pasture is rich, 165
 Miğwel, Āl or Eben, 281
 Miğwel, Rğûm (m13), 646
 Miğwel Āl Miğwel, 53
 Al-Mihlef, group of the Āl Ġlās, 581
 Al-Mijādîn (b13), 499, 652, 660
 Al-Mijāh, Š. (d11), 420, 443, 641, 648, 652
 Miłhâk, kin of the Swâlme clan, 436
 Military leader, 506, 507; endangers the ruling house, 50, 51, 507; takes over the functions of the head chief, 544
 Mills, 91
 Mindil al-Ķaṭ'i, 95, 116, 170, 178, 193, 194, 199, 271, 361, 362, 365, 367, 466, 481, 599, 617, 633, 638—640, 673
 Al-Minkât (g6, h7), 657
 Al-Minšâr (b9), 649
 Minwer Āl Tajjâr, 585
 Mirage, 18, 19
 Miš'al eben Saṭtām eben Ĥamad eben Ša'lân, Mišerfe, a girl, 219 [58]
 Misery feared, 189
 Misfortune, forgiveness invoked on hearing of, 172
 Mišref eben Ĥrejmis, 661
 Mišref eben Kurdi, 234, 235
 Miz'el abu Maṭar, called aḥu Za'êla, 625
 Mķât eben Ġandal, 436, 437
 Mķaṭṭa', bird, 41
 Mlêoch, Dr. Melchior, Olomouc, xiii
 Mlêha, a camel's name, 335
 Mlehîr ar-ra'jân, bird, 40
 Al-Mlošî, Bijâr (e12), 630, 649, 653
 Mnâhi eben Dabbâr, sorcerer, 402, 403
 Mnezzel eben Nims, 496—498
 Mnife bint Saṭtām eben Ša'lân, 248, 263
 Mock battle, trâd al-ḥejl, performed in honor of an esteemed guest, 561
 Modesty needed, 476, 477
 Mole, 31
 Months, individual ∞ unknown, 4; names of, 172
 Moon, 1—4; and life, 1; and stars do not shine in regions where Allâh sends men who have sinned against their tribe, 342
 Moral precepts, 481—487
 Morejra, Ġaw (m12—13), 54, 55
 Al-Morṭebi, Turkish officer, 519
 Mosul, 197, 275
 Moth, 31
 Mother, cares most for a son, 421; denounces son who fled from fight, 54; esteem of ∞ increased by a baby boy, 254
 Mourning, for fallen raiders, 539, 540; for relatives, 162, 163, 201, 616; girl must not cry in the tent, 163; of female relatives for a dead man, 489; of a wife, 629; restricted, 671
 Mouse, 29, 30; and cat, 30, 31
 Al-Mra', Wâdi or Še'ib (h13), 220
 Mrê'i, variety of partridge, 40
 Al-Mrejr (l12), 645, 646
 Mrêbe near the settlement of Nefi, 181, 182
 Al-Mriža, Provoking, a mare's name, 383
 Al-Mrûğ, near Damascus, 582, 584
 Mša' (Nitraria tridentata, Desf.; shrub with white branches, wedge-shaped leaves, hard spines, small, yellowish flowers, and sweet fruit, ṭel'), 95
 Mša' (Scorzonera, L.; with long, narrow leaves and stalks bearing single heads of yellow flowers), 95
 Al-Mšâš (l19), 650
 Msejjeb, Eben, of the Mseke, 496, 497
 Al-Mseke, kin of the 'Ebede, 417, 496
 Mselli, a girl or a region in Neğd, 146
 Al-Mšowbeš, a Freği, 575
 Mtejje, a girl, 222
 Al-Mtejr, tribe, 182, 184, 299, 384
 Al-Mtejrât, nickname of the Mtejr, 612
 Muḥammad abu Tâjeh, 613
 Muḥammad Āl (or eben) Mhelhel, 154, 288, 592
 Muḥammad eben 'Abdallâh eben Rašid (1869—1897), 306, 308, 309, 356, 357, 577—579
 Muḥammad eben 'Ali, Prince in Ĥâjel, 57
 Muḥammad eben 'Arfeğ Āl 'Ali, 309, 311—313
 Muḥammad eben Dûhi eben Smejir, 57, 58, 534, 543, 544, 546, 557, 565, 580—582, 584, 587—589, 591—593
 Muḥammad eben Ĥarb, 613
 Muḥammad eben Hazzâ' eben Nâjef eben Ša'lân, 58, 627
 Muḥammad al-Ķâzi of 'Anejza, 111
 Al-Muntifež, tribe, 46, 320, 557, 618, 624, 625, 635; carry a flag on all their raids, 625
 Al-Murabba'a (d11), 641, 642
 Murabbet, a Ķmâši, 445
 Mur'az, Āl, clan of the Rwala, 51, 57, 603, 613
 Mur'aži, member of the Āl Mur'az, 134
 Murder, cases, 435; punished by Allâh, 674; vengeance of, 489—495
 Muriğ, a Bedouin, 244
 Mûsa, aš-Sejḥ, the author, 291, 292, 645
 Mushrooms, emerge from the ground in the sejḥ season after a copious rain, 323; search for, 15
 Musical ability judged according to the pounding of coffee, 101
 Musil, Alois, Arabia Deserta, xiii, 58; Northern Negd, xiii; Palmyrena, xiii; The Middle Euphrates, xiii; The Northern Heğâz, xiii, 275
 Al-Mwâhib, clan of the Ķmuša, 403, 413, 422
 Al-Mwâjçe, clan of the 'Ebede, 427, 432
 Mwâlî, tribe, 602
 Mwâṣal (Anurrhinum orientale, Bth.; coarse herb with flower thyrus), 338

- Mwasserin, kin of the Rwala, 497, 498
 Al-Mwejsen (m11), 415
 Mwēne', kin of the 'Ebede, have an unlucky sign, 391
 Mzählak of the Weld Slejmân, 420
 Al-Mzêrib (f4), 367, 582, 584, 666, 677
- Nâ'em (i7), 641
 Nails dyed yellow with henna, 124
 Nâjef, Eben, 289, 628
 Nâjef eben 'Abdallâh eben Ša'îlân, 56, 418
 Nâjef az-Zu'ejli, 569
 Name, fair ∞ lost, 505, 506; fair ∞ returned, 504, 505; good ∞ important, 483, 485
 Nâser eben Me'gel, 597
 Naši (dry sobot; Aristida plumosa, L.; smooth grass with roots to which sand sticks, and winged fruit), 338, 369
 Naššâr eben Mešreb, 48
 Na''ûs eben 'Ajde of the Rassâlin clan, 408, 409
 An-Na'wâši, a chief of the Sardijje, 532
 Nawwâf eben Ka'ejšiš, 558, 559
 Nawwâf eben an-Nûri eben Ša'îlân, 49, 185, 234, 235, 237, 248—251, 260, 323, 383, 517, 624, 626, 629, 638; father of, 511, 615
 Nâzel eben Dâhi eben Tnejjân, 356
 Nedi eben Šâlêh eben Zeri eben Mešreb, 48
 Nefi, settlement in Neğd, 182, 295, 297—299
 An-Nefûd (o10—p15), 21, 26, 38, 39, 42, 78, 83, 135, 144—146, 184, 185, 205, 210, 220, 273, 304, 345, 419, 439, 441, 467, 470, 520, 610, 612, 616, 650, 651, 666, 677
 Neğd, 61, 52, 57, 147, 182, 185, 196, 264, 276, 279, 290, 291, 296, 298, 300, 303, 320, 358, 439, 467, 477, 577, 648; saddles of ∞ goatskin, 363; waterbag of ∞ goatskin, 358
 Neğib eben Glejdân eben Šâlêh eben Zeri eben Mešreb, 48, 49
 Neighbors, or kušara, 267—269; constant trouble for the host, 480, 481; enjoy exceptional rights, 47, 267—269, 427; poems relating to, 271
 N'ejm, goat and sheep breeders, have an unlucky sign, 391
 Nejtâl (perennial with high stem and green, scented leaves), 338
 Nejtâl eben 'Ašwân eben Mešreb, 645
 Nejtâl eben Ġdejjan, 444—446
 Nejtâl eben Nedi eben Šâlêh eben Zeri eben Mešreb, 48
 Nhejb (h17), 653
 Nicknames given to different kins, 577
 Nights, significance of, 390; suitable for small raids, 507
 Nimr eben 'Adwân, 128, 191, 193, 194, 196—199
 Nimrin, creek in al-Belka, 193
 Nîra, a girl, 222, 223
Nitraria tridentata, Desf. See Mğa'
 Noah's ark, 196
 Nobility in the veins of women, 472, 473
 Nomads, division of, 44, 45
 Nowma, Sleepy, a mare's name, 383
 Nšejr, hero, 589
 Nšejr, Âl, kin of the Âl Mur'az, 7, 603, 610, 613, 618
- Nsûr*, (vultures), 36; accompany warriors, 542; young ostriches protected against, 39
 An-Nukra, 56—58, 78, 167, 205, 226, 368, 580, 669
 Nûra, camel herds of Eben Rašid, 579, 580
 An-Nûri eben Hazzâ' eben Ša'îlân, xiii., 4, 49, 58, 59, 102, 111, 132, 168, 169, 175, 234, 237, 238, 243, 247, 250, 251, 253, 260, 288—292, 316, 366, 383, 384, 386, 418, 438, 477, 484, 502, 505, 506, 517, 521, 567, 570, 577, 579, 581, 597, 603—605, 613—615, 618—621, 624—628, 630, 632, 636, 663
 Nwa', a girl, 155, 156
- Oath, disgraces a man, implying that his mere word is not believed, 427, 429; formulas of, 429—431, 435, 460, 539; al-ğehîra, 430; ğire of the slave Râsed, 539; in lawsuits, 429—431; al-msabba', 430
 'Obejd, descendants of, 642, 651
 'Obejd eben 'Ali eben Rašid (d. 1869), 300—302
 Al-'Obejjež (i13, h15, g—h17), 220, 416, 522, 653, 657
 Odors harm wounds, 179, 668
 Oil extracted from fruit of buṭum trees, 95
 Al-'Okde (q14), 302
 'Omân, camels imported from, 311, 312, 332, 588; civet, 183
 Omens, 389—399; desired before any act of importance, 258, 259; desired when starting on a raid, 507, 512; favorable for raids, 507; gazelle brings bad luck, 27; given by Allâh through the Abu-d-Dhûr, 574; invitation of a passer-by to eat considered good, 463; kins with bad, 509; man with his right and left upper eye-teeth missing bears misfortune, 393; natural phenomena as, 389—395; one-eyed person bears bad, 393; one raven is a bad, 36; two ravens bring good luck, 36; white means success, 511
 Oppressed tribesmen emigrate and encamp as neighbors with other tribes, 316
 Oppressors, protection from, 451, 452
Orejnb (Bassia muricata, L.; white hairy herb covering the sand), 338
 Oriental Seminar at Charles University, Prague, xiv Orobanche, L. See Zebb ad-dîh
 'Orzân (Misfortunates) of the Kwâche, 509
 Ostrich, 38, 39; feathers as an ornament, 191; feathers entwined in the hair, 226; feathers fastened to the spear, 552; flees at the sight of man, 151, 152; hatched in the Nefûd, 83; hunted by the Šlejib, 325
 Owl, 31
- Palms dyed yellow with henna, 124, 145]
 Palmyra (c8), 38, 180, 181, 205, 345, 422
 Palmyrena, gazelle flocks on the southern border of, 26; raids from northern ∞ to Hajbar or ar-Rma' 513; route from ∞ to al-Ğowf, 185; trade caravan in, 272; white frost in, 17; wild pig in, 28
 Panther, 20
 Parade made by warriors, before a pursuit, 578; shouting the battle cry, 81. See also 'Arâza

- Paradise, 587, 589, 674; rod originates in, 256; wide pastures in, 587, 589
- Pardon, asked and given in danger, 529; of enemy in fight, 578
- Pardoned enemy, 448, 529; head rope laid around the neck of, 140; remains in tent, 589; selling of, 615; who escapes is considered faithless, 449
- Partridge, 40; drinks water regularly, 39; mré'i variety, 40
- Paternity cases, 236, 237, 436, 437
- Patience is the key of success, 483
- Peace treaties, 570, 571, 581
- Pens. making of, 112
- Persia, arms made in, 545, camels and horses sold to, 214; saber made in, 631; spear blade brought from, 133; wandering dervishes from, 327; wealth of, 191
- Persian Gulf, 130, 184, 214
- Personal qualities, 471—488; men divided according to, 385
- Pig, wild, 28
- Pigeons drink water regularly, 39; nest in old ruins, 154
- Pilgrim Road from Damascus to Mecca, 226; under the control of Eben Melhem, 57
- Pimpinella arabica*, Boiss. See Ksejbre
- Pimpinella puberula*, DC. See Ksejbre
- Pistols replaced by revolvers, 517
- Platters for serving meat, 249
- Poetry, 283—328
- Poets, not held in esteem, 283; wait for a reward, 626; works of ∞: 'Abdallāh eben Rašīd, 303; 'Abdallāh eben Šejjel, 297; 'Abejce, Eben, rāfi Kna', 467; 'Ablān, Eben, 199; Al-'Ağrafi ad-Dahmaši, 502; 'Alī al-Hāzemi, 212; 'Amlūs ab-al-Wkal, 286; al-'Āten aš-Šarāri, 487; 'Awde abu Burkān al-Kwēčbi, 224, 225, 227; Bint Heḡlān ad-Durmi, 633; Čen'ān āl Tajjār, 172, 175; Drejjem az-Zulmāwi, 469; Fahad eben Šejh, 205, 579, 617; Fārḡūd al-'Amāri, 315; Fejḡān eben Zā'ed eben Zrejḡān, 182; Fejḡal al-'Ankari, 214; Ġwād abu 'Alī al-'Ani, 169; Ḥalaf āl Iden, 599; Hājes eben Meḡlād, 106; Ḥamad eben Nājeḡ eben Sa'-'lān, 220; al-Herbīd eben Swejd as-Singāri, 322; Ḥmūd eben 'Obejd eben Rašīd, 305; al-Ḥzejri, 386; Jūsef eben Mgejd, 272, 583, 630; Mehda' al-Hebdāni, 288, 591; Menzel eben Durmi, 588; Meš'ān an-Nsejri, 613; al-Mḡādi al-Freḡi, 481; Miz'el aḡu Za'ēla, 625; Muḡammad āl Mhelhel, 288, 592; Muḡammad eben 'Arfeḡ āl 'Alī, 311; Muḡammad al-Kāzi, 111; Nīmr eben 'Adwān, 128, 191, 193, 194, 197; an-Nūri eben Ša'-'lān, 102, 163, 291, 628; 'Obejd eben Rašīd, 301; Rākān eben Hatlān, 184; Raṡit al-Fedāwi, 366; Rumejzān at-Tamimi, 477; Sāḡer ar-Rafadi, 636; Šaḡkār al-Kubejsi, 275; aš-Šarrābi as-Singāri, 384; Selīm al-'Abd, 627, 629, 630; Zejḡān ar-Rwejli, 361; az-Zujūdi eben Ha-Porcupine, 28 [san, 387
- Possessed by earthly spirits, 398, 412; cured by seers, 412; woman or girl ∞ must not marry, 413
- Postures, different ∞ of man in tent, 64
- Prayers, no call to, 625
- Pregnancy, if not visible, hindrance for immediate marriage, 236
- Princely power marked by Abu-d-Dḡūr, 572
- Property not longed for, 479
- Prophecy from the position of twenty-three objects, 404, 405
- Prostitutes, children of black ∞ of central Arabia sold as slaves, 276
- Protection, by countenance, 438—440; by request, 441—443; depends on the power and renown of a man's kin, 440; from oppressors, 451; in danger, 519; lacked among strangers, 501; of animals, 443, 446; of enemy who voluntarily surrenders, 448; of guest, 464, 465; of guilty kin, 490; of persecuted, 426; of thieves, 449—451; tax causes lack of esteem, 136; tax paid by despised tribes, 59, 60, 136; tax paid by šwēja to bedw, 45; tax paid by settlers, 60
- Protectors shown gratitude by raising a white Protégés, 30, 442 [flag, 493
- Prudence advised, 478
- Rabb, 315
- Rabī', 13—16; pastures in, 584
- Rabies declares itself after forty days, 326
- Rabiṡ, Eben, of the 'Ebede, 427
- Rabša, a camel's name, 335
- Al-Radaf (f17), 522, 596, 648
- Raḡir. See proper name
- Ar-Ra'ejl, mare, 385, 386
- Raḡa' eben Kurdi, 244
- Ar-Raḡba, ancient town on the Euphrates, 125
- Raiders, ask protection of women and children, 637; bargain for their lives, 647; bring sacrifice on Turki eben Mhejd's grave, 419, 420; cannot spend night in a large plain, 475; disheartened by death of their leader, 618; examined by girls and women on return, 556; home coming of, 538; invite each other to supper, 522; pursued, 530; pursued ∞ saddle the best camel and leave it to pursuers, 651; returning with booty welcomed by women, 302; scattered ∞ seek hospitality of the Šlejḡ, 649; uncertain about their supper, 207, 208
- Raids, 506—540; arrangements for attack, 596; destination of ∞ kept secret, 485, 508, 509; without distribution of booty, 641
- Rain, 7—10; accompanied by storm at the close of April, 248; assures luxuriant growth of annuals, 542; brought by the south wind, 266; copious ∞ causes flood in dry channels, 255; follows a saḡāba cloud, 469, 470; in the sejj season copious but not long, 323; kinds of, 10, 11; light and irregular ∞ causes misery, 549; of the Pleiades gives new life to the grass seed, 226; ponds, 249, 580; ponds enable pasture in the inner desert, 584; prayers for, 10—13
- Rain water, accumulated in large basins and soaked into the ground gives rise to settlements, 300; hollows in channels known to the Šlejḡ, 325; rifts in a rock filled with, 175
- Rainy periods, 7—10

- Rākān eben Haṭlēn, 183—185
 Rākān eben Meḡlād, 546, 547
 Ramtān, a Bedouin, 359
 Rānem, progenitor of the Šlejḡ, 325
 Rannām, kin of the Dahāmše, 84, 85
 Rannām eben Ġel'ūd, recognized seer, 402
 Ransom offered by a fettered thief, 450
 Rārājes (19—10), 606
 Al-Rārāwi, a Rwejlī, 140, 141
 Rarb, settled territory, 45, 162, 167, 205, 210, 309, 397, 559, 568, 660, 675
 Rārḡ, water bird, 36
 Rarra, White Fronted, a mare's name, 383
 Rarrāf, Saṭṭām's slave, 597, 601, 602
 Al-Rarri (f12), 648
 Rāsed, gire of the slave, 539
 Rāsed al-Haḡlī, 309
 Rašem, Eben, 647
 Rāsēn, Abu (or Ekḡren, i8—9), 659
 Rāši, a Bedouin, 222
 Rašīd, Eben, ruling house of the Šammar, 184, 185, 302, 308, 309, 419, 422, 473, 505, 506, 517, 577—579, 635; attacked by the Rwala, 397
 Rašīd eben Baṛri eben Dārer eben Žeri eben Meṣreb, 48
 Rašmerijje (or Kašmerijje), a girl, 186
 Ar-Rašrāšijje (j6—7), 641
 Rassālīn (or Rasālīn), clan of the Kmuša, 391, 408
 Raṭīṭ, servant of Prince an-Nūri, 366
 Raṭjān walad 'Awwāz, 423
 Raṭū', a mare, 518
 Raṭwān eben Meršed, 445, 446, 497—499
 Raven, 36, 37; and fox, 23, 24
 Ar-Rawāk (e5—d7), 25
 Raṡa (tree-like bush with long, flexible boughs and lean, needle-shaped leaves), 66, 110, 113, 135, 175, 231, 338, 415; gives best coals, 66, 113; wispy, 473
 Rāzi, a Kḡmāši, 444
 Rāzi eben Šabr, 445
 Raṡrāf (subshrub with long roots, dense branches, and rosy flowers), 338
 Ar-Rbā' (or ar-Rub'), clan of the Tūmān of the Šammar, 518
 Rebec, 142
 Red-hot iron, burning with, 369, 382, 383, 666, 667; laid on the stomach, 165; licked in al-'Ela', 238
 Red Sea, 292
 Reffa's sisters, war cry of Eben Zejd kin of the Rwala, 616, 617
 Refuge, camps recognized as places of ∞ of guilty kins, 491
 Reptiles, 41—43
 Rešād (Lepidium sativum, L.; species of peppergrass), 95
 Ar-Rešāfa (a9), 414
 Rfede, kin, 406
 Rḡēl, Āl, of the 'Ebede, 427
 Rḡūm, plural of Rīḡm. See proper name
 Rḡama, clan of the Kmuša, chief of ∞ are recognized judges, 427
 Rhejbāwi, originated from the ancient town of ar-Raḡba, appellative of itinerant merchants, 125
 Rhejbāwi Baṛdādi, itinerant merchant of Bagdad, 125
 Rhejbāwījjāt, itinerant merchants, 61
 Ar-Rhejbe, 31
 Rheumatism, remedy for, 36
 Rhymes give much trouble to a poet, 483
 Ribbons fastened behind a riding saddle, 158, 292, 475
 Ribšān, subdivision of al-Ka'āž'a, 51, 52, 631, 632
 Riddles, 43, 327, 328
 Rider thrown from the saddle ought to be helped, 542, 552
 Ar-Rifā'ijje Order, 669
 Rifles, 131, 132; dropped ∞ found during a raid are handed over to the commander, 510; old ∞ familiar to the owner, 226; with flint locks, 189
 Right when sought already lost, 585
 Rīḡlet. See proper name
 Rīḡm. See proper name
 Rīḡhāne, sweet basil, 176
 Rīma, a camel's name, 335
 Rīmī (Haloxylon articulatum, Cav.; large bush with needle-shaped leaves and spikes of small whitish flowers), 338, 415; serves as fuel, 468; sweet juice collected, 95
 Rīrān al-Banāt (m11), 645
 Ar-Rma', Wādi (s19), 384, 439, 513
 Rmejḡ, Haḡba (m16), 579, 580
 Rmejḡ abu ḡnejb eben Fājez, 605, 612, 615, 617, 618
 Robbery, of a guest or companion punished by Allāh, 674; of a man protected by the robber's fellow tribesman punished severely, 440
 Rorejla (Atriplex dimorphostegia, K. K.; annual with broad leaves and small green flowers), 95
 Roṛol (Atriplex leucoclada, Boiss.; subshrub with resplendent leaves and small yellowish flowers), 338
 Rothschild, Baron Louis, Vienna, xiii
 Al-Rōwr, tobacco of, 128
 Ršejd, eben al-'amm of Rušna, 225, 226
 Ršejd eben Žeri eben Meṣreb, 447, 448, 660, 661
 Ršen, Tell (h7), 657
 Ršūm, Āl, subdivision of al-Ka'āž'a, 577, 647
 Rṡa. See Arṡa
 Rubaḡla (Scorzonera papposa, DC.; bulbous plant with red flowers), 95
 Ruḡejn, Eben, clan of the Fed'ān, 445, 446, 662; known for his protection, 491
 Ruḡmān, Eben (or ar-Ruḡmān), chief of a small kin of the Dowšān clan, 295, 299
 Ruins inhabited by spirits, 414—416
 Rumejzān at-Tamīmī, 476, 477
 Rumex lacerus, Balb. See Haḡšīš Rumḡa, a girl, 273
 Rūmī, Eben, Christian merchant, 194
 Rummān, Eben, hero of the Weld 'Alī, 557
 Al-Rurāb (e9), 496, 643, 650
 Rurāb al-ḡadālī (f7—8), 657
 Rušna, a girl, 224—228
 Russia, Turkish war with, 184
 Al-Rūṡa, unhealthful, 666, 677

- Râte* (Salsola lancifolia, Boiss.; perennial with small prickly leaves and small, pinkish flowers), 338, 600
- Ar-Rwâf (s9—10), 227, 228
- Ar-Rwala, chiefs of, 51; recognized as true bedw, xiii, 45; subject themselves readily to Allâh's will, 86
- Ar-Rwêšdât (neighborhood of the ar-Rwêšed valleys, g—h8—9), 600, 637
- Ar-Rwêšed (g—h8—9), 566, 650
- Al-Rwêta (or Rwêta Ġerâd, m9), 38
- Š. Abbreviation for Še'ib. See proper name
- As-Sa'ad, kin of the 'Umûr, 644
- Sa'ada, Tell (h7), 657
- As-Saba', Sbaht (SM c5), 653
- Šabbâh, Eben, ruling house of al-Kwejt, 46, 635
- Sâbel an-Nušeiri, 116, 117
- Šabr âl Murabbat of the Rwala, 409
- Šabr eben Šajer, 445
- Šabri, bird, 40
- Šâbûr, camel riders who ward off attacks of the captured herds' owners, 105
- Sacrifice, 'azîre ∞ offered by the leader within three days after his return from the raid, 539; before the Abu-d-Dhûr in honor of Allâh, 574; by a boy who brought back booty from the first raid, 539; by robbers at Turki eben Mhejd's grave, 419, 420; circumcision, 245; common ∞ offered by sons who do not divide the inherited estate, 664; few drops of coffee poured on the ground as a sacrifice for Šâdri, 102; for a sick man, 668; hbâta for the dead towards the evening of the third day, 671, 672; hbâta enables the body to return to its grave, 674; on a grave, 182; temîma for a child on the zaḥijje feast, 244; to the memory of the dead, zaḥijje, 184, 247, 634, 665, 672; to a seer's ancestor, 402; wedding, 228, 229
- Sacrificed animal's blood besmeared on the humps and necks of the riding camels, 539
- Sa'da, Good Luck, a mare's name, 383
- Saddle bag, hurğ, 149; mezhebe or mezwebe, in which food is carried on the journey, 308
- Sadha, Lioness, a mare's name, 383
- Šâdri first boiled coffee, 102
- Sa'dûn, Âl, ruling house of the Muntifež, 319, 320
- Sa'dûn al-Aškar, 557, 618—621, 626, 628, 630, 635
- Sa'dûn eben Me'ğel, 446
- Sa'êla, a camel's name, 335
- Ša'êle, bird, 40
- Sa'fa, a camel's name, 335
- Safety is guaranteed by a returned salutation, 455
- Šaffâra, bird, 40
- Aš-Šafha, appellation of the Hwêtât, Šarârât, and Beni 'Atijje territory, 610, 614
- Sâger ar-Rafadi, 636
- Sâğûr, 288, 289
- Šâha, camel herds of the Aslam, 567
- Šaḥḥûm (Gagea reticulata, Pall.; small bulbous herb with linear leaves and a single yellow flower), 95
- Šaḥla, a camel's name, 335
- As-Sâhna, creek, 168
- Šahr, Beni (j—14), 46, 116, 117, 239, 398, 415, 471, 491, 498, 570, 584, 603—606, 613, 615, 617, 618, 657
- As-Sâ'î, Darb (e7, c—f14), 420
- Sa'id, kin of the Rḥama clan of the Ķmuša, 427, 651
- Saints, worship of ∞ unknown, 418
- Šajer eben Farağ, 445
- Šajjâh eben Ġlejdân, recognized seer, 402
- Šajjâh eben Ġlejdân eben Šâleḥ eben Žeri eben Meşreb, 48
- Šâk al-Herr, 645
- Šakḥâr al-Kubejsi, 274, 275
- Šakr âl (or eben) Meşreb, 402, 643, 644, 647—649, 653—655, 657—661
- Salaf, troop of warriors riding at the head of a migrating tribe, 76, 107, 162, 255
- Salamja (c6), 178, 179, 658
- Ša'lân, a Mur'azi, founder of the ruling house of Eben Ša'lân, 51, 52
- Ša'lân, Eben, ruling house of the Rwala, 50, 52, 57, 136, 170, 171, 262, 268, 288, 449, 525, 526, 532, 535, 555, 563, 577—580, 583, 589, 590, 600—603, 607, 618, 619, 622, 624, 625, 629, 630, 636; decides in questions of war and peace, 427
- Šâleḥ eben Žeri eben Meşreb, 48
- Sâlem, Âl, wholesale firm trading in camels, 279
- Sâlem eben Ĥmûd eben 'Obejd eben Rašid, 305, 306
- Šalfiž eben Fâres âl Ġarba', 274, 275
- Šâlha bint an-Nûri eben Ša'lân, 251
- Salsola inermis*, Forsk. See Kaḥkâz
- Salsola lancifolia*, Boiss. See Râte
- Salt, 94
- Salutation, 455—457; first given by the visitor, 142; if repeated, assures safety to fleeing enemy, 529, 530; of a bride and bridegroom, 229
- Aš-Šâma (i7—k10), 25, 285, 286, 636
- Samalḥmaḥ, bird, 40
- Šâmân al-Ĥajjât, 641
- Šâmat al-Wâdi (or Wâdi Sirḥân, i5—19), 641
- As-Samâwa, settlement in Irak, 210, 502, 503, 632
- Šammâr, tribe, in Mesopotamia, 239, 275, 303, 316, 317, 551, 566, 567, 641, 652, 653, 660; in Neğd, 52—54, 56, 57, 83, 116, 158, 187, 195, 205, 210, 304, 309, 322, 362, 419, 422, 439, 441, 469, 506, 517, 579, 633, 648
- Šammâr âl Ġarba', 303, 491
- Šammari, member of the Šammâr, 53, 54, 211, 319, 441, 640
- Sammiṭ eben 'Amša, 499
- Sammiṭ eben Mhejd, 649
- Šammûne, bird, 40
- Sanad ar-Rab'i, Šammâr war chief, 518
- Sand drifts, 172, 175; along the borders of stony dells, 185
- Sand grouse. See Kaṭa'
- Sand storm, 19, 567, 614
- Šanḥûr, negro of Ĥâjel, 304—306
- Ša'rân (Suaeda, Forsk.; shrub with prickly leaves and small, greenish flowers), 338

- Aš-Šarārāt, tribe (16—q8), 135, 136, 165, 170, 171, 278, 282, 290, 291, 294, 298, 332, 367, 368, 441, 453, 583, 603—605, 610, 613, 614, 640, 646, 660
- Šarāri, member of the Šarārāt, 152, 328, 441, 474, 487
- As-Sardijje, tribe, 126, 532
- Šarha', a camel's name, 335
- Aš-Šarrābi, a Singāri, 384, 385
- Satiety, eating to, 542
- Satli (or šetel), 142
- Sattām eben Hamad eben Ša'lān (d. 1904), 46, 57, 58, 116, 117, 248, 250, 251, 253—255, 430, 431, 487, 543, 544, 558, 559, 581, 592—597, 599—603, 605, 613, 616
- Sa'ūd, Eben, 46, 279, 305, 505, 542
- Sa'ūd eben 'Abdal'azīz eben Rašid (d. 1920), 505
- Sa'ūd eben an-Nūri eben Ša'lān, 49
- Sá'w, bird, 40
- Aš-Šawwān, Dīret, district to the west of the Sirhān depression, 291, 292
- Aš-Šazri (e10), 641, 643, 652
- As-Sba'a, xiii, 46, 57, 81, 134, 179—181, 184, 391, 418, 420, 422, 423, 425, 427, 444, 533, 534, 566, 641, 643, 645, 649; battle cry of, 81
- Sbaht. See proper name
- Šbēh (or Šbēt, a7), 491
- Šbē'i, member of the Sba'a tribe, 81, 449
- Sbejbeḡ, Turkish commander, 588, 589
- Scabiosa palaestina*, L. See Ummu rwejs
- Schoeller, Philipp Alois, xiii
- Scorodisma arabica*, Vel. See Mḡarāt
- Scorpion, 43; cure of bites of, 669
- Scorzonera*, L. See Mša'
- Scorzonera papposa*, DC. See Rubaḡla
- Scout, 'ajñ (pl., 'ujūn), rider on horseback examines country and chooses night quarters for raiders, 217, 511, 512, 522, 523, 596;
- sabr (pl., sbūr), rider on camel examines enemy's camps and herds for raiders, 523, 596; tullū', examines the neighborhood of a camp to prevent surprise attack, 524
- Seal ring token of authority, 52
- As-Se'en (b7), 648
- Seers, 400—404; accompany raids, 509; and rain, 7; at the bed of a sick man, 668
- Še'ib. See proper name
- Še'ibān, plural of Še'ib. See proper name
- Seidlitzia Rosmarinus*, Ehrnb. See Šnān
- Šejd at-ṭas'a, herbivorous animal, 28
- Sejdarān, 416
- Sejf, a Šammari, 319
- Aš-Šejḡ Ma'rūf. See Ma'rūf, aš-Šejḡ
- Aš-Šejḡ Miskīn, 31
- As-Sejhed, Tār, (h19), 521, 522
- Self-reliance praised, 477, 478
- Selim, negro, 627, 629, 630
- As-Selka, clan of the 'Amārāt, 85, 636
- Selma (or Salma, r15), 174
- Aš-Šemālāt, inhabitants of the country around the Hawrān, 615, 660. See also Ahl aš-Šemāl
- Semḡ* (Mesembryanthemum Forskahlei, Hochst.; Mesembryanthemum nodiflorum, L.; low, sappy annual with green, fleshy leaves and small green flowers), 15, 16, 93; substitute for wheat, 93
- Senecio coronopifolius*, Desf. See Ġirġir
- Aš-Šenini (or Umm aš-Šenin, o10), 285, 286
- Sentinels behind piles of stones look for enemy, Aš-Šera' (l-m3), 618 [525]
- Serāḡin of the Sba'a, 57
- Šerā'i abu Hsejjen, 660, 661
- As-Serdijje. See As-Sardijje
- Aš-Šerim, Umm (g13), 648
- Šerḡ, inner desert, 45, 90, 205, 211, 222, 227, 397, 422, 522, 575, 588, 675
- Serpents, 42; shed skin of ∞ remedy for eye diseases, 42
- Servant, fedāwi, 136, 166
- Šetāta (g18—19), 82, 83
- Šetel, rice grown on the lower Euphrates and Tigris, 181
- Settlers, 42, 44; act as agents of Bedouin chiefs, 214; camp in tents with their herds and are called ar-ra'ijje, 292, 474; "change air" in midsummer, 214; despised by Bedouin women, 214; division of, 44; have to supply the Bedouins, 90; hunt for wealth is the root of all troubles among, 479; mistrusted by Bedouins, 479; not permitted to marry Bedouins, 288; of inner Arabia go to earn money in the Hawrān, 349; peace with the ∞ subject to the Government not concluded, 504; pay protection tax, 60; spoken of as Arabs when living in tents 474; thrive under a strong government, 45; use camels in plowing, hauling, and threshing, 348
- Šfajje, Ḥabra' (i10), 223
- Sfūk āl Ġarba', 274, 275, 316
- Shaving, 115-117
- Sheep and goats, calling for, 273; cannot endure long and swift marches, 85
- Sheepskin coat, 120, 121
- Shirt, ṭowb, for men, 118, 119; for men decorated, 249; for women, 122, 123, 144
- Shooting at a target, 132
- Šḡr. See Šaḡr, Beni
- Šib, cross between wolf and hyena, 22
- As-Sib, a place, 643
- Sib, a Šammari, 567
- Sick persons cured by seers, 403
- Sidd al-Ḥerr, 646
- Sidr* (species of acacia with long lean boughs) inhabited by spirits, 416
- Signals sent from high cones, when attacked, 543
- Signs. See Omens
- Ših (kind of wormwood), 66, 100, 128, 208, 209; considered the worst fuel, 66; wisps of ∞ used to light fires, 100, 473; smoldering ∞ used as a remedy, 383, 408
- Šiḡa, a Rwejlīje, 141
- Šiḡa, Cautious, a mare's name, 383
- Sijāb, members of the reigning house of Eben Nājeḡ, 288, 289
- Singār, Ġebel, southwest of Mosul, 196, 197, 458
- Singāra, tribe of the Šammar, 157, 158, 210, 322, 384, 441, 648, 649
- Sins punished by Allāh, 674 [659]
- Sirhān, tribe, 46, 197, 239, 415, 491, 497, 500, 596
- Sirhān, Wādi (i5—19), 20, 31, 40, 94, 117, 159, 187, 220, 286, 292, 361, 367, 395, 416, 439, 441

- Sirhâni, member of the Sirhân, 46
Sisymbrium Irio, L. See Hârâ
Sisymbrium irioides, Boiss. See Hârâ
 Šita bint Saṭṭâm eben Ša'lân, 251—254
 Šita's brother, Eben Ša'lân's war cry, 563; sisters of, 627, 628
 Aš-Šiẓiẓ (m—n11), 57
 Skâka (m12), 54, 632, 650
 Aš-Škûr, clan of the 'Amârât, 85, 134, 415, 637—639, 646, 650, 651
 Slanderer warned, 288—290
 Šlâš, hero of the Ša'lân kin, 589
 Šlâš eben Fâjez, 617, 618
 Slaves, 276—278; call their master uncle, 517; dig fireplace, 66; esteemed, 600, 601;
 have among Bedouins their uncles, 83; in love with Bedouin women expelled, 82; like to make themselves important, 509; marriage with ∞ forbidden, 137—139
 Sleep, cause of reproof, 475; made possible by Allâh, 398
 Sleeping person, dressed in dangerous districts, 126; endangered by earthly spirits, 398, 412; has no soul, 398, 496; must not be killed by an avenger, 496;
 Šlejb, 26, 77, 95, 118, 134, 136, 196, 197, 278,
 282, 323—325, 406, 453, 596, 625, 626, 637, 644,
 648—650, 655, 658, 675; bring failure, 391, 392; inspect pastures, 77; women believed to possess supernatural powers, 406
 Slejmân eben Meršed. See Slimân eben Mer-Slimân eben Meršed, 418, 534, 535 [šed
 Slings, boys throw stones from, 256
 Šlubi, member of the Šlejb, 323—325, 422, 596, 644, 645
 Aš-Šlubi, Še'ib (c12), 650
 Šlubijje, woman of the Šlejb tribe, 406, 407
 Aš-Šlubijje, Habra (f10), 642
 Smejha, The Little Gentle, a mare's name, 383 Smejir (or Baṭṭâh), Eben, ruling house of the Weld 'Ali, 520, 532, 557, 580, 587, 591, 602, 621, 622; settles disputes pertaining to blood vengeance in the Beni Wahab group, 427
 Smejir eben Zejdân, 317
 Smoking pipes, 127, 128; carved by Bedouins, 287; raġjûn of cherry-tree twigs, 192; repaired when broken, 129; with a long stem used by women, 320
 Snake, bitten person cured by a soothsayer, 669; bodies in ruins are dwellings of spirits,
 414, 415
 Šnân (Seidlitzia Rosmarinus, Ehrnb.; scented subshrub with white branches, greenish leaves, and winged fruit), 338; used instead Snejdân, a Kṃâši, 445, 446 [of soap, 134
 Snow, 17
 Snûne, Âl, of the Fed'ân, 645
 Sobot (called naši, when dry), 338
 Solejmân, a Rwejli, 200
 Solomon, son of David, circle of ∞ protects from beasts of prey, 348 Soothsayers, 404—406; cure snake-bitten persons, 669; learn from members of the Rifâ'ijje Order, 669; know hidden things, 404.
 See also Seers
 Sorcerers. See Seers
 Sorghum substitute for wheat, 93 Soul, is in every living man, 673; is put into man by Allâh, 673; leaves sleeping body, 398; obeys Allâh, 669; of a lover dwells in that of his sweetheart, 201; originates from Allâh's breath, 673; remains not forever in human body, 550; returns to Allâh on the man's death, 673
 Spear, 132, 133; adorned with ostrich feathers, 309, 385, 521; adorned with tiny chains, 520;
 adorned with wreath, 617; yielded to a repeating rifle, 517
 Spider, 43
 Spindle, 67
 Spirits, earthly, 411—417; and fog, 18; and sandstorm, 19; help sorcerers, 401; must be satisfied, 389; settle in sleeping body, 398, 412
 Spreading of garment in court, 428
 Sprenger, A., 57
 Spy of a raid rewarded, 644 Šrajjer eben 'Emrân of the Mwâhib clan of the Šba'a, 422
 Aš-Šrejfi, subdued by Eben Ša'lân, 52—56
 Aš-Šrejfi. See Dlejmân aš-Šrejfi
 Aš-Šrejfiije (f13), 648
 St. Etienne, revolvers from, 134
Stachys affinis, Fres. See Lubbêna
Stachys Musili, Vel. See Lubbêna
 Stars, and rain, 7—9, 13, 14, 225, 226, 298;
 have unfavorable properties to man, 399;
 indicate direction, 183, 185, 186, 275, 319, 355, 396; lead astray, 399; pole star is the traveler's safest guide, 275; prevent healing of wounds, 668
 Stâtni tiskârna, Prague, xiv Stealing from a fellow tribesman considered sin, 86, 449; from a stranger is a proof of cunning and strength, 449
 Štêwi, Eben, of the as-Šhejm clan of the al-
 'Amira division of the Kṃuša, 427, 497
 Sticks, 127, 542
 Stolen property, protection of, 450, 451
 Stone piles shelter spies, 191
 Stork, 36
 Strangers in the camp, 267—282
Suaeda, Forsk. See Ša'rân
Suaeda vermiculata, Forsk. See Ṭhama
 Aš-Šubeče (k19), 648
 Aš-Šubeče (l8), 415
 As-Subiḥi, 600
 As-Su'ên (b7), 648
 Sugar, 179
 As-Suḥne (c9), 60, 458, 648, 649
 Šulhân, a Bedouin, 403
 Sultân al-'Amri, 575
 Sultân eben Dawiš, 184
 Sultân eben Ša'lân, 575
 Sultân eben Swejt, chief of the Zefir, 574, 575
 As-Sultâni, Darb (b11, c10), 645
Sumarmar, bird, 40
 Sumatra spice, 110
 Aš-Šumbul (d6—a9), 658
 Šummân land, 358
 Sun, 1—4
 Sundog, 7
 Supernatural gifts are inherited, 400

- Supernatural powers of Šlejb women, 406, 407
 Supper principal meal, 542
 Surûğ, 535 [652, 660]
 Aş Šwâb (d—e11—12), 274, 275, 419, 596, 647,
 Šwâb, ʿAqlat (d12), 649
Šwâja, are those who camp on the edge of the desert and breed goats and sheep, 44, 45; arrange their tents in the form of an ellipse, 180; derided by Bedouins, 566; pay protection tax to Bedouins, 45
 Swallow, 31, 40
 As-Swâlme, clan of al-Mihlef, 57, 436, 606, 636
 Šwardi, a Šammari, 319
 Sweet basil thrives at rain water holes, 176
 Sweats cause wounds to fester, 668
 Aş-Šwejbât, Šeʿibân (beginnings of the aş-Šwâb valley), 648, 660
 As-Swejda, 535, 536
 As-Swejf (j14), 621
 Aš-Šwejhet (112), 646
 Swejt, Eben, ruling house of the Zefir, 575-577
 Šwër (112), 631, 632, 650, 653, 654
 Šwetât, nickname of Eben Swejt, 577 Sword, 133; or saber covered with gray and dark strips and patches, 85
 Syria, al-Bežže in, 367; commander of the Turkish garrison in ∞ sent help to Muḥammad eben Smejir against the Rwala, 588; commercial relations of al-Ḳašim with, 112; migration to, 162, 319; Pasha of ∞ imprisoned an ʿAmârât chief, 315; Persian fabrics brought from Irak to, 272, 274;
 travelers from ∞ to the Šammar and Ḳuşmân territory, 469; Turkish government prevents migration to, 519, 521; wealth of, 191; wheat brought from, 467
 Tâfha, a camel's name, 335
 At-Tâjât (k10), 205
 At-Tâjef, Eben Bassâm's house at, 278
 Tajjâha, a camel's name, 335
 Tajjâr, Âl (or Eben), ruling house of the Weld ʿÂli, 205, 520; chief judge of the Beni Wahab, 427; renowned for his protection, 491 Tajjetb Ism, substituted for topographical names of bad omen, 389
 At-Tajjibe (b9—10), 60, 648, 649
 Taḳla bint Fâjez eben Ġandal, 58
 Taḷâl eben Fejšal eben Šaʿlân, 58, 584
 Taḷâl eben Haddâl, 546, 547
 Tâmer eben Saʿdûn, 618—621, 627, 630
 Tamîm, Beni, tribe, 477
 Tamša, a camel's name, 335
 At-Tanâdi near Nefî, 181, 182
 Târ. See proper name
 At-Tarâfi, kin of the Šlejb subject to Eben
 Mâleç, 650
 Târeš eben Melfi ad-Dahmaši, 84, 326, 502
 Tarfaʿ, Umm, 646
 Tarḥûme, a girl, 536
 Tarše, bird, 39
 Tartût (Cynomorium coccineum, L. var. Cynomorium giganteum, Vel.; parasite with root more than two meters long and innumerable yellow and pink flowers forming a large spike), 95
 Tattooing, 118, 191, 192; arms, 224, 251; cheeks, 196, 198
 At-Tawil (m—n10), 20, 25, 38, 209, 210
 Tawil al-Felğ (Hermon), 228 Taxes, raised by an-Nûri eben Šaʿlân for the Turkish Government, 58; surplus divided among chiefs, 59. See also Protection tax Tebûk (p4—5), 584
 Tedâmre, inhabitants of Tudmor, 658
 Teʿes. See proper name
 Teʿes al-Hadani, 641
 Teeth, add to beauty, 561; kissed, 169, 265, 361, 534, 554; praised 111, 144, 145, 156, 174, 175,
 179, 191, 202, 208, 224, 563
 Tejma, companion on author's journey to, 152;
 well in, 600; road from al-Ġowf to, 286;
 Rwala camp near, 78, 205, 604; Šarârât territory north of, 583; Wâḳsa south of, 414;
 Weld Slejmân camp southeast of, 171
 At-Tejr, Râdir (c10), 643
 Tell. See proper name
 Telle, sweetheart of Ḥamad eben Šaʿlân, 220 Tent, 61—85; complete ∞ required by social standing of the kin, 261; disgracing of ∞ punished severely, 442; male members sit by the dividing partition of, 264; for men, coffee only prepared in, 502; kinds of, 72;
 ropes can be accommodated to the strength of the wind, 263; sacred precincts of, 441, 442; small round ∞, ḥeğra, for married couple, 228; small ∞, tuzz, 93
 Testimony, false ∞ under oath before a court punished by Allâh, 674; valid, 429
Teucrium Polium, L. See Ġaʿade Ṭhama (Suaeda vermiculata, Forsk.; bushy perennial with green fleshy leaves and very small flowers), 338
 Thanks for meals, 463; for some service, 360
 Thievery, protection in cases of, 449—451 Thieves, captured ∞ are not to be bound among the beni al-amm, 47, 450; divest themselves, 544; fettered when caught, 640; shot dead without liability to vengeance, 450, 495, 544 Thirst, danger for travelers, 95, 654, 655; torments animals and people, 55; torments travelers, 156; torments young she-camels, 143
 Tiberias, 228
 Ticks, 36
 Tigris, forms the eastern boundary of the ʿAneze, 441; monuments erected to aš-Šejḥ Maʿrûf and as-Sitt Zobejde on the right bank of, 315; Šammar between the Euphrates and, 239, 275, 491, 568; šetel or tummen grown on the lower, 181
 Tiḥ eben al-ʿAşl, 566—568
 At-Tijâha, tribe, 332
 At-Tinf (e9), 496, 582, 584, 643, 650
 Tîta, 95
 Tîlûl, plural of Tell. See proper name
 At-Tnejf, Ḥabra (e9), 496
 Tombstones besmeared by blood of sacrificed
 animals, 418, 420
 Tracks, betray enemy, 607; read by experts, 273
 Trâd eben Ḥalaf âl Iġen called al-ʿArefa, 236—238, 637

- Trād eben Saṭṭām, 46, 148, 197, 205, 319, 474
 Trād eben Zeben of the Beni Šaḥr, 606, 607
 Traitor, hired ∞ may be killed without fear of vengeance, 495; will not escape punishment, 613
 Transliteration, xiii, xiv
 Traveler, arrival of ∞ at his host's, 459, 460; ditties of, 457—459; does not conceal the position of his last host's camp, 456; journeying under protection receives back robbed property, 440; observes stars, 183, 185, 186; safest guide of ∞ is the polestar, 275; salutation of, 455, 456; uncertain about his supper, 207, 208; welcoming of, 460, 461
 Traveling, before the countenance, 438, 439; in the desert easy in the time of plenty, 646; in a level plain safe and easy, 178; in midsummer most fatiguing, 182
 Traveling companion, 440, 441; enjoys special privileges, 47, 267, 427; makes journey easy, 440; must not be fleeing culprit, 440; prudence needed in selecting, 478
 Treasures guarded by spirits, 414
 Tribal emblem, 571—574
 Tribes, camping by the Euphrates send gifts to the Dahāmše, 85; despised ∞ pay protection tax, 59, 60, 136; inequalities among, 137; related, duties of, 47; united for mutual protection, 49, 50
Trigonella hamosa, L. See Kurrēš
 Truffles, and mushrooms, 15; of the zbejdi variety, 323
 Tudmor (c8), 60, 422, 658. See also Palmyra
 Ṭu'ejme, a girl, 458
 Aṭ-Tūka, division of the Beni Šaḥr, 615
 Tūmān, tribe of the Šammar, 116, 441, 506
 Tumbae injurious, 130
Tummejr (Erodium bryoniaefolium, Boiss.; Erodium ciconium, L.; a species of hemlock stork's-bill), 95
Tummen (rice grown on the lower Euphrates and Tigris), 181
 Tūnis in Africa, clouds come from, 5; maidens from ∞ mentioned, 196
 Turcomans help Muḥammad eben Smejr against the Rwala, 587—589
 Turkey, in 1875 twenty Arabian chiefs imprisoned in, 184
 Turki, Eben (or Mḥammad eben Turki), 502
 Turki eben Hmejd eben 'Arej'er, 214—216
 Turki eben Mhejd, chief of the Fed'ān, 289, 419, 420, 516, 593—602, 648, 649; grave of ∞ revered by raiders, 419, 420
 Turki eben Wājel, 641
 Turkiije hint Mhejd, 58, 250, 253, 558, 559, 593, 595, 603
 Turkish Government, hated by the Šammar in Mesopotamia, 275; invited Saṭṭām eben Ša'lān to Constantinople, 603; Muḥammad eben Smejr devoted to, 588; protected the settlers in the seventies, 519; taxes for ∞, 58, 59
 Turkish officials distrusted by Rākān eben Haṭlēn, 184
 Turkish régime, 58
 Turkish troops, help Muḥammad eben Smejr, 589, 590; occupied al-Ḥasa' in 1871, 184; prevented the Rwala from entering Syria, 521
 Turks, assist Prince Āl 'Alī in Ḥājel, 301, 303; daughters of ∞ mentioned, 196; fight with ∞ difficult, 247, 248; imprisoned a chief of the 'Amārāt, 314; not liked by the Rwala, 589
 Turtle dove, 41
 Umm. See main part of proper name
Umm sālem, bird, 41
Ummu rwejs (Scabiosa palaestina, L.; high annual with hairy flower stalks and leaves and heads of yellowish flowers; a species of scabious), 95
 Al-'Umūr, tribe (c5—d7), 644
 Unchastity, penalties for, 239, 240
 Understanding leads to good counsel, 483
 Unfaithfulness consoled with fights, 185
 Vengeance, 489—503; culprit pursued by ∞ requests protection, 443, 444; for an eloped girl, 138; kin subject to ∞ seeks refuge in another territory, 423; of slaves reaches free Bedouins, 278; vow for effectuating ∞ frequent, 423
 Viper, 42
 Virgin's violation revenged by death, 495
 Visibility in the desert is great, 514
 Visiting, day set apart for, 155
 Vows, 420—425; for capturing a mare, 528; for defeating chief of the enemy, 528
 Vultures. See Nsūr
 Al-Wa'ar (d12), 647
 Al-Wad'a (l12), 653
 Wādi. See proper name
 Al-Wādi (Sirḥān), 159, 187, 395
 Wahab, Beni, 280, 427, 580, 581
 Wahnābites, favored by the Fed'ān, 304; helped by the Āl Mur'aḏ, 57; support Prince Āl 'Alī, 303
 Wahif (or Whejf), Āl, kin of the Āl Mur'aḏ, 205
 Wākṣa (s10), 414
 Wandering dervishes looked after by Bedouins, 327
 Want, in periods of ∞ Rwala pasture in the enemy's territory, 260; period of ∞ caused by irregular rain, 549; years of, 16, 17
 War, camp, manāḥ, 54, 533, 534, 540; caused by pasturing herds in the enemy's territory, 533; cry uttered by warriors before the chief, 503, 526; declarations of, 504, 506, 614; endangering the whole tribe is headed by the tribal emblem, 571, 574, 605; expedition has a leader, 506; helps to conquer new territories, 540, 541; necessity to Bedouins, 504; stories of the Rwala, 574—632; tents, black coffee only prepared in, 540; with regular army difficult, 248
 Warka (d11), 648

- Warriors; endangered by their perspiring and fatigued mares, 593; fallen in battle are allotted wide pastures in Paradise, 589
- Washing rare, 134
- Water, 94; bags, ruwāj, 70, 71; bags of antelope skin, 26; bags of large goat of the Neḡd breed, 358; bags, saddle for, 354; begged by women for children, 156; brought by young men, ruwā, 206; bucket for six litters, 359, 363; carried by two camels from distant well, 287; drawing with delw, 72; drawing from a deep well difficult, 343, 347; drawing, utensils for, 361, 362; from camel's paunch, 94, 95, 368; given by a mounted traveler to one on foot, 457; highly prized when scarce, 55; hoist, 175, 339, 361, 362; hoist, maḡām, arranged when camping long at the same well, 247; lack of ∞ endangers travelers, 95; never wasted and equally distributed, 94; refused by a traveler to herdsmen, 457; trough, baḡar, 204; trough, ḡawz, 71, 72, 306
- Wazājet ar-Raḡāḡid, 576, 577
- Waḡḡa, sweetheart of Nimr eben 'Adwān, 131—134 [193]
- Weaving, 67, 68
- Wedding, 228—230; gypsies invited for ∞ by the Fed'ān, 288
- Week of five to nine days, 4
- Weighing of good deeds and sins, 674
- Al-Wejlān (or Āl Wejlān), 311, 312
- Weld 'Alī, tribe (f5—9, r8—10), 46, 57, 58, 280, 320, 491, 532, 546, 552, 580, 584, 591, 592, 602, 659; recognize an-Nūri as their head, 506
- Weld Slejmān (or Slimān), tribe (s10—r12), 57, 171, 304, 420
- Al-Welde, tribe on the Euphrates, 180
- Wells secured before tents are pitched, 359
- Wheat as food, 90—93; bread sign of well being, 175; rare, 467; substituted by sorghum or semp, 93
- White flag flown by a grateful enemy in honor of his benefactor, 452; when a wrong done is set right, 452
- Widow, inheritance of, 663, 664
- Wife, appellations of, 49; choice of ∞ limited, 136; in fear of beating runs away, 235; plurality of wives, 230, 231
- Wild swine, brings bad luck, 395; flesh of ∞ enjoyed, 395; names of, 28
- Wind, blowing in the faces of warriors is a great disadvantage, 543; causes sufferings to human beings, 12; comes from Allāh, 18; directs pitching of tent, 73; kinds of, 12, 13, 18; protection of traveler against, 470; regulation of the access of ∞ into the tent, 73
- Witches, 406, 407
- Witness, must be a man of good repute, 428; settlement of lawsuits with, 428
- Al-Wit're (or al-Wutara), clan of the 'Ebede, 239
- Wolf, 21, 22; and man, 21, 22; not injured by winds, 12, 13; waiting at different times of the day, 163, 201—208; young ostriches protected against, 39
- Woman, acuteness of, 237, 238; bought by her husband is rarely divorced without compensation, 469; cannot kill a vowed animal, 421, 422; changeable in love, 175; dress of, 565; duties of, 231, 232; encourages men to fight, 302; fights against the enemy, 622; hates cowardly husband, 475, 513; implores help of passing riders by an attack on the migrating tribe, 541; likes to converse with travelers, 456, 457; not harmed by raiders, 530; pretty ∞ is a good omen, 391; rumaka, neither young nor old, 376. See also Married woman, Wife
- Wood borer, 43, 53
- Wooing, 139
- Working abroad for wages, 219
- World War, Bedouin rifles before, 131
- Wounded men, treatment of, 668, 669
- Wounds, do not heal when pierced by the rays of either the stars or the sun, 399; fester by eating sweets, 668; suppurating ∞ cured by camel's suet, 97
- Wright, John K., xiv
- Writing, mode of, 112
- Al-Wudijān (d13—j16), 17, 78, 292, 307, 309, 501, 575, 638
- Al-Wuṭara (or al-Wit're), clan of the 'Ebede, 239
- Yawning, caution at, 399
- Year, division of, 4; seasons of, 7—10
- Yielding one's rights to a weaker man regarded as praiseworthy, 471
- Za'al eben 'Awwād, recognized seer, 402
- Za'al eben Ḥmār abu 'Awwād, 244
- Za'al eben Rāzi of the Kmuṣa, 444—446
- Az-Zāb, river in Mesopotamia, 274
- ḡabb, lizard, 41, 42
- Za'ejtel, Rwejlī hero, 598
- ḡāher, a Kḡāṣi, 432, 433
- Zahra, a Rwejlīje, 210, 211
- ḡamrān (shrub with articulate branches and fleshy, needle-shaped leaves; resembles ḡaz-ḡāz), 338
- ḡana Biṣr, 46, 440
- ḡana Muslim, 46, 57, 440, 602, 619, 622; original camping grounds, 57
- ḡāri eben ḡbej'ān, 502, 503
- Zavoral, Abbot Method, Prague, xiii
- ḡbē'ān eben ḡaṣmān of the Sirḡān, 46
- Zebb ad-dīḡ (Orobanche, L.; leafless, root-parasitic plant with thick fleshy root and spicate flowers, 95
- Zeben, Āl, division of the Beni Ṣaḡr, 398, 657
- Zebūn, 119, 249, 534, 555
- Aḡ-Zefīr, tribe (l18—n20), 52—54, 187, 214, 574—577, 619, 656
- Zejd, a Bedouin, 187, 223
- Zejd, kin of the Rwala, 594, 617, 618
- Zejd eben al-Hādi, 568, 570
- Zejd eben ḡrejmis, 641
- Zejd eben Swejṭ, 575
- Zejdān, Eben. See Smejir eben Zejdān
- Zejdān āl 'Awāḡi, 656

- Zejdân ar-Rwejli, 361
 Zejramit, member of the Zijârme clan, 308
 Želib. See proper name
 Az-Zennâra, chief of the ḥabâri, 37
 Žeri, Eben (or Blejhân eben Meşreb), 434, 435, 443
 Žeri eben Meşreb, 48
 Žerjet Abu Ġâber, 571
 Al-Žerjitejn (d6), 60, 658
 Az-Zerka (h3—4), 168, 612
 Al-Židr, Ķârt (f14), 648
 Žijâl (l 12), 227, 228
 Az-Zijârme, kin of the ʿAbde of the Šammar, 302, 307, 308
 Zobejde, as-Sitt (or Zobejdet umm Ġaʿfar, daughter of Ġaʿfar ibn Abi Ġaʿfar al-Manşûr), 314, 315
 Zorrêṭ an-naʿâm (Cleome arabica, L.; green subshrub with small yellowish flowers), 95
 Az-Žrejbinât (l7), 595
 Zrejže (Lotus angustissimus, L.; Lotus Gebelia, L.; herb resembling bird's-foot trefoil), 338
 Zuʿejli, an Aslami, 569
 Az-Zujûdi from the Beni Ḥasan tribe, 387

ERRATA

p. 58, lines 12–15, should read: Hazzâʿs wife was Taḳla, the daughter of Chief Fâjez eben Ġandal, who bore his sons Fahad and an-Nûri. His son Muḥammad was born of another mother. After Hazzâʿs death Saṭṭâm married his widow, who later bore him Mišʿal. — The author's Arabia Deserta, p. 239, line 8, should be correspondingly corrected.

p. 397, line 10, instead ar-Remṭe read ad-Dmejṭe.

GETTY CENTER LIBRARY

3 3125 00742 0363

